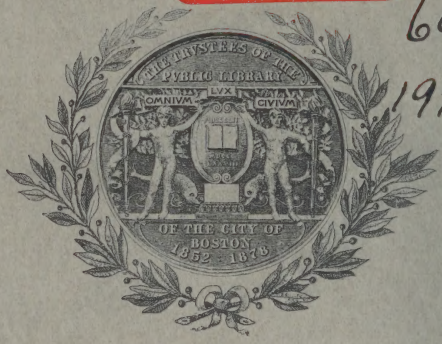
PERIODICAL
ML5
.M85

No. 30
69
1928



.1N3
1
8215

No. 1019

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

JANUARY 1, 1928

*4041.230.69 Feb 15, 1929

100 GUINEAS

Rec'd JAN 19 1928 R.L

The New SPENCER

4 FT. 6 INS. BABY GRAND

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO.
46-3 OXFORD STREET, W.1 The Great Piano House

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, LTD.

Pianoforte Merchants.

Sole IMPORTERS of the

BEULHOFF

PIANOS

1096

65, Wigmore Street, LONDON. 12, Park Row, LEEDS.

Branch Establishments at Scarborough, Doncaster, Darlington, and Middlesbrough.

SHOW ROOMS:
60, WIGMORE ST., W.1.
Phone——LANGHAM 1418.

ALLISON
PIANOS

FACTORIES:
KENTISH TOWN, N.W.5.
Phone——NORTH 1660.

Recently supplied at the request of the leading professors, to the

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, - - TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC, READING UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC, ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Etc., Etc.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.
Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317. Telegrams: "ESTEY WESTCENT, LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.
- 12 -
RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

A HILL BOW

is within the reach of most players for, unlike a good instrument, it is obtainable at from 1½ to 6 guineas

Messrs. W. E. HILL & SONS, of 140, New Bond Street, London, W.1, Violin and Bow Makers to H.M. The King, are the makers of these Bows, which are now being used by the World's greatest players, who realise that a fine bow is as indispensable as a good instrument. - -

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,019—Vol. 69. Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

JANUARY 1 1928

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.

Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SEVENTH SEASON, 1927-1928.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1928, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS DORA LABBETTE.
MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. WALTER WIDDOP.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

Conductor: DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, at 2.30 p.m.

HIAWATHA - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS CAROLINE HATCHARD.
MR. FRANCIS RUSSELL.
MR. PETER DAWSON.

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS by the President, Dr. W. G. ALCOCK, M.V.O., F.R.C.M., will take place on Saturday, January 21st, at 3 o'clock.

The President will deliver an Address, after which, Mr. W. WOLSTENHOLME, Organist of All Saints', St. John's Wood, will play pieces selected for the July Examinations, 1928.

There will be an informal Conversazione after the recital. Members and friends are invited to attend. No tickets required.

Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4 Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

SPRING TERM BEGINS January 9th.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing, French Classical Drama.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9*s.* and £12 12*s.* Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll).

President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., Mus. D., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LENT TERM
begins 9th January, 1928.

Serial Performances of the
HAYDN STRING QUARTETS
by ENSEMBLE CLASS, under LIONEL TERTIS, F.R.A.M., continued on Thursdays, throughout the Academic Year.

Programme of First Concert, Lent Term, 12th January, at 3.
QUARTETS Op. 9, Nos. 1, 2, and 3.
Tickets free on application to the Secretary, R.A.M.

ORGAN RECITAL,
DUKE'S HALL, 30TH JANUARY, AT 3 P.M.

SPECIAL COURSES.
TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
CONDUCTING under SIR HENRY J. WOOD, MUS. D., F.R.A.M.
OPERA under JULIUS HARRISON, Hon. R.A.M.
ETC.

PROSPECTUSES, and all particulars, from
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

The Royal College of Music.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
{ HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D.Litt
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt., F.R.C.M.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,977th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on January 3rd, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December, at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 8th, 1928.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 1st, 1928.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and November-December each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of any TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1927-1928.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music. Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASGOW

ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1927-28.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 12 to December 3, December 5 to March 10, and March 12 to June 8.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, UPPER TOOTING, S.W.17.
TRINITY ROAD (Underground).

PIANOFORTE AND ORGAN RECITAL.

REGINALD PAUL AND BERTRAM ORSMAN.

"Emperor" Pianoforte Concerto, Op. 73, entire (Beethoven).
7th JANUARY, 1928, at 3.30 p.m.
Weekly Recitals of Music on Saturdays at 3.30.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Manchester School of Music.

Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892).

Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.
President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Instruction in all Vocal and Musical Subjects.

Voice-Curing Courses for loss of tone and all Vocal defects.

OPERATIC CLASS now forming under A. DAVIES, A.R.C.M.

CHORAL CLASS under F. T. DURRANT, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., F.I.S.S.C.

The Daily Telegraph says: "A number of pupils . . . . came through the test with infinite credit to themselves and to those who are responsible for their artistic welfare."

Particulars from Sec., Miss MAIMIE M. HEATH. Mayfair 3819.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1927: JOHN WARRINER, Mus. D.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

All particulars (including regulations for Competition) on application to the Hon. Secretary,

De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

ORGAN LECTURE-RECITALS

(Explanatory talks on the Music played)

BY

SINCLAIR LOGAN,

AT

ST. NINIAN'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
GOLDERS GREEN (close Tube Station).

Next Recitals, Saturdays, January 7th, February 11th, March 10th, and April 14th, at 5.30 p.m.

WALKER ORGAN.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844

JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1928

VOLUME LXIX

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED,
160, WARDOUR STREET, W. 1
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

1928

1096

MADE IN ENGLAND

INDEX FOR 1928

MUSIC

SACRED

| | No. | | No. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Hail, gladdening Light (Anthem)... ... | Hugh Blair 1019 | Four Hymn-Tunes (arr. with Descants)... | H. A. Chambers 1026 |
| Four Hymn-Tunes (arr. with Descant) ... | H. A. Chambers 1020 | On this, the Christmas morn (Carol-Anthem) ... ... ... ... | J. Job 1029 |
| Come, my Way, my Truth, my Life (Anthem) ... ... ... ... | Roy Thompson 1022 | I sing the Birth (Carol ... ... ... | Sir Edward Elgar 1030 |

SECULAR

| | No. | | No. |
|---|---|---|---|
| To Blossoms (Part-song) ... ... ... | W. G. Alcock 1021 | All ye who music love (Madrigal) | Balthazar Donato (1548-1603) 1025 |
| Rose May (Part-song) ... ... ... | Edgar L. Bainton 1023 | I vow to thee, my country ... ... | Geoffrey Shaw 1027 |
| Stars of the Summer night (Part-song) ... | W. A. C. Cruickshank 1024 | The Golden Skein (Part-song) ... ... | Edgar L. Bainton 1028 |

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS—MUSIC

SACRED

| | No. | | No. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Benedicite, omnia opera ... ... ... | C. H. Lloyd 1020 | O worship the King (Anthem) ... ... | Ernest Bullock 1026 |
| The strife is o'er (Anthem) ... ... | Eric H. Thiman 1021 | Remember, O thou man (Carol-Anthem) | C. S. Lang 1029 |
| Benedicite, omnia opera ... ... ... | Hugh Blair 1021 | Earth does not hold (Anthem) ... ... | Eric H. Thiman 1029 |
| O for a closer walk with God (Hymn-Anthem) ... ... ... ... | H. A. Chambers 1022 | The Seven Joys (Carol) ... ... ... | C. S. Lang 1030 |
| Let all the world (Anthem) ... ... | Eric H. Thiman 1025 | His Dwelling (Carol) ... ... ... | George Rathbone 1030 |
| | | Magi! see the star o'erhead (Carol) ... | George Rathbone 1030 |

SECULAR

| | No. | | No. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Song of the Volga Boatmen (arr. for men's voices) ... ... ... ... | H. Balfour Gardiner 1019 | There is a lady sweet and kind (Part-song) | Eric H. Thiman 1023 |
| If I had but two little wings (arr. for s.s. and Pianoforte by John Pointer)... | C. Hubert H. Parry 1019 | Sleep (Madrigal) ... ... ... ... | Bernard Johnson 1024 |
| In Derry Vale (' The Londonderry Air ')... | Arr. Geoffrey Shaw 1023 | Bridal Song (Trio) ... ... ... ... | Edgar L. Bainton 1027 |
| | | There is a garden in her face (Part-song) ... | H. A. Chambers 1028 |

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

| | No. | | No. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Alfred Herbert Brewer ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1022 | Alfred Hollins ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1027 |
| W. Arundel Orchard ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1024 | | |

ILLUSTRATIONS, PORTRAITS, Etc.

| | Page | | Page |
|---|---|---|---|
| Bates, Dr. Frank ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 617 | Schubert's Organ in the Lichtentaler Church ... ... ... | 990 |
| Dibdin, Charles ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 622 | Starmer, W. W. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 225 |
| Egerton, Julian... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 268 | Statham, Dr. Heathcote D. ... ... ... ... ... ... | 639 |
| Famous Victorians in a Toy Symphony ... ... ... | 701 | Sumsion, Herbert Whitton ... ... ... ... ... ... | 425 |
| Schubert's Birthplace ... ... ... ... ... ... | 980 | Sydney, New South Wales, The State Conservatorium ... ... | 499 |
| Schubert's Grave at Vienna ... ... ... ... ... | 982 | | |

R. = Review. E. = Edited. A. = Arranged.

| Page | Page | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Aberdeen Competitive Musical Festival 552 | Aberystwyth, Music at ... 77, 169, 263, 363 | Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' 21, 121, 405, 696 |
| Aberdeen, Music at ... ... ... 168 | 553, 655, 843, 936, 1037, 1133 | 789, 1079 |
| ——— Robert Gordon's Colleges, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 543 | Absolute Pitch (Correspondence) (see 447) 61, 348, 441, 642 | After playing Schubert's Pianoforte Sonatas. By Eric Brewerton ... 887 |
| ——— St. Machar's Cathedral. New Organ ... .. ... 731 | Ackernley, Mabel. Song, 'Sunset Dreams' (R.) ... ... ... ... 998 | Agnew, Roy. Pianoforte, Prelude No. 4 and 'Two Pieces' (R.) ... ... 624 |

Page

Agnew, Roy. Pianoforte, 'Rabbit Hill,' 'Elf Dance,' and 'A May-Day' (R.)... 426
——— – Pianoforte, 'The Windy Hill' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 997
Albert Hall Organ, New light on the ... 639
Albert Herbert Brewer, 1865-1928 (see Brewer).
Alcock, G. A. Part-song, 'Weep you no more, sad fountains' (R.) ... ... ... 1001
Alcock, W. G. Organ, 'Fantaisie-Impromptu' (R.) ... ... ... ... 323
——— Part-song, 'Art thou gone in haste' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 803
Alexandra Choral and Orchestral Society 1130
Allain-Lenoir, E. J. 'Ave Maria' (R.)... 1088
Allan Ramsay's 'Gentle Shepherd' (see 'The First Ballad Opera').
Allen, Alfred. 'Hymn for Commemoration' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1097
Allerton, Liverpool. All Hallows' Church, Reconstruction of organ ... ... 1024
Allport, R. E. H. Song, 'Come away, Death' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 907
Alli, Wilfrid Greenhouse. Appointment to Edinburgh University ... ... 439
——— Organ recitals ... ... ... 346
Alman, S. Jewish Folk-song, 'As Moshiach vet kummen' (Arr.) (R.) ... 514
Altman, Wilhelm. 'Letters of Richard Wagner' (R.) ... ... ... ... 607
Amateur Orchestra of London, The ... 452
Amateurs' Exchange, The 62, 162, 252, 353 446, 539, 645, 732, 835, 925, 1031, 1122
American Organ Quarterly (R.) ... ... 323
American University Summer Session. By W. G. Whittaker ... ... ... 1018
Amsterdam Society for the Promotion of Music, The ... ... ... ... ... 1039
Anæmic Choir Organ, &c., The (Correspondence) (see 805) ... ... ... 930
'Analytic Symphony Series' (R.) ... 133
Anderson, Marion R. 'Rhythmic Exercises' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 41
Andover Competitive Musical Festival... 550
Andrews, Mark. Part-song, 'John Peel' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 38
'Angel of Fire, The': Prokofev's new opera. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... 891
Anglo-America Musicians' Field-Day (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... 643
Anglo-Spanish Society Concert ... ... 748
Anniversaries. By Charles F. Waters ... 125
Answers to Correspondents 79, 174, 269, 368 419, 525, 637, 720, 823, 919, 1021, 1115
Appeal, An (Correspondence) ... ... 446
Appointments: Choirmaster and Organist ... 58, 147, 250, 347, 439, 534 640, 732, 829, 924, 1024, 1118
Archer, Stuart. Organ, 'Variations on well-known Hymn-Tunes' (R.) ... 324 ——— 'Songs from the Oratorios' (R.) 36
Arensky, Trio in D minor (R.) ... ... 40
'Arias from the Operas of Handel' (Ed., Dr. Whittaker) (R.) ... ... ... 428
Armchair v. Concert-Hall (Correspondence) 736
Armistice Day Concert at the Albert Hall 1128
Armstrong, Thomas. Appointment to Exeter Cathedral ... ... ... ... 53
Arne. Four songs from 'The Masque of Alfred' (Ed., Carse) (R.) ... ... 1096
Art of Explanation, The. By Robert H. Hull ... ... ... ... ... ... 27
Arundell, Dennis. 'Four Old French Songs' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 130
——— 'Henry Purcell' (R.)... ... 231
——— Songs, 'Leave me, O Love,' and 'Orpheus with his lute' (R.) ... ... 1096
——— 'Tisbea's Song' (R.) ... ... 35
Ashton, Leopold. 'Esquisses' for Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 997
Associated Board. Award of Medals ... 163, 541, 741
——— Pianoforte Examinations for 1929: Notes on the Studies and Pieces. By Ernest Fowles ... 1008, 1103
Atterberg, Kurt. 'Schubert' Symphony (Manchester) ... ... ... ... 1130
Attleborough. Norwich Chamber Orchestra ... ... ... ... ... ... 71
Audrey Chapman Orchestra ... ... 452
Austin, Ernest. Songs, 'Dainty Lady' and 'Little White Horses' (R.) ... 329
Ayrshire Competitive Musical Festival... 457

Bach: A Biography. By Charles Sanford Terry ... ... ... ... ... ... 904
Bach and the Clavier. By Eric Blom ... 25
Bach Cantata Club ... ... 357, 549, 652
——— Quinquagesima Sunday, 1723 357
Bach Choir ... ... ... 256, 449
Bach, Johann Christian. Chamber Music, A Quartet in C major (R.) ... ... 39
Bach-Vivaldi. Concerto in D major (Arr. Pianoforte by William Murdoch) (R.) 624

Bach. Allegro and Adagio of the Sinfonia to the Easter Oratorio (Score) (R.) ... 704
——— Cantata No. 207 (Ed. and Adapted by Steuart Wilson) (R.) ... 1099
——— Cantatas, No. 152, 'O walk the heavenly way,' and No. 31, 'The heavens shout' (R.) ... ... ... ... 516
——— Chorale from Fourth Cantata (Arr., Donald Powell) (R.) ... ... ... 427
——— Chorale, 'Jesus bleibet meine Freude' (Arr., John E. West) (R.) ... 807
——— Chorus from Cantata 37, 'I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills' (Arr., Ivor Atkins and J. Michael Diack) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 430
——— Fiftieth Church Cantata, 'Now hath the grace' (R.) ... ... ... 328
——— Final chorus from Cantata, 'Jesus nahm zu sich die Zwolfe' (Arr. Frederic H. Griswold) (R.) ... ... 807
——— G major version, 'Blessed Jesu, we are here' (Arr. Pianoforte by Harriet Cohen) (R.) ... ... ... 624
——— Largo from the F minor Clavier Concerto (Arr. Pianoforte solo by Harold Craxton) (R.) ... ... ... 624
——— Organ, Prelude and Fugue in G major (Arr. Pianoforte duet by Gerrard Williams) (R.) ... ... ... 40
——— 'Rejoice, ye redeemed hosts,' from Cantate No. 30 (Arr. Pianoforte by Donald C. Powell) (R.) ... ... 624
——— Series of Solos from Cantatas (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 428
——— Seven Chorale Preludes and Seven Adaptations from the Cantatas (Trans., Walter Rummel) (R.) ... ... 40
——— Six Chorale Preludes (Arr., Harry Hodge) (R.) ... ... ... ... 40
——— Six Suites for violoncello, adapted for viola (R.) ... ... ... 429
——— Sonata in C minor for Violin and Pianoforte (Ed.) (R.) ... ... 429
——— 'Ten Instrumental Movements from the Cantatas' (Trans. for Organ by Harvey Grace) (R.)... ... ... 629
'Back to Bach' (Correspondence) ... 1029
Bacup Competitive Musical Festival ... 75
Baden-Baden Festival, The ... ... 843
Baines, William. Pianoforte, 'Pictures of Light' (R.) ... ... ... ... 427
Bainton, Edgar. Part-song, 'Bridal Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1001 ——— Part-song, 'If I were yonder wave' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 632
——— Part-song, 'In the wilderness' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 805
——— Part-song, 'The Green Linnet' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 632
——— Song, 'A Christmas Carol' (R.) 803
——— Song, 'The Little Waves of Breffny' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 325
——— Song, 'Young love lies dreaming' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 998
Ballymena, Competitive Musical Festival 553
Banbury, Music at ... ... ... 358, 453
Bangor, Music at 77, 169, 263, 363, 655, 1037
Bantock, Granville. Part-song, 'Isaiah: The Seven Burdens' (R.) ... ... 38
——— Three unaccompanied Part-songs (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 38
Barbirolli, John, and the L.S.O.... ... 70
——— Six Airs arranged for 'Cello (or Violin) and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... 999
Barclay, Arthur. Three pieces for Flute and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... 429
Barclay's Bank Service ... ... ... 249
——— Choir ... ... ... ... ... 452
Bardos, Lajos. 'Three Hungarian Folk-songs' for Violin (R.) ... ... ... 429
Barne, Kitty. Camp-fire Play, 'Madge' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 631
Barnsley Competitive Musical Festival... 361
Barnsley St. Cecilia Society ... ... 453
Barnstaple, Music at ... ... ... ... 748
Barratt, Edgar (Obituary) ... ... ... 1039
Barrett, Edgar. Pianoforte, 'Deirdre'—a Celtic Lament (R.) ... ... ... 906 ——— Song, 'Coronach' (R.) ... ... 907
Barrow Madrigal Society ... ... ... 71
Barry, Music at ... ... ... 169, 843
Bartók. Pianoforte, Ten Light Pieces, 'Second Fantasy,' and 'Esquisses' (R.) 427
——— Pianoforte, 'Three Hungarian Popular Songs' (R.) ... ... ... 36
——— Pianoforte, Two Elegies (R.)... 997
——— The National Temperament in Music ... ... ... ... ... ... 1079
Bate, H. A. Organ Recitals ... ... 924
Bates, Dr. Frank. Retirement from Norwich Cathedral ... ... ... ... 617
Bath, Music at ... ... 71, 358, 1036, 1131
Bathgate, Music at ... ... ... 362, 458
Battistini, Mattia (Obituary) ... ... 1136
Baughan, J. H. G. (Obituary) ... ... 173

Baumer, Cecil. Song, 'Homing Birds' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 907
Bax, Arnold. New Pianoforte Sonata... 67
——— Pianoforte duets, 'The devil that tempted St. Anthony' and 'The Poisoned Fountain' (R.) ... ... ... 1095
Bayreuth, July 19-26, 1928 ... ... ... 793
B.B.C. National Concerts... 70, 165, 256 257, 355, 450, 651, 1035, 1127
B.B.C. Promenade Concerts 840, 932, 1034
B.B.C. Singers, Wobbling (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... 644, 737
Beach, John. 'Two Poems' (R.) ... 703
Beard, John (Obituary) ... ... ... ... 267
Bechstein. Seventy-fifth Anniversary of firm ... ... ... ... ... ... 1094
Bedford Competitive Musical Festival ... 163
Bedford, Music at... ... ...71, 358, 1036
Bedford. Music at Bedford School ... 163
Beecham, Sir Thomas, and 'The Messiah' ... ... ... ... ... ... 548
Beethoven Dissonance, A (Correspondence) 644
Beethoven, Song, 'In des lebens' (R.)... 703
Beethoven's 'First Mæcenas,' Who was? 512
'Beginning of Things, The' (R.)... ... 714
Bekker, Paul. 'The Story of Music: An Historical Sketch of the changes in Musical Form' (R.) ... ... ... ... 608
Belfast, Music at ...77, 169, 263, 364, 460, 1133
Belfast Competitive Musical Festival ... 362
Bennett, Dr. G. J. Master of the Musicians' Company (Occasional Notes) 53
Bennett, James Robert (Obituary) ... 659
Berkhamsted School, Music at ... ... 163
Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra (see 53)... 69
Berlioz's 'Trojans at Carthage' (Manchester) ... ... ... ... ... 1130
Bermuda Cathedral ... ... ... ... 639
Berners, Lord. Pianoforte, 'Intermezzo' and 'Hornpipe' from 'The Triumph of Neptune' (R.) ... ... ... ... 998
Besly, Maurice. Pianoforte, 'Kensington Gardens' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
——— Pianoforte, Two Pieces (R.) ... 997
Beterlin, Albert. Offertoire, 'Jubilate Deo' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 807
Bethel Welsh Congregational Church, Mold. New organ ... ... ... ... 155
Bevis, T. A. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1098
Bexhill-on-Sea. Sackville Road Wesleyan Church. Dedication of organ ... 57
Beynon, Patrick. Songs, 'The Ribbon Song' and 'With mirth, thou pretty bird' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 703
Billingborough (Lincs) Choral Society ... 549
Birmingham Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... ... 550
Birmingham, George A., and Sydney H. Nicholson. Voval Score, 'The Mermaid' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1000
Birmingham, Music at ... 71, 167, 260, 358, 653, 748, 941, 1036, 1131
Birth-Date of Vincent Wallace (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 62
Bishop, Ernest Brian (Obituary) ... 659
Blackburn Orchestral Society ... ... 71
Blackpool Choral and Orchestral Society, ... ... ... ... ... 71, 1131
Blackpool Competitive Musical Festival 1124
Blair, Hugh. Anthem, 'Every morning the red sun' (R.) ... ... ... ... 430
——— Anthem, 'Sing to the Lord a joyful song' (R.) ... ... ... ... 132
——— 'Faithful Shepherd, feed me' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 430
——— 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (R.) 808
Blairgowrie and Rattray Choral Society 458
Bliss, Arthur. Quintet for Oboe and Quartet (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 909
Bliss, Howard. Violoncello Recital ... 356
Blom, Eric. Bach and the Clavier ... 25
——— 'The Limitations of Music' (R.) 609
——— The Middle-Classical Schubert, 890, 980
Blumer, Theodor. Sonata for Flute and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... ... 1000
Board of Trade Inquiry on Gramophone Royalties ... ... ... ... ... 447
Bognor Competitive Musical Festival ... 456
Bognor, Music at ... ... ... 71, 260
Bohnke, Emile (Obituary) ... ... ... 557
Bolton, Music at ... ... ... 71, 260, 453, 1131
Bonavia, F. The Future of Music According to Honegger ... ... ... 413
——— The Music of the Halls ... ... 118
Books Received ...45, 137, 234, 353, 438, 513, 633 714, 813, 906, 1006, 1102
Booster in Organ Building, The. By Reginald Whitworth (see 351, 444) ... 144
Booth, Marjorie (Obituary) ... ... ... 557
Border Counties Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... ... 552
'Boris Godunov' as Moussorgsky wrote it. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ...318, 408, 506

Page

Bortkiewicz, Serge. Pianoforte, Oriental Ballet, 'Thousand and One Nights,' and Suite of eight pieces (R.) ... 801
Boston, Music at ... ... ... 72, 549
Boston Parish Church ... ... ... 731
Boughton, Rutland. 'Maiden's Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 907
——— Part-songs, 'The Tiger' and 'Sunset' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Schubert and Melodic Design ... 881, 977
Boulton and Somervell. 'Our National Songs' (R.) ... ... ... ... 430
Bournemouth Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 653
Bournemouth, Music at ... 72, 167, 260, 359, 549, 1131
Bournemouth Musical Festival ... ... 455
Bournville, The German Singers at ... 1036
Bowen, York. Pianoforte, 'Réverie'(R.) 906
——— Pianoforte, 'Three Preludes' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 426
——— Pianoforte, 'Two Short Pieces' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
Bowman, Paget John Merriman (Obituary) ... ... ... ... ... 368
Bowman, Sydney. Violin Recital ... 652
Boyce, Ethel. Four Songs, 'The Wooded Hill' (R.) ... ... ... ... 514
Boyd, William (Obituary) (see Occasional Notes, 240) ... ... ... ... 267
——— 'Fight the good fight' (R.) ... 1097
Bradfield School, Music at ... ... ... 543
Bradford, Hugh. Pianoforte, 'Seven Characteristic Pieces' (R.) ... ... 997
Bradford. All Saints' Choir ... 57, 249, 346
——— Music at 72, 167, 260, 359, 453, 941, 1036, 1131
Brahms. 'In Silent Night' (R.) ... 804
Brent-Smith, Alexander. On Making Melody ... ... ... ... ... 691
——— The Unwanted Pianoforte Solo 788
Brewer, Alfred Herbert (Obituary) (see 315, 463) ... ... ... ... 367
——— Memorial Window ... ... 1094
——— Motet, 'God within' (R.) ... 630
——— Pianoforte, 'The Man in the Moon' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Brewerton, Erik. After playing Schubert's Pianoforte Sonatas ... ... 887
Brian, Havergal. Part-song, 'Ah, County Guy!' (R.) ... ... ... 908 ——— Part-song, 'Fair pledges of a fruitful tree' (R.) ... ... ... 328 Bridge, Frank. Orchestra, 'There is a willow grows aslant a brook' (R.) ... 1097
——— Pianoforte, 'Winter Pastoral' and 'A Dedication' (R.) ... ... 801
Bridge, J. C. Musical Association Paper, 'Town Waits and their Tunes' ... 655
Bridgend. Annual Meeting of the South Wales Branch of the National Union of Organists' Associations ... ... 843
Bridge-of-Allan, Music at ... ... 362
Brigg Competitive Musical Festival ... 456
'Brightening' Handel (Correspondence) 161
Brighton Competitive Musical Festival... 654
Brighton, Music at ... 72, 260, 359, 453
Bristol Competitive Musical Festival ... 456
Bristol, Music at 72, 167, 260, 359, 453, 653, 1036, 1131
——— Opera Season ... ... ... ... 67
——— St. Michael's, Windmill Hill. New organ ... ... ... ... ... 57
British and American Music Educationists' Field-Day ... ... ... 718
British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals. Annual General Meeting... 834
——— New address ... ... ... ... 75
——— Seventh Annual General Meeting and Conference ... ... ... 1125
——— Summer School Classes ... ... 752
British Music at Vienna ... ... ... 79
British Music in New Zealand (Correspondence) ... ... ... 62, 444
British Music Society. Seventh Annual Congress ... ... ... ... 553
British National Opera Company ... 66, 932
Broadstairs and St. Peter's Choral and Orchestral Society ... ... ... 453
Brook, Harry. Part-song, 'Sleep, sleep, beauty bright' (R.) ... ... ... 328
Brooke, Byron. Violin and Pianoforte, 'Cradle Song' (R.) ... ... ... 802
Broome, R. R. A Nativity Play, 'The Finding of the King,' by F. G. Happold, Music by (R.) ... ... ... 808
Brozel, Philip (Obituary) (see 268) ... 173
Bruton (King's School), Music at 163, 543, 836
Bryan, Gordon. Series of Chamber concerts ... ... ... ... 933, 1128
Bryson's, Ernest, Second Symphony ... 167
Budapest Philharmonic Orchestra ... 651
Budapest Quartet... ... ... ... 356

Page

'Buffs' March, The. Did Handel write it? (Correspondence) ... ... ... 349
Builth Wells, Music at ... ... ... 263
Bullis, Carleton H. 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord God' (R.) ... ... ... 132
Bullock, Ernest. Communion Service in the Dorian Mode by Tallis (Ed.) (R.)... 1098
——— Part-song, 'The Wauking o' the Fauld' (R.) ... ... ... 1000
——— Part-song, 'There's none to soothe my soul to rest' (R.) ... 328, 1000
——— Songs, 'Song in the Valley of Humiliation' and 'Gird on thy sword' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 803
Bullock, W. H. 'The Count of Como, or a Bandit's Bride' (R.)... ... ... 1099
Burleigh, Cecil. Song, 'Westward' (R.) 428
Burnley, Music at... ... ... 941, 1036
Burrows, B. Song, 'Bartholomew' (R.) 428
——— Song, 'The Dusty Miller' (R.) 631
——— Songs, 'The Oaks of Glencree' and 'I am Raftery' (R.) ... ... 1096
——— Songs, 'When first my way to fair I took' and 'Yonder see the morning blink' (R.) ... ... ... 631
Burton Elementary Schools Festival ... 75
Burton, Music at ... ... ... ... 1131
Bury Athenæum Musical Society ... ... 72
Bury St. Edmunds, Music at ... ... 549
Bush, Alan. Pianoforte, Prelude and Fugue (R.) ... ... ... ... 801
Bute Competitive Musical Festival ... 552
'Butt, Clara: Her Life-Story' (R.) ... 712
Buxton Competitive Musical Festival ... 654
Buxton Pavilion Sunday Concert ... 72
Byrd. 'Assumpta est Maria' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) ... ... ... ... 808
——— Motet, 'Non vos relinquam orphanos' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) ... 630
——— Part-song, 'Delight is dead' (Ed., Bernard Jackson) (R.) ... ... 1000
——— 'The Carman's Whistle' (Arr. for String Orchestra by Granville Bantock) (R.) ... ... ... ... 429
Byrd Gramophone Records (Correspondence) (see 431) ... ... ... ... 538

Caerphilly, Music at ... ... ... 655
Calvocoressi, M.-D. 'Boris Godunov' as Moussorgsky wrote it 318, 408, 506
——— Music in the Foreign Press 29, 128, 227, 331, 421, 514, 606, 816, 991, 1089
——— The Opening Motive in 'Boris Godunov' (see 159, 350) ... ... 19
Camborne, Music at ... 72, 359, 941, 1131
Cambridge Competitive Musical Festival 456
Cambridge. An Interesting Organ (see 349) ... ... ... ... ... 56
——— Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus' 75
——— Music at ... 72, 359, 653, 1131
——— Purcell's 'King Arthur' ... 255
Cambuslang Competitive Musical Festival 458
Cameron, J. G. Part-song, 'A Merry Time' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1000
Campbell, Colin M. Songs, ''Tis true I never was in love' and 'There is a lady sweet and kind' (R.) ... ... ... 998
Campbell, John E. Pianoforte, 'A Summer's Day' (R.) ... ... ... 37
Candlyn, T. Frederick H. Communion Service in (R.) ... ... ... ... 326 ——— Organ, 'Sonata Dramatica' (R.) 807
——— Part-song, 'Hunting Song' (R.) 38
——— Sacred Cantata, 'The Four Horsemen' (R.) ... ... ... 326
Canford School, Music at... ...163, 543, 836
Canterbury Diocesan Choral Union. Fortieth Festival ... ... ... 731
Cape Town. Municipal Orchestra ... 463
——— St. George's Cathedral 155, 1023
Capell, Richard. 'Schubert's Songs' (R.) 1003
——— Schubert's Style 305, 401, 500, 595
Cardiff, Music at ... 77, 168, 263, 363, 459, 553, 655, 936, 1037, 1133
Cardiff. Windsor Place Presbyterian Church ... ... ... ... ... 249
Carelli, Emma (Obituary) ... ... 943
Carlisle Competitive Musical Festival ... 361
Carlisle Grammar School... ... ... 836
Carlisle, Music at ... ... ... 72, 260
——— St. Cuthbert's Church ... ... 155
Carols and Mr. Fagge ... ... ... 167
Carrickfergus Musical Competitive Festival ... ... ... ... ... 553
Carse, Adam. Pianoforte, 'Berenice' Minuet (Arr.) (R.) ... ... 427, 624
——— Pianoforte, Variations on a Theme in D (R.) ... ... ... 997
——— Songs from Arne's 'The Masque of Alfred' (Ed.) (R.) ... ... ... 1096
Casals as Conductor ... ... ... 70
Caterham Choral Society... ... ... 549
Catford Choral Society ... ... ... 1117
Catterick (York) Choral Society ... 359

Page

'Cecil Sharp' Fund (Occasional Notes)... 48
Central London Choral Union ... ... 357
Cerné, Charles. Song, 'Notturno' (R.)... 998
Chaliapin at Covent Garden ... ... 742
——— at the Albert Hall ... ... 1035
Chamber Music Study (Correspondence) 1121
Chamberlain, Ronald. Organ Recital 1117
Chambers, H. A. Ninefold Kyrie (R.) 430
——— Part-song, 'Mine eyes have seen' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 131
——— Part-song, 'Night' (Randegger) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 515
——— Part-song, 'There is a garden in her face' (R.) ... ... ... ... 430
Champneys, F. Part-song, 'Rustic Coquette' (R.) ... ... ... ... 803
Chandler, Geoffrey. A choir-boy's record 828
Chants for Sundays and Holy Days (R.) 705
Chapman, Audrey, Orchestra ... ... 452
Chapman, E. T. 'God be in my head' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1097
——— Part-song, 'All creatures of our God and King' (R.) ... ... ... 1000
'Charles Auchester.' By Rutherford Crockett ... ... ... ... 599
Charles Dibdin: A Retrospect. By W. A. Roberts ... ... ... ... 622
Chelsea Choral Society ... ... ... 33
Chelsea Wesleyan Church ... 438, 463
Cheltenham. Holst's 'Egdon Heath'... 255
——— Music at ... 167, 260, 359, 453, 550, 1132
——— Music at Cheltenham School 163, 543
——— Town Hall. New organ ... 438
Chesham Choral Society ... ... ... 156
Chester Competitive Musical Festival ... 550
Chester, Music at ... ... ... 72, 453
Chesterfield Competitive Musical Festival 262
Chesterfield Grammar School ... ... 836
Chesterfield, Music at ... ... ... 453
Chester-le-Street Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 361
Chigwell School. Music at... ... 164 543
Chipping Norton Musical Society ... 260
Chisholm, Eric. Part-song, 'Cradle Song' (R.) ... ... ... 804, 1001
Choir Schools Directory, The' (R.) ... 714
Chopin: His Wit and Humour. By Mrs. Frank Liebich ... ... ... ... 604
'Choral Service, The, according to the use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America' ... 155
Christ Church, Marylebone. Reconstruction of organ ... ... ... ... 1024
Christ Church, North Finchley. Reconstruction of organ ... ... ... 924
Christ's Hospital, Music at ... ... 164
Church and Organ Music 55, 152, 249, 345, 438, 527, 638, 727, 824, 921, 1023, 1116
'Church Hymnary, The.' Revised Edition (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 55
Church Music Conference at Ostend ... 346
City Temple Choral Society ... 249, 346
Civil Service Orchestra ... ... ... 451
'Clara Butt: Her Life-Story' (R.) ... 712
——— (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... 811
Clare Choral Society ... ... ... 359
Clare (Suffolk) Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 262
Clark, T. J. Songs, 'Love of friends' and 'The King of love' (R.) ... ... 1096
Clarke, Rebecca. Three Songs (R.) ... 703
——— Trio for Pianoforte, Violin, and 'Cello (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 327
Cleethorpes Competitive Musical Festival 748
Clement, Edmond (Obituary) ... ... 368
Cleveland and Durham Eisteddfod ... 164
Clifford, Julian. At Queen's Hall ... 1128
Clyne, Anthony. The Jew's Harp a Century ago ... ... ... ... 508
Coatbridge Choral Union... ... ... 362
Coates, Douglas M. Short Communion Service (R.) ... ... ... ... 808
Coates, John. Schubert Recital ... 166
Cocker, Norman. Two Choral Hymns (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1098
Cœuroy, André. 'Panorama de la Musique Contemporaine' (R.) ... 610
Cohen, Harriet. Bach's Chorale Prelude, 'Blessed Jesu, we are here' (Arr., Pianoforte) (R.) ... ... ... ... 624
——— New Bax Sonata ... ... ... 67
——— and Isolde Menges. Recital... 71
Cohn, Isidor (Obituary) ... ... ... 1136
Colborn, Arthur G. Organ, Three Short Postludes (R.) ... ... ... ... 324
——— Six Short Postludes (R.) ... 324
Colchester and District Sunday School Union ... ... ... ... ... 75
Colchester, Music at ... ... ... 72, 453
Coleman, Henry. 'Old English Song-Cycle' (R.) ... ... ... ... 35
Coleraine Competitive Musical Festival... 458
Colles, H. C. 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (R.) (Ed.) ... 229

Page

Collins, Hall. Song, 'Forget not yet' (R.) 703
Collinson, T. H. (Obituary) ... ... 267
Colne Competitive Musical Festival ... 75
Colombatti, Harold. Pianoforte, 'The Faery Huntsman' (R.) ... ... 37
Coltishall and Halstead Choral Society... 528
Columbia Graphophone Company. Schubert Centenary Competition (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... 48, 138, 620, 718
Comic Opera, A New Scheme of ... ... 354
Coming Season, The ... ... ... 933, 1033
Competition Festival Record ... 75, 262, 361, 456, 550, 653, 748, 1034, 1124
——— Coming Festivals ... ... ... 262
Competitions: The Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Prize ... ... ... ... 621
——— Columbia Company's Schubert ... 48, 138, 620, 718
Composer's Name wanted (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 931, 1030
Conductor, The Problem of the: and a Proposed Mechanical Solution. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... ... 1073
Conductor with Back to Orchestra (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... 739
Conductorless Orchestra, A. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... ... ... 307
Conference of Choirmasters and Clergy... 729
Conference on the Board of Education's latest published Suggestions for the Teaching of Music ... ... ... ... 545
——— (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... 619
Connell, John. 'A Pilgrim Song' (R.)... 132
Consett Competitive Musical Festival ... 75
Contribution to the History of the Flute. By Alban Voigt ... ... ... ... ... 28
Converse, Harry. Part-song, 'Kill the Cook' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 131
Conway, Moyna. Pianoforte, 'Times and Tunes' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Cooke, Greville. Song, 'Bereft' (R.) ... 998
Cooper, Gerald. Concerto (see 252), 166, 258, 356
Cooper, Hilda. Pianoforte, 'Tarn Hows' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 426
Corelli. Concerto Grosso in C minor (Arr. Rupert Erlebach (R.) ... ... ... 704
Cork, Music at ... ... ... ... 364, 554
Counterpoint, A Word for Strict (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 61
Covent Garden Opera Season ... 546, 647
Coventry, Music at ... ... ... 72, 1131
Coventry Cathedral. Dr. Harold W. Rhodes. Appointment ... ... ... 528
Coventry Church Choirs' Association, Festival of ... ... ... ... ... 1116
Cranleigh School, Music at ... 164, 836
Crawford, H. A. B. The Use and Importance of Improvisation at the Keyboard ... ... ... ... ... 418
Crawshaw, Edith A. H. The Teachers of the Great Composers ... ... ... ... 214
Crawshaw, Rev. J. E., and Mrs. 'Suggestions for Musical Evenings' (R.) ... 905
Craxton, Harold. Pianoforte Solo of the Latin from the F minor Clavier Concerto (Bach) (R.) ... ... ... ... 624
——— Pianoforte, 'Trumpet Tune' (Eccles) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 997
Craxton-Moffat Collection of Old Keyboard Music (R.) ... ... ... ... 706
Crews, Lucille. 'Two Poems for Pianoforte' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 36
Crichton, Margaret. Song, 'What the robin sang' (R.) ... ... ... ... 430
Cripp, A. R. Song, 'O mistress mine' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 998
Crisis in the Teaching of Theory, The. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... ... 985
Crockett, Rutherford. 'Charles Auchester' ... ... ... ... ... ... 599
Cromer, Orchestral Society ... ... ... 453
Croxdale, Durham. St. Bartholomew's Church. Gramophone organ recital... 924
Croydon Festival ... ... ... ... ... 1123
Croydon Philharmonic Society ... ... 452
Croydon. St. Michael's Bach Choir ... 1117
Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society ... ... ... ... ... ... 452
Cumberland, Gerald. 'Memorising Music' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 45
Cunningham, G. D. Recital Tour in America ... ... ... ... ... 1117
Cutting out the Middleman (Correspondence) ... ... ... 834, 928, 1028
Czech Society's Concert ... ... ... 1126

Daily Express National Piano-Playing Contest, The (Occasional Notes) 716, 1080
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 736
D'Arba, E. Organ, 'Variations on a Russian Theme' (R.) ... ... ... ... 323
D'Arezzo, Guido, Ninth Centenary of ... 547
Darlaston, Music at ... ... ... ... 550

Page

Darlington, Dorothy, and Fiona McCleary. Pianoforte and Violin Recital... ... 451
David, John (Obituary) ... ... ... 1136
Davidson, Malcolm. Song Recital ... 1129
Davies, Ivor R. Part-song, 'Summer Rain' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
Davies, Joan, and Dennis Dance. Pianoforte Recital ... ... ... ... ... 451
Daymond, Emily. Parry's 'English Suite' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... 516
De Falla. Pianoforte, 'Dance of Terror,' from 'El Amor Brujo' (R.) ... ... 997
De Ternant, Andrew. Rheinberger on Organ Music ... ... ... ... ... 745
Deakin, Andrew Newland (Obituary) ... 267
Deans, Edward S. Hymns, 'Lord of an earth of glory' and 'Take my life and let it be' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 430
Debussy. Flute, 'Syrinx' (R.) ... ... 41
——— 'Monsieur Croche the Dilettante Hater' (R.) ... ... ... ... 437
Demuth, Norman. Part-song, 'May Morning' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 328
——— — Song, 'The Brown Owl' (R.)... 803
Denstone School, Music at ... ... ... 164
Dent, Edward J. 'Foundations of English Opera' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1101
Derby Competitive Musical Festival ... 456
Derby, Music at ...72 260, 359, 453, 941, 1132
Destinies of Music, The. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... ... ... 503
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 641
Destinies of Musical Romanticism, The. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... 113
Devizes Competitive Musical Festival ... 550
Devon Music Competitions ... ... 361, 456
Diabelli. Sonatina in C (R.) ... ... ... 37
Diack, J. Michael. Handel's 'Solomon' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 908 ——— Pianoforte, Dance movements from Handel (R.) ... ... ... ... 41
——— Series of Handel Songs (R.) ... 36
——— The Handel School Song Book' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 908
Dibdin, Charles: A Retrospect. By W. A. Roberts ... ... ... ... ... 622
Dickinson, A. E. F. 'A Study of Mozart's last three Symphonies' (R.). 134
——— The Fingering of Scales and Arpeggios on the Pianoforte ... ... 23
D'Ii, Charles. Lecture-Recital ... ... 463
Dinas Powis, Music at ... ... ... ... 460
Diplomas (Correspondence) 60, 161, 349, 443, 539, 641
Diss, Music at ... ... ... ... 72, 453
Dodds, George. 'Practical Hints for Singers' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 44
Dodds, Yeaman. Pianoforte, 'Lament' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 427
Doncaster, Music at ... ... 550, 1132
Doncaster Parish Church... ... 639, 1117
Dorking, Music at ... ... ... ... 72
Douglas, I.O.M. Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 551
Dover College, Music at ... ... ... 836
Dover, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 260
Dovercourt Congregational Church. New organ ... ... ... ... ... 534
Downes, Ralph. Appointment to Princeton University, U.S.A. ... ... 731
Dresden State Opera ... ... ... ... 558
Dressel, Detmar. Violin Recital ... ... 748
Drew, W. S. Imitation and Suggestion 983, 1076
——— The Singer's Ear ... ... ... 309
Drowning the Soloist (Correspondence)... 161
Dublin Competitive Musical Festival 553, 655
Dublin, Music at 77, 263, 364, 460, 554, 1133
Duff, Arthur K. Song, 'Who is Sylvia?' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 907
'Dulce Domum' (R.) ... ... ... ... 329
Dulwich Philharmonic Society ... ... 1130
Dumfries Competitive Musical Festival... 552
Duncan, C. H. Stuart. Pianoforte, 'Celtic Legend' (R.) ... ... ... ... 427
Duncan-Jones, A. S., and J. H. Arnold. 'A Liturgical Service for Good Friday' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 326
Duncan-Robbra, Edmund. 'Fantasy' for two Violins and Pianoforte' (R.)... 704
——— Songs, 'A Prayer' and 'Invocation to Spring' (R.)... ... ... 998
——— Violin, 'Four Easy Pieces' (R.) 802
Dundee Competitive Musical Festival ... 552
Dunhill, Thomas F. 'Mozart's String Quartets' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 713 ——— Orchestra, A 'Guildford Suite' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 908 ——— Part-song, 'Loch Lomond' (R.) 37
——— Pianoforte, 'Pastime and Good Company' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 516
——— String Orchestra, 'Sailor Dance' (Arr. by Sydney Robjohns)(R.) 1000
——— 'Sullivan's Comic Operas: A Critical Appreciation' (R.) (see 41, 158, 538) ... ... ... ... ... ... 432

Page

Durham Musical Examinations (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 60
Dushkin, Samuel. Violin Recital ... 549
Dussek, Ronald. Appointment... ... 828
Dyer, Nancy. Song Recital (see 1129)... 1035
Dyson, George. Part-song, 'In Honour of the City' (R.) ... ... ... ... 805
Dyson, Nancy. Song Recital ... 1035, 1129

Ear Trouble (Correspondence) ... 62, 162, 350, 443
Earliest Use of Leitmotif, The (Correspondence) (see 19, 350) ... ... ... 159
East Herts Music Society ... ... ... 439
East of Scotland Co-operative Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... 458
Eastbourne College, Music at ... ... 836
Eastbourne Festival, The ... ... ... 1126
Eastbourne, Music at ... ... ... 72, 167, 359
——— St. Michael's Church. New organ ... ... ... ... ... ... 924
Eccleshill Competitive Music Festival ... 75
Edeson, Donald. Part-song, 'Lullaby of an Infant Chief' (R.) ... ... ... 37
Edinburgh Competitive Musical Festival 552
Edinburgh, Fettes College. New organ 731
——— Music at ... 76, 168, 262, 362, 458, 553, 1037
Editing of Old Keyboard Music, The (see 537) ... ... ... ... ... 412
Edmonds, Paul. Song, 'The Turtle-Dove's Nest' (R.) ... ... ... ... 803
Edmunds, Chris. M. Organ, Sonata in B flat (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 807
Egerton, Arthur. Organ, 'An Easter Prelude' and 'Prelude-Improvisation on "Veni Emmanuel"' (R.) ... ... 629
Egerton, Julian. Clarinettist (see 351)... 268
'Egyptian Helen, The.' Strauss and von Hofmannsthal ... ... ... ... ... 618
Eichheim, Henry. Pianoforte, 'Oriental Impressions' (R.) ... ... ... ... 427
Elgar, Sir Edward. New Year Honours (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... ... 139
——— 'Caractacus' as Opera ... ... 166
——— 'Dream of Gerontius' in Lincoln Cathedral ... ... ... ... ... 519
——— Music to 'Beau Brummel' ... 1124
Ellingford, H. F. Part-song, 'Sea Lullaby' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 131
Elliot, J. H. A Note on Fashion ... ... 217
——— Reaction and Prejudice ... ... 512
'Encyclopaedia Britannica.' New edition 1023
'Encyclopédie de la Musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire' (R.) ... ... 232
'English Folk-songs for Schools' (R.) ... 39
English Opera, Why not an? (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 61
English Singers, The ... ... ... ... 652
Erlebach, Rupert. Corelli's Concerto Grosso in C minor (Arr.) (R.)... ... 704
'Ethics of Borrowing, The' (Correspondence) (see 240, 336) 59, 156, 250, 347, 439, 534, 640, 735, 830
Eton, Music at ... ... ... 164, 544
Eton School, Music at ... ... ... ... 836
Exeter Cathedral ... ... ... ... ... 156
Explanation, The Art of. By Robert H. Hull ... ... ... ... ... ... 7
External Stimulus in Music, The. By Robert H. Hull ... ... ... ... 125

Facsimile Letters. No. 12. Sims Reeves to Francesco Berger ... ... ... 30
Fairlie, Mabel Browning. Song, 'Arise, shine, for thy Light is come' (R.) ... 1096
Falkirk Choral Union ... ... ... ... 362
'False' Horn entry in the 'Eroica,' The (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... 538
Famous Victorians in a Toy Symphony... 701
——— (see Occasional Notes, 811)
Faning, Eaton. Choral ballad, 'The Miller's Wooing' (Arr. John Pointer) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 515
——— Part-song, 'Voyaging' (R.) ... 515
——— (see 'Late Eaton Faning') ...
Farjeon, Eleanor. 'Singing Games' (R.), 38, 330, 515
Farjeon, Harry. Song, 'Blue-Bell Time' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 131
Farmer, Henry. 'Celebrated Violin Solos' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1096
Farnam, Lynnwood. Organ Recitals ... 73
Farrant, John. Service in D minor (R.). 430
Farrar, Ernest. Pianoforte, 'Pierrette' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 427
Fashion, A Note on. By J. H. Elliot ... 217
Faulty Sensations of Musical Pitch, with Notes of a Personal Experience. By Edwin Smith ... ... ... 119, 213
Fauré, Gabriel. Pianoforte, Andante from second Quintet (Arr., Gustave Samazeuilh (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 998

Page

Faversham Institute Philharmonic Society ... ... ... ... ... 71
Federated Malay States. St. Mark's Church, Seramban. Negri Sembiban. New organ ... ... ... ... 1117
Felixstowe Madrigal Society ... ... 167
Ferruccio Busoni da Empoli (R.) ... 44
Fettes School, Music at ... 164, 544, 836
Few Thoughts on Pianoforte Playing, A. By I. Philipp ... ... ... ... 416 Fibich, Zdenko. Pianforte, Album-Blätter (R. ... ... ... ... ... 37
Findeisen, Nikolai F. 'The Outline of the History of Music in Russia from the Earliest Times to the End of the 18th Century' (R.) ... ... ... ... 512
——— (Obituary) ... ... ... 1135
Fingering of Scales and Arpeggios on the Pianoforte. By A. E. F. Dickinson 23
Finlay, Kenneth. Part-songs, 'Ours is the land and 'The Auld Ash Tree' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 514
First Ballad Opera: Allan Ramsay's 'Gentle Shepherd, The' (see 737, 739) 554
Fischel, Zippora Monteith. Memorial window to ... ... ... ... ... 79
Fisher, Esther. Pianoforte Recital ... 357
Fletcher, Percy. Part-song, 'When the green leaves come again' (R.)... ... 803
Flonzaley Quartet ... ... ... 452
Flood, W. H. Grattan. Hymn, 'Praised be Jesus Christ our King' (R.) ... 132
——— New Light on Late Tudor Composers:
XXXI.—John Bull ... ... ... 127
XXX.—John Daniel (see 352) ... 218
XXXIII.—Thomas Mudd ... ... 320
XXXIV.—Anthony Holborne ... 511
XXXV.—Robert Jones ... ... 616
XXXVI.—Richard Carlton ... ... 699
XXXVII.—Richard Allison ... ... 795
XXXVIII.—William Bathe ... ... 897
——— (Obituary) ... ... ... 846
Florence, Evangeline (Obituary) ... 1136
Fogg, Eric. Part-song, 'The Hillside'—a Ballade (R.) ... ... ... ... 328
——— Song, 'Spindrift' (R.) ... ... 325
Folkestone Competitive Musical Festival 654
Fontaine, Léon J. 'Twenty Short Melodious Studies for the Violin' (R.) 909
Forbes-Smith, Netta. Song, 'There are fairies in the garden' (R.) ... ... 1096
Ford, Donald. Part-song, 'A Cradle Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... 632
——— Song, 'Little Shepherd' (R.)... 631
——— Violin, 'An Ebb-Tide Rêverie' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1096
Forfar Choral Union ... ... ... 362
Forsyth, Cecil. Four Part-Songs (R.) ... 131
Foss, Hubert J. 'The Heritage of Music' (R. ... ... ... ... 137
Foulds, John. Pianoforte, 'Music Pictures' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Fowles, Ernest. Associated Board Pianoforte Examinations for 1929: Notes on the Studies and Pieces ... 1008
——— Lecture ... ... ... 524
Fox, Douglas. Organ Recital ... ... 923
Fox-Strangways. Musical Association Paper, 'Some of the less-known Songs of Schubert' ... ... ... ... 839
Francis, G. T. Song, 'Garden of Paradise' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1096
Franck. Symphony (Arr. organ by Herbert M. Kidd) (R.)... ... ... 807
Franklin, Owen le P. Resignation, and Canadian Tour ... ... ... ... 924
Fraser, Norman. 'Cuecа,' for two Violins and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... 327
Free Church Choir Union Festival 249, 748
French Tunes in 'The Beggar's Opera' and 'Polly.' By J. A. Westrup ... 320
Frescobaldi. 'Sei Madrigali à cinque voci' (Ed., Boghen) (R.) ... ... 1000
Friedländer, Arthur M. (Obituary) 943
Friesland's Folk-Dance (Correspondence) 830
Froggatt, Arthur T. Exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts, The... ... 510
——— Palestrina and the Major Sixth 1082
Frome Competitive Musical Festival ... 654
Full Scores of the Savoy Operas (Correspondence) (see 41, 158, 432) ... ... 538
Fuller-Maitland, J. A. Honorary Degree 701
Future of Music according to Honegger. By F. Bonavia ... ... ... ... 413
Future of Opera in England, The. By Dyneley Hussey ... ... ... 313

Gainsborough Bridge Primitive Methodist Church, Leytonstone. Re-opening of organ ... ... ... ... ... 639
Galashiels, Music at ... ... ...76, 262, 362
Gallie, James. Part-song, 'Proud Maisie' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... 804

Page

Gardiner, H. Balfour. Part-song, 'Volga Boatmen's Song' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... 37
Garratt, Percival. Songs, 'A Fairy's Life' and 'The Voices of the Trees' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 35
——— 'The Art of Pianoforte Playing' (R.) ... ... ... ... 234
Gater, William Henry (Obituary) ... 751
Gaul, Harvey. 'Benedicite Omnia Opera Domini' (R.) ... ... ... ... 132
Geer, E. Harold. 'Palestrina's "O Holy Jesus" (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... 1097 ——— Part-song, 'Jesus, the very thought of Thee' (R.) ... ... 132
Gerhardt, Elena. Song Recital ... ... 1129
German, Edward. 'Henry VIII.' Dances (Arr. organ by Edwin H. Lemare) (R.) 324
——— Knighthood (Occasional Notes) 139
German Singers ... ... ... ... 897
——— Itinerary of the... ... ... 1126
Germany, Music in 263, 460, 657, 1037, 1136
Gibbs, Armstrong. Song, 'In the Highlands' (R.) ... ... ... ... 428
——— Song, 'Jenny Jones' (R.) ... 35
Gibson, W. Milne (Obituary) ... ... 267
Giggleswick School, Music at ... 164, 544
Gillman, Frederick John. 'The Evolution of the English Hymn' (R.) ... 55
Giorni, Aurelio. Pianoforte, Twenty-four Concert Etudes in all Major and Minor Keys (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
——— Twenty-four Concert Studies (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 428
Give us more Mahler! (Correspondence) (see 159) ... ... ... ... 60
Gladstone, Francis Edward (Obituary)... 943
Glasgow Competitive Musical Festival ... 552
Glasgow, Music at... 76, 168, 262, 362, 459, 941, 1037
——— Orpheus Society ... ... ... 450
——— Society of Organists ... ... 57
——— Westbourne Church. Organ Recital ... ... ... ... ... 731
Glazounov's 'Duo' (R.) ... ... ... 428
Gloucester, Music at ... ... 167, 359
Gluck. 'Orpheus' Overture and Dances (Arr., Dr. Whittaker, for String Orchestra) (R.)... ... ... ... ... 802 ——— 'Scenes from "Orpheus"' Extracts from 'Iphigenia in Tauris' (Arr., Dr. Whittaker, as Part-song) (R.) 804
Glyn, Margaret H. 'The Editing of Old Keyboard Music' (R.) (see 537) ... 412
Godet, Robert. 'En Marge de "Boris Godunof"' (R.) ... ... ... ... 233
Good Word for Ripon, A (Correspondence) 445
Goodmayes Competitive Musical Festival 75
Gordon, Philip. 'Benediction' (R.) ... 1097
Goossens, Eugène. 'Lyric Poem' for Violin and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... 428
Goss, John. Recital ... ... ... 1129
Goss-Custard, Reginald. Organ, 'Romance' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 324
Gounod's 'Petite Symphonie' (Correspondence) (see 166) ... ... ... 252
Gösta Nyström. A New Swedish Composer. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... 1084
Grace, Harvey. 'A Handbook for Choralists' (R.)... ... ... ... 1002
——— 'A Musician at Large' (R.) ... 1102
——— A Talk with Alfred Hollins (see 929) ... ... ... ... ... 796
——— Minuet and Trio from Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Arr.) (R.)... 807
——— 'Ten Instrumental Movements from the Cantatas of J. S. Bach,' transcribed for Organ (R.) ... ... ... 629
——— The Three Choirs Festival (see 162) ... ... ... ... ... 898
Graham, John. Resignation and Testimonial ... ... ... ... ... 653
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 642
Grainger, Percy. Part-song, 'Londonderry Air' (R.) ... ... ... ... 131
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' 45, 140, 235, 331, 421, 517, 614, 706, 813, 909, 992, 1090
Graves, Alfred Perceval. 'The Celtic Song-Book, being Representative Folk-Songs of the Six Celtic Nations' (R.)... 713
Gray, Alan. Hymn-Anthem, 'Jerusalem on High' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1097
Gray, Cecil. 'The History of Music' (R.) 831) ... ... ... ... ... 709
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 833
Grazioli, Giovanni. Orchestra, 'Minuette' (Arr., Michele Esposito)... ... 1097
Great Meeting: Leicester. Re-opening of organ ... ... ... ... ... 639
Greaves, Ralph. Song, 'Lady, when your lovely head' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1096
——— Part-song, 'Come away, Death' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 805
Green, Topliss. Song Recital ... ... 1035
Greenock, Music at ... ... ... ... 363

Page

Grell, Edwards. 'Missa Solemnis' (R.) 630
Gretchaninov, A. 'Ecole du Chant' (R.) 713
Grimm, Friedrich Karl. Violin, 'Kammermusikdichtung' (R.) ... ... ... 326
Grimsby, Music at ... ... ... ... 453
Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (Ed., H. C. Colles) (R.)... 43, 229
Grundy, Enid. 'The Happy Pianist' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 719
Guernsey Competitive Musical Festival... 75
Guernsey, Music in ... ... 167, 453
Guildford, Music at ... ... 453, 1132
Guildhall School of Music. Organ rebuilt 346
Gurney, Ivor. Song, 'Desire in Spring' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 503
H.M. Royal Marines Band, Chatham ... 647
Hadley, Patrick. Part-song, 'Faery Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
——— Songs, 'The Sheep' and 'Bury her at even' (R.) ... ... ... ... 631
Hageman, Richard. Song, 'Christ went up into the hills' (R.)... ... ... 325
Haigh, T. Pianoforte, 'An Old Dance Form' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Haigh, T. Memorial Tablet ... ... 528
Hales, Hubert. Pianoforte, Three Short Dances (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
Halifax Competitive Musical Festival ... 75
Halifax, Music at ... ... 72, 359, 453, 1132
Hallé Orchestra in London. B.B.C. Concert ... ... ... ... ... ... 1129
'Handbook to "The Church Hymnary"' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 55
Handel. Dance movements from (Arr. for Pianoforte by J. Michael Diack) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 41
——— Largo from Concerto Grosso No. 12 (Arr., Sir Henry Wood) (R.) ... 807
——— Minuet from 'Berenice' (Arr., Adam Carse; also by Jasper Rooper) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 624
——— Seventy-six pieces for Harpsichord (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 632
——— 'Solomon' (Abridged ed., by J. M. Diack) (R.) ... ... ... ... 908 ——— Songs. (Arr., Arthur Somervell) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 998
Handel and his 'borrowings' (Correspondence) (see 709) ... ... ... 831
Handel Society. N.S.L. Concert 'Hercules' at the Palladium ... ... ... 256
Handel's Music-paper: with other notes. By P. Robinson ... ... ... 508
Handel's Organ Concertos. New edition (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 324
Hanforth, T. W. Popular Hymn-Tunes, 'The Sheffield Cathedral Descants '(R.) 133
Hannam, William S. 'Notes on the Church Cantatas of John Sebastian Bach' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 437
Hannigan, Margaret, and Seamus Clandillon. 'Londubh an chairn.' Being songs of the Irish Gaels, in Staff and Sol-fa with English Metrical Translations (R.) ... ... ... ... 43
Hanson, Howard. Symphonic poem, 'Lux Æterna' (R.) ... ... ... 327
Hard Case of the Woman Composer, The (Correspondence) ... ... ... 736
Harlech, Music at ... 263, 749, 936
Harleston, Music at ... ... ... 72
Harold Brooke Choir ... ... 89, 548, 1126
Harold, T. S. Pianoforte, 'Dance Suite' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 906
Harris, John (Obituary) ... ... ... 1135
Harris, S. Taylor. Song, 'The Feast of Christmas' (R.) ... ... ... ... 703
Harrison, Julius. 'The Blessed Damozel.' A New Setting (R.) ... ... ... 611
Harrison, Sidney. Songs, 'I hear an Army' and 'Fairy Tales' (R.) ... 130
Harrogate, Music at ... ... 748, 1036
Harrow School, Music at... ... ... 544
Hart, Fritz Bennicke. Violin, three Choral Preludes (R.) ... ... ... 40
Hartigan, John. Song Recital ... ... 1129
Hartlepool, Music at ... ... ... ... 359
Harwood, Basil. Three Short Pieces and 'In Exitu Israel,' for Organ (R.) 806
Harwood, C. C. Easter Hymn, 'O Sons and Daughters' (R.) ... ... ... ... 630
Haslemere Festival of Chamber Music. By E. van der Straeten (see 658) ... 937
Haslemere, Music at ... ... 73, 260
Hastings Competitive Musical Festival... 456
Hastings, Music at 261, 359, 550, 1036, 1132
Hathaway, Dr. Part-song, 'To the Ladybird' (R.) ... ... ... ... 804
Hathaway, Joseph. Pianoforte, 'The Call of the Woods' (R.) ... ... ... 906
Hathaway, J. W. G. Meredith's 'Dirge in Woods' (R.) ... ... ... ... 328
Hatten, Geoffrey (Obituary) ... ... 557
Haverhill, Music at ... ... ... ... 359
Hawarden and Neighbourhood, Music in, 77, 169

Page

Haworth, Frank. 'Two Andantes for two Violins' (R.) ... ... ... 429
He took us seriously! (Correspondence). 738
Heanor Competitive Musical Festival ... 1034
Hector, Chastey. 'Kamaldar,' a Romance of Old Egypt (R.) ... ... 328
Heilman, William Clifford. Violoncello, 'Romance' (R.) ... ... ... 515
Helensburgh, Music at ... ... 76, 263
Hellendaal, Peter. 'Solo for the Violoncello' (Arr., Willem Pijper) (R.) ... 1097
Helston, Music at ... ... ... 550
Hely-Hutchinson, Victor. Four Songs (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 428 ——— 'Songs of Innocence' (R.) ... 430
——— Songs, 'Trees' and 'The Bees' Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... 325
Hemery, Valentine. Five Songs (R.) ... 131
Hendrik, Francis. Pianoforte, 'The Jester' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Henson, Madame Medora (Mrs. Waddington Cooke) (Obituary) ... ... 462
Herbert, A. P., and Dennis Arundell. Incidental music, 'Fat King Melon and Princess Caraway' (R.) ... ... 39
Herbert, Muriel. Song, 'The Lake Isle of Innisfree' (R.) ... ... ... 907
Hereford, Music at ... ... ... 73
Hesse, A. F., and his Organ Music. By Stanley Lucas ... ... ... ... 1022
Hesse, Dorothy. Pianoforte Recital ... 451
Hexham Competitive Musical Festival... 456
'Hiawatha' as a Masque (Royal Choral Society) ... ... ... ... ... 647
'Hiawatha' Dramatized (R.) ... ... 330
Hickin, Welton. Pianoforte, Three Miniature Dances (R.) ... ... 801
Highgate Congregational Church ... 346
Hill, Edward Burlingame. Sonata for Clarinet and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... 327
Hislop, John. Knighthood of the Royal Order of Vasa ... ... ... ... 749
Hodge, Harry. Six Bach Chorale Preludes (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... 40
Hodge, Herbert. Organ Recitals ... 249
Holbrooke, Josef. Pianoforte, Ballade (No. 2), 'Penmachno' (R.) ... '... 624
——— Song, 'The Garden' (R.) ... 325
Holland, Music in ... 77, 169, 364, 461, 555, 657, 749, 844, 940, 1134
Hollinrake, H. Part-song, 'Frolic' (R.) 1001
Hollins, Alfred. Organ Recitals ... 249
Hollins and His Organ (Correspondence) (see 796) ... ... ... ... 929
Holst. Anthem, 'Eternal Father' (R.) 430
——— Choral Ballet, 'The Golden Goose' (R.) ... ... ... 39, 517
——— Choral Ballet, 'The Morning of the Year' (R.) ... ... ... ... 704
——— 'Egdon Heath' (R.) ... ... 247
——— 'Egdon Heath,' first performance at Cheltenham ... ... ... 255
——— 'Egdon Heath,' first performance in London ... ... ... ... 355
——— 'Man born to toil' (R.) ... 326
——— Masefield's Mystery Play, 'The Coming of Christ' (R.) ... 805, 808
Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill. Musical Recital ... ... ... ... ... 1023
Homer, Sidney. Songs, 'The Widow in the Bye Street' (R.) ... ... ... 1096
Hopkins, Douglas. Appointment ... 127
Horne, Elsie. Part-song, 'Nocturne' (R.), 38, 632
Horner, Burnham (Obituary) ... ... 462
Horner, Egbert Foster (Obituary) ... 1039
Houghton, Hortense. Song Recital ... 1035
Howarth, Barbara. The Personal Element in Teaching Music ... ... 520
Howells, Herbert. Song, 'Come sing and dance' (R.) ... ... ... ... 631
——— Song, 'Holiness' (R.)... ... 907
——— Song, 'My eyes for beauty pine' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 630
——— Song, 'The Little Boy Lost' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 907
Howes, Frank. 'William Byrd' (R.) (see 538) ... ... ... ... 431
Hoyle, Walter. Resignation ... ... 155
Huddersfield Choral Society in Holland... 463
Huddersfield Competitive Musical Festival 262
Huddersfield, Music at ... 73, 359, 454, 1036, 1132
Hughes, Herbert. Three Songs, 'The Distance,' 'A Love-Letter,' and 'Come, let us now resolve at last' (R.) ... 999
Hughes, John. Part-song, 'The Plaint of the Wind' (R.) ... ... ... 37
Hughes, Patrick. Songs, 'A Nymph and a Swain' and 'I tell thee, Charmion' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 35
Hull, Arthur Eaglefield. (Obituary) ... 1135
Hull, Music at ... 73, 167, 360, 454, 1132
Hull, Robert H. Song, 'War Song to Englishman' (R.) ... ... ... 803
——— The Art of Explanation ... 27

Page

Hull, Robert H. The External Stimulus in Music ... ... ... ... 125
——— The Revival of Music (see 441, 536) ... ... ... ... ... 219
——— The Self-Expression of Children in Music ... ... ... 415, 635
Humphreys, Pelham. 'Rejoice in the Lord' (Ed., C. Hylton Stewart) (R.)... 1098
'Hundred Best Short Classics, The' (see 919) ... ... ... 41, 330, 823
Hunstanton, Music at ... ... ... 454
Hussey, Dyneley. Masefield's 'The Coming of Christ' ... ... ... 649
——— The Future of Opera in England 313
——— 'Wolfgang Amade Mozart' (R.) 134
Hutcheson, David. Song Recital ... 1035
Hutcheson, Ernest. Pianoforte Recital. 652
Hutchings, Arthur. Karg-Elert... ... 939
Hymn-Tune Accompaniment. By Corbett Sumsion ... ... ... ... 921
Hymns and Tunes (R.) ... ... ... 132
Hymns and Tunes from 'Songs of Praise' (R.) ... ... ... ... 55
'Hymns from "The Church Hymnary"' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 55
'Hymns of Western Europe' (R.) ... 55

Iliffe, Frederick (Obituary) ... ... 267
——— (Correspondence) ... ... 539
Ilkeston Sunday School Union Festival... 75
Ilkley Competition Musical Festival ... 654
Imitation and Suggestion. By W. S. Drew ... ... ... ... 983, 1076
Imperial League of Opera ... ... 821
Impression and Expression, Phases of, By Mrs. Frank Liebich ... ... 312
'Improving' the Classics (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... 442, 733 Incorporated Society of Musicians' Conference ... ... ... ... ... 151
——— Reconstitution (see Correspondence, 736) ... ... ... ... 593
Indian Queens Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 75
Ingham, Charles Barlow (Obituary) ... 751
Inman, Mrs. Sixty-six years as organist 57
Insurance Society Orchestra, The ... 166
International Society for Contemporary Music: Siena Festival ... ... ... 936
Inverness. St. Andrew's Cathedral, new organ ... ... ... ... ... 528
Ippisch, Franz. 'Suite' for Violoncello Solo (R.) ... ... ... ... 40
Ipswich Competitive Musical Festival ... 551
Ipswich, Music at... 73, 261, 360, 454, 1132
Irby, Paul. Song, 'The Isles of Greece' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 703
Ireland, John. Pianoforte, Sonatina (R.) 801
——— Song, Five Poems by Thomas Hardy (R.) ... ... ... 130, 325
——— Song, 'When I am dead, my dearest' (R.) ... ... ... ... 702
——— Song-cycle, 'We'll to the woods no more' (R.) ... ... ... 702
——— The Clarendon Series—Pianoforte Music (R.) ... ... ... ... 426
Ireland, Music in ... ... 77, 169, 263, 364, 460, 554, 1133
Irwin-Hunt. Organ Recitals ... ... 1023
Italy, Music in ... ... 461, 555, 658, 1038
Ivimey, J. W. Pianoforte, 'Abelard and Heloïse' (R.) ... ... ... ... 801

Jackson, William. Memorial ... ... 1117
Jacob, Gordon. Song for the Spinning Wheel' (R.) ... ... ... ... 804 ——— Song, 'The Barefoot Boy' (R.) 803
——— Song 'The spacious firmament' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 804
Jacobson, Maurice. Part-songs, arranged from Sir Richard Terry's 'Shanties' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 38
Jaffray, Cyril. Pianoforte, Four 'Silhouettes' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Janacek, Leos (Obituary) ... ... ... 846
Jedburgh, Music at ... ... ... ... 459
Jenkins, Cyril. Part-song, 'David of the White Rock' (R.) ... ... ... 37
——— Part-song, 'The Lamb' (R.)... 329
——— Pianoforte, 'Autumn Rêverie' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 997
——— Pianoforte, 'O, what a chatterbox' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
——— Pianoforte and Violin, 'Moodphantasy' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1000
Jersey Eisteddfod... ... ... ... ... 1125
Jesus College, Cambridge. An interesting organ ... ... ... ... ... 56
Jew's harp a century ago, The. By Anthony Clyne ... ... ... ... 508
John Danyel (Correspondence) ... ... 352
Johnson, Basil. Mus. Doc Degree ... 1007
Johnson, Bernard. Part-song 'Sleep' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 37

Page

Johnson, Horace. Pianoforte 'In the American Manner' (R.) ... ... ... 36
Johnson, William (Obituary) ... ... 368
Jones, G. H. Cantata, 'Robin Goodfellow' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1001
Jones, Robert. Song, 'Now have I learn'd with much ado' (R.) ... ... 430
Judd, Percy. 'A Hush Song' (R.) ... 39
——— Part-song, 'Forest Music' (R.) 328
——— Songs, 'Canadian Boat Song' and 'The Terrible Robber Men' (R.)... 329

Karg-Elert. By Arthur Hutchings ... 939
Karg-Elert New Suite, for Organ (R.) (see 930) ... ... ... ... ... 905
Keel, Frederick. Song, 'Remembrance' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 631
——— Song, 'The Ship of Rio' (R.)... 130
Keighley. Summerscales Festival ... 1125
Kelso, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 459
Kemp, David. Song, 'Border Cradle Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 130
Kendal, Music at ... ... ... ... 454
Kensington Music Club ... ... ... 453
Kensington New Church. New organ ... 639
Kidderminster, Music at ... ... ... 261
Kildwick Competitive Musical Festival... 749
Kimmins, Mrs. G. T. Songs from the Plays of William Shakespeare, with Dances (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 823
King, Charles J. Presentation ... ... 346
King, Robert. Song, 'Come, O Thou Traveller unknown' (Arr., H. A. Chambers) (R.) ... ... ... ... 907
Kircher, Rudolf. 'Fair Play' (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... ... 810, 903
Kirkcaldy, Music at ... ... ... ... 363
Kirkland, Alfred (Obituary) ... ... 79
Kitson, C. H. Communion Service (R.) 132
——— Introit, 'Be still, my soul' (R.) 630
——— 'Invertible Counterpoint and Canon' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 437
——— Part-song, 'The Hoofs of the Horses' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1001
——— Violin, Phantasy (R.) ... ... 802
Klein, Ivy Frances. Songs, 'Music, when soft voices die,' 'The Rosebud,' and 'Ode to Solitude' (R.) ... ... ... 1096
Kochanski. Violin Recital ... ... 652
Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus' at Cambridge ... ... ... ... ... 75
Kok, Leo. Pianoforte, 'Enfance' (R.)... 427
Konstant, Antoine. Pianoforte, Gurlitt's Prelude, Op. 107 (R.) ... ... ... 997
Korngold, Eric. Opera, 'The Miracle of Heliane' (Vienna) ... ... ... ... 78
Kreisler. Violin Recital ... ... ... 652
Kroll, William. Violin, 'Bizarresque' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 515

L.M.S. Concert Society ... ... ... 452
Ladislav Vycpalek's 'Cantata of the Last Things of May.' A New Choral Work ... ... ... ... ... ... 447
Lambert, Constant. Pianoforte, 'Elegiac Blues' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 907
——— Pianoforte Duet, Ballet music to 'Pomona' (R.) ... ... ... ... 809
——— Songs, 'Three Poems by Li-po' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 631
Lancashire. St. Helen's Parish Church, new organ ... ... ... ... ... 1117
Lancaster, Music at ... ... 73, 1036
Landowska, Madame. Harpsichord Recital ... ... ... ... ... ... 356
Lang, C. S. 'Two Hundred Tunes for Sight-Singing' (R.) ... ... ... 44
Langford-James, R. 'Missa Sancto Johannis' (R.) ... ... ... ... 132
Larne Competitive Musical Festival ... 458
Larynx Again, The (Correspondence) (see 124) ... ... 445, 536, 642, 830, 927, 1028, 1121
Late Eaton Faning's Degree, The (Correspondence) ... ... ... 62, 161
'Le jardin parfumé' (Correspondence) (see 997) ... ... ... ... ... 1120
Leach, Rowland. Cantata, 'Great and Marvellous' (R.) ... ... ... ... 430
League of Arts, The ... ... 250, 452
——— Saturday Concerts ... ... 1039
Leake, George (Obituary) ... ... ... 557
Leamington Competitive Musical Festival 748
Leamington, Music at ... ... ... ... 73
'Learning Music.' By A. H. Peppin ... 521
Lee, Markham. Part-song, 'Tender sleep enfold thee' (R.) ... ... ... 328
——— Song, 'Here a little child I stand' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 631
Leeds Festival, The (see 923) ... ... 1024
Leeds, Music at ...73, 261, 360, 454, 941, 1132
Leicester Bach Choir ... ... ... ... 1117
Leicester Cathedral, Diocesan Choir Festival ... ... ... ... ... 828

Page

Leicester, Great Meeting. Rebuilding of organ ... ... ... ... ... 924
Leicester, Music at ... ...73, 454, 1132
Leigh, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 261
Leith Hill Competitive Musical Festival. 551
Lemare, Edwin H. Organ, German's Three Dances from 'Henry VIII.' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 324
——— Organ, 'Woodland Rêverie' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 324
Léner Quartet ... ... ... ... ... 1129
Levenson, Boria. Pianoforte, 'The Musical Box' (R.) ... ... ... 37
Lewes, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 941
Ley, H. G. Organ, Fantasia on 'Aberystwyth' (R.) ... ... ... ... 629
Leys School, Music at ... ... ... ... 164
Lichfield and District Organists' Association ... ... ... ... ... 1117
Liebich, Mrs. Frank. Chopin: His Wit and Humour ... ... ... ... 604
——— Phases of Impression and Expression ... ... ... ... ... 312
——— Poetry, Song, and Schubert (see Correspondence, 1029, 1119) 689, 787
Lilge, Hermann. A Suite for Flute (R.). 131
Limits of Music, The. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... ... ... 602
Lincoln, Music at ... ... ... ... 73, 1132
Liskeard, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 454
Little, H. F. V. 'Operatic Translations'... (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 714
Littlehampton, Music at ... ... ... 550
Liverpool. Blow's Masque, 'Venus and Adonis' ... ... ... ... ... 259
Liverpool Cathedral Organ. Anniversary of opening ... ... ... ... 924
Liverpool Competitive Musical Festival 551
Liverpool. Elgar's 'Caractacus' ... ... 166
——— Music at ... 73, 167, 261, 360, 454, 941, 1036, 1132
——— Repertory Opera ... ... 166, 259
Llanelly, Music at ... ... 460, 553, 1133
——— St. Alban's Church ... ... 346
Llangefni, John Elias Memorial Chapel. New organ ... ... ... ... 924
Lloyd, Charles Harford. 'Free accompaniment of Unison Hymn-Singing' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 705
——— Part-song, 'The way for Betty and me' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... 515
Lloyd, J. Morgan. Part-song, 'Walking by a river-side' (R.) ... ... ... 35
Lloyd's Register ... ... ... ... ... 452
L.N.E.R. Musical Society ... ... ... 1130
Locatelli, Pietro. Concerto Grosso (R.) 703
Locke, John. Pianoforte, 'Charivari' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 36
London Choral Society ... ... ... 69, 549
——— Franck's 'Beatitudes' ... ... 257
London Church Choirs Association ... 57
London College of Music (Correspondence) (see 737) ... ... ... ... 832
London Musical Festival ... ... ... 456
London, North, Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 75
London Orphan School (Correspondence) 642
London School of Dalcroze Eurhythmics 1135
London Shipping Orchestral Society ... 452
London Society of Organists ... ... 249
London Southern Area Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... 75
London String Quartet ... ... ... ... 1034
London Sunday School Choir ... ... 452
London Symphony Orchestra, The 70, 165, 355, 450, 1035
London Violoncello School ... ... ... 846
Londonderry Feis ... ... ... ... ... 362
Londonderry, Music at ... ... ... ... 460
Long Melford. Holy Trinity Choir Festival ... ... ... ... ... 1117
Longevity of Organists (Correspondence) (see 1031, 1120)... ... ... ... 928
Lotti, Antonio. Sonata for Flute (R.) ... 131
Loughborough Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 457
Loughton Choral Society and Orchestra 1130
Lovatt, S. E. Choral Ballad, 'The Saga of Bal-dher Beautiful' (R.)... ... 1099
Love, James (Obituary) ... ... ... ... 557
Lovelock, William. Communion Service (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 630
Lowestoft, Music at ... ... ... ... 261
Lualdi, Adriano. 'Serate Musicale' (R.) 610
——— 'Viaggio Musicale in Italia' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 137
Lucas, Stanley. A. F. Hesse and his Organ Music ... ... ... ... 1022
Ludlow, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 73
Lutkin, Peter Christian. Motet, 'Fairest Lord Jesus' (R.) ... ... ... 430
Luton, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 73

McAfee, Marion. Song Recital ... ... 452

Page

McColvin, Lionel R. Schumann's 'Woman's Love and Life' Cycle: A Reflection ... ... ... ... 896
McKenna, Kennedy. Song Recital ... 1035
Mackenzie, Sir Alexander. Violoncello, 'Valse Humoresque' and 'Andante Espressivo' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1097
Mackinlay, Kenneth Sterling. 'Origin and Development of Light Opera' (R.) 432
——— Songs, 'I had a little nut-tree' and 'The frog and the crow' (R.) ... 325
McKinley, Carl. Pianoforte, 'Song in the dusk' (R.) ... ... ... ... 427
Mackinnon, Hugh A. Carol, 'This endless night I saw a sight' (R.) ... 1097
McNaught, W. Part-song, 'In Derry Vale' (R.) ... ... ... ... 329
Macpherson, Charles. Prelude in G from 'A Little Organ Book' (R.) ... ... 807
Macpherson Memorial Fund ... ... ... 639
Mahler, Roger, and Alkan (Correspondence) (see 60) ... ... ... ... 159
Maidenhead, Music at ... ... ... ... 550
Maidstone, Music at ... ... ... ... 360
Maine, Basil. 'Behold these Daniels: being Studies of Contemporary Critics' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 714
Making Melody. By Alexander Brent-Smith ... ... ... ... ... 691
Malvern, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 360
Malvern Priory Church Organ ... ... 57, 345
Malvern School, Music at ... ... 164, 544
Manchester Diocesan Church Music Society ... ... ... ... ... 1117
Manchester, Music at 73, 168, 261, 360, 454, 653, 259, 942, 1036, 1130, 1132
——— Ernest Bryson's second Symphony ... ... ... ... ... 167
——— Respighi, 'Belfagor' Overture 259
——— The Coming Season ... ... ... 942
Manchester University: Faculty of Music 741
Mansard, Edmund. Pianoforte, Suite 'Versailles' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Mansfield Competitive Musical Festival... 361
Mansfield, Orlando A. William Gardiner and the Music of Nature ... ... 221
Mansfield, P. J. Part-song, 'Spring' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 908
Margate Festival ... ... ... ... ... 942
Mariani's Italian Marionettes ... ... 840
Mark, Jeffrey. 'Four North-Country Songs' (R.) ... ... ... ... 428
Marlborough (Wilts) Choral Society's Summer Concert ... ... ... 846
Marlborough School, Music at ... ... 544
Martens, Frederick H. 'Leo Ornstein: The Man, his Ideas, his Work' (R.) 233
Mary Wakefield Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 551
Mase, Owen. Song, 'England' (R.) ... 329
Masefield's Mystery Play, 'The Coming of Christ' (R.) ... ... ... 805, 808
Masefield's 'The Coming of Christ.' By Dyneley Hussey ... ... ... ... 649
Matlock Competitive Musical Festival ... 748
Matthay, Tobias. Presentation... ... 368
——— The Slur or Couplet, in all its Variety: Its Interpretation and Execution' (R.) ... ... ... ... 720
Matthews, F. E. Two songs (R.) ... ... 631
Mayer, Daniel (Obituary) ... ... ... 943
Medtner, Nicolas. By Leonid Sabaneev 209
——— Correspondence ... ... ... 350
——— Pianoforte, 'Improvisation' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 802
——— Pianoforte, Two 'Elfenmarchen' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
Medway Towns Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 262
Meers, Ernest George (Obituary) ... ... 943
Meigle, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 363
'Mélodies populaires Serbes' (Serbie du Sud) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 233
Melsa. 'The Art of Violin Playing' (R.) 234
Memorising Choral Works (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 738, 834
Mendelssohn Scholarships ... ... ... 1094
Menges, Isolde, and Harriet Cohen. Recital ... ... ... ... ... 71
Merbecke. New edition: organ accompaniment, by J. H. Arnold (R.) ... 706
Merthyr Tydfil, Music at... ... ... ... 553
Mexborough Competitive Musical Festival 1034
Middle-Classical Schubert, The. By Eric Blom ... ... ... ... 890, 980
Middlesbrough, Music at ... ... ... 360
Middleton, H. Motet, 'Let my prayer be set forth' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1097 ——— Part-song, 'In a valley' (R.) 1001
Milan, Music at ... 170, 265, 364, 750, 1038
Milford, Robin. Organ, 'Two Sea-Preludes' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 629
——— Song, 'In Youth is Pleasure' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 329
Military Musician in Literature, The. By J. Paine ... ... ... ... 1085

Page

Mill Hill Eisteddfod ... ... ... ... 361
Miller, Florence. Song, 'Magic Memory' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1096
Miller, George (Obituary) ... ... ... 368
Miller (Mills), Henry (Obituary) (see 463) 368
Millom Competitive Musical Festival ... 75
Mills (Miller), Henry (Obituary) (see 463) 368
Minor Chord, The, and Scale Fingering (Correspondence) (see 17, 115, 211) ... 161
Misuse of a Diploma (Correspondence)... 738
Moeran, E. J. Pianoforte, 'Bank Holiday' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 426
——— Pianoforte, 'Summer Valley' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 426
——— Song 'Christmas Day in the Morning' (R.) ... ... ... ... 803
Monklands Competitive Musical Festival 458
Monteverde's 'The Coronation of Poppæa' ... ... ... ... ... 65
Moody, C. H. Portrait in Ripon Town Hall ... ... ... ... ... 438
Morayshire Competitive Musical Festival 553
More Cinema Vandalism (Correspondence) 350
Morecambe Competitive Musical Festival 551
Moretti, Guilio (Obituary) ... ... ... 944
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 1029
Morris, G. O'Connor. Pianoforte, 'Six Pictures of Childhood' (R.) ... ... 427
Morrison, Angus. Pianoforte recital ... 549
Motherwell and Wishaw Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... 458
Moy, Edgar. Pianoforte, 'From a Country Garden' (R.) ... ... ... 37
Mozart's Letters (Correspondence) ... 349
Mozart's Minuet (from Divertimento in D) (Ed., Spencer Dyke) (R.) ... ... 1000
Much Hadham, Music at... ... ... ... 73
Mullen, Frederic. Pianoforte, Rondolette in G (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
Murdoch, William. Vivaldi-Bach Concerto in D, arr. Pianoforte (R.) ... 624
Murray, W. H. (Obituary) ... ... ... 943
Music and the Horoscope (Correspondence) (see 928, 1120) ... ... ... 1031
Music in Public Schools ... ... 163, 543, 836
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ... 29, 128, 227, 331, 421, 514, 606, 816, 991, 1089
Music in the Provinces 71, 167, 260, 358, 453, 549, 653, 748, 941, 1036, 1130
'Music Meeting, The' (see 930) ... ... 700
Music of the Halls, The. By F. Bonavia 118
Musical Association, The... ... ... ... 64
——— Annual Dinner... ... ... ... 545
——— Bridge, J. C. 'Town Waits and their Tunes' ... ... ... ... ... 655
——— Fox-Strangways, A. H. 'Some of the less-known songs of Schubert' 839
——— Naylor, E. W. 'Three 17th-Century Poet-Parsons and Music' ... 741 ——— 'Proceedings for the years 1926-27' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 45
——— Roper, Stanley. 'Music at the Chapels Royal, c. 1135 to the present day' ... ... ... ... ... 354
——— Spurling, Clement M. 'Music in Public Schools of To-day' ... ... 64
——— Whittaker, Dr. W. G. 'Some Problems in the Performance of Bach's Church Cantatas' ... ... ... ... 544
Musical Fund Society of Philadelphia Competition ... ... ... ... ... 1039
Musical Notes from Abroad 77, 169, 263, 364, 460, 555, 657, 749, 843, 940, 1037, 1134
Musicians' Benevolent Fund (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 59
——— (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... 53
Musician's Bookshelf, The (R.) 41, 134, 228, 431, 513, 607, 709, 812, 904, 1002, 1100
Musicians' Company. Schubert Commemoration Banquet ... ... ... ... 719
Muswell Hill Congregational Church. New organ ... ... ... ... 1023

Nabokoff, Nicholas. Pianoforte, 'Short Stories' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 907
——— Sonata for Pianoforte (R.) ... 907
Nash, Walter. Song, 'Jean' (R.) ... 703
National Federation of Old Cathedral Choristers' Associations ... ... ... 730
National Institute for the Blind. ... Annual Report (Occasional Notes) ... ... 1006
National Provincial Bank Musical Society 452
National Songs with Descants, Set 4 (R.) 515
National Temperament in Music, The. By Béla Bartók ... ... ... ... 1079
National Temperance Choral Union, The 463
Nature of Harmony, The. By Matthew Shirlaw ... ... ... ... 17, 115, 211
——— (Correspondence) 161, 350, 535, 644, 738, 739, 926, 1030
Naylor, E. W. Musical Association paper, 'Three 17th-Century Poet-Parsons and Music' ... ... ... ... ... 741 ——— Song, 'Peg-a-Ramsey' (R.) ... 428

Page

Need boys' voices break? (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 1028
Nelson Clef Club ... ... ... ... ... 1036
'Nelson's Music Practice: Junior Teachers' Book' (R.) ... ... ... 44
New Eastern Avenue United Methodist Church, Ilford. New organ ... ... 1117
New English Music Society, The ... 1128
New Light on Dr. Nicholas Staggins: First Cambridge Professor of Music (Correspondence) ... ... ... 537
New Light on Late Tudor Composers. By W. H. Grattan Flood:
XXXI.—John Bull ... ... ... 127
XXXII.—John Daniel (see 352) ... 218
XXXIII.—Thomas Mudd ... ... 320
XXXIV.—Anthony Holborne ... 511
XXXV.—Robert Jones ... ... 616
XXXVI.—Richard Carlton ... ... 699
XXXVII.—Richard Allison ... ... 795
XXXVIII.—William Bathe ... ... 897
New Scheme of Comic Opera, A ... ... 354
New York Boy Choir (Correspondence) (see 351) ... ... ... ... 643
Newbury Choral Society ... ... ... 550
Newcastle Cathedral Choir Festival ... 638
Newcastle Competitive Musical Festival 654
Newcastle-on-Tyne, Music at 74, 168, 261, 360, 454, 653, 1132
Newcastle-under-Lyne, Music at 74, 360
Newlandsmith, Ernest. 'Art, Love, and Life' (R.) ... ... ... ... 232
Newport (I.W.), Music at ... ... 261
Newport (Mon.), Music at ... 77, 460
Newton, Ernest. Part-songs, 'Old King Cole,' 'The Minstrel Boy,' 'Serenade,' and 'Canadian Boat-Song' (R.) ... 1001
Newton, John (Obituary) ... ... ... 368
Newtown (Montgomery), Music at 77, 655, 843
Nicholson, Sydney. Mus. Doc. Degree... 809
——— Presentation ... ... ... 1117
——— School of English Church Music: Outline of Mr. Nicholson's Project, The (see 415, 837, 1021) ... 54
——— The Parish Psalter' (R.) ... 705
Norcup, Frederick William (Obituary)... 751
Northampton Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 75, 457
Northampton, Music at ... ... ... 74, 550
Northern Counties Musical Competition Festival ... ... ... ... ... 553
Northern Symphony Orchestra, The ... 1130
Northwick, Music at ... ... ... 454
Norwich Cathedral New Organist: Dr. Heathcote D. Statham ... ... 639
Norwich Diocesan Church Choral Association: Triennial Festival ... 639
Norwich, Music at... 74, 168, 261, 360, 454, 1036, 1132
Nottingham, Music at ... 74, 261, 454, 1135
——— Musical Competition Festival 1125
Novello, Marie (Obituary) ... ... 751
'Novello's School Songs' (R.) ... ... 999
'Novice Corner: An Elementary Handbook of the Gramophone' (R.) ... 714

Oban, Music at ... ... ... ... 459
Occasional Notes ... 48, 138, 240, 336, 424, 619, 716, 809, 901, 1006, 1092
O'Connor-Morris, G. Pianoforte, 'Boat-Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... 906
Old Charlton Choral Society ... ... 558
Old English Songs. 'The Hunt is up' and 'The Marriage of the Frog' (Arr., H. A. C.) (R.) ... ... ... ... 803
Old Vic., The ... ... ...254, 358, 932
——— Opera ... ... ... ... 358
——— (Occasional Notes) ... ... 811
——— Re-opening ... ... ... 254
Oldham. Hope Congregational Church... 57
——— Music at ... ... ... ... 454
Oldroyd, George. 'Missa Parochialis' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 132
——— Twelve Songs, 'A Fairy Year' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 39
O'Neill, Norman. Part-song, 'Come, tuneful friends' (R.) ... ... ... 1000
——— Suite for Pianoforte (R.) ... 427
One-handed Pianists (Correspondence) 538, 645
Opening Motive in 'Boris Godunof,' The. By M.-D. Calvocoressi (see 159, 351)... 19
Opera at the Court Theatre ... ... 648
Orchard, W. Arundel ... ... ... 497
Organ and Broadcasting, The. By Corbett Sumsion ... ... ... ... 729
Organ and the Gramophone, The ... 527
Organ Music 'Conveyed' (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 61
Organists' Benevolent League ... ... 438
Organists' Associations, Congress of the National Union of. By W. A. Roberts 921
Organists' long retention of the same post (Correspondence) ... ...444, 539, 737
Organists' Long-Service Roll of Honour. By Charles W. Pearce (see 833, 928) ... 542, 742, 837, 938, 1025
Organists' Security of Tenure (Correspondence) (see 923) ... ... 1028, 1121
Oriana Madrigal Society ... ... 357, 652
Ormskirk Parish Church. New organ... 528
Osmond, Cuthbert. Part-song, 'The idle life I lead' (R.)... ... ... ... 329
——— Part-song, 'When Eva kissed Mary' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1000
Ottawa. St. Paul's Eastern United Church ... ... ... ... ... 249
Oundle School, Music at ... ...164, 544, 836
'Oxford Book of Carols, The' (R.) ... 1098
'Oxford Choral Songs from the Old Masters' (R.) ... ... ... ... 326
'Oxford Church Music Series' (R.) ... 630
'Oxford Descant Series' (R.) ... ... 1001
'Oxford Folk-Song Series' (R.)... ... 908
'Oxford Library of Standard Songs.' Ed., Steuart Wilson (R.) ... ... 516
'Oxford Orchestral Series' (R.)... ... 331
'Oxford Series of Modern Anthems' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 326, 630
'Oxford Song Book, The' (Arr., Dr. Thomas Wood) (R.) ... ... ... 517
Oxford, Music at ...74, 261, 360, 454, 653, 1133
Oxford, St. Edward's School, Music at 836
Oxford University Opera Club. 'The Coronation of Poppæa' ... ... ... 65

Paddington Music Club ... ... ... 1124
Paganini. 'Great Sonata' for Guitar and Violin (R.) ... ... ... ... 327
Pain, Eva. Song, 'The Death of Robin Hood' (R.) ... ... ... ... 703
Paine, J. The Military Musician in Literature ... ... ... ... 1085
Painswick, Music at ... ... ... 74
Paisley, Music at ... ... ... 76, 459
Palestine Fund, Concert in aid of the ... 451
Palestrina and the Major Sixth. By Arthur T. Froggatt ... ... ... 1082
Palestrina. Hymn, 'Come, Thou Holy Spirit, come' (R.) ... ... ... 1098
Palmer's Green and District Orchestral Society ... ... ... ... 1130
Paris, Music at ... ... 171, 265, 365, 1134
Paris, Smetana's 'Bartered Bride' ... 1123
Parker, Katharine. Six Settings of Poems from the Chinese (R.) ... ... ... 1095
Parker, Robert. Fiftieth year as organist 156
Parry. 'English Suite' (Arr., Emily Daymond for Pianoforte) (R.) ... 516
——— 'Judith' at Alton ... ... 541
——— Organ Prelude, 'Preston' (R.) 807
Patrons' Fund, R.C.M., The ... ... 63
Peachell, Gerald P. Appointment of ... 835
Pearce, Charles W. 'A Book of Organ Descants' (R.) ... ... ... ... 630
——— 'Missa Brevis' (R.) ... ... ... 132
——— Organists' Long-Service Roll of Honour ... ... 542, 742, 837, 938, 1025
Pearsall. Part-songs, 'Who shall have my lady fair?' and 'Song of the Franc-Companies' (R.) ... ... ... ... 804
——— The Lord's Prayer (Unaccompanied Part-song) (R.)... ... ... 808
Peel, Graham. Song, 'Nick Spence' (R.) 131
Penarth, Music at... ... ... ... 77
People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Society ... ... ... ... 452, 1130
People's Palace Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 654
Peppin, A. H. On 'Learning Music'... 521
Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater' (Arr., Charles Kennedy Scott) (R.) ... ... ... 41
Personal Element in Teaching Music, The. By Barbara Howarth ... ... 520
Perspectives of Musical Style, The. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... 694
Perth, Music at ... 169, 263, 363, 459, 1037
Perthshire Competitive Musical Festival 458
Peterborough, Music at ... ... ... 454
Petersfield Competitive Musical Festival 551
Philharmonic Choir ... ... ... 69, 548
——— Delius's 'Mass of Life' ... ... 548
Philipp, I. A Few Thoughts on Pianoforte Playing ... ... ... ... 416
Phillips, Frank. Song Recital ... ... 1035
Pianoforte Duets of Schubert, The. By E. G. Porter ... ... ... ... 989
Pianoforte Music, Easy (Teachers' Department) ... ... ...523, 823, 912
Pierce, Dora, and Lilian Leavey. 'Sight-Reading Tests for Beginners' (R.) ... 706
Piggott, H. E. 'Come, my Way, my Truth, my Life' (R.) ... ... ... 1100 ——— Communion Service (R.) ... ... 430
Pincherle, Marc. 'Feuillets d'Histoire du Violon' (R.) ... ... ... ... 233
Plainsong versus Anglican Chant (Church and Organ Music) ... ... ... 828
Player-Piano Class at Festivals, A (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... 735
Player-Piano Notes ... 47, 142, 238, 353, 424, 518, 911, 995, 1091
Playing of Quick Mordants, The (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 445
Plymouth Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 75, 457
Plymouth, Music at ... ... 74, 1036
Pochon, Alfred. 'Progressive Method of String Quartet Playing' (R.) ... 704
Poetry, Song, and Schubert. By Mrs. Frank Liebich ... ... ... 689, 787
——— (Correspondence) ... 1029, 1119
Pointer, John. Part-song, 'If I had but two little wings' (Parry, Arr.) (R.) ... 38
——— Part-song, 'Who is Sylvia?' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
——— Song, 'How shall I sing that Majesty' (R.) ... ... ... ... 133
Points from Lectures 34, 129, 235, 334, 417, 523, 636, 822, 1019, 1114
Poldowski. 'Pastorale' for Clarinet (R.) 327
——— Pianoforte, 'Sonatine' (R.) ... 624
——— Pianoforte, 'The Hall of Machinery—Wembley' (R.) ... ... 624
——— Songs, 'Narcisse,' 'To Love,' and 'A Clymène' (R.)... ... ... 325
Poltronieri Quartet ... ... ... 356
Ponder, Winifred. 'Clara Butt: Her Life-Story' (R.) ... ... ... 712
——— (Occasional Notes) ... ... 811
Ponsonby, Noel. 'Go not far from me, O God' (A Prayer) (R.) ... ... 808
Pontefract Competitive Musical Festival 457
Popple, Herbert. Song, 'Stars' (R.) ... 131
Portadown Competitive Musical Festival 458
Porter, Ambrose. Organ Recitals ... 924
Porter, E. G. The Pianoforte Duets of Schubert ... ... ... ... ... 989
Porth, Music at ... ... ... ... 169
Portsmouth Competitive Musical Festival 551
Portsmouth, Music at ... 74, 360, 454, 550, 653, 1036
Poston, Elizabeth. Three Songs, 'Ardan Mor,' 'Call for the robin redbreast,' and 'In youth is pleasure' (R.) ... 1095
Pounds, Courtice (Obituary) ... ... 173
Powell, Charles T. Carol, 'Love came down at Christmas' (R.) ... ... 1098
Powell, Donald C. Bach's 'Rejoice, ye redeemed hosts,' from Cantata No. 30 (Arr., Pianoforte) (R.)... ... ... 624
——— Pianoforte, Chorale from Bach's Fourth Cantata (R.) ... ... ... 427
Power, Sir George (Obituary) ... ... 1039
Programme wanted (Correspondence) 738, 834
Promenade Concerts, The ... 841, 932, 1034
'Puccini, Giacomo: Epistolario. Raccolto e ordinato da Giuseppe Adami' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1100
Pulchritudinousness, &c., of a Famous N.Y. Choir, The (Correspondence) (see 643) ... ... ... ... ... 351
Pulver, Jeffrey. Walter Odington: The consonance of the third and the common chord ... ... ... ... ... 1086
Purcell. 'But while the nymph' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1100
——— 'For love ev'ry creature' (Adapted, Dr. Whittaker) (R.) ... 632
——— 'King Arthur' at Cambridge... 255
——— 'Let not a moonbeam elf' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... 1100
——— Song, 'Anacreon's Defeat' (R.) 703
——— 'Spirits' Scene,' 'Come, follow me,' and 'Fairies' Chorus' (Arr.) (R.) 1099
——— 'We the spirits of the air' (Ed., Dr. Whittaker) (R.) ... ... ... 804
Purcell Fantasias, The (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 59, 158

Question of Agent, A (Correspondence) 62, 252

Radiciotti, Giuseppe. 'Gioacchino Rossini' (R.) ... ... ... ... 812
——— 'Gioacchino Rossini: Vita Documentata Opere ed Influenza su l'Arte' (R.) ... ... ... ... 135
Railway Clearing House Musical Society 452
Ramsay and Gay (Correspondence) (see 554, 737) ... ... ... ... 739
Ramsgate Choral Society ... ... 1133
Randerson, H. E. Pianoforte, 'Eclogue' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 426
Rathbone, George. Anthem, 'God sends the night' (R.) ... ... ... ... 132 ——— Part-song, 'Song of the waters' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
——— Song, 'The Early Morning' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 131
——— Three Songs, 'My Carpet,' 'Over the hills to the town,' and 'The Spindle Tree' (R.) ... ... ... ... 803
Ravel. Hon. Degree, Mus. Doc., Oxford (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... 903
Rawmarsh, Music at ... ... ... 455
Reaction and Prejudice. By J. H. Elliot 512

Page

Read, Henry L. Part-song, 'Up the airy mountain' (R.) ... ... ... ... 38
Reading, Music at... ... 261, 454, 550, 748
Reading, St. Luke's Musical Society ... 57
Recitals, Organ ... 58, 156, 249, 346, 439, 534, 640, 731, 828, 924, 1024, 1118
Reconstitution of the I.S.M. (Correspondence) (see 832) ... ... ... ... 737
Recording the Organ. By D. Batigan Verne ... ... ... ... ... 317
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 444
Redhill, Music at ... ... ... ... 454
Redman, Reginald. 'All through the night,' for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello (R.)... ... ... ... 429
Reed, Henry (Obituary) ... ... ... 557
Reed, W. H., M.V.O. ... ... ... 622
Renfrewshire Musical Festival ... ... 262
Répertoire Collignon'—'Three Old English Songs' and 'Vieilles Chansons Françaises' (R.) ... ... ... 516
Reports of Organ Recitals (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 445
Revival of Music, The. By Robert H. Hull ... ... ... ... ... 219
——— (Correspondence) ... ... 440, 536
Rheinberger on Organ Music. By Andrew de Ternant ... ... ... 745
Rhodes, Harold. Anthem, 'Love, unto Thine own Who comest' (R.)... ... 326 ——— Hymn-Anthem, 'Fight the good fight' (R.) ... ... ... 132
——— Song, 'Say not, the struggle nought availeth' (R.) ... ... ... 803
Rhodes, Harold W. Appointment ... 528
——— 'Music in Worship' in St. Michael's Magazine, Coventry ... 1023
Richmond (Surrey) Parish Church Organ 1024
Richmond, Yorks, Music at ... 261, 1133
Rideout, Percy. The Truth of Art ... 31
Rieding, O. Concerto for 'Cello and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... 40
Rigby, George Vernon (Obituary) ... 267
Rimsky-Korsakov. By Leonid Sabaneev 403
Ripon Cathedral Choir ... ... ... 261
Ripon, Music at ... ... ... ... 346
Roberton, Hugh. Part-song, 'Maureen' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 38
——— Part-songs, 'Nightfall in Skye' and 'Mice and Men' (R.) ... ... 805
——— Part-songs, 'Remembrance,' 'The winter is past,' and 'Blow away the morning dew' (R.) ... ... 804
Roberts, W. A. Charles Dibdin. A Retrospect ... ... ... ... 622
——— Congress of the National Union of Organists' Associations ... ... 921
——— The late W. W. Starmer and English Carillons ... ... ... 224
Robeson, Paul. Recital of Plantation Hymns ... ... ... ... ... 747
Robinson, Avery. Negro 'Spiritual,' 'Water Boy' (R.) ... ... ... 514
Robinson, P. Handel's music-paper: with other notes ... ... ... 509
Robinson, Stanford. 'Plantation Songs' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 804
Robson, Charles F. Hope (Obituary) ... 79
Rochdale, Music at ... ... 360, 1036
Rochester, Music at ... ... ... 455
Rome Copyright Conference, The: Chief Changes in International Convention ... ... ... ... ... 650, 842
Rooper, Jasper. Minuet from Handel's 'Berenice' (Arr.) ... ... ... 624
Roper, E. Stanley, and R. J. Wickham Hurd. 'The Language of Music' (R.) 813
Roper, Stanley. Musical Association Paper: 'Music at the Chapels Royal, c. 1135 to the present day' ... ... 354
Roter, Ernst. 'Klaviersuite' (R.) ... 801
Rotherham, Music at ... ... 74, 455
Rowley, Alec. 'Man, be merry' and Before Dawn' (R.)..... ... ... 1098
——— Nautical Fantasy, 'By the deep: Nine' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Part-song, 'The Fortune Ballot' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Pianoforte, 'Colla sinistra '(R.) 706
——— Pianoforte, 'The Rambling Sailor' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 906
——— Quartet for Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, and 'Cello (R.) ... ... ... 515
——— Song, 'Buttons for sale' (R.)... 329
——— Song, 'Camping' (R.) ... 1099
——— Song, 'Sheep' (R.) ... ... 998
——— Song, 'The Little Clock' (R.) 131
——— Song, 'When the Moon is up' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 330
——— Songs, 'Pillicock Hill,' 'Three Sailor Songs' (R.) ... ... ... 130
——— 'The Policeman' (R.) ... ... 39
——— Three Pieces for Pianoforte (R.) 36
——— and Doris Rowley. Play, 'The Magic Shoes' (R.) ... ... ... 131
Royal Academy of Music... 63, 162, 253, 352, 446, 451, 540, 646, 740, 937, 1031, 1122
Royal Academy of Arts, The Exhibition of the. By Arthur T. Froggatt ... 510
——— Arnold Bax's Symphony ... 451
——— Opera Week ... ... ... ... 747
Royal Amateur Orchestral Society ... 452
Royal Choral Society: An American Writer's impression ... ... ... 70
——— 'Hiawatha' as a Masque ... 647
——— Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus' and Brahms's 'Requiem' ... ... ... 70
——— New Conductor: Dr. Malcolm Sargent ... ... ... ... ... 452
Royal College of Music 63, 163, 253, 353, 540, 647, 740, 937, 1032, 1123
——— Patrons' Fund ... ... 63, 253
Royal College of Organists 54, 152, 249, 345, 438, 527, 639, 727, 824
——— Annual General Meeting ... 824
——— Distribution of Diplomas 54, 152, 527, 827
Royal Philharmonic Society 68, 165, 257, 355, 449, 651, 1127, 1128
——— 'Egdon Heath' (Holst) ... 355
——— 'Solomon' ... ... ... ... 449
Rozycki, Lodomir. Pianoforte, 'The Poultry-Yard' (R.) ... ... ... 997
Rugby, Music at ... ... ... ... 455
Rugby School, Music at ... ...164, 544, 836
Rummel, Walter. Preludes, Set of Transcriptions (R.) ... ... ... 40
——— Seven Chorale Preludes and Seven Adaptations from the Cantatas (Bach Transcriptions) (R.) ... ... 40
——— Three Adaptations from Bach (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 133
Russell, F. G. Song, 'Roses in December' (R.) ... ... ... ... 998
Russian Pianoforte Albums (R.)... ... 133
Ryde Competitive Musical Festival ... 654

Sabaneev, Leonid. A Conductorless Orchestra ... ... ... ... 307
——— Gösta Nyström: A New Swedish Composer ... ... ... 1084
——— Nikolai Medtner (see Correspondence, 350)... ... ... ... 209
——— Rimsky-Korsakov ... ... 403
——— The Angel of Fire': Prokofiev's new opera ... ... ... ... 891
——— The Crisis in the Teaching of Theory ... ... ... ... ... 985
——— The Destinies of Music (Correspondence, 641) ... ... ... 502
——— The Destinies of Musical Romanticism ... ... ... ... 113
——— The Limits of Music ... ... 602
——— The Perspectives of Musical Style ... ... ... ... ... 694
——— The Problem of the Conductor: and a Proposed Mechanical Solution... 1073
——— The Stravinsky Legends (see Correspondence, 931) ... ... ... 785
St. Albans, Music at ... ... ... 74
St. Mary's Church, Kilburn. Recital ... 1117
St. Mary's, Graham Street, and St. Matthias's, Earl's Court. New organs 57
St. Michael's Singers, The ... ... 1118
St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Organ Recitals 528
St. Paul's Cathedral ... ... ... 57
St. Paul's Church, Music at ... 164, 544
St. Peter's Court (Broadstairs) School, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 164
St. Stephen-in-Brannel, Music at ... 261
Salisbury, Music at ... ... ... 360, 550
Samuel, Harold. Bach Recitals ... 548
Sandbach and District Choral Festival... 924
Sargent, Dr. Malcolm. Conductor to the R.C.S. ... ... ... ... ... 452
Sauget, Henri. Pianoforte, 'Invocation à Aphrodite,' from 'La Chatte' (R.)... 998
Scarborough Competitive Musical Festival 551
Schelpe, Edmond. Pianoforte, 'Impromptu' (R.) ... ... ... ... 906
Schnabel, Artur. Recital ... ... 71
Schnitzler, Louis. 'Ten Impressions for Pianoforte' (R.) ... ... ... 427
Schönberg at Paris ... ... ... 67
Schönberg's 'Gurrelieder' at the B.B.C. National Concerts ... ... ... 256
School of English Church Music, The ... 415, 837, 1021
——— Outline of Mr. Nicholson's Project, The ... ... ... ... 54
Schubert. Centenary (Occasional Notes) 424
——— Centenary Committee. Unfinished' Competition (Occasional Notes) ... ... ... ... 48, 138
——— Erl-King' (R.) ... ... ... 803
——— 'Die Burgschaft' (Arr., Dr. Whittaker) (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Fourteen Songs. From Fox-Strangways and Stuart Wilson edition (Ed., Dr. Whittaker) (R.) ... 329
Schubert 'Grenzen der Menschheit' (Trans., Steuart Wilson) (R.) ... 703
——— 'Hark, hark' and 'Cradle Song' for juniors (R.) ... ... ... ... 631
——— Male-Voice Choruses (R.) ... 632
——— Minuet and Trio from Quartet in A minor (Arr., Harvey Grace) (R.)... 807
——— Poetry and Song. By Mrs. Frank Liebich (see Correspondence, 1029) ... ... ... ... 689, 787
——— 'Sanctus' for three voices (R.) 805
——— Set of Rounds and Canons (R.) 632
——— Song, 'Romanza' ('The Lost Lamb') (Ed., Dr. Whittaker) (R.) ... 631
——— Song, 'To the Nightingale' (R.) 330
——— Songs (Ed., Dr. Blairstow) (R.) 330
——— 'The Gods of Greece' (R.) ... 428
——— 'The Great Hallelujah' (Arr., Rutland Boughton) (R.) ... ... 1098
——— 'The Spendthrift' (Arr.) ... 632
——— Twelve Famous Songs (R.) ... 808
——— Twelve Favourite Songs, Translations by A. H. Fox-Strangways and Steuart Wilson (R.) ... ... ... 706
——— Twenty-third Psalm, 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (R.) ... ... ... 632
Schubert and Melodic Design. By Rutland Boughton ... ... 881, 977
'Schubert, Franz.' Von Karl Kobald (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1005
'Schubert, Franz, Letters and Other Writings' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1005
'Schubert, Franz: Man and Composer.' By C. Whitaker-Wilson (R.) ... ... 1006
Schubert, Lanner, Strauss, and the Waltz. By E. van der Straeten ... 893
Schubert Number of Music and Letters (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1005
Schubert's Pianoforte Sonatas, After playing. By Eric Brewerton... ... 887
Schubert's Style. By Richard Capell ... 305, 401, 500 595
Schulhoff, Erwin. Pianoforte, Sonata No. 2 (R.) ... ... ... ... 907
Schumann's 'Garden Melody' (Arr. for String Quartet by Charles Tourville) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 515
Schumann's 'Woman's Love and Life' Cycle: A Reflection. By Lionel R. McColvin ... ... ... ... ... 896
Scotland, Music in ... 76, 168, 262, 362, 458, 553, 1037
Scott, Charles Kennedy. Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater' (R.) ... ... ... 41
Scott, Cyril. Pianoforte, 'Badinage' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 906
——— Song, 'Sea-song of Gafran' (R.) 325
Scottish Co-operative Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... 458
Scottish Songs, Collected and Arranged by Owen Mase (R.) ... ... ... 998
Seaton, Music at ... ... ... ... 74
'Security of Tenure,' Organists' ——— (Correspondence) ... 1028, 1121
Self-Expression of Children in Music, The. By R. H. Hull ... ... ... 415, 635
Sellars, Basil. Hymn, 'Lord, grant me light' (R.) ... ... ... ... 630
Sellick, G. W. Harris. Organ Recitals and Musical Services ... ... ... 1117
'Semele,' Part-song from, 'Come, let us all a-maying go' (R.) ... ... ... 329
Sentini, Michele. At Queen's Hall ... 1128
'Seven Classical Canons' (R.) ... ... 330
Sevières, Georges. 'La Décoration Artistique des Buffets d'Orgues' (R.) 233
Seymour, Linda. Song Recital... ... 1035
Sharman, Cecil. Song, 'Jack of the Ink-Pot' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 39 ——— Song, 'Very lovely' (R.) ... 329
——— Songs, 'Bumpety bump' and 'Lilies are white' (R.) ... ... ... 803
——— 'The Fairies' Lullabye,' (R.) ... 39
——— Three Songs, 'The Apple Elf,' 'The Nice Neat Pig,' and 'A Pillar-Box Song' (R.)... ... ... ... 515
Sharpe, Cedric. 'Five Little Solos' for Violoncello (R.)... ... ... ... 1000
——— Songs, 'The Year's at the Spring' and 'The Fairy Fiddler' (R.) 908
——— Violoncello, Gavotte in G minor and 'The Angelus' (R.) ... ... 515
Sharpe, Herbert. Song, 'The Spring' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 907
Sharps and Flats ... 62, 253, 352, 446, 539, 645, 835, 931, 1031, 1122
Shaw, Geoffrey. Descant, 'Oft in the stilly night' (R.) ... ... ... 131
——— Descant, 'The Campbells are comin' (R.) ... ... ... ... 515
——— Song, 'To see a world in a grain of sand' (R.) ... ... ... ... 130
——— 'Twice Forty-four Sociable Songs' (Collected and Arranged) (R.)... 329
Shaw, Martin. Anthem, 'A Blessing' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 132

Page

Shaw, Geoffrey. Anthem, 'This joyous day' (R.) ... ... ... ... 326
——— 'Nature Song' Book (R.) ... 1100
——— Part-song, 'Budmouth Dears' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 38
——— Song, 'Gather up your litter' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 131
——— 'Song of December' (R.) ... 131
——— Song, 'Up tails, all!' (R.) ... 330
——— Songs, 'A Lament,' 'The Accursed Wood,' 'Over the sea with the soldier,' 'The Bells of Christmas,' Purcell's 'Evening Hymn' (R.) ... 130
——— Te Deum and Benedictus in G (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 808
Sheffield, Music at... ... 74, 360, 455, 1133
Shenton, Eduard. 'Vocational Songs for Boys' (R.) ... ... ... ... 39
Shepherd, John. 'French Mass' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) ... ... ... 330
Shera, F. H. Appointment ... ... 446
——— 'Lohengrin,' Act 1 (Arr.) (R.) 328
——— Organ, 'Aubade' and 'Nocturne' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 629
Shillingstone Parish Church ... ... 828
——— Local concert ... ... ... 1133
Shirlaw, Matthew. The Nature of Harmony (see 161, 350, 535, 644, 738, 739, 926, 1030) ... ... ... 17, 115, 211
Shrewsbury, Music at ... ... ... 74, 361
Sibelius. Pianoforte, D flat Romance (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 906
Sidnell and Gibbon. 'Daffodillies and other simple dances for the Little Ones' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 328
Siegl, Otto. 'Klavier-büchlein' (R.) ... 428
Siena Festival of Modern Music, The ... 936
Simonds, Bruce. Pianoforte Recital ... 747
Simson, H. Fraser. 'When we were very young' (R.) ... ... ... ... 133
Singer and Broadcasting, The. By Corbett Sumsion (see 445, 536) ... 124
Singer's Ear, The. By W. S. Drew ... 309
Sittingbourne, Music at ... ... ... 550
Sixty Years Ago ... 252, 353, 540, 646, 739, 835, 931, 1124
Skipton, Music at ... ... ... ... 455
——— Musical Competitive Festival... 361
Slaithwaite Philharmonic Society ... 1133
Slater, Gordon. Anthem, 'For life, with all it yields' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1098
——— Part-song, 'England, my England' (R.) ... ... ... ... 804
——— Song, 'A Minion Wife' (R.)... 130
——— Song, 'And shall Trelawny die?' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
Smallest Four-Manual Organ? The (Correspondence) (see 56) ...349, 538, 644
Smart, Henry. 'Good-night, thou glorious sun' (Arr., S. S.) (R.)... ... 1001
Smetana. 'Bartered Bride,' at Paris ... 1123
Smith, Dale. Song Recital ... ... 1035
Smith, Edwin. On Faulty Sensations of Musical Pitch, with Notes of a Personal Experience ... ... ... 119, 213
Smith, Herbert G. 'York Series' of Anthems (R.) ... ... ... ... 132
Smyth, Ethel. 'A Final Burning of Boats, &c.' (R.) (see 736) ... ... 609
——— Trio for Pianoforte, Violin, and Horn (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 429
——— Variations on 'Bonny Sweet Robin' and 'Two Interlinked French Folk-Melodies' for Flute, Oboe, and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... ... 429
Society of Authors, the (Correspondence) 829, 925, 1030
Society of Women Composers ... 652, 751
Solo-Singing at Competitive Musical Festivals (Correspondence) ... 61, 159
Somervell, Arthur. 'Cello, Air in D (R.) 40
——— Pianoforte, 'Air and Sarabande' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
——— Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 705
Something like an enthusiast (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... 930
Song Found (Correspondence) ... ... 739
'Songs of Praise for Day Schools' (R.) 55
Songs, Unison. 'Classics' and more recent (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1001
Sorabji, Kaikhosru. Pianoforte, 'Le jardin parfumé' (R.) (see Correspondence, 1120) ... ... ... ... 997
Soro, Enrique. Song, 'To my sister' (R.) 703
South Place Sunday Popular Concerts. Annual Report ... ... ... ... 1039
South-West Choral Society ... ... 452
Southampton Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 361
Southampton, Music at ... ... 74, 550, 942
Southend, Music at ... ... ... ... 168
Southfields Central Hall. New organ ... 639
Southport, Music at ... ... ... 74, 455
Southwark Cathedral ... 155, 249, 257, 346, 357, 1116

Page

Sowerbutts, J. A. Motet, 'Lord, let me know mine end' (R.) ... ... ... 132
Sowerby, Leo. 'Benedictus es Domine' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 1097
——— Suite, 'From the Northland' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 327
Spalding, Albert. Violin, Bach Chorale (Transcribed) ... ... ... ... 327
Spanner, H. V. Organ Recitals... 528, 1117
Speaight, Joseph. Part-song, 'Going to St. Ives' (R.) ... ... ... ... 38 ——— Song, 'John Cook and his Mare' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
Spitzmüller-Harmersbach. 'Sechs Klavierstücke für Tanz' (R.) ... ... 428
Spurling, Clement M. Musical Association Paper: 'Music in Public Schools of To-day' ... ... ... ... ... 64
'Standard Graded Classics for Piano' ... ... ... ... ... ... 823
Stanford. Song, 'A Japanese Lullaby' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 998
——— Song, 'Witches' Charms' (R.) 428
——— Te Deum in B flat (Arr., C. S. Lang) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 430
Stanford-le-Hope. Wesleyan Church new organ ... ... ... ... ... 924
Starmer, The late W. W., and English Carillons. By W. A. Roberts ... 224
Statham, Heathcote D. Appointment... 639
——— Part-song, 'Lament for Maclean of Ardgour' (R.) ... ... 131
——— Part-song, 'Skye Boat-Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 1000
Staton, J. Frederic. 'Ninety-nine per cent.: How success at Musical Competitive Festivals is won' (R.) ... 1102
Stenhammar, Wilhelm (Obituary) ... 79
Stephen, David. Part-song, 'He is gone on the mountain' (R.) ... ... 430
Stewart, C. Hylton. Hymn, 'O worship the King' (R.) ... ... ... ... 705
——— Te Deum (R.) ... ... ... ... 325
——— 'To the Name of our Salvation' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 808
Stewart, D. W. Part-song, 'Come, live with me' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1001
Stirling Competitive Musical Festival ... 458
Stirling, Music at ... ... ... 169, 459
Stock Exchange Male-Voice Choir ... 453
Stock Exchange Orchestral Society, The 452
Stockport, Music at ... ... ... ... 455
Stocks, H. C. L. Anthem, 'Thus saith the Lord' (R.) ... ... ... ... 630
Stocks, William H. Retirement ... ... 638
Stockton Vocal Union ... ... ... ... 1133
Stott, Charles. Organ Recitals... ... 828
Stour Choral Union (Chipping Norton) Competitive Musical Festival... ... 457
Stourbridge, Music at ... ... ... ... 74
Stratford Competitive Musical Festival... 457
Stratford-on-Avon, Music at ... ... 455
Strauss and von Hofmannsthal. 'The Egyptian Helen' ... ... ... 618
Strauss Waltzes ... ... ... ... ... 166
Stravinsky. Pianoforte version of 'Apollon Musagète' (R.) ... ... 802
——— Stravinsky Legends, The. By Leonid Sabaneev ... ... ... ... ... 785
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 931
Stroud Choral Society ... ... ... 1133
Stuart, Leslie (Thomas Augustine Barrett) (Obituary) ... ... ... 462
'Sturdy' Orchestra, A (Correspondence) 735
Suffolk Diocesan Church Music Committee Festival Service ... ... ... 828
Sullivan. Part-song, 'The long day closes' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1000
——— Sullivan and Potboiling (Correspondence) (see 41) ... ... ... ... ... 158
Sullivan, Herbert, and Newman Flower, 'Sir Arthur Sullivan: His Life, Letters, and Diaries' (R.) (see 158) ... 41
Sullivan, J. W. N. 'Beethoven: His Spiritual Development' (R.) ... ... 135
Sullivan, Sir Arthur: His Life, Letters, and Diaries' (R.) (see 158, 432, 538)... 41
Sumsion, Corbett. Four Pieces for Pianoforte (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 624
——— Hymn-Tune Accompaniment ... 921
——— The Organ and Broadcasting... 728
——— The Singer and Broadcasting (see 445, 536) ... ... ... ... 124
Sumsion, Herbert Whitton. Appointment ... ... ... ... ... 155, 425
——— Organ Recital ... ... ... ... 1023
Sunday Evening Concert Society. Annual Report ... ... ... ... ... 1039
Sunderland, Music at ... ... ... ... 455
Swaledale Tournament of Song ... ... 457
Swansea, Music at... 77, 263, 363, 460, 1134
Sweeting, Dr. Part-song, 'The Bells' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 632 — — Part-song, 'The Willow Tree' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 430

Page

Sweeting, Dr. Part-song, 'Turmut hoein'' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 632
——— Song, 'Old King Cole' (R.) ... 131
——— Song, 'The Four Sweet Months' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 329
Swindon Competitive Musical Festival... 75
Swindon Symphony Orchestra ... ... 1037
Swinstead, Felix. Pianoforte, 'March Winds' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 427
——— Pianoforte, 'Six Studies' (R.) 706
Switzerland, Basle Conservatory of Music 558
Symons, Thomas. Pianoforte, 'Belinda's Second Suite' (R.) ... ... ... 36
——— Song, 'The Garden' (R.) ... 325
Szarzynski, Stanislaw Sylvester. Sonata for two Violins and Organ (R.) ... 706

Talbot, Howard (Obituary) ... ... 943
Talk with Alfred Hollins, A. By Harvey Grace (see 929) ... ... ... ... 796
Tamworth Parish Church... New organ... 249
Tanéiév, Serge. Trio in D major (Ed.) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 1097
Taylor, Colin. 'John Gilpin' (R.) ... 39
——— Pianoforte, 'The Jolly Roger' and 'Sunset Spires' (R.) ... ... 36
——— Song, 'The Clock Shop' (R.)... 631
——— Violin, Irish Folk-tune, 'Little Red Lark,' Old English Dance, 'Newcastle,' and a Cornish Folk-tune, 'Where be going?' (R.) ... ... 515
Taylor, H. J. 'When George III. was King' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... 516
Tcherepnin, N. Pianoforte, 'Dix pièces gaics' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 36
Teachers' Department ... 415, 520, 635, 719, 822, 912, 1008, 1103
Teachers of the Great Composers, The. By Edith A. H. Crawshaw ... ... 214
Teichmüller, R., and K. Herrmann. 'Internationale Klaviermusik' (R.) ... 610
Tenaglia. Violin, Aria in G minor (Arr., Spencer Dyke) (R.) ... ... ... 802
Terry, Charles Sanford. 'Bach: A Biography' (R.) ... ... ... ... 904
Terry, Frances. Pianoforte, 'Seven Réveries for the Cultivation of Style' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 426
Terry, Sir Richard. 'Sea Shanties,' collected by (Har. by Maurice Jacobson) (R.)... ... ... ... ... 802
——— Two Groups of Shanties, arranged as part-songs by Maurice Jacobson (R.) ... ... ... ... 38
Thames Valley Orchestra, The ... ... 553
Thatcham (Berkshire) Parish Church. Renovation of organ ... ... ... 1117
Thatcher, R. S. Appointment ... ... 247
Theremophone, The ('Ad Libitum') ... 21
Thesiger, The Hon. Sir Edward (Obituary) 1136
Thiman, E. H. 'Folk-Song Suite' (R.) 1097
——— Mus. Doc. Degree ... ... ... 368
——— Part-song, 'There is a lady sweet and kind' (R.) ... ... ... 37
——— Part-song, 'To Daffodils' (R.) 329
——— Song, 'In the Bleak Midwinter' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 130
——— Song, 'The Ferry' (R.) ... ... 515
——— Song, 'The Rainbow' (R.) ... 998
——— Song, 'What way does the wind come?' (R.) ... ... ... ... 330
Thomas, Richard (Obituary) ... ... 1136
Thomas, Vincent. Part-song, 'Falero, lero, loo!' (R.) ... ... ... ... 329
——— Part-song, 'Man's Medley' (R.) 632
Thompson, Roy. Song, 'The shepherd boy sings in the valley of humiliation' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 329
Thomson, D. C. Song, 'The Knight of Bethlehem' (R.) ... ... ... ... 998
Thornley, Barbara. Song, 'Dustman's Song' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
Three Choirs Festival, The. By Harvey Grace (see 162) ... ... ... ... 898
Three Towns Deanery Choral Association, The ... ... ... ... ... 54
Tonbridge, Music at ... ... ... 168, 361
Tonic Sol-fa College ... ... ... ... 64
Tonic Sol-fa in Schools (Correspondence) 735
'Too much Dominant Seventh' (Correspondence) ... ... ... ... ... 831
Toronto Mus. Bac., The (Correspondence) (see 542, 742, 837, 938)...833, 928, 1026, 1121
Toronto, Music at (see 621) 172, 366, 556, 1135
Torquay, Music at ... ... 361, 653
Torquay Schools Festival ... ... 75
Tovey, Donald. Three Recitals ... ... 548
Townend, Olive. Song Recitals ... 1129
Tracy, James Madison (Obituary) ... 944
Trefusis, The late Lady Mary. Memorial Fund ... ... ... ... ... ... 57
Trinity College of Music ... 64, 71, 163, 254, 354, 541, 647, 1032, 1123
Trowbridge Music at ... ... ... ... 455
Truro, Music at ... ... ... ... ... 1133

Page

Truth of Art, The. By Percy Ridcout... 31
Tudor Singers, The ... ... ... 70
Tunbridge Wells Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... 362
Tunbridge Wells, Music at ... ... 748
——— St. Mark's Church. New organ 828
Turina, Joaquin. Pianoforte Suite, 'Mallorca' (R.) ... ... ... 801
'Turkoman Music' (Correspondence) (see 607) ... ... ... ... 735, 833
Turnbull, Percy. Part-song, 'Mid-summer Night's Dream' song, 'You spotted snakes' (R.) ... ... ... 805
——— Song, 'Cavalier' (R.)... ... 130
Turner, H. Godfrey (Obituary) ... 846
Turner, Harry Sandiford (Obituary) ... 463
Turner, Olive. Pianoforte, 'Masquerade' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Turner, W. J. 'Musical Meanderings' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 609
Turton, Matthias. Appointment ... 1023
Twinning, Walter L. Pianoforte, 'Dainty Trifles' (R.) ... ... ... ... 37
Tye, Christopher. Motet, 'Omnes gentes, plaudite manibus' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 630

Ulverston, Music at ... ... ... 361
Unett, John. Pianoforte, Three Preludes (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 801
'Unfinished' Symphony, The Completion of the (Correspondence) ... ... 832
Union of Graduates in Music Incorporated ... ... ... ... ... 447, 837
University of Durham ... ... ... 1032
Unwanted Pianoforte Solo, The. By Alexander Brent-Smith ... ... 788
Upton, Pattie. Violin Recital ... ... 652
Use and Importance of Improvisation at the Keyboard, The. By H. A. B. Crawford ... ... ... ... ... 418
Uspensky, V., and V. Belaiev. "Turcoman Music' (R.) ... ... ... ... 607
——— (Correspondence) ... ... ... 735
Uxbridge, Music at ... ... ... 361

Van Aerde, Raymond. 'Les Ancêtres Flamands de Beethoven' (R.) ... 432
Van der Straeten, E. Haslemere Festival of Chamber Music ... ... ... ... 937
——— Schubert, Lanner, Strauss, and the Waltz ... ... ... ... 893
Van Dieren. Part-song, 'Wherefore shall I hang up my bow?' (R.) ... ... 328 ——— Quartet No. 2 (R.) ... ... ... 802
——— Six Songs (R.) ... ... ... ... 428
——— 'Sonatina Tyroica' (Chamber Music) (R.) ... ... ... ... 39
Venables, Leonard C. (Obituary) ... 751
Verne, D. Batigan. Recording the Organ (Correspondence) ... ... ... 444
Veteran Clarinettist, A (Correspondent) (see 268) ... ... ... ... 351
Vibbard, Harry. Part-song, 'The Dusky Cherub' (R.) ... ... ... ... 131
Vienna, Music at ... 78, 172, 266, 367, 556, 750, 844
Vierne, Louis. Organ, 'Pièces de Fantaisie,' Books 3 and 4 (R.) ... ... 323
Village, Country Town, and School Concerts Society. Annual Report ... 920
'Violoncellist's Répertoire' (R.) ... 327
Visetti, Albert (Obituary) ... ... 751
Vivaldi, Antonio. Concerto in B minor (Ed., M. Esposito) (R.) ... ... 704
Voigt, Alban. A Contribution to the History of the Flute ... ... ... 28
Von Warlich, Reinhold. Song Recital... 1129

Wales, Music in ...77, 169, 263, 363, 459, 553, 655, 749, 843, 936, 1037, 1133
Walker, Ernest. Violin, 'Variations on a Theme by Joachim' (R.) ... ... 704
Wallasey, Music at ... ... ... 455
Walsall, Music at ... ... 261, 455, 1133
Walter Odington: The Consonance of the Third, and the Common Chord. By Jeffrey Pulver ... ... ... ... 1086
Walton, William. Overture, 'Portsmouth Point' (R.) ... ... ... 704
——— 'Sinfonia Concertante' ... ... 165
Warlock, Peter. 'Ayres,' from Bataille's 'Airs de différents autheurs' (R.) ... 703
——— Carol, 'Bethlehem Down' (R.) 1098
——— Carol, 'I saw a fair maiden' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Carol, 'What cheer? Good cheer!' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Carol, 'Where riches is ever lastingly' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099

Page

Warlock, Peter. Christmas Carol, 'The First Mercy' (R.) ... ... ... 39
——— Cradle Song (R.) ... ... ... 703
——— Lute-song series (R.) ... ... ... 328
——— Part-song, 'One more river' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 514
——— Part-songs, 'All creatures now with hearts rejoice,' 'Winter comes,' and 'A sea nymph sat upon the shore' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 328
——— Part-songs, Dowland's harmonized lute-airs (R.) ... ... ... 38
——— Part-songs, 'The bayley berith the bell away,' 'Mourn no more,' and 'Lullaby' (R.) ... ... ... ... 515
——— Song, 'The First Mercy' (R.) ... 130
——— Song, 'Walking the woods' (R.) 325
——— Songs, 'Disdain that so doth fill me,' 'Since first disdain began to rise,' and 'Now let her change and spare not' (R.) ... ... ... ... 329
——— Songs, 'French Ayres' (R.) ... 998
——— Songs, 'The Lover's Maze' and 'Sigh no more, ladies' (R.) ... ... 907
Warner, Vernon. 'Six Old-World Classics' (R.) ... ... ... ... 330
Warr, Eric. Appointment ... ... 730
Warrell, Arthur S. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (R.) ... ... ... ... 1097
——— Song, 'Mothering Sunday' (R.) 803
Waterford, Music at ... ... ... ... 169
Waters, Charles F. Anniversaries ... 125
——— 'Missa Sancti Philippi' and Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in the Dorian Mode (R.) ... ... ... 1098
Watson, Edward. Anthems, 'Lift up your heads, O ye gates' and 'Sing we merrily unto God our Strength' (R.)... 132
Watts, H. E. Song, 'The Open Road' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
Webb, William C. Appointment ... 638
Webster, Francis William ... ... 1136
Weisberg, A. H. Violin, 'The Art of Expression' (R.) ... ... ... 1096
Wellington School, Music at ...164, 544, 836
Welsh National Eisteddfod, The... ... 841
Wertheim, Jules (Obituary) ... ... 557
West, Elsa. University Extension Lectures ... ... ... ... ... 841
West Kirby, Cheshire. St. Andrew's new organ ... ... ... ... ... 1118
West Lothian Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... ... ... 553
Westminster Cathedral Organ Recitals... 924
Westminster Quartet, The ... ... 451
Westminster School, Music at ...164, 544, 836
Westminster Singers (Occasional Notes) (see 556) ... ... ... ... 621
——— (Correspondence) ... 732, 929
Westrup, J. A. French Tunes in 'The Beggar's Opera' and 'Polly'... ... 320
Wetton, H. Davan. Communion Service (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 326
——— Quartet, 'Love most gentle' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 132
Whall, Capt. W. B. 'Sea Songs and Shanties' (R.) ... ... ... ... 134
Whellock, Percy W. Communion Service (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 808
'When George III. was King.' A dramatised concert programme of Old English music (R.) (Arr., H. J. Taylor) ... 516
Whitaker, Walter. Song, 'Diaphenia' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 998
Whitaker-Wilson, C. 'Franz Schubert: Man and Composer' (R.) ... ... 1006
——— (Correspondence) ... ... 1119
Whitby Competitive Musical Festival ... 552
White, Felix. Carol, 'Carry me, Babe, to Bethlehem now' (R.) ... ... 38
——— 'Dolly Town' (R.) ... ... 1100
——— 'From the mountains to the champaign' (R.) ... ... ... 1100
——— Part-song, 'Gay Robin is seen no more' (R.) ... ... ... 38, 329
——— Part-song, 'I know a baby' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Part-song, 'The Blossom of Bethlehem' (R.) ... ... ... 1098
——— Part-song, 'The Red-breast' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Song, 'Lady Dafadowndilly' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 39
——— Song, 'Laughing Cavalier' (R.) 998
——— Song, 'The Praises of the Flow'ry Spring' (R.) ... ... ... 329
——— Songs, 'The Sower's Song' and 'The Rover' (R.) ... ... ... 803
Whitlock, Percy W. 'Sing praise to God Who reigns above' (R.) ... ... 630
Whittaker, W. G. 'Airs from the Operas of G. F. Handel' (R.) ... ... ... 36
——— An American University Summer Session ... ... ... ... 1018
——— 'Four Songs of the Northern Roads' (R.) ... ... ... ... 428

Page

Whittaker, W. G. Musical Association Paper: 'Some Problems in the Performance of Bach's Church Cantatas' 544
——— Oxford Choral Songs from Old Masters (Arr. and Ed.) (R.) ... ... 1098
——— Part-song, 'Bonny Pit Laddie' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 329
——— Purcell, 'But while the nymph' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Purcell. 'For love ev'ry creature' (Adapted) (R.) ... ... 632
——— Purcell. 'Spirit Scene' and 'Come, follow me' (Ed.) (R.)... ... 1099
——— 'Ring out, ye crystal spheres' and 'Michael's Song' (R.) ... ... 1100
——— Schubert. 'Die Bürgschaft' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Schubert's Song, 'Violet' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... 1099
——— Song, 'Shew 's the way to Wallington' (R.) ... ... ... ... 1096
Whitworth, Reginald. The Booster in Organ Building (see 351) ... ... 144
Whoisit, Percy. 'Three Modern Folk-Songs' (R.) ... ... ... ... 38
Whomes, Edmund (Obituary) ... ... 1039
Whyte, Ian. Five Songs (R.) ... ... 631
Wiener, Jean, and Clement Doucet. Pianoforte Recital ... ... ... 549
Willan, Healey. Missa de Sancta Maria Magdalena' (R.) ... ... ... 1097
——— Organ, Prelude on 'Andernach' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 630
——— Organ Prelude on 'Puer nobis nascitur' (R.) ... ... ... 630
——— Part-song, 'Angel spirits of sleep' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 328
——— Part-song, 'Spring' (R.) ... ... 804
——— Part-song, 'The Three Kings' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 805
William Cobbett and the Gloucester Festival (Correspondence) (see 700) ... 930
William Gardiner and the Music of Nature. By Orlando A. Mansfield ... 221
Williams, Gerrard. 'Easter Hymn' (R.) 132
——— Organ Prelude and Fugue in G major, Bach (Arr. Pianoforte Duet) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 40
——— Score, 'Three Traditional Scottish Tunes' (R.) ... ... ... ... 703
——— Song, 'I attempt from love's sickness to fly' (R.) ... ... ... 39
——— Song, 'Richard of Taunton Dene' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 39
Williams, Olive V. Part-song, 'The Birds' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 37
Williams, Vaughan. Song, 'Let us now praise famous men' (R.) ... ... ... 428 ——— Violin, 'Concerto Accademico' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 326
Williams, Walter. 'Jesu, Word of God Incarnate' (R.)... ... ... ... 1097
Williams, W. S. Gwynn. Part-song, 'Mountain Rill' (R.) ... ... ... ... 804 ——— Part-song, 'The Old Tune of the Vicar's Book' (R.) ... ... ... 38
Wilson, Stanley. Three Rhapsodies for String Quartet (R.) ... ... ... ... 802
Wilson, Steuart. Bach's Cantata No. 207 (Ed. and Adapted) (R.) ... ... 1099
——— Translation of Schubert's 'Grenzen der Menschheit' (R.) ... 703
Wimbledon Competitive Musical Festival 362
Wimbledon Wesleyan Church ... ... 1117
Winchester Cathedral Festival ... ... 828
Winchester Competitive Musical Festival 457
Winchester, Music at ... ... 74, 653
——— School, Music at ... ... ... 164
Windsor, Music at ... ... 455, 1133
Winterbottom, Charles. Royal Victorian Medal ... ... ... ... ... ... 846
Wireless Notes 143, 239, 519, 633, 714, 799, 994
Wirth, Julia. 'Julius Stockhausen' (R.) 229
Withers, Stanley: An appreciation (Obituary) ... ... ... ... ... 289
Woking. All Saints', Woodham. New organ ... ... ... ... ... ... 528
Woking, Music at ... ... ... 455, 1133
Wolf-Ferrari. New opera, 'Sly' (Milan) 170
Wolverhampton, Music at ... 74, 455
Wolverton, Music at ... ... ... 550
Wood, Charles. Church Music, 'Jesu, the very thought is sweet' (R.) ... 326
——— Communion Service in F; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (R.) ... 132 ——— Organ, Allemande and Courante, and Sarabande (R.) ... ... 807
Wood, Daniel (Obituary) ... ... ... 79
Wood, Henry J. Sunday Concerts ... 1128
——— 'The Gentle Art of Singing' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 136
Wood, Thomas. Pianoforte, 'Three Plain Tunes' (R.) ... ... ... ... 427
——— Suite of Songs for baritone solo and chorus, 'Master Mariners,' and 'The Ballad of Hampstead Heath' (R.) 805

Page

Wood, Thomas. 'The Oxford Song Book' (Arr.) (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 517
Woodgate, Leslie. Part-song, 'I got a robe' (R) ... ... ... ... 131
——— Part-song, 'Steal away' (R.)... 131
Worcester, Music at ... ... 74, 455, 550
Workington Competitive Musical Festival 1125
Worksop, North Notts Competitive Musical Festival ... ... ... 457
Worple Road Wesleyan Church... ... 57
Worthing, Music at ... ... 74, 455, 550
Wren Road Congregational Church. Re-opening of organ ... ... ... 57
Wright, K. A. 'Vocational Songs for Boys' (R.) ... ... ... ... 39
Wright, Kenneth A. Pianoforte, 'Night wind on the downs' and 'The Juggler' (R.) ... ... ... ... ... 427
——— Song, 'Love's Worship' (R.)... 703
Wycombe Rurl-decanal Choir Festival... 528

York Competitive Musical Festival ... 457
York Diocesan Musical Festival... ... 731
York, Music at ... ... 361, 1037, 1133
York Presbyterian Church ... ... 57

Zilcher, Paul. Violin, Five Easy Duets (R.) ... ... ... ... ... ... 1096

OBITUARY

(Abstract from General Index)

Page

Barratt, Edgar ... ... ... ... 1039
Battistini, Mattia ... ... ... 1136
Baughan, J. H. G. ... ... ... 173
Beard, John ... ... ... ... 267
Bennett, James Robert Sterndale ... 659
Bishop, Ernest Brian ... ... ... 659
Bohnke, Emile ... ... ... ... 557
Booth, Marjorie ... ... ... ... 557
Bowman, Paget John Merriman ... 368
Boyd, William ... ... ... ... 267
Brewer, Alfred Herbert (see 463) ... 367
Brozel, Philip ... ... ... ... 173
Carelli, Emma ... ... ... ... 943
Clement, Edmond ... ... ... ... 368
Cohn, Isidor ... ... ... ... 1136
Collinson, T. H. ... ... ... ... 267
David, John ... ... ... ... 1136
Deakin, Andrew Newland ... ... 267
Findeisen, Nikolai ... ... ... 1135
Flood, William Henry Grattan ... ... 846
Florence, Evangeline ... ... ... 1136
Friedländer, Arthur M. ... ... ... 943
Gater, William Henry ... ... ... 751
Gibson, W. Milne ... ... ... 267
Gladstone, Francis Edward ... ... 943
Harris, John ... ... ... ... 1135
Hatten, Geoffrey ... ... ... ... 557
Henson, Madame Medora (Mrs. Waddington Cooke) ... ... ... ... 462
Horner, Burnham... ... ... ... 462
Horner, Egbert Foster ... ... ... 1039
Hull, Arthur Eaglefield ... ... ... 1135
Iliffe, Frederick ... ... ... ... 267
Ingham, Charles Barlow ... ... ... 751
Janacek, Leos ... ... ... ... 846
Johnson, William ... ... ... ... 368
Leake, George ... ... ... ... 557
Love, James ... ... ... ... 557
Mayer, Daniel ... ... ... ... 943
Meers, Ernest George ... ... ... 943
Miller, George ... ... ... ... 368
Miller, Henry (see 463) ... ... ... 368
Mills, Henry (see 368) ... ... ... 463
Moretti, Guilio ... ... ... ... 944
Murray, W. H. ... ... ... ... 943
Newton, John ... ... ... ... 368
Norcup, Frederick William ... ... 751
Novello, Marie ... ... ... ... 751
Pounds, Courtice ... ... ... ... 173
Power, Sir George ... ... ... 1039
Reed, Henry ... ... ... ... 557
Rigby, George Vernon ... ... ... 267
Stuart, Leslie (Thomas Augustine Barrett) 462
Talbot, Howard ... ... ... ... 943
Thesiger, The Hon. Sir Edward ... 1132
Thomas, Richard ... ... ... ... 1136
Tracy, James Madison ... ... ... 944
Turner, H. Godfrey ... ... ... 846
Turner, Harry Sandiford... ... ... 463
Venables, Leonard C. ... ... ... 751
Visetti, Albert ... ... ... ... 751
Webster, Francis William ... ... 1136
Wertheim, Jules ... ... ... ... 557
Whomes, Edmund ... ... ... 1039

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JANUARY 1 1928

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 80.)

THE NATURE OF HARMONY

BY MATTHEW SHIRLAW

(Continued from September number, 1927, p. 791)

THE MINOR HARMONY

In treating of the minor harmony it is necessary to take some account of the work and researches of musicians and scientists such as Zarlino, Tartini, Rameau, Helmholtz, &c. The investigations of these distinguished men into the nature of the minor harmony cannot be fully described and examined here.* In a short article one can only summarise the most important results of these investigations in the briefest possible way.

Already in the middle of the 16th century Gioseffo Zarlino pointed out that while the major harmony arose from the series of numbers or proportions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, the minor harmony arose from the same series, but in the reverse order, i.e., 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1. The first series was the natural order, and the major harmony that resulted from it was therefore bright and cheerful in character; the second was contrary to the natural order, and the minor harmony to which it gave rise was therefore somewhat mournful and sad. This fact, that the minor harmony is just the major harmony reversed, or inverted, has been frequently forgotten and as frequently re-discovered, since the time of Zarlino. Some enthusiasts have thought that such a fact furnishes an entirely adequate explanation of the minor harmony. A little reflection will show that this is not the case.

Rameau, at least, in his 'Traité de l'Harmonie,' rejected it. What, he exclaimed bitterly, must we think of a musician (Zarlino) who, after pointing out that harmony springs from unity (the first term of the senario) as from its source, and that the bass, represented by unity, is the foundation of all harmony, and after proceeding to build up a beautiful harmonic system on this foundation suddenly inverts, overturns the whole system, and throws everything into utter ruin? It is as if the earth had given way, for there is now no bass, basis, or foundation on which harmony can rest. Rameau himself, however, was quite unable to give any reasonable explanation of the minor harmony, and later found himself compelled ('Génération Harmonique') to adopt Zarlino's inverted order, although in a somewhat different form. He thought he had discovered that any prime or fundamental sound really generates a harmony in two directions—one (major harmony) in an upward direction, and another (minor harmony) in a downward direction:

Thus the sounds or musical intervals of the 12th and 17th (g, e) arise as part of the resonance of the fundamental c; at the same time this fundamental throws into co-vibration the sounds or sound-producing bodies of the 12th and 17th below (f, a♭). At first Rameau was of opinion that these bodies of the 12th and 17th below co-vibrated in their totality. Later, however, he discovered that he was mistaken, and that these bodies merely vibrated in segments, each segment corresponding to the unison of the exciting fundamental sound. Rameau, in short, became aware that this supposed undertone series was merely the overtone series in another guise. The phenomenon itself is certainly remarkable, and cannot be completely set aside in any examination of the minor harmony. But the truth remains that the fundamental does not cause its 12th below to co-vibrate, but only that part of the string or other body that is in unison with it. On the other hand, if the 12th below (f) were sounded, it would cause the (alleged) fundamental (c) to vibrate in its totality. In short, f is not really the 12th of or below c; on the contrary, c is the 12th (third partial) of f, this f being then the real fundamental. And similarly with the 17th below (a♭), this a♭ is not the 17th of c; rather c is the 17th (fifth partial) of a♭.

Rameau therefore eventually came to regard such an explanation of the minor harmony as inadequate, and in his last writings had formed the conclusion that there is but one principle of harmonic generation, viz., the natural divisions of the sonorous body as evidenced in the harmonic or upper partial tone series, and in this principle, he was convinced, we must seek for the explanation of all harmony and all tone-systems, whether major or minor. But although Rameau sought diligently for such an explanation, he found none.

Tartini, the famous violinist and composer, likewise devoted his splendid talents to the solution of this and other knotty problems relating to harmony. He explained, as Rameau did, the major harmony as arising from the harmonic (ascending), and the minor from the descending (arithmetic) proportional series. These two proportions, however, were not opposed to one another, nor could they be regarded as diverse principles: they really belonged to one and the same musical system. The minor harmony, therefore, did not arise arbitrarily or accidentally; on the contrary, it arose naturally, and from the same principle as the major. It was absurd to describe the major harmony as a 'natural' harmony, but the minor as an 'artificial' one. In demonstrating the truth of this view, Tartini availed himself of the combination or resultant tones, of which he, together with Sorge, was the discoverer:

* See, however, the writer's 'Theory of Harmony' ('Handbooks for Musicians' Series': Novello).

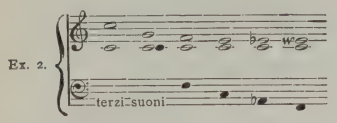
Ex. 2.



(Tartini at first placed these tones—the terzi suoni—an 8th too high, a mistake he afterwards corrected.) Here we find in the upper stave a series of intervals derived from the harmonic series, and in the lower stave the 'third sounds' resulting from these intervals. It will also be observed that these resultant sounds are in arithmetical progression, and together constitute the minor harmony, f-a♭-c. We ought, therefore, to regard this demonstration as a proof that the minor harmony arises from the same system as the major, and is inseparable from it.

But Tartini, in proceeding thus, overlooks one or two matters of some importance. It should be observed that while it is true that the intervals in the upper stave are harmonic intervals, and succeed one another in the order determined by the harmonic series, they do not belong to one and the same harmonic system, but are derived from different systems. They are related to different fundamentals and are, strictly speaking, in different keys. Thus the fifth, c-g, has c as its fundamental; the fourth, c-f, has F; and the minor third, c-e♭, A♭. But Tartini's object is to demonstrate that the minor system arises from one and the same harmonic system; not from a series of intervals from different harmonic systems. We have here, in reality, nothing but Rameau's co-vibration of the multiples over again. Besides, in proceeding as he does, Tartini might deduce all that he requires, and much more, without having recourse to any resultant tones whatever—for here we find in the upper stave alone not only the harmonic division of the octave, c-g-c$^1$, but also the arithmetic division, c-f-c$^1$; and not only the harmonic division of the fifth, c-e-g, but also the arithmetic division c-e♭-g.

It cannot be said that since the time of Rameau and Tartini much that is really new has been advanced to account for the minor harmony. An explanation that is generally attributed to Helmholtz was in reality first advanced by Rameau in his 'Démonstration du Principe de l'Harmonie.' Of the minor harmony, e.g., c-e♭-g, Helmholtz tells us that we may either consider this chord as a compound tone of c with an added e♭, or as a compound tone of e♭ with an added c. He invites us to regard the minor harmony as a 'somewhat altered' major harmony, although he is doubtless aware that the 'slight' alteration necessary is that of a complete chromatic semitone, for if we substitute c-e♭-g for c-e-g, this is the difference between e and e♭. It is difficult to believe that so eminent a scientist as Helmholtz was satisfied with this pronouncement. That he should have made it at all furnishes eloquent proof of the difficulty of the problem.

Dr. H. Riemann, in several of his works, exerts himself to discover an 'undertone' series. One of the most eminent theorists of his day, his views on this subject deserve the most careful consideration. But he himself says, in his 'Katechismus der Musikwissenschaft':

> . . . the writer has shown finally by proof of a scientific character why, in spite of the commensurability of the vibration forms, a tone by summation of its vibrations cannot produce the undertone, and that the question may thus be considered to be finally closed.

Riemann, however, although he ultimately found an objective undertone series to be a delusion, uses it as well as the overtone series as the basis of his work 'Harmony Simplified.'

Mention must also be made of Öttingen, who in his 'Harmoniesystem in dualer Entwickelung' criticises Helmholtz's treatment of the minor harmony. He points to the analogy between the two harmonies, where the minor is regarded as the reverse of the major. This is shown by the fact that the two strongest secondary tones, the common partial tone of the major ('phonic overtone' and the chief combination tone of the minor harmonic ('tonic ground-tone') occupy a like position in respect of both chords thus:

Ex. 3.

Further, in the major harmony, all the sounds of which it is composed find their unity or central point in the fundamental or ground-tone; in the minor harmony, on the other hand, the element of union is found in the first partial tone common to all the three sounds of the harmony:

Ex. 4.

Öttingen's researches are valuable, and he certainly makes it increasingly evident that, however it comes about, the minor harmony must be regarded as an inverted major harmony. In reality, however, Öttingen is no more successful in disentangling himself from the meshes of the ascending series of harmonics than is Rameau or Helmholtz. His descending order is really Rameau's co-vibrations of the multiples over again, the only difference being that he recognises Rameau's 'fundamental' to be an overtone, i.e., not really a determining but a determined sound, and gives to it the new name of 'phonic' overtone. Nor does he appear to advance much further than Helmholtz, for in the minor harmony, as c, e♭, g, although he insists that g is really the determining note, as in a certain sense it is, he is also aware that this g is a doubly determined note: it is fifth (12th) of c, and major third (17th) of e♭. That is, like Helmholtz, he shows us that the minor harmony c-e♭-g has two generators, c and e♭. This is doubtless the reason of Riemann's futile attempt to discover an objective series of undertones. Thus the problem stands at present. The better it is understood, the more improbable does its solution become, and the more probable does it appear that the features of this musical Sphinx will look out on the future, as on the past, inscrutable, eternally baffling. Nevertheless, the work already accomplished by so many patient, undaunted investigators not only claims our admiration, but incites us to fresh endeavour.

(To be continued.)

THE OPENING MOTIVE IN 'BORIS GODUNOF'

By M.-D. Calvocoressi

For many years I could not help feeling that there was a mystery in relation with the opening bars of the short instrumental Prelude to Mussorgsky's 'Boris Godunof'—a plain, folk-tune-like, unaccompanied melody, which may have been invented by Mussorgsky, or borrowed, more or less textually, from Russia's musical lore.

There could be no doubt that this melody constituted a fitting exordium to the work. It suggests the vast, peaceful setting; it is contemplative, melancholy, and resigned enough to stand as an expression of the peasant soul of old Russia; and it lends itself quite well to the quick change leading up to the hustle revealed by the rise of the curtain. Parts of it are used in the course of the first scene as published in 1874 (viz., in the edition which is called up till now original, and which both Bessel and Chester recently reprinted), and also as it appears in Rimsky-Korsakov's revision. So that, all told, there seems to be no cause for worry: the appearance of the tune is adequately justified by its functions in the initial scene.

And yet I was not quite comfortable about it all. Remembering that throughout the score, Mussorgsky makes consistent use of leitmotives (and how very aptly and ingeniously he uses them has never been pointed out in full), I felt that this tune, which by its very position and presentation stands out prominently, and seemed destined to play an important part in the course of the work, had no business to disappear after fulfilling, so to speak, a merely accessory function. This state of things seemed to run counter to all principles of musical fitness and economy. Mussorgsky, however great his shortcomings may prove in his instrumental works, and in a few of his songs, has given many proofs of his thorough understanding of these principles so far as they apply to dramatic and to vocal music.

Another mysterious point was that although the tune never actually reappears after the first scene, I was often conscious of its latent presence, and seemed to perceive echoes of it. This, of course, could be partly accounted for by analogies of modal character and of colour. Similar data would naturally suggest more or less similar patterns and effects. But the reply did not altogether satisfy me; and unsatisfied I remained until at last I found out that this tune was actually the embryo of many of the principal themes used in the score. Its function is very similar to that of the 'motto' theme in an instrumental work of the 'cyclic' type. Portions of it, or forms derived from it, are used throughout the various Acts, often quite deliberately, but at times, no doubt, without conscious intention.

The leitmotives in 'Boris Godunof' may be divided, roughly, into motives used in connection with the people, and motives used in connection with the Tsar Boris. One motive refers to Boris's victim, the murdered Tsarevitch Dimitri. The opening tune of the Prologue obviously refers to the people; but it contains the germs of motives used in connection with Boris, and more than a germ of the Dimitri motive.

Here is the tune in question. It will be noticed that it consists of three distinct periods or patterns (A, B, C):

The Dimitri motive is perhaps the most important in the whole score by virtue of the part it plays. Far more than any motive used in relation to Boris himself, it creates a link between the various scenes, reappearing practically in each in some form or other, always with a very relevant purpose, so that its musical relation to the opening tune would suffice to justify our considering this tune as a kind of cyclic 'motto' theme. It first appears in the scene in Pimen's cell, when the murder of Dimitri is mentioned. It accompanies Grigory, the young monk who decides to pose as Dimitri escaped from death, throughout his wanderings; one hears it connected with him in the scene at the inn, during the Polish Act, and in the final scene (final in the non-revised version), that of the people in revolt. We hear it during the scene between Boris and Shuisky, when both the murdered Tsarevich and his impersonator are topics of discussion; and again during Boris's hallucination. It affects many forms and colours: it is in turn tragical, poetically mystical, impassioned, sardonic, and martial. Here is a quotation from the Prelude to the scene at the inn, in which the iteration especially will show how closely it is connected with patterns B and C in Ex. 1 (see notes marked *):

Ex. 2.

A motive which underlines the Tsar's first appearance (Coronation Scene), and, again, his entry in Act 2—appearing to refer more particularly to the heavy burden of his remorse and fears:

Ex 3.

is obviously related to the Dimitri motive. The notes are practically the same, only the rhythm is more forcible, and the end is altered for obvious expressive reasons. Intermediate forms occur, which confirm the derivation. A certain pattern extensively used in Boris's big monologue:

Ex. 4.

is connected with pattern A in the opening tune.

In the Duma scene we encounter several elements recalling the same pattern, e.g.:

Ex. 5.

It is probably a mere coincidence that more than once we should notice a similar pattern in the music underlining Shuisky's crafty utterances. Although distant, the connection between the opening tune and the wild motive whose outbreak marks the climax of the crowd's boisterousness in the final scene:

Ex. 6.

is plain enough. Again it is quite likely that this is no more than a coincidence. But such coincidences in the music of 'Boris' are so numerous that the more one studies the score, the more one doubts that most of them are anything but the outcome of a deliberate purpose.

Anyhow, even if we eliminate all but the most obviously intentional relations, there is no dearth of evidence to show how far-sightedly the opening of 'Boris Godunof' was conceived, and how skilfully all its possibilities are exploited.

The final section of the first scene in the Prologue, as originally written by Mussorgsky, but never published so far, contains other uses of this tune which are interesting and relevant both musically and dramatically. And this is but one point of many which in 'Boris Godunof,' as first written, go to show how subtle, thorough, and restrained Mussorgsky was in his use of themes and their transformations.

The most extraordinary thing is that a score in which the principle of the leitmotive is turned to so remarkable an account should have been written in Russia in the year 1868. At that time the principle was a novelty, illustrated only in Wagner's works. 'The Ring,' which was finally to establish the vogue of the leitmotive method and render the machinery of the process available to all composers, was not yet published, and Wagner's works were not very widely known in Europe, let alone Russia. Yet the question arises whether Mussorgsky, in this respect, was influenced by Wagner's music or theories. Considering the evidence, we can hardly doubt that he was, although there is in 'Boris Godunof' no trace of the slavish imitation or of the mechanical procedure to which the adoption of Wagner's methods led many composers.

Let it be remembered that Wagner came to Petrograd as early as 1863; that is, before Mussorgsky had started planning 'Boris Godunof.' And five years before, the composer and critic Serof, an enthusiastic admirer of Wagner, had launched upon an energetic campaign of propaganda in his favour.

Only one writer, so far, has suggested that Mussorgsky was influenced by Serof; it is Kompaneisky (whose recollections of, and views on, Mussorgsky were quoted in the Musical Times of March, 1926). Should it eventually turn out that Mussorgsky was in possession of positive information as to the principle of the leitmotive and its application according to Wagner, it would be natural to admit that he acquired it through Serof; and Kompaneisky's suggestion would thus be confirmed—at least in one particular respect.

But this, after all, is a mere point of detail. The chief moral to be drawn from the study of the music of 'Boris Godunof' is that although the legend of Mussorgsky's inadequacy dies hard, it will not live for ever.

Indeed, I fail to see how it can survive a careful, unprejudiced examination of Mussorgsky's masterpiece as it came straight from his pen, unimproved—or unspoilt—by any censorship. There can be no doubt that he achieved exactly what he set out to achieve—which, after all is said and done, is the supreme object of technique. He was capable of planning logically, broadly, and thoroughly, and of carrying out all that he had planned. This, of course, can be felt without the assistance of technical demonstrations such as the one I have briefly outlined. But to defeat Mussorgsky's censors on their own chosen ground, it is necessary to resort to technical arguments of some kind or other. And the conclusion is that if indeed Mussorgsky's carrying out of 'Boris Godunof' is an example of technical inability, then we could do with a good many more composers similarly incapacitated.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

HARNESSING THE HOWL

Inevitably one invention leads to another, and we are not yet in sight of the last marvel that will result from the discovery of wireless. But whatever djinns remain to be loosed on a helpless and science-ridden world, it is unlikely that any one of them will hold a greater menace to the musical profession than the 'music from the air' exploit of Prof. Theremin. That the Professor's claims are not without solid basis is proved by the expressions of famous musicians. 'Where the Professor is leading us to I can hardly think,' says Bruno Walter; 'Music without instruments! A voice that is no voice! The thing is in its infancy, of course—but a formidable infant.' Respighi is certain that the apparatus will be of great importance to the orchestra. Leo Slezak, the operatic tenor, lost his head, apparently, for he talks of the Professor having produced notes 'of unprecedented beauty and splendour'—which is nonsense. He goes on to say that he 'left the hall with the ardent and heartfelt wish that the man may succeed in producing tenor tones from the air.' But, why? If the man does, what will become of Leo's job?

I was not able to get to the Albert Hall demonstration, but I was among those present when the Professor astounded a gathering of scientists and musicians at the Savoy a day or two before.

For the benefit of any who have not yet seen a description of the instrument, I give a short account—moving warily and ill at ease among the scientific terms. Item, a box about 2-ft. square containing a wireless set, with certain appurtenances known only to the inventor. From the top of the box projects the antenna (a vertical rod of metal about 2-ft. in length), and from one side a kind of loop. An alternating current generates an electro-magnetic area round the rod; the operator's hand is the 'earth,' so to speak. As the hand approaches or recedes from the antenna the frequency of the current is affected. The result is to raise or lower the pitch of the sound, which sound is merely our old friend the 'howl' of the domestic wireless set. The approach of the hand raises the pitch, on the well-known principle (discovered, if I remember aright, by Higginbottom), of 'the higher the fewer.' The reader with a scientific bent, who has been able to follow me up to this point will, on thinking it over, see that on the recession of the hand the pitch will be lowered. Similarly, the power is varied by moving the other hand to and from the loop.

The first thing that strikes one is a vital difference between this instrument and such media as the gramophone, wireless, and player-piano. The theremophone (let us call it) is a first-hand medium, not a mere reproducer.

As a result, a host of new possibilities present themselves, and if many of them prove to be capable of full development, the effect on music and the musical profession will be disastrous. There are, however, certain obstacles that at present appear to be insuperable. More of these later. Before speculating as to what the theremophone may never be able to do, let us see what it can do, so far.

In regard to the demonstration, we have to remember that the instrument is still very young, and that it was put through its paces by a scientist, not by a musician. Probably better results would have been obtained—especially in the matter of intonation—by a skilled instrumentalist.

Prof. Theremin (a young man whose pleasant and modest demeanour belied his title) played several pieces to the pianoforte accompaniment of Mr. Edwin Evans. In the 'Ave Maria' of Schubert the results suggested a violin, in Saint-Saëns's 'Le Cygne,' and in another tenor-pitch piece I could not identify, one could have sworn a violoncello was engaged. But different pitches suggested different instruments, and at times there was a hint of wood-wind. The actual timbre is thus nondescript, but I felt that it so often suggested some regular orchestral instrument as to rule out the claim that it will be able to provide new tone- qualities, and so fill in existing blanks in the orchestral palette.

The most interesting item was a duet for two theremophones, an assistant of the Professor's taking part with an early model of the instrument. This produced a tone astoundingly like a contralto voice (without the plumminess, thanks be!) though its upward range was that of a soprano. It was exactly like a singer vocalising on the short sound of the vowel u. The total effect was thus a trio for violin, voice, and pianoforte.

We were not told whether the vocal tone of the early instrument was the result of chance or design. If the latter, it is clear that the inventor's claim to be able to provide a whole set of theremophones of different timbre is well based.

---

The theremophone then has great scope. Its tone is musical, though at times with a touch of the feline. Most remarkable of all, perhaps, is its range of power. It is capable of being fined down to the tiniest thread of sound, and it can go to the other extreme.

These are great assets. Happily (I use the word deliberately, because of my conviction that music has much to lose and little to gain from the butting-in of scientific contraptions of this sort), happily there is a big per contra account.

Intonation seems bound to be speculative, because of the absence of any kind of guide as to distance. True, the string player has to develop his sense of distance, just as the keyboard performer has to acquire a sense of locality for his long shots. But both have some kind of guide, visible and tangible. The theremophonist has nothing but space to work in. The calculation of the distance from the antenna is by no means a simple matter, even in dealing with a slow tune, as was shown by the appalling out-of-tuneness achieved by the Professor. How would a very quick passage fare?

This brings us to another problem: how will the performance of long bravura passages be managed? I have just made myself dizzy by trying some quick scale-passages in the yard or so of space before my midriff. Were both hands available their use in alternation might solve the difficulty. But only the right is free for fingering, the left being busy regulating the power. The use of a foot device (not unlike the balanced swell pedal of the organ) was used for nuance in the earlier of the two theremophones shown; probably it will be adopted again, in order to free both hands.

These difficulties may be overcome, but I fancy the question of attack is likely to stump the scientist. Judging from the performances at the demonstration, a clean attack is impossible. There is a continuous portamento; however rapidly the hand is moved from point to point all the intervening sounds have a look in. Probably this perpetual slurring was responsible for the feline effect I have mentioned. It reminded me also of a one-string fiddler.

Nor do I see how a staccato is possible. (One newspaper report said that this effect was obtained at the Albert Hall, but it was missing at the Savoy.)

In addition to a constant portamento there was an almost equally persistent tremolo. This seems to be necessary for the vitalising of the tone. Without the tremolo the effect is apt to become dead—a serious defect. The musical world is already over-wobbled, and the advent of a super-wobbler (with a super-scoop thrown in) opens up a prospect that will intimidate even the hardiest.

In his lecturette at the Savoy, Mr. Edwin Evans promised—threatened is perhaps a fitter word—that in due season a complete orchestra of theremophones would be feasible; and the threat was repeated at the Albert Hall, in more detail.

I gathered that there would be no need for a separate theremophone for each player. The 'juice' would be laid on to every desk, which would, of course, carry an antenna and a power-regulator. The cost would be a trifle compared with that of orchestral instruments. Given some kind of keyboard or fingerboard, technique ought to be comparatively easy. All string passages, for example, would (if the power were regulated by the foot) be fingered by both hands, there being no bow to manipulate.

In the score such passages would no doubt carry ordinary keyboard fingering. Transposing instruments will be things of the past. There will be no awkward passages, no difficult or impossible shakes (as for wind instruments), and apparently no limitations of compass. (I believe the Professor has already produced notes so high as to be inaudible to the ordinary ear.)

In the course of the Albert Hall lecture, the Professor made some claims of the type we expect from scientists. The application of science, he said, must lead to progress in music. The desideratum was to evolve some means of producing music which would free the performer from mechanical difficulties and muscular effort. His invention offered the most perfect solution of that problem at present available. It also made possible the close association of the artist with the music rendered.

This (as I have said above) is the kind of thing we look for from scientists. Yet every one of the statements would be combated by most musicians. Does any performer worth his salt (and therefore worth hearing) want to be 'freed from mechanical difficulties and muscular effort'? Everybody but a scientist knows that there is more pleasure in performing than in listening. The enjoyment is doubled-barrelled: there is mental pleasure in solving the intellectual and æsthetic problems, and immense physical joy—we may even call it fun—in overcoming the technical difficulties that depend on muscular fitness and control. The latter pleasure is analogous to that we get from games of skill and energy. A good drive at cricket (from the meaty part of the bat) and a tough organ pedal passage that 'comes off'; a smash at tennis and a lively bit of chord playing on the pianoforte; a tricky pass out to the wings and some neat double-stopping: all who have enjoyed any of these pairs of delights will agree that they are akin. We ask no Professors to charm away such hurdles. The one miserable weakling in a thousand who wants to be spared the sense of healthy effort may have his theremophone. And may the current run amok and electrocute him the first time he uses it!

There is, however, an æsthetic side to this question of effort. Can anyone doubt that the concentration of mental and physical energy called for by a difficult work has its effect on the emotional content? I remember hearing this pointed out—I think by Mr. Ernest Newman—in connection with the Moor two-manual pianoforte. On this instrument the most difficult of octave passages become child's play, owing to the octave-coupler. But the player who wrestles with, say, that terrific left-hand octave passage in Chopin's A flat Polonaise can hardly do so without becoming kindled, mentally and spiritually, with vital results to the tone and interpretation, not only in the passage itself but in what follows. Substitute for this bracing and warming experience the playing of a simple series of single notes (of no more inherent interest than a five-finger exercise) and there is a terrible drop for all concerned. I think this principle will be found to work throughout all music—except, of course, in passages where difficulties are used merely for difficulties' sake. Even these, however, may take on a kind of life, so vitalising to performer, music, and hearer is the skilful overcoming of difficulty.

As for that 'close association of the artist with the music rendered': does the theremophone provide greater intimacy and unity than the members of the violin family and certain of the wood-wind?

The proof is easy. It seems certain that six performers on the theremophone would all produce the same tone. But are there six violinists who do so? Could they, even if they would? Consider too the infinite and subtle variety got from bowing: what has the theremophone to give us in this way?

---

From the above the reader may perhaps begin to deduce that I am not a theremophone 'fan.' He may even call me a reactionary. I am, heartily, if the Professor's discovery is 'progress.' But is it? An orchestra of wireless desks is a poor substitute, even to the eye, for the present collection of instruments, with beauty in their lines and many with poetry and history in every curve.

The mass production of theremophones is a decline from the exquisite art of the luthier and all the other cunning craftsmen in wood and metal who for centuries have created the instruments for which the great composers wrote. I am not lacking in admiration for the inventive Professor, but I hate the prospect opened up by his skill. The orchestra of theremophones may come: no Partington can stop it, if the threats of science are practicable. But I hope its advent will be held off till I, for one, am beyond these voices, busy with a harp.

---

THE FINGERING OF SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS ON THE PIANOFORTE

By A. E. F. Dickinson

In the past year we have all been thinking of Beethoven. A good many of us—conductors, composers, critics, quartettists—have been considering questions of interpretation. But a few of us have been occupied with merely technical problems. It is à propos of the many scales and arpeggios which figure in Beethoven's pianoforte works that I propose to raise the general question of the fingering of scales and arpeggios, major and minor, and to emphasise certain practical considerations which should determine our choice of fingering in a variety of cases.

Some time ago—May, 1924, to be exact—I argued in these columns in favour of a fingering for the major scales which, although having the high support of Mr. Matthay,* is not accepted in principle by the leading authorities—the Associated Board, for example. The fingering I advocated was:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Sharp Keys: | | |
| Right hand | ... ... | ...Fourth finger on the leading note. |
| Left hand | ... ... ... | ,, ,, ,, F sharp. |
| Flat Keys: | | |
| Right hand | ... ... ... | ,, ,, ,, B flat. |
| Left hand | ... ... ... | ,, ,, ,, the subdominant. |

and the principle behind it was that the aim of all fingering is to make all keys feel the same—namely, thumb on the white note after a black note for either hand going outwards, finger over on to the black note after a white note for either hand going inwards. The usually accepted fingering follows this principle in the case of most major scales, but its divergence in the case of the left hand fingering for G, D, A, and F shows clearly enough that its upholders do not consider a uniform feel the essential principle. And as we shall meet with the same conflict of ideas in the arpeggios and minor scales, I may here underline the practical considerations which lead me to assert my principle as the right and universal one, and which, I must now admit, I did not urge as forcibly and coherently, as, in my previous article, I might have done.

The main purpose of practising scales, and all other common series of notes, is to lay the foundations of sight-reading by being enabled to play the simplest and commonest intervals in a given key, correctly and promptly, without looking at the keyboard. There is no practical point whatever in practising a scale with the eye guiding the fingers, or in other words by a method which is useless for the reading of actual music. Further, a fingering which depends on its execution for a quick reference to the sound of a particular note (e.g., 'thumb on the key-note') appears to me a very uncertain method, and one not generally helpful when, as so often in real musical experience, one has to play a fragment of a scale in a new context, which obscures one's sense of the key-note. On the other hand, a fingering which depends on the consistently felt associations between certain fingers and a certain order of white and black notes will, once grasped, be instinctive and therefore of permanent value. And my fingering, as I shall call it, is based on such associations, viz., between the thumb and the white-note-after-the-black-going-outwards, and between the fourth or third finger and the black-note-after-the-white-going-inwards. ('Fourth on the leading-note,' above, does not necessitate a reference to the sound of the key-note: it is merely the shortest way of expressing the fingering on paper.) Finally, it is obvious that the thumb-after-the-black-note principle gives the most comfortable feeling possible, outwards or inwards.

I shall therefore assume from now onwards that all fingering should, if possible, satisfy this easily-acquired instinct to associate the thumb with the white-note-after-the-black. Turning, then, to the arpeggios in the major, we shall desire a fingering which shall uniformly, if possible, carry out this principle of physical association: we shall not start by placing the thumb on the first note of each arpeggio, but on the white note after the black note going outwards. Thus the thumb and the other fingers used will come on the same notes in each position of the same chord—provided there is a white note after a black note to give us our bearings. Hence, with the exceptions of C, G, and F, the all-white arpeggios, and of G flat, the all-black one, the thumb for all arpeggios of the major common chord (from which the dominant seventh and added sixth chords are easily derived) should be placed as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Sharp Keys: | | | |
| Right hand | ... | D, A, and E ... ... | The dominant. |
| | | B ... ... ... | The key-note. |
| Left hand | ... | D, A, E, and B ... | The key-note. |
| Flat Keys: | | | |
| Right hand | ... | B♭, E♭, A♭ D♭ ... | The mediant. |
| Left hand | ... | B♭ ... ... ... | The dominant. |
| | | E♭, A♭, D♭ ... ... | The mediant. |

The four exceptions, however fingered, cannot feel the same as the others, and therefore in their case

* 'Relaxation Studies,' p. 84. When I wrote my article I was not aware that my heresy was supported in so distinguished a quarter, or I should certainly have named it.

we may make the best of a bad job and start each arpeggio with the thumb. Incidentally, in the root position the stretch in the left hand should surely come between the second and third fingers rather than between the fourth and fifth (where used), the mediant thus being played by the third finger.

On similar lines we may determine the fingering for the arpeggios of the minor common chord. The all-white arpeggios are now E, A, and D, the all-black E flat, and in these keys the thumb may be placed on the first note of each arpeggio; in the remainder they are as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Sharp Keys: | | | |
| Right hand | ... | B ... ... ... | The key-note. |
| | | F♯, C♯, G♯ ... ... | The mediant. |
| Left hand | ... | B, F♯, C♯, G♯ ... | The mediant. |
| Flat Keys: | | | |
| Right hand | ... | G, C, F, and B♭ ... | The dominant. |
| Left hand | ... | G, C, F ... ... | The key-note. |
| | | B♭ ... ... ... | The dominant. |

The above fingering is awkward in the case of B flat major for the left hand, and of B minor for the right, but I do not think it is worth while to change the whole feel of these arpeggios, by placing the thumb on D in either case, to avoid the longer interval for the passage of the thumb.

Coming, finally, to the minor scales, we are at first confronted with three different scales, but the exercise of a very little common sense reduces these three to one new scale, the melodic ascending.

The harmonic minor is not a scale at all, in the melodic sense, unless it is used as a melodic minor. I can quote two instances of its melodic use in pianoforte literature—Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto (last movement) and Bach's F minor. Readers may supply other examples. But in any case the employment of the 'harmonic' minor as the basis of melody is rare enough to make the enforcement of its systematic practice nothing short of cruelty. In the words of the Classics:

> He only does it to annoy
> Because he knows it teases . . .

All that is really required is familiarity with the sound of the harmonic basis of the minor key.

The melodic minor ascending is a new scale, and must be learnt. It must be fingered, of course, so as to feel like the major scales wherever possible, and the purpose of this article has been missed if it is not now understood that ex hypothesi the right feeling is the thumb after the black note going outwards. This is not completely possible for the right hand in B and E, or for the left hand in B flat and E flat, and one should appreciate the fact that these scales must necessarily feel wrong.

The melodic minor descending is simply the relative major, starting on the sixth note of the latter, and should be fingered accordingly. It will then feel identically the same as the major scales, and it will also feel like the melodic minor ascending, except for the scales named in the last paragraph. But what, you will ask, are we to do when the ascending scale is followed by the descending scale? Surely, you will urge, it is very awkward to have to change the fingering on the return journey? I must answer this question (with excellent precedent) by asking another: When is the ascending scale immediately followed by the descending scale? Never, I am sure, in real music. What, never? Well—if we must play for safety—hardly ever: quite rarely enough to dispose of the objection. The fact is that the corrective feeling of the major sixth and seventh followed by the minor intervals is pedantic; and I fancy that a little careful introspection will convince every reader that he has never heard outside the class-room.

However, in order not to be behind the Associated Board in meeting troubles more than half-way, and also because every teacher has at least a few pupils who need sitting upon, I shall include the harmonic minor in the scheme below; and by way of emphasising the difference of fingering for the melodic ascending and descending, I shall include the latter, although it is already covered in the major scales. We may most conveniently divide the scales according as the black notes are all sharps, all flats, or both. For brevity's sake, I shall name the position of the fourth finger in each case:

| | Right hand. | Left hand. |
|---|---|---|
| (1) All Sharps: | | |
| (a) Melodic ascending: | | |
| D, A, E, B ... | Leading-note ... (as in the tonic) major) | F sharp (or F natural) (as in the major scales). |
| F♯, C♯ ... ... | Submediant ... | F sharp. |
| G♯ ... ... ... | see A♭ ... ... | C sharp. |
| D♯ ... ... ... | see E♭ ... ... | F sharp. |
| (b) Melodic descending: | | |
| E, B, F♯, C♯, G♯... | Supertonic ... | F sharp. |
| (c) Harmonic: | | |
| A ... ... ... | Leading-note ... | (?) F natural. |
| E, B, F♯, C♯ ... | Supertonic ... (as in the relative major) | F sharp. |
| G♯ ... ... ... | Supertonic ... | C sharp. |
| D♯ ... ... ... | see E♮ ... ... | F sharp. |
| (2) Sharps and Flats: | | |
| (a) Melodic ascending: | | |
| G ... ... ... | Leading-note ... (as for D, A, E, B) | Mediant (as for C, F, B♭, E♭). |
| (c) Harmonic: | | |
| D, G ... ... | Leading-note ... | Submediant (relative major). |
| (3) All Flats: | | |
| (a) Melodic ascending: | | |
| C, F, B♭, and E♭ | B flat (or B♮) ... (as in the major scales) | (?) Mediant |
| A♭ ... ... ... | B flat ... ... | see G♯. |
| (b) Melodic descending: | | |
| D, G, C, F, B♭, ... | B flat ... ... | Submediant. |
| (c) Harmonic: | | |
| C ... ... ... | (?) E flat ... ... | Submediant. (as in the relative major). |
| F, B♭ ... ... | B flat ... ... | Submediant. |
| E♮ ... ... ... | B flat ... ... | see D♯. |

A few of the above fingerings call for further justification or qualification. Some may prefer the fourth on B, others on C, for A minor harmonic in the left hand; but, as I have said, I am not really interested in the fingering of harmonic minors. The left hand fingering for the melodic ascending in the all-flat scales is as awkward as the right hand fingering for B and E; but in the former the fourth finger should surely go on the only available black-note-after-a-white. Some may prefer the fourth on B natural for C minor harmonic in the right hand. Like C major, the melodic descending for A minor can never feel like the other scales, and may be fingered as you please.

For reasons stated, I have given what I consider the best fingering in the case of each type of minor scale. Still, there must be many readers who have for their sins to coach for examinations which demand the non-stop performance of all the minor scales. In their case compromise is clearly indicated, and the following alterations are expedient :

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| All Sharps : | | |
| Right hand ... | E, B ... | Melodic descending and harmonic to be the same as the melodic ascending, which is unalterable. |
| Left hand ... | D ... ... | All scales, fourth on E. |
| Sharps and Flats : | | |
| Left hand ... | G ... ... | (?) Fourth on A for all scales. |
| All Flats : | | |
| Right hand ... | D and G ... | Melodic descending as for the melodic ascending. |
| | C ... ... | Harmonic, fourth on B natural. |
| Left hand ... | C, F, B♭ ... | Melodic ascending to have the fourth on the submediant, as in the other scales. |

The usual fingering for the chromatic scales and arpeggios—thumb on every white note after a black going outwards—is, we may note in conclusion, on the principle enunciated in this article. Should any modern composer take it into his head to write modal scales in large quantities, we are quite ready for him, for the simple reason that each of the old modes is the major scale with the final changed.

A final platitude for teachers. Scales and arpeggios should be made the basis of good habits. One of the best habits I know is the systematic correction of a wrong note by correcting the physical movement which leads up to it—from the previous notes—not by correcting the one wrong note with the eye. Yet how often we hear the same wrong note made again and again, and corrected again and again—in the wrong and quite ineffective way—when all the time what is really needed is to think for a moment why the finger comes on the wrong note. And how many teachers allow this process to continue indefinitely, without taking the trouble to insist on a less hopeless method? I was tempted to end the last sentence with a note of exclamation ; but on the whole it is fairer to be polite, and so I merely raise the question, How many? Let us examine our own consciences honestly in this matter, before we exclude ourselves from the number of the unrighteous.

BACH AND THE CLAVIER

By Eric Blom

The Dominant, the new musical monthly published by the Oxford University Press, is nothing if not stimulating, as might have been expected from a journal under the editorship of Mr. Edwin Evans. The very first number (November, 1927) amply justifies the choice of its motto from Browning : 'Hark! the dominant's persistence till it must be answered to!')—for there are at least three articles in that issue to which one aches to reply, not so much because one disagrees as because the subjects dealt with by various writers of distinction are so vital as to provoke further discussion by those who see these things from some other viewpoint.

The one article which at first sight seems to say the last word on its subject is that by Madame Wanda Landowska, who writes with all the authority of the informed specialist. Yet precisely because of its apparent finality, one is tempted to join issue with her on a new view she advances, and more especially because one is in cordial agreement with her exposure of an old and tenacious error. Madame Landowska sets out to prove that Bach wrote his Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues not for the clavichord, as is generally asserted, but for the harpsichord. It is not to be denied that she argues with all the subtle eloquence required by special pleading. So great indeed is the weight of her evidence, that it would hardly occur to the casual reader that it is evidence too inequitably selected to lead to any conclusive proof. Her comprehensive special knowledge certainly helps her to prove what she set out to prove, but she remains oblivious of the fact that having confuted one assertion and set up another, she still leaves a quite considerable field of controversy between the two where the truth is much more likely to lie, and indeed seems to the non-specialist to display itself obviously enough.

It is far from my intention to contest Madame Landowska's scholarship in her own department, for I can only profess the deepest respect for an executive artist who differs so admirably from the majority of her kind in a really comprehensive knowledge of her province. Neither do I claim to have found the true resolution of her persistent dominant; all I am trying to show is that in her own treatment of her theme it remains a dominant, and that she has not supplied, as apparently she fancies, the new leading-note capable of converting it into a tonic. The root, I am sure, does not lie where she seeks it.

The full title of Madame Landowska's article is 'Clavichord or Harpsichord, for which were Bach's "Forty-eight" written?' We need only take away all but the first three words of this rather cumbersome question—it is significant that it is a question—to convert what remains mentally into a positive statement, and we have, to my mind, a perfectly true answer. Bach's 'Forty-eight,' like his other keyboard music not destined for the organ, were written for clavichord or harpsichord—that is to say, for such stringed keyboard instruments as Bach possessed. It would be more correct to say, not that they were written for any particular instrument, but simply that they were played on any instrument of the clavier type that was available, and preferably on the one that happened to suit this or that movement. Bach owned both clavichords and harpsichords, including an instrument of the latter type with a pedal keyboard, and he at least knew, if he did not actually possess a model of, the early fortepianos made by Silbermann. He doubtless tried his music on each of them, and decided which rendered this or that work or movement most satisfactorily according to its particular nature. But that decision, I feel sure, was as a rule made only after the composition of a clavier work was completed, and only in the rarest instances, such as that of the Sonata in D for pedal harpsichord, beforehand. Even in this last case it is not improbable that Bach thought of this instrument only in the course of composition when, in the slow section, he found that he had need of a bass part that did not lie within the reach of the two hands, for no independent pedal notes occur in the work until that movement is reached.

Madame Landowska rightly censures Busoni and others for perverting the original title of the '48' into 'Das Wohltemperierte Clavichord,' as Bach would, of course, himself have called the work if it had seemed to him essential that it should be played on that instrument only. It follows that if he had really planned it especially for the harpsichord, he would equally certainly have said so quite decisively in his title. What he did call it was simply Das Wohltemperierte Clavier'; and 'clavier,' as Madame Landowska points out, meant any kind of stringed keyboard instrument.

Bach as an instrumental composer is the greatest black-and-white artist who ever existed; also, he is among the great masters the poorest colourist. In the actual process of composition, whatever his decision as to the mode of performance may have been afterwards, he was almost wholly pre-occupied with design. Except where special instrumental problems were the reason for his undertaking a work at all, as was probably the case with the Sonatas and Suites for unaccompanied string instruments, he was indifferent to the medium which was later to make a reality of the creation that for the moment wholly absorbed him as an abstract idea. This is no merely speculative observation. Bach's unconcern not only with tone-colour, but with the fitness of this or that instrument for the expression of his conceptions, is abundantly demonstrated by his numerous arrangements of works of his own for various instruments, and still more convincingly by the frequently careless way in which he made these transcriptions. We know that when he required a clavier concerto for performance at one of his collegia musica, he would not hesitate to take a work written for violin, by himself or by another, copy out the solo part, often note for note without the least alteration, for the player's right hand, add a contrapuntal part to occupy the left, and the task was done. He thus obtained the music needed for his purpose, but made no attempt to re-cast it in a manner congenial to his new medium. Whether the solo part was played on the clavichord, the harpsichord, or even one of the new Silbermann fortepianos, was all one to him, save in this case for the purely practical consideration that the clavichord was too weak an instrument to be used in a concerted work.

That Bach was concerned merely with design is again proved by his organ works, which are sublime music, but by no means essentially organ music. We all know that orchestral transcriptions, provided they be well done, do not impair its beauty and power. Bach wrote for the organ because he happened to be a great organist as well as a great composer; but it must be perfectly obvious to anyone who gives the matter a moment's thought that the organ is an instrument by no means ideally suited to polyphonic music. It is essentially a homophonic instrument, at its best with music laid out on a broad harmonic basis of vertical blocks of chords. We are apt to overlook this fact only because Bach's organ music still remains the greatest, purely as music. He wrote fugues for the organ because he was a contrapuntist by nature and an organist only for reasons of upbringing and environment, and because in the process of composition he was so absorbed in his structural scheme that his inspiration overrode the, to him, comparatively negligible considerations of the medium. Now, if Bach wrote fugues for the homophonic organ, Madame Landowska's argument that he would not have thought of writing them for the clavichord, which she calls the 'monophonous' instrument par excellence, seems to me to lose all its force.

One wholly sympathises with Madame Landowska for combating the prevalent idea that Bach cherished a 'particular predilection for the clavichord'; all that one regrets is that she should, in doing so quite convincingly, accept it as a necessary corollary to his indifference towards the clavichord that he must have been passionately attached to the harpsichord. Is it not one of the outstanding characteristics of the man's music—is it not indeed its one vulnerable factor—that he did not particularly care for any instrument or write with any special regard for its peculiar qualities? When he composed clavier music, he must have actually welcomed the choice between two entirely different stringed keyboard instruments, on one or the other of which his Preludes and Fugues—or whatever else—could afterwards be interpreted. He did not, I am sure, prescribe to others their own choice of the instrument, not only because it was a matter of little importance to him, but because everybody did not possess both a clavichord and a harpsichord, and had to play on whichever was available.

That the '48' were written with the object of demonstrating the advantages of the newly-acquired principle of equal temperament has nothing to do with the point under discussion, for equal temperament was a conquest from which all keyboard instruments were meant eventually to benefit, whether at the time they could be kept accurately in tune or not. Again, Madame Landowska's elaborate demonstration that the fretless clavichord was not yet in vogue in Bach's time, and that the fretted variety could not give out certain minor and major seconds simultaneously, cannot be admitted as evidence directly we abandon the theory that the whole collection of the '48' was specially written and exclusively intended for this instrument or that. For one thing, there were exceptional models of the fretless clavichord made by way of experiment before that type came into general use, and Bach, being an exceptional musician, may very well have possessed one of them. But even if he did not, seconds simultaneously struck do not occur in such vast numbers in the Preludes and Fugues that none of these pieces could be played on the fretted clavichord. Bach simply wrote down what inspiration compelled him to write. If this or that passage was afterwards found to be unplayable on the fretted clavichord, that was the misfortune of those who possessed no other instrument of the clavier family; they had only to acquire one of the new fretless clavichords that were coming into fashion or, better still, to play the music on the harpsichord. It did not matter to Bach. It does not matter that the '48' are now played on the pianoforte, except to such delightful antiquarians as Madame Landowska, Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse, and the Dolmetsch family.

Precisely because of Bach's indifference to his medium many of the Preludes and Fugues of the '48,' and especially the latter, sound far better on the harpsichord. Madame Landowska is quite right in pointing this out, and one agrees heartily with every example she quotes. Unfortunately, it is possible to quote others which must have been infinitely better suited to the clavichord, and more unfortunately still, Madame Landowska refrains from mentioning these.

Not to encroach on too much space, let us look only at the twenty-second Prelude in the first book, the lovely piece of passion music in B flat minor. Its whole character is hopelessly antagonistic to the harpsichord, which one agrees has all the qualities so charmingly described by Madame Landowska: 'Its vibrant humming, its purling,' 'the clangorous majesty of its coupled keyboard,' 'its flamboyant sonority, replete with jubilation,' 'the unfolding majesty of its arpeggi,' and so on. None of these characteristics are in keeping with the Prelude in question, for the pianissimo and legato of which, the expressive curve of its phrases and its subtle accentuation, the harpsichord could supply only a pinched and mechanical tinkle. What the piece requires is exactly—again I choose Madame Landowska's own words—the qualities of the 'shy and gentle clavichord,' 'the instrument of solitude [here she quotes Schubart], of melancholy, of inexpressible sweetness.' For there is 'gentle, intimate expression' in plenty, as well as 'noise, violence, and uproar' in the 'Well-tempered Clavier.'

A good many chords containing seconds occur in the Prelude under discussion. Whether these were all reproducible on the fretted clavichord I am not competent to judge; but, on the other hand, how will Madame Landowska sustain on the short-winded harpsichord the B flat that extends over a bar and a-half of slow tempo at the close? This, of course, could be perfectly well done in a pianissimo passage on the clavichord by means of the 'Bebung.' Thus, if Bach meant this Prelude for the harpsichord, one must conclude that he disregarded its disabilities as well as its character; if for the fretted clavichord, the hypothesis must be formed that in the heat of inspiration he did not think about the instrument's limitations in the matter of major and minor seconds. What is the conclusion? Is it not more probable that he did possess one of the new fretless clavichords, after all? And, above everything, is it not sufficiently plain that Bach never of set purpose wrote clavichord music or harpsichord music, but always composed simply for the clavier?

Here is merely a theory which cannot be conclusively proved by demonstrable facts: but are Madame Landowska's claims for the harpsichord as the instrument for which the '48' were specially written anything more? One is exceedingly grateful for this most admirable artist-scholar's warning not to accept without personal investigation any of the deep-rooted inaccuracies of musical history, but what if, in the very act of clearing one false dogma away so convincingly she should with all too rash an assurance have created another and equally fallacious theory?

THE ART OF EXPLANATION

By Robert H. Hull

One of the most refreshing signs of the present time is the growing realisation on the part of teachers of the importance of psychology in relation to musical instruction. (Some excellent articles on the subject —'A Plea for the Study of Psychology'—which have been appearing in the Music Teacher, present the general aspect very clearly.) It is not my intention to trespass upon ground already so ably covered by another writer, but at the start it seems advisable to emphasise that since psychology invades, very rightly, every branch of musical teaching, I shall probably have to invoke its aid in dealing with the present subject.

A discussion of postulates relating to explanation is, alone, insufficient for our purpose unless we can also get some idea of the respective mental attitudes of teacher and pupil. Let us consider in this connection a typical problem that is liable to arise in elementary pianoforte-teaching. A young pupil who knows little or nothing about the rudiments of harmony requires an explanation of key relationship. Admittedly it is a point that must be made clear to him at an early stage if he is to understand anything at all about the music he plays, and the pianoforte teacher may well be expected to explain this theoretical problem. Moreover, it must be reduced to the simplest possible terms. The teacher may feel that the matter is outside his province (which of course it is not), or he may hazard an explanation only to find that any concise definition eludes him. We know that the earth moves round the sun, but many of us would experience some difficulty in proving our conclusions. So it is with key relationship. Teachers can, and often do, appreciate its essentials without being able to describe them in simple terms. Too often the result is a muddled explanation from which the pupil may with luck grasp the fact that the key-signature of C major and A minor is devoid of sharps and flats while all other keys possess them in a varying degree. The pendant to this, viz., that a major key possesses a relative minor bearing the same signature may or may not be clear to him. More frequently he obtains in conclusion a very incomplete idea of the whole subject, with the result that an essential part of the foundation of his theoretical knowledge is insecure from the outset.

What, then, is the remedy in such a case? The first and most obvious suggestion is that teachers should be prepared to equip themselves with such knowledge as is incidental to their profession, and not rely solely upon the bare essentials relating to their own particular subject. Secondly, it must be borne in mind that to convince a pupil it is necessary to convince oneself. A halting or abrupt explanation will in no case serve; such a course is the surest way to lose a pupil's confidence. If, as sometimes happens, the teacher is not sure of his ground, let him state clearly what he does know, and if necessary postpone further explanation until he has had an opportunity to refresh his memory. Such time will not be ill-spent, since to try to hurry over groundwork is the falsest of false economy.

Furthermore it should be remembered that it is the natural instinct of every pupil to ask 'Why?' when he is being taught something new. In less enlightened days one used to hear teachers answer peremptorily, 'Don't ask questions,' or 'Because I tell you so.' Happily for us such misguided tactics are now the exception rather than the rule; teachers are beginning to realise that thoroughness must characterise even the most elementary instruction. A well-known educationist gave the following advice:

> Explain a subject to your pupils until you think they understand it; then start from the beginning and explain it all over again.

I hope I have made clear what should be the general attitude on the part of the teacher. A word now about the more particular relationship between teacher and pupil. In this connection my own sympathies incline towards that psychological doctrine which teaches us to regard no child as stupid, but to admit that in all cases intelligence of varying degrees is present. This view is essentially a practical one. A pupil, seemingly slow-witted in one direction, often shows a more acute intelligence in another. A stimulation of interest is the teacher's business, as is the development of the will to learn; both ends may be achieved through lucidity of explanation.

This is not intended to imply that there should be no effort on the part of the pupil himself. But one must remember that a pupil has to be taught to concentrate just as he has to be taught his notes.

We cannot reasonably expect attention from a child who has yet to learn what attention is, and it is in this abstract explanation that we find it hardest to convey our meaning to the pupil. In the beginning it is the teacher who must give everything. After time has been allowed for development he may begin to look for the fruits of his labour; should their appearance be unduly retarded, he would do well to look to himself for an explanation rather than to his pupil.

There are two simple axioms, familiar to every teacher, which by reason of their very simplicity are in danger of being forgotten. The first of these—'Teach the simple work before the difficult'—may seem so obvious as to require no comment, but there is little doubt that neglect of its application is responsible for nearly half the so-called 'backward' pupils in this country. Let us examine the process by which such a deplorable result is brought about. A harmony pupil, for instance, may start well and show every sign of promise until his teacher, anxious for more rapid progress, sets him to do work which is beyond him. As a rule failure is not at first apparent, and the method is continued while the pupil makes desperate efforts, intermittently successful, to maintain the pace that has been set him. A series of examination failures generally brings matters to a head. Again and again insufficient explanation is found to be the basic trouble. The only thing to do in an acute case, once the trouble has been detected, is to go back to the very elements of the subject. In the case of an experienced teacher such a blunder should be unthinkable.

The second maxim is a pendant to the first, but no less important: 'Explain the unknown in terms of the known.' How rarely is this advice followed! If we were asked to explain baseball to a child, we should probably describe it in terms of a game with which the child was already familiar—namely, rounders. This principle should be followed in music. To explain one technicality in terms of another, equally unfamiliar, is sheer waste of time. Simplicity of description alone will serve.

Questions should at all times be encouraged. Teachers have to realise that it is not a crime for a pupil to find difficulty in understanding explanations quickly. It may be that the pupil is more than unusually slow-witted, in which case twice as much trouble must be taken. But in any event no point should be quitted until the teacher is absolutely certain that it has been mastered.

Finally, I would make a plea for the liberal use of practical illustrations. There is a tendency in certain quarters to scorn them on the ground that they develop unduly a love for pictorial effect; but the validity of this objection is doubtful. Often a single practical example is of greater value than a multiplicity of words. This applies primarily to pianoforte-teaching, but may be extended to other subjects as well. Clarity and simplicity should be the keynotes of all explanations, whether practical or theoretical, since only by following those two principles can a teacher ever hope for his pupils to attain to real understanding. So long as his endeavours are thus directed, his labours will not be in vain.

---

'Ariel' asks us to state, in answer to letters of inquiry and protest, that he will resume his 'Wireless Notes' in our next number. During the past few months his opportunities of listening have been too few to justify his writing of criticisms.

A CONTRIBUTION TO THE HISTORY O THE FLUTE

By Alban Voigt

The word 'flute' has been used for instruments o such divers forms that it may be necessary t mention first of all that it is applied here only to th instrument known in England as the 'German flute in France as the flûte traversière, and to the German themselves as Querflöte.

Speaking about this kind of flute, Prof. Curt Sach says*:

> There have been many controversies concerning the age of the cross-flute. It is impossible to give the year of its invention, but archæological discoveries enable us to state that in the ninth century B.C. such flutes were known to the Hindus; that Eastern Turkestan frescoes in the Berlin Ethnographical Museum, considered by Grünwedel and v. Lecoq to date from the fifth century A.D., the celebrated Buddhistic cave-paintings of Ajanta in Khandesh, an East Indian copper vase of the second or third century in the London India Museum, also the reliefs of Sanshi in Central India, from the first century A.D., repeatedly represent the cross-flute, and it is almost certain, to judge by antique works of art, that the later Græco-Roman world knew this type of instrument.

I have taken the liberty of placing four words in italics. Prof. Sachs cites a solid array of facts in support of the assumed age of the flute, but his scientific mind causes him to tread cautiously where there is the slightest possibility of doubt, hence the reservation, 'so gut wie sicher,' in the original text. A slight doubt is, it seems, not excluded, and I acknowledge it the more freely since I am aware how ancient paintings, ofttimes faded or mutilated, have been gravely misinterpreted. Pompeian wall-paintings were believed to depict oranges, sculptures were thought to represent ears of maize, though both fruit and cereal were introduced into Europe about fifteen hundred years after the catastrophe of A.D. 79.

If, then, the existence of our flute in the Græco-Roman civilisation requires absolute proof, let us turn to the resources of numismatic evidence.

There are in existence bronze coins of the Syrian town of Cæsareia Panias, described and illustrated in de Saulcy's 'Numismatique de la Terre Sainte' (Paris, 1878), and in Warwick Wroth's 'Catalogue of the Greek Coins of Galata, Cappadocia, and Syria' (London, 1899), after specimens in the British Museum, in the Paris collection, and in that of de Saulcy.

Only those actually depicted are mentioned here, because a mere description such as, e.g., 'Pan playing a flute,' would not be conclusive; it might refer to a Pandean pipe, often called 'flute.'

De Saulcy, page 316, Plate XVIII., No. 8:

Obv.—Bust of Marcus Aurelius: legend, AYTKAICMAYP—ANTωNEINOCCEB.

Rev.—Pan leaning in easy attitude on the stump of a tree, the left foot turned over the right, playing the genuine flute; legend, KAICCEBIEPKAI.—ACYYIIIIANEIω. In the field the date POB, i.e., 172, in the year of the town (that is, 169 A.D.).

L.c., page 321, Plate XVIII., No. 9:

Obv.—Bust of Septimus Severus: legend, AYTA.—CEB.

Rev.—Pan in same attitude as in No. 8, but with the face turned a little more to the right,

* 'Die Musikinstrument Indiens und Indonesians' (2nd ed. Berlin, 1923).

and the left arm raised slightly higher: legend, KAICEBIEP KAIACΠΠIANE. In the field the date ΘΨP (196 A.D.), to be read from right to left.

L.c., page 322, Plate XVIII., No. 10:

Obv.—Head of Caracalla, laurel-wreathed: legend, AYTKAIC.—ANT.

Rev.—Pan as on No. 9: legend, KAICEBIE. Date, ΘΨP.

Warwick Wroth, page 299, Plate XXXVII., No. 7:

Obv.—Bust of Diadumenian, with cuirass: legend, MOΠE ΔIAΔ.....NIANOC.

Rev.—Pan playing the flute, in his usual comfortable attitude, standing under vaulted masonry with a gate. In exergue, KAIΠANCEB. In field, K.C.

A very similar piece is in the Berlin Museum.

What used to be called Cæsareia Panias is the modern Banias, situated in a charming spot on a terrace of Mount Hermon. Close by is a steep rock, some 90-ft. high, with a grotto from which issues a spring that irrigates the terraced flanks of the mountain. This grotto was dedicated to Pan, and presumably contained the statue to the god which we see on the local coins. On the coins of other cities the tutelary deity of which was Pan, he is always shown with a Pandean pipe; or, in the absence of the god, he at least is indicated by his instrument. Why should he play a different instrument on the coins of Panias? We may assume that the flute was known first in these parts of Western Asia, where Arundo Donax, the material for the manufacture of Pandean pipes, did not grow, since it flourishes only in swampy and marshy regions. The mountains of Western Asia, now mostly barren, were formerly covered with forests of boxwood, an excellent material for flutes. It is safe to assume that ages before the statue to Pan was erected in the grotto, the flute was a favourite instrument of the district, because it would have been quite ridiculous to represent an ancient god with an instrument of comparatively modern invention. Most likely the cross-flute was the 'plagiaulos' of the Greeks, which word is absolutely synonymous with the French flûte traversière and German Querflöte. Further, it is not permissible to consider 'plagiaulos' as only a synonym for the Pandean pipe, for, if that were the case, Theocritus would not have mentioned plagiaulos and syrinx (i.e., Pandean pipe) when the cowherd enumerated, in the XXth Idyll, the instruments he was able to play.

It might be considered strange that the flute is not more frequently mentioned in the writings of the Romans, nor depicted in paintings. Perhaps it was somewhat under-rated, as an instrument of barbaric origin, and classed together with the 'strident boxwood' of the despised priests of Kybele and similar undesirable Asiatics, who swarmed into Rome—certainly not to the benefit of Roman morality.

Music in the Foreign Press

STORIES OF GRÉTRY

In Le Ménestrel (September-October), J.-G. Prodhomme publishes excerpts from the 'Memoirs' of Baron Trémont, in which are to be found many particulars about the musical Paris of the early 19th century. Of the following two anecdotes, the second is supplied by Francis Planté, in a letter referring to the excerpts given by Prodhomme:

Grétry could stand no music but his own. Once, after having heard an Adagio by Mozart (which, we are assured, had been beautifully played), he said to Trémont: 'My dear friend, when I die, it will surely be of an Adagio.'

He was ever imagining new devices for advertising his own music. For instance, when a work of his was to be given at the Opéra-Comique, he would go rambling through the town, and whenever he saw a poster announcing the performance, he would go and stand in front of it a while, muttering quite audibly: '"Richard Cœur de Lion"! This means a full house! I must go and book my seat at once.'

KODÁLY'S SONGS

In the September Musikblätter des Anbruch, Benedikt Szabolski writes on Kodály's songs, which he describes as 'the first examples of Hungarian songs whose significance is not local only, but European.'

OLD RUSSIAN COMPOSERS

In the August Muzyka i Revolutsiya (Moscow—a well-produced monthly, now in its second year), a brief but scholarly article by V. Yakovlef adds to the stock of available information on Russian composers of the pre-Glinka period, such as Bortniansky, Kozlovsky, Berezovsky, &c.

MUSICAL EDUCATION IN SOVIET RUSSIA

In Die Musik (October), Nadejda Briusova describes the steps now taken in Russia to extend and improve musical education:

Children are taught choral singing, and made to play national instruments (such as the domra and balalaika), to invent tunes and counterpoints, as well as to listen to music. The paucity of works suitable for performance by children is a point to which much attention is given: folk-tunes and other music are arranged for children's choirs and orchestras, and composers are encouraged to write for children. A similar policy is observed with regard to the masses of adults. In the musical academies an entirely new method of education has been adopted, the main idea being not to intermingle the study of theory, acoustics, history, &c., with that of composition, but to devise specialised tuition in each branch. The latest discoveries of musical science and investigation are made known to students; and a great part is played by a new method (the invention of B. L. Yavorsky) which is described as 'an empirical way of teaching the principles of music theory.'

TONE-PRODUCING ELECTRIC MACHINERY

In the same issue, Arno Huth describes various machines invented by Jörg Mager and by Leo Theremin.

So far, three types of instruments invented by Mager (the builder of the first quarter-tone harmonium) are available: two 'Sphaerophons'—one for tunes, another for chords—and the 'Kaleidosphon.' As yet they are too complicated to give all that may be expected from them, but they cover 'the whole range of timbres, intervals, and degrees of intensity.'

Theremin's invention, at present, is better adapted to practical purposes, but its range of efficiency is not yet very great.

A SOUTH AMERICAN MUSIC JOURNAL

The first number of La Revista de Musica (Buenos Ayres) has reached this office. It is handsomely got up, and contains a great deal of good reading matter, including an article by A. Casella on 'Matter and Timbre,' and one on 'Viotti in Paris,' by H. de Curzon. The British correspondent is Mr. Edwin Evans.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

FACSIMILE LETTERS, No. 12

From Sims Reeves to Francesco Berger.

June 9th 1859.

Grove's Terrace

My dear Sir

I had the pleasure of arranging with
Mr Thirlwall respecting the Publication of your very pretty Song which shall be given to the Public as early next Season

Yours truly
J. Sims Reeves

THE TRUTH OF ART

By PERCY RIDEOUT

In every age there is a secret band of kindred spirits. Ye who are of this fellowship, see that ye weld the circle firmly, that so, 'The Truth of Art' may shine ever more and more clearly, shedding joy and blessing far and near.

These words, perhaps a little rhetorical and flamboyant, were the last that Robert Schumann addressed to the musicians of his day. They are full of enthusiasm—they ring with sincerity; their kernel lies in the expression 'The Truth of Art,' and yet when we stop to materialise this expression we find ourselves trying to mould into shape what is merely an apophthegm—a thing of words requiring definition and elucidation at every point it touches; a thing that can have meaning only when the words we employ have an agreed significance and the workings of human nature are completely understood. For who has defined Art, and who has defined Truth?

The relationship of man to his surroundings has ever been a problem of anxious but unsatisfying inquiry. From Plato to Schopenhauer we have had nothing but mystical references to forces that act on or emanate from the human body, to which the varied phenomena of thought and feeling are ascribed. Psychology—old and new—has set itself the task of putting all these floating speculations into some semblance of scientific order. In doing so it has more or less adopted the principle of 'Back to the body.' But here physiology—concerned entirely with structure and the cure of disease—has little help to give, and so psychology clings for safety to the old because it cannot feel a safe foothold in the new.

To-day, however, physiology is attending to its deficiency; there are signs that the workings of the mind will disclose their connection with the body, and all that is vague in terms and descriptions will become accurate and intelligible. In no department is this more to be desired than in that of music. Can we, in our present state of knowledge, find some fundamental principle by which we can judge the value of music?

It is generally agreed that music makes it effect by arousing what we call our emotions. This is a significant admission, for all manner of things arouse our emotions, and music was formerly held to be a thing apart, a potent and inscrutable factor of special significance. With music reduced to the position of one of many others, we gain considerably in our attempt to understand its working, for we can investigate emotional stimulation whatever the arousing cause may be, and we can bring to our help the advantages of analogy when direct evidence is wanting.

To clear the ground it is necessary to decide what is to be our definition of the term Emotion, for it is not difficult to recall how various have been the relations in which the word has been employed. Sometimes it has implied a more than usually intense state of feeling, at other times it has been restricted to certain characteristic feelings. Physiologically it is the equivalent of Sensation as applied to the whole body—that is, the sense of being. But sensation is another word of wide meaning. Most of us employ it in connection with the special organs of hearing, touch, &c. Beyond these senses physiology admits what it calls the general sense—the cœnæsthetic sense—the sense of illness or wellness, and so forth. Obviously we are here on the threshold of emotions. The attention of most people is, however, so concentrated on the commonplace emotions due to sight and hearing, that other emotions pass by without reflection on their existence or cause; nor is this surprising, since sight and hearing are so enormously prominent in the affairs of life. Another important point of meaning is the popular identification of the organs of these senses with the brain, and, further, the general conclusion that the brain is the whole and complete apparatus that settles our life for us. In reality the function of the brain is to direct the sense organ functions, without which they would be of no value to the individual; and since these organs have acquired so great an importance for the existence of man, it is natural that the directing apparatus in their neighbourhood should be correspondingly enlarged, and so attract special attention. The brain, however, is by no means the sole directorate of the body. Biology shows that the original directorate was at one time the spinal cord, and that sections even of the cord possessed and still possess their own special duties of direction. What we indicate when we use the term brain in ordinary parlance is in reality its outer layer or cortex, the co-ordinating or unifying apparatus without which the sense organs would be unable to work together. This working together of all parts of the body requires connections to and fro between the cortex and the rest of the body, directly or indirectly, so that unity may be secured. It therefore comes about that conditions affecting the body affect also the brain, and conversely activities in the brain are followed by activities in the body. If we dismiss from our minds all idea of the brain being a separately functioning apparatus, endowed with properties which place it outside the things of the body, and regard it as being the summation of the whole bodily nervous system, we shall get rid of some of the imaginary and mystical powers we ascribe to it and be able to envisage it as the controlling portion of the whole nervous system.

Now Emotions, whether directly involving the brain or not, are bodily reactions to nerve activity. It will at once be asked what these reactions consist of. The answer is, stimulation of muscular energy by which blood pressure is varied. The primary purpose of science, it must always be remembered, is to ascertain, not to explain—to establish facts and only secondarily, if it be possible, to discover the principles of ultimate causation. It cannot be said that much has yet been done with regard to the facts of emotional reaction; of the causation of life nothing is certain. But certain facts point conclusively to the nature of these reactions, and it is quite conceivable that in time a full knowledge of their working will be obtained. At present we have the details of intensive emotional reactions given in Darwin's book on 'The Emotions.' He is concerned with the physical movements and manifestations that accompany certain broadly defined and familiar states of mind, such as laughter, fear, grief, and so forth, which obviously result in variations of blood pressure, heart beat, respiration, and bodily temperature. His object being to point out the similarity between these manifestations in man and the higher animals, and to show that parts of the body reacted to states of mind with some fixity of response, he did not touch the subject of the less intense emotions, which in man have attained such infinite and subtle gradations. For reasons already given, this part of the subject has been neglected; but some very remarkable facts are full of significance.

Mosso discovered that in a state of emotion the amount of blood in the arm diminished, causing a decrease in the volume of the arm; also that a very slight noise, not sufficient to waken a sleeper, caused a flow of blood to the brain. The ears of rabbits, too, when the animals are startled, exhibit a momentary pallor, followed by a blush. Luciani also states that in an animal acoustic stimuli induce a considerable rise of arterial pressure which varies with the pitch, strength, and timbre of the sound. These and other facts confirm the connection between blood pressure and the receipt of external stimuli, and when we remember that the periodical flow in the main blood stream is supplemented by many other periodic circulations in various other vessels (vascular regions) according to their respective innervations, and which possess their own respective rhythm and tonicity while being dependent on the central nervous system in general, we can see there is all the necessary apparatus for blood-pressure changes corresponding to the large variety of emotional states and degrees which higher man experiences. And if we admit the sensations accompanying emotions of fear, joy, or grief as dependent on certain precise disturbances of blood pressure, we cannot deny to lesser and more subtle emotions their own particular disturbances, even if we are entirely unable, as yet, to locate them in special regions, or combination of regions, of the body. These disturbances, of every degree of intensity and character, originating in most instances in the brain, as a result of stimuli received from outside sources—these disturbances in their turn communicate their occurrence back to the brain, thus modifying the next impulse from the brain until the complexity of consequence passes the power of analytical examination. It is well known that an emotional state has to subside before we can accurately judge of it. For the time being the body has become a battlefield of impulses, and just as a battlefield knows nothing of the details of the contest, but is only aware of the upheaval that is proceeding, so the body is temporarily out of control by the judgment. To what extent this suspension of judgment occurs, and what length of time it lasts, depend largely on temperament; that is, on the natural susceptibility to disturbance possessed by the body. But judgment, which is derived from experience, will also contribute a force of its own which will serve to counteract emotion or confine it to limits both of kind and degree. We thus get not only grades of Emotional susceptibility, but grades of control by judgment. The unemotional person does not exist.

Certain general conclusions are therefore inevitable. We find that music, like every other external stimulus, appeals to the whole 'being' of man; that it is a force that should not be left in the sphere of the obscure or occult and beyond the range of our powers of scientific valuation; that, as an acknowledged 'influence,' it may be like other influences, both of advantage and disadvantage to the individual. So we need to apply to music a system of criticism which shall ascertain the character of this influence.

The art of music possesses features which are strikingly peculiar to it. It is the art which manipulates certain kinds of sounds for the purpose of directly arousing in a listener a series of emotional states. A listener can respond only in respect of such emotional states as he is by heredity or experience susceptible to. Auditory perception, when deficient or undeveloped, may be a further limiting factor. This manipulation of sounds possesses a characteristic which is not found in any other art, namely, the extraordinary rapidity with which emotional states can be presented. The experiences of life take a perceptible time, often a long time, and they are broken up into patches, separated by other and unrelated experiences. In music the emotions crowd upon each other in carefully calculated order, so that in a short space of time we pass through vivid and varied experiences which attain a new and intensive significance from their close and rapid juxtaposition. When we fail to respond to a particular instance of music, assuming distracting conditions to be absent, we have evidence that the emotions connected with that music either are not those characteristic of our nature, or there are gaps in our emotional scale which break up the continuity of the response and rob it of consistency, or the music itself is lacking in the necessary qualities of interest and consistency. The question of response is therefore concerned with the emotional content of the music and the individual range of susceptibility. In discussing 'The Truth of Art' we need only consider the former of these.

VARIETIES OF EMOTIONS

Emotions can be grouped under three headings—those of Satisfaction, Resistance, and Repression. When we come to name the varieties under each heading it is at once apparent how wide the meaning of words often is; and so the terms employed have to be regarded as the best available, where not as precise and definite as could be wished for in the circumstances:

| REPRESSION | SATISFACTION | RESISTANCE |
|---|---|---|
| Desire. | Certainty. | Assurance. |
| Longing. | Ease. | Firmness. |
| Solicitude. | Contentment. | Resolution. |
| Concern. | Meditation. | Determination. |
| Regret. | Affection. | Courage. |
| Care. | Cheerfulness. | Aversion. |
| Disappointment. | Gaiety. | Disdain. |
| Sorrow. | | Indignation. |
| Despondency. | | Contempt. |
| Dejection. | | Disgust. |
| Despair. | | Doubt. |
| | | Anxiety. |
| | | Vexation. |

These lists may be compressed in general terms into varieties of Desire, Contentment, and Determination.

A second list under the same headings is now given:

| REPRESSION | SATISFACTION | RESISTANCE |
|---|---|---|
| Grief. | Excitement. | Cunning. |
| Envy. | Riotousness. | Rage. |
| Greed. | Immoderation. | Violence. |
| Hatred. | Excess. | Fear. |
| | Carelessness. | |
| | Complacency. | |
| | Indifference. | |
| | Inconstancy. | |
| | Impassivity. | |
| | Sluggishness. | |
| | Indolence. | |
| | Pride. | |

The purpose of keeping the lists separate is to exhibit the qualities in a further classification, namely, those that are held to be characteristic of the higher, and those that are regarded as belonging to lower standards. The latter are present in us, more or less, as latent tendencies derived from our hereditary lineage; the former include in their number the qualities most valued for the improvement of the human standard. This affords us a rough means of estimating the goodness or badness of qualities and their corresponding emotions. The basis of estimation must be their effect on the maintenance of a high human standard.

It will be remarked that the second list comprises qualities that for the most part indicate deficiency in the powers of judgment. Now the production of music, like the production of other arts, manifestly calls for the exercise of considerable judgment. The mental equipment of an artist is necessarily of an advanced order. The measure of his vital energy will be written clearly on the works he produces. His range of emotional susceptibility will be self-evident. Those whom we rank as great artists, in virtue of their exhibiting the qualities we regard as most essential to the maintenance of a high human standard, are those whose work awakens in us a predominating experience of the emotions belonging to these qualities, and according to the predominating presence of these high qualities we assess artists in a rough order of greatness. It is not to be expected that we shall discover a constant level of greatness in any one man; that would ignore the variety and contrasts of human nature. But no great man will be only occasionally great, just as certainly as he will be occasionally below his highest level of greatness.

Now if this greatness is due to the control exercised by judgment on the emotions (and music, we admit, implies the possession of judgment) how, it will be asked, can music be expressive of any but the better qualities of emotion?—for most of us are agreed that there is music that is bad. It will be contended by some that the 'badness' lies in construction, or in lack of interest, or in inconsistency of intention. These defects will be apparent to every one by the result, whether they are skilled in music or not. But there is a 'badness' that is readily accepted as 'goodness' by a large number of people, and this we have to account for. The cause must evidently be in a defect of judgment, and the question is in the nature of this defect.

Judgment, whatever the level of development or range of subject, can always be of a relatively high standard. It comes into play whatever the extent of the knowledge or experience. Hence we can have simple as well as complex music of a high standard, and lower standards of music are not confined to elementary types. If, therefore, we have bad music and bad art of other descriptions it signifies a relapse from a previous standard of judgment. It means that music after reaching a certain level of development falls into the hands of those who can manipulate its resources but cannot maintain it at the original standard of its purpose. In other words it shows what is called a state of degeneration. This will be understood better by mentioning the emotions this music so often expresses. In place of cheerfulness and gaiety we find riotousness, immoderation, and carelessness. In place of contentment, we find complacency, indifference, and indolence. In place of resolution, violence. That is to say, there has occurred a relapse into lower kinds of emotions; perhaps that which is most frequently met with in popular music is indolence. It must not be supposed that these qualities need be persistent throughout, and that nothing better is to be noted. Unfortunately little specimens have the power to stamp their impressions deeply on the whole effect, and one twist of melody or significant progression of chords may vitiate an otherwise acceptable composition. As a matter of fact the character is generally fixed irretrievably by numerous examples of its kind; sometimes the degeneration is found only in the melody, sometimes only in the accompaniment, at others the whole fabric is thoroughly permeated by degenerate emotions, and we describe it as vulgar, blatant, decadent, and so forth. The influence of such characters in music must be to stir into activity emotions which are not of advantage to the individual.

Against this can be set the fact that many other sources of emotional stimulation exist in life, some of which may counteract the influence of others; and that since recognition is at all times a matter of comparison and contrast the effect of the degenerative influence may provoke a more active appreciation of higher influences.

It is true that in elaborate forms of art there is often revealed a struggle between higher and lower forms of influence, with eventual predominance of the higher, though in such cases it is seldom that the depths touched ever descend as low as actual degeneration.

Perhaps we can now define what Schumann meant by the expression 'The Truth of Art.' The influence of art should always be to the advantage of the individual and the race—the stimulation of the higher emotions. He would not admit degenerative emotions on the plea of providing contrasts, since the higher emotions themselves provide a sufficiency of contrast without descending to the disadvantageous levels. Moreover, the struggle to defend the higher levels is always severe and strenuous, so that any direct stimulation of the lower levels is more likely to revive old tendencies than inspire antipathy towards them. Schumann's exhortation was probably directed especially to those concerned with the more elaborate forms of music. Popular music in his time was restricted to songs and dances which then still reflected the intuitive moods of early and simpler times. Artificiality in music was principally evident in Italian opera. He called an opera of Donizetti's 'Puppen Theatermusik.' Much of the music of the character he had in mind will naturally have gone into oblivion. In days when he, Chopin, Mendelssohn, and Liszt were leaders of the art, it is difficult to believe that there existed much that he could deplore; and yet he issued his exhortation. May we not to-day look round among the producers of elaborate music and ask if 'The Truth of Art' is entirely safe in their hands?

Should we not extend our methods of criticism so that not only the technicalities of the art are considered, but the minds of composers and listeners are laid bare and the valuation of music established on the principles of its emotional influence, whether the human standard is being advanced or the reverse, whether we are 'shedding joy and blessing far and near'?

---

A new organization, known as the Chelsea Choral Society, has been formed, under the direction of Mr. William J. Tubbs. Rehearsals are held on Thursdays, at 8.30, in Crosby Hall, Chelsea Embankment.

Points from Lectures

Lecture-goers are enjoying a harvest. If a society that arranges lectures does not hold one in the November-December period, it has gone out of the business. Fortunately for the writer the current type of lecture can usually be passed over in these columns, but an interesting and large residue remains for notice.

The Cramb Trust lectures at Glasgow University have settled down to routine which is yet fresh and vital enough. The Trust has been very discerning and successful in securing as this season's lecturer, Dr. George Dyson, sage and sound in matter, and practical both in his own illustrations and in eliciting the co-operation of choirs and audiences.

Windsor has welcomed annually Mr. T. F. Dunhill for about twenty-five years, and his latest lecture there on 'Simplicity in Music' proved that he still draws old and new friends at the Royal Albert Institute. His concluding point showed that the most difficult problems in music were often only solved in the most primitive way by a genius who had the courage to throw away his thinking-cap and meet his hearers with the confidence of a trusting child. The greatest masters had never scorned to step down from their pedestals to mingle with the crowd. They had realised that in order that we might understand them, it was necessary that they should understand us.

Nationality in music is stressed too much, in the opinion of Dr. Cyril B. Rootham, and his Bournemouth audience suggested as Mendelssohnian or Danish one of his English illustrations. In folk-song, with some exceptions, it was possible to distinguish certain characteristics. Nationality in music came to this—if a person was original, he would be original in spite of everything. Handel came from Saxony and went to Italy, and if he had gone to China he would have taken Chinese music and made something of it. He did not crush English music, but adapted the style to be found here. There are national characteristics that do make for something in the world. Let us bring them out, but we must think what we mean before we use catch-words.

Almost as a pendant to these views may be taken some remarks of Mr. Gustav Holst's at the Royal Institution. English music, he said, had always been distinguished from Continental music by the purity of its choral writing. If a choir of untrained singers were to practise a work by Byrd for three months they would find that they were far better singers at the end than at the beginning, whereas if they were to practise Beethoven's 'Missa Solennis' for a like period they would probably find that they had lost what voices they originally had.

Samuel Wesley (1766-1837) was prominently treated in Mr. Holst's second lecture at the Royal Institution. Before the centenary, ten years hence, a good edition of his best works should be ready. Selection would be necessary. Although Wesley would not be called a great man, we could call some of his music great, and Wesley deserved a more honoured place in musical history. He should be judged by his best work, and Wesley's best was superb. Discoveries just made by Mr. Walter Gandy proved that a Motet by Byrd was the same as one attributed to Wesley. This merely proved Wesley's interest in 16th-century composition, and this was confirmed by Miss J. M. Joseph's discovering in Wesley's hand-writing other Motets copied from works by Byrd.

An experience as a travelling examiner was related by Prof. Percy Buck. Distributing certificates at Sheffield, he said that English boys and girls, more than any others, when given a chance to do themselves justice in their playing, were inclined to become mechanical and self-conscious. In the Colonies they did not seem to be similarly self-conscious, but they did not appear to take art seriously. Pupils in South Africa, however, did not come up to the same standard as in England, although they did avoid one thing—being dull.

A further curious point brought out by Prof. Buck occurred in one of his University lectures at Sheffield. He did not suppose there was a genuine folk-song which was not made up and finished long before words were put to it. A question, he added, which puzzled many people was why no harmony was written until comparatively recently. Of many reasons, the most important was that people were satisfied with the simple tune. It was quite possible that in another thousand years people would be talking about the most modern of compositions as simple music.

Major Shea Simonds, lecturing on violin music and its makers, at Reading, said the Italians claimed the credit for the first introduction of the violin as a solo instrument. It was not correct to talk of the various schools as being entirely a thing apart, for they all derived their inspiration and development from the one great Italian, Viotti.

Mr. Granville Bantock, at Wakefield, gave some interesting personal reminiscences of musicians. It was difficult to speak of living men, and he found himself on safe ground by going across the Channel. His entertaining stories related to Liszt, Rubinstein, Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninov, Sibelius, and Richard Strauss.

At Morley College, Mr. Gustav Holst spoke on 'England and her Music.' He had not yet got over a statement made about seven years ago by a Frenchman, that 'Englishmen, being clear-headed and practical, had at last discovered that they have no music in them.' Yet a French artist said perhaps the best thing that had been said about English music, viz., that 'the English like music but they can do without it.' Reviewing the centuries, Mr. Holst regarded the year 1880 as the beginning of the revival of English music. In every department of music there was improvement. The general culture of music was infinitely higher than in 1892. For the first time we were trying to honour and appreciate our forefathers.

'Music for Work and Leisure' was the theme of Dr. Malcolm Sargent at a conference on employment for girls. He wished more women would take up conducting, thus providing for the little choirs springing up in connection with competition festivals. He hoped that before long London would rise to the occasion and see that we had as many permanent orchestras as Berlin, which possessed six. When that did happen he wanted to see women in the orchestras, also that women musicians would get positions in the theatres, and that better stuff would be played there. He criticised the custom of having orchestras at restaurants, on the ground that music did not go well with meals.

In a Musical Association lecture, Mr. C. M. Spurling gavé his experiences of Public School music. It was a mistake, he thought, to place only the best music before boys. They could not appreciate the best until they had had some training.

In his experience boys who had been encouraged to bring their jazz band into the open turned later with pleasure to the B minor Mass. Bach's music was not necessarily obscure; the tunes were soon whistled about the streets. Boys were pliable creatures, and there was nothing they liked better than tackling a difficult job, provided they were properly led.

As an Alsop lecture in music at Liverpool University, Dr. W. G. Whitaker discussed some of Bach's Church music. Bach's religion was greater than his creed. Sometimes, when conducting the B minor Mass, the speaker felt that the music was almost too great to accept; no composer approached the Holy of Holies as Bach did. The Mass was the most colossal tribute to religion ever penned.

'Our brains are no better than the brains of our ancestors.' Taking that general view, Sir Richard Terry went into some detail to prove another of his beliefs, that there is no such thing as progress in art—there is only change. Such statements are challenging. They were, in fact, incidental to the subject of his Wigan Free Library lecture on 'The Romance of Music Notation,' and Lord Crawford, as chairman, smoothed over the rough places in the lecture in such a way that led Sir Richard to say that although they appeared to differ, they believed exactly the same thing. Yet the Chairman had said that if there was not necessarily progress in the art itself, there was, and must be, progress in the methods of its portrayal, in the instruments it employed, and in the results that sprang from greater facilities of expression. He was all for giving due meed of praise to the great and noble pioneers, but he could not withhold his admiration from the musician who wrote the 'Rhinegold' and 'Siegfried.' 'In talking of the arts, let us never forget the craftsman, for the craftsman was the child of the arts, and in some cases was often the actual father.' Here the views concurred, or were explained away. Between the artist and the craftsman, said Sir Richard, lay the difference between the mediæval forms of art and our present forms of art.

A scheme to supplement a general musical education was described by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson in a Bristol lecture of the Church Music Society. The provision of a School of English Music would include a chapel, where regular choral services of different types and of differing degrees of elaboration could be maintained, and in which the students would gain practical experience, not only of the musical aspect of church services, but of the religious side. A hostel would be included, where a certain major number of the students could reside at a self-supporting yet inexpensive rate. A trained man could tour through the smaller country parishes, and by instruction and advice achieve a great deal. [The scheme is fully dealt with on p. 54.—EDITOR.]

Various types of pianists were delightfully illustrated in a lecture at Bath by Miss Christian Carpenter. One simply dusted the pianoforte with whatever she played. Another type set to work and spring-cleaned the keyboard from end to end. Then there was the plodder. No matter what she met in the way of breakages, she went back and picked up all the bits and began all over again. Another was the November-fog player. Nothing of the music came out; it was all muffled and throttled. Her foot was glued to the soft pedal. Then there was the half-baked performer. And yet another who, while possessing no particular fault, gave a performance that was anæmic. When you heard a good amateur, she said, you know she been taught to listen. The trained listener to a Cortot programme would hear the glory of the pedalling, the artistry of phrasing, the colossal range of tone, and the artist's wide outlook of interpretation.

The music that is in poetry and the poetry that is in music were well related in a talk at Brighton by Miss Nancy Dalrymple. If the music was equal to the poetry, it became a rival, and the listener was torn between the message of the music and that of the words. It was impossible to put music to W. B. Yeats's poems, she said, just as to put words to Chopin's Etudes would take away the beauty of their meaning. On the other hand, there were songs which were beautiful poetry and beautiful music. One could not separate Burns's 'Ye banks and braes' from its music, just as Charles Kingsley's delightful little poems in 'The Water Babies' invited musical accompaniment.

'Modern Music' was a big enough title to allow Mr. Arthur Hirst, at Hove, to cover much ground. As part of his educational purpose, he showed how Grieg built up his form from the fiddlers of his native land, who played without reference to a text-book. These people used all sorts of strange harmonies and strange colours as their fancy led them. Grieg discovered that it was possible to use all of them in all kinds of chromatic harmonies. He collected an enormous number of these native airs and harmonized them. That gave him the idea for original work of his own—and his work has affected practically every musician since. J. G.

New Music

SONGS

Its attractive tune is the making of Dennis Arundell's 'Tisbea's Song,' which comes from Curwens. The accompaniment does no more than supply a chordal background for the tune, which makes its points quite effectively without the aid of the pianoforte. The same publishers send Armstrong Gibbs's 'Jenny Jones,' an essay in the creation of atmosphere, an atmosphere of mystery and witchcraft. It is a successful essay, too. The interest grows finely up to the climax on p. 5, and the pianissimo last verse is most sinister in effect. This song, like many others by the same composer, is a model of design and handling. Two other attractive songs from the same house are Percival Garratt's 'A Fairy's Life' and 'The Voices of the Trees.' A strong feature of these numbers is the well-written pianoforte parts. Patrick Hughes, also published by Curwens, goes to Congreve for his words, and sets them to tunes that are frank limitations of the 'Beggar's Opera' style. The tunes are well-balanced and singable, and are quite amusing fakes. 'A nymph and a swain' might deceive an expert, but it is more than doubtful whether 'I tell thee, Charmion' would do so: and in any case imitations of this sort are apt to sound hollow unless they are treated as a joke. Their lack of impulse is felt when they are compared with the real thing. Henry Coleman has arranged for Patersons an 'Old English Song-Cycle' consisting of three numbers, one attributed to Handel, the others by Arne and Howard. The last composer's 'Love in thy youth' is a particularly fresh and attractive tune, having all the vitality that Mr. Hughes's imitations lack. Dr. Coleman's pianoforte parts are well-written and effective, and he shows considerable skill in adapting his style to suit the individuality of the different tunes.

Another Paterson publication is J. Michael Diack's series of Handel songs. The music, chosen from various sources, operas and oratorios, is in some cases adapted by the Editor to English poems by such authors as Shakespeare, Fletcher, and Marlowe. 'O mistress mine,' for instance, is fitted to music from 'Jephtha,' which is excellent in itself, but is ill adapted to Shakespeare's words. More scholarly in method, and in every way as practical, is the Oxford University Press series of 'Arias from the Operas of G. F. Handel,' edited by W. G. Whittaker. It is in fact difficult to see how this edition could be improved. The text is scrupulously edited, and all notes that are added with a view to improving the pianoforte version are printed in small notation, so that the player always knows how he stands with regard to the original version. English words, and singable ones, by A. G. Latham are provided, but are given in addition to, and not instead of, the originals from which they are translated. On the first cover are given historical facts, a summary of the plot, and notes on the scoring and markings of Handel. The songs are finely printed, and sold at a reasonable price, and it is difficult to know what more one could expect or want. Some twenty numbers, including such lovely things as 'Viena, torna, from 'Teseo,' and 'Gioje, venite,' from 'Amadigi,' have already been published, and others are to follow.

Yet another useful series of arrangements is Stuart Archer's 'Songs from the Oratorios' (Paxton), Book 4 of which has just been issued. Accompaniments are here printed in pianoforte score, but with indications of organ registration, so that with a few minor adjustments the arrangements are suitable for use with either instrument. The solos included here are from 'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' 'Elijah,' and other works, and are for bass voice. The editor's treatment of Handel is open to objection, for he 'fills in' with a generous and uncritical hand, seldom losing an opportunity to weaken Handel's texture by the use of the dominant seventh and its inversions, and it would have been a great improvement if Handel's text had been more faithfully followed. These arrangements are seen at their best in the Mendelssohn and Haydn numbers, although the serviceable version of 'Why do the nations' may well be a boon to many organists. T. A.

PIANOFORTE

This month's batch of music is an exceptionally good one, for although there is inevitably among so many pieces a wide variety in the matter of intrinsic interest, there is not a single example that falls below a pretty high standard of musicianship. Most interesting of all to some pianists will be Béla Bartók's 'Three Hungarian Popular Songs,' which are now stocked in the original Rozsnyai edition by Edward Organ. Not merely beautiful tunes are these tiny things; Bartók by his arrangement makes them into perfect musical miniatures, as complete and satisfying in their small way as a sonata movement. These particular examples show Bartók's style in a state of development. His harmony, whilst clearly reaching out towards some new effect, is still firmly based on ordinary 19th-century usage. The thing that is not ordinary is Bartók's handling of it; every chord is perfectly placed and carefully calculated in relation to the surrounding harmony; and it is easy to see how Bartók's subsequent developments have originated in a stern cutting away of unessentials from harmony that was not in itself at all far-fetched. The great charm of this music is its freshness; everything that comes from Bartók has that quality in marked degree, and these pieces are no exception.

The same quality is to be found in a set of pieces by John Locke, 'Charivari,' published by Chesters. The six numbers of this suite are all short, and not all of them are convincing. On occasion, however, a sprightly sense of humour and a neat sense of pianoforte effect produce very attractive results. 'The Fairy Ring,' with its captivating little clashes, and 'Maître Renard' in much the same style, are good examples. The pieces are quite trifling, but amusing. The same publishers send N. Tcherepnin's 'Dix pièces gaies,' which are again very simple in material and depend for effect on their rhythms and their use of bright pianoforte tone. They are in some ways easy, but extreme skill will be wanted to get the best out of them. At their neatest, as in Nos. 3 and 7, they are charming; when the composer overemphasises his humour or carries on the jest too long, or with too much repetition, as in No. 9, the result is wearying.

From Maurice Senart comes 'Belinda's Second Suite,' by Dom Thomas Symons, whose music is always sensitive and interesting. In 'Belinda's Dream' the composer has reached a high level; there is a very individual and unusual beauty, and a sense of unity in style and form. 'The Sorrows of Belinda' is attractive, too. Elsewhere, perhaps, a conscious avoidance of the commonplace tends to affected and finnicky writing: but at its best the music is charming.

More robust and straightforward in style is Colin Taylor's 'The Jolly Roger,' the first of 'Two Short Pieces' just published in the Oxford Pianoforte Series. 'Sunset Spires,' the second of the two, is quieter and reminiscent in style. This last is a very useful piece. Apart from its intrinsic interest it is an excellent introduction for pupils of moderate capabilities to the management of pianoforte colour and effect.

The same sort of thing, on a much larger scale, is achieved by Lucille Crews's 'Two Poems for Pianoforte.' Here a rather conventional colour-palette is fully exploited, but with a critical sense and a knowledge of effect which keep the music from becoming commonplace. Impressionistic music, except in the hands of the elect, is proverbially aimless and 'sploshy,' and the success of these two pieces is due to the composer's restraint and sense of form. There is, moreover, a keen ear for the pianoforte's tonal possibilities (Schirmer).

This is true also of Alec Rowley's three pieces which come from Edwin Ashdown, but this composer has more than a sensitive ear, and his music has a thematic vitality that is absent from the above-mentioned pieces. There is growth of interest here, and a power of sustained thought. Pianists with a good technical equipment would do well to look at 'Moonlight Jig' and 'To Summer'; and 'Evening Mists,' without any very strong individuality, perhaps, is a well-managed and attractive piece of atmospheric writing.

Horace Johnson's 'In the American Manner' has a good deal of jazz effect in it, but does not depend entirely upon this. It has several tunes, and the composer does himself an injustice: his music is really not so barren of variety and wearisome in its persistent repetitions as to deserve the innuendo of its title. Also from Schirmers are three of Aurelio Giorni's Twenty-four Concert Etudes in all the major and minor keys. They are certainly difficult, and any pianist who deals with them adequately could tackle anything; but it is to be questioned whether the game is worth the candle. Schirmers also send Francis Hendrik's 'The Jester.'

Medtner's two 'Elfenmarchen' are difficult too, but here there is real musical reward to be reaped. No. 2 particularly has some charming music in it. No. 1 seems over-long for its material: there are some eighteen pages of it, which is a good deal too much. Pianists who pride themselves on their cross-rhythms might well look at this work: they will find one or two very pretty problems (Zimmermann, Leipsic). Weekes have sent an 'Air and Sarabande' written many years ago by Arthur Somervell—music whose clean outline and graceful melody are good to meet.

Last comes Maurice Besly's 'Kensington Gardens,' a set of four pieces—Gavotte, Syncopated Waltz, Romance, and Graceful Waltz. Here again, though the music is frankly light, there is clearly the mind and hand of a musician. Maurice Besly does not write a single number that is without its little distinction of phrase or cadence, and if his music does not always stay at the level of its best moments it never sinks into the merely commonplace.

T. A.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Moyna Conway's 'Times and Tunes,' Book 1 (Keith Prowse), may be recommended for the use of beginners. It contains seven graded lessons in time and interval reading, and a number of interesting little exercises and pieces, all within the compass of five notes. All the reading exercises are barred, and phrasing is attended to from the start. There is a page of helpful hints for the benefit of the inexperienced teacher. The same publishers send also Zdenko Fibich's 'Album-Blätter,' five pieces which, taken as a whole, are somewhat dull and uninspired (Elementary to Lower Division); Boris Levenson's 'The Musical Box,' which provides pleasant finger-work in the high register of the pianoforte (Lower); and Edmund Mansard's Suite 'Versailles' (Elementary). This little Suite contains some attractive and useful material for young people. The pieces are mostly short, and give opportunities for melody playing, phrasing, and quick finger-work.

A little Romance, 'The Man in the Moon,' by Herbert Brewer (Paxton), is tuneful, straightforward music which flows along easily, and nowhere in its brief course presents any serious obstacle to the player. Rhythmically it lacks variety (Lower). More advanced players will appreciate 'Music Pictures,' by John Foulds (Paxton). There are three of these: 'The New Spinet' (after Lucas), a dainty minuet, useful for delicate staccato work; 'Dignity and Impudence' (after Landseer), a polka burlesque, also mainly staccato; and 'The Rainbow' (after Kirkpatrick), a tone-poem, which needs a full-sized hand and gives practice in the playing of two notes against three. Edgar Moy's 'From a Country Garden' (Leonard) contains five pieces which are interesting and attractive, and likely to prove helpful in developing lightness, phrasing, and singing touch (Lower). Olive Turner's 'Masquerade' (Gould & Bolttler) comprises seven well-written pieces which should prove popular. Some of them would appeal to boys—e.g., 'Chin, Chin, Chinaman' and 'Jolly Jack Tar'; fluent finger-work is required in 'A Gipsy Dancer' (Tarantelle) and 'Harlequin' (Lower to Higher). 'The Faery Huntsman,' by Harold Colombatti (Bosworth), is another attractive set of pieces—four in number—all of which call for bright, neat playing (Higher). Suitable for pupils a grade lower are Walter L. Twinning's 'Dainty Trifles'—six characteristic pieces which will make pleasant practice (Rowland); Frederic Mullen's Rondoletto in G (Weekes); and John E. Campbell's 'A Summer's Day' (Paxton).

The following pieces may also be recommended (Elementary to Lower): York Bowen's 'Two Short Pieces'—a graceful little 'Album Leaf' and a 'Humoresque' (finger staccato); T. Haigh's 'An Old Dance Form'—a study in rests for the left hand (both from Paxton); 'O, what a chatterbox'—a fluent Rondino by Cyril Jenkins; Diabelli's Sonatina in C, Op. 151; 'Three Short Dances' under one cover (Morris Dance, Country Dance, Hey), by Hubert Hales (easy, effective, and useful rhythmically); Cyril Jaffray's four 'Silhouettes,' issued separately—'March Tune,' 'Light Heart' (Waltz), 'Swing Song,' and 'Canzonetta' (all the above from Joseph Williams).

G. G.

MIXED-VOICE

E. H. Thiman's easy setting of 'There is a lady sweet and kind' flows graciously, and has a good climax. It is for S.A.T.B. Balfour Gardiner has arranged for S.A.T.B. (also for T.T.B.B.) the 'Volga Boatmen's Song.' This has the right stark strength about it (Novello). Composed for the Semi-National Eisteddfod of 1928, Olive V. Williams's song for S.A.T.B. makes use of Belloc's fine little carol-poem 'The Birds.' The charm of the words is a little dulled by repetition of lines, and the melodic invention is not so good as the poet's fancy, but the song has a gentle thoughtfulness about it that pleases (Rowland). Donald Edeson's 'Lullaby of an Infant Chief' (Scott's 'O hush thee, my baby') uses familiar material neatly. A few new twists of old melodies would be welcome in these part-songs. Novelty for its own sake is feeble; we want strength and insight. So many composers give us nice, harmless tunes, treated in a way to which no one can take exception. Longer thought might help; but the breath of inspiration is the real need (Williams).

Cyril Jenkins, in his treatment of 'David of the White Rock,' uses humming, as does Mr. Edeson. The chromatic touches here do not make for great strength, and the fifths are not nice ones (Paxton).

Two other Welsh National Eisteddfod tests are John Hughes's 'The Plaint of the Wind,' a setting for S.S.A.T.B. of Welsh words by Sir J. Morris-Jones, and J. Morgan Lloyd's 'Walking by a river-side,' Campion's words set for S.S.A.A.T.B. In the first piece a few words are spread over a lot of space, and there are some angularities that are not particularly impressive. This is not the music to place Wales in the forefront of the nations. The madrigal form somewhat cramps Mr. Lloyd's style, I feel. It is very difficult to walk freely and individually in step with such a master as Campion (Rowland).

Bernard Johnson adopts the madrigal style for his 'Sleep,' for S.A.A.T.T.B. (words from Longfellow). This is simple enough, tuneful and tasteful, as also is Thomas Dunhill's arrangement of 'Loch Lomond' for S.A.T.B. (Novello).

Hugh Roberton's 'Maureen' is also set for S.A.T.B. choir or quartet (Paterson).

'The Old Tune of the Vicar's Book' is a Welsh carol, arranged by W. S. G. Williams, with an English translation. Here is half monotony and half good tune (S.A.T.B.).

Some new editions of Dowland's harmonized lute-airs are made by Peter Warlock. These are 'Come away, come sweet love,' 'Praise blindness, eyes,' 'Farewell, unkind, farewell,' and 'Can she excuse my wrongs?' All are simple, and should be looked at by choirs that find most madrigals at present a little difficult. A good feeling for rhythmic stress and a light touch are needed. All are for S.A.T.B. A pianoforte part, from the lute accompaniment, is provided for use when the songs are sung, as they originally were, as solos.

Two groups of shanties from Sir Richard Terry's collection have been arranged for solo and mixed-voice chorus by Maurice Jacobson. Each selection is a first-rate shillingsworth. One of these songs to start or wind up a practice is an excellent tonic prescription. Lastly, there is Martin Shaw's 'Budmouth Dears,' sub-titled, 'Hussar's Song' (poem by Hardy). The eight-part unaccompanied chorus that can use tongue, lips, teeth, and wits, will enjoy this whimsy (Curwen).

There is a broad sensitiveness in Felix White's carol 'Carry me, Babe, to Bethlehem now,' a setting of some words translated from the Spanish by Sir J. Bowring (S.A.T.B.). The part-writing is well spaced, and the harmony has a touch of freshness without being in the least extravagant. This writer often gives us rather unusual cadences, that we like to taste more than once (Stainer & Bell).

W. R. A.

---

MALE-VOICE

'Isaiah: The Seven Burdens' is the general title of one of Bantock's latest Suites (Williams). The complete work contains seven pieces: 'Damascus,' 'The Valley of Vision,' 'Moab,' 'The Beasts of the South' and 'Dumah' (in one cover), 'The Desert of the Sea,' 'Tyre.' These are published separately, and are for T.T.B.B., except the second and sixth, which are for T.T.BAR.BAR.B.B. 'Moab' has a tenor solo part also.

I think we have all felt that a good deal of Bantock's work in recent years has not maintained the standard of his best things of pre-war days. There are fine, solid qualities in some of his writing still, but I fear the festivals have gone to his pen a little. Such pages as the seventh of this Suite are a little too slickly done by a man of Bantock's skill. There is some excellent declamation here and there, but the contrapuntal interest is slender, and most of the songs are a little long for their matter. It seems as if the composer had consciously restricted himself in several ways—harmonically, for instance. There is plenty for the singers to enjoy, for Bantock knows his voices, as he has amply proved. On the score of sheer musical interest, variety, and subtlety, the songs do not quite hold my interest. Conductors should look at them, not least to get an idea of Bantock's rather curious development as a choral composer.

Three more unaccompanied songs for male voices (T.T.B.B.) by Bantock are issued by the same firm. These are settings of Newbolt's 'Drake's Drum,' 'Admiral Death,' and 'The Fighting Téméraire.' This is good, rousing stuff, that hits off the curiously mixed spirit that the poet puts into his songs. Bantock seems to me happier here than in the Isaiah extracts. The effects are all waiting for the man with technique at his finger ends, and none has the devices at handier call than Bantock. If I seem a little hard on some of his other music, it is only because I believe he can do far better work than a lot of the pieces he has been turning out recently. He has not had, since the war, the performances that he deserves, and I should like to see his best work done more frequently. But we must be sure it is his best; and for a fine composer he falls below that level too often.

Here mention must be made of the Balfour Gardiner arrangement for T.T.B.B. of the Volga song noticed above (Novello).

'Three Modern Folk-Songs,' by 'Clarence Whoisit,' are 'rags'—chiefly of Grainger, for his odd labels, neatly framed after his fashion, are stuck about: 'Poppily, with warmth,' is one; and 'Lovingly and lingeringly' is put in a heart-shaped frame. Parody is extremely difficult in music. The words are funnier than the music here, but the third song, about the Haarlem goat that swallowed three red shirts, has a good peppering of the worst and comicalest sort of male-voice tricksy effects. Singers (preferably a small party) who can really play the fool with their voices—and faces—would score with these whimsical things (H. W. Gray: Novello.).

T. F. H. Candlyn's 'Hunting Song' (Scott's 'Waken, lords and ladies gay'), from the same firm, is a pleasant piece in fairly conventional style.

W. R. A.

---

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

Joseph Speaight's 'Going to St. Ives' (S.S.) is sprightly, has some fairly easy chromatics, and asks for ff and ppp tone in its very short course (Rogers).

Felix White's 'Gay Robin' (Robert Bridges) is for S.A. (the lower part going down to B). This flows in rather more taxing chromatic style, and tests freedom of interpretation and gracefulness of phrase (Curwen).

Mark Andrews, in his S.A. arrangement of 'John Peel,' brings in the 'tan-ta-ra' of the horn effectively. This is an easy song (H. W. Gray: Novello).

An arrangement by John Pointer of Parry's 'If I had but two little wings' (S.A.) is happily done. This should be a favourite in its new form, as it has already proved to be in the S.A.T.B. edition (Novello).

The words of 'The Rag and Bone Man' (given as 'adapted by A. P. Graves') are rather gruesome. Holbrooke marks the music (S.A.) to be sung with humour. This is not very striking, but those who care for the subject could give it a touch of oddity, maybe, singing. Still another setting of Allingham's 'Up the airy mountain' comes out. It is by Henry L. Read, for S.S. (with a couple of low B's in the second part), and goes sweetly chirping along (Williams).

Elsie Horne's 'Nocturne' (S.MS.A.) is a straightforward piece of work in a familiar, simple idiom. It is not particularly fresh, but the mood is pleasantly conveyed (Murdoch).

W. R. A.

---

UNISON SONGS

There is happy imagination and skill in Eleanor Farjeon's series of Singing Games, of which four numbers are to hand. 'Wayland, Wayland, shoe me my mare' and 'The Busy Lass' would suit quite young children, and 'The Gentle Squire' and 'Crock of Gold' would give rather older ones a choice to exercise their love of romance. None of the songs is too 'old' for any child of singing-game age. The libretto is printed, and stage directions are given. No special scenery is absolutely necessary, though where simple drapings and properties are available, they should be used. The songs can be made very effective items in a concert. For class-singing at any time they will be liked. Percy Judd's 'A Hush Song' (words by Moira O'Neill) is a tiny, easy lullaby for sweet, delicate treatment (Oxford University Press).

For 'A Fairy Year,' a cycle of twelve songs of the months, by Gladys Hilder (words) and G. Oldroyd (music), tableaux with a little action are suggested. These can be inexpensively contrived. The songs can be sung as solos, or by a class. The music, which does not venture far from familiar melodic lines, is tuneful and bright, and lilts along very pleasantly (Faith Press).

A graceful little piece is 'The Fairies' Lullabye,' by Cecil Sharman. It needs good shading and pp singing (Novello).

Colin Taylor has made a capital setting of 'John Gilpin,' for female or boys' voices in unison, with here and there a second part that is optional. The pianoforte accompaniment will suffice, but it will be a great help to have the two fiddles and the castanets and tambourine, the parts for which are marked ad lib. There is humour in the music, and plenty of the fresh melodiousness that we always get from this composer—one of those whose pieces rarely disappoint. There is matter here to provide a good term's work. The cantata lasts about a quarter of an hour, and its vocal compass is C to F sharp (a tone lower in the optional second part). A good pianoforte accompanist is required (Novello).

Peter Warlock's Christmas carol, 'The First Mercy,' will repay careful, intelligent singing, by those who can get into the voice a touch of eagerness and effervescence of spirit. The pianist needs to be able to get the most out of the piquant harmonies. This is not a very easy song, but it has freshness and personality.

A set of 'Vocational Songs for Boys' is issued under the general title of 'When I'm a man.' K. A. Wright contributes simple, singable, cheery ditties about 'The Baker,' 'The Tailor,' 'The Farmer's Boy' (which the 'Back to the Land!' movement ought to get hold of), and 'The Soldier' (which all peace societies will wish to suppress). There is an optional second part to the first, second, and last of these. The words are by Dan Cormack, who keeps to well-trodden paths. Other unison songs in this set are 'The Watchman,' 'The Knife Grinder,' and 'The Sailor,' words and music (both equally straightforward and unadventurous) by Edward Shenton. Alec Rowley's 'The Policeman' has a touch of philosophy, as becomes the all-seeing friend-of-man in blue. All these are published by Winthrop Rogers (Hawkes).

Gerrard Williams has arranged 'Richard of Taunton Dene' (with some nice consecutive fifths), so that it may either be sung by any party of folk straight through, or by boys and girls in alternation. This is an excellent piece for grown ups, too—a good thawer of ice. Those who can't remember the words can sing 'Dumbledum deary, dumbledum day' all through—it doesn't much matter so long as they sing. The same writer has harmonized Purcell's 'I attempt from love's sickness to fly' comfortably, with one or two chords not quite in the happiest positions. This is not, of course, a good piece for unison singing. We do not pour out our woes of love in massed formation. A reprint from 'English Folk-Songs for Schools' (Baring Gould and Sharp) is 'The Old Woman and the Pedlar,' which will be liked because of its broad humours and its rollicking gait (Curwen).

Felix White's 'Lady Dafadowndilly' (Christina Rossetti) is a tiny, bright, lilting song, with skipping intervals, to be sung lightly and gracefully (Bayley & Ferguson).

'Jack of the Ink-Pot' is by Cecil Sharman (words from Algernon Blackwood's 'The Education of Uncle Paul'). This is a lively six-eight song, with good, varied practice in taking thirds and fourths. It could be sung by quite small children (Novello).

Two other items come outside the general scope of this department. Holst's 'The Golden Goose' is a choral ballet. It was designed for production in the open air, with few properties. Group dances play an important part—more important than that of most of the solo dances. The entertainment is based on the Grimm tale of the Princess who couldn't laugh, though terrific efforts were made to get a smile out of her. Then, when she saw the adventure of the golden goose, to whose gluey tail all sorts of dignified people got stuck, she burst out laughing, and Jack, who owned the goose, married her. There are fourteen characters (there may be more), besides groups of courtiers and ladies, heralds, mummers, gnomes, and the populace—a gay throng altogether. Various devices can be resorted to to bring down the numbers, both of characters and orchestra. The minimum 'full' band is one each of flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, and trumpet, with strings; but strings and pianoforte alone can be used where no wind is procurable. The chorus part is quite simple, strong, and bright. The ballet can be done by children only, the melody being sung in unison throughout. I should imagine that very many bodies of folk-dancers could get together sufficient forces of all kinds to give a good performance on what appears from the score to be a capital little work (Oxford University Press).

Another work from the same Press is the incidental music to 'Fat King Melon and Princess Caraway,' by A. P. Herbert and Dennis Arundell. This is described as a 'drama in five scenes.' The book of words has not reached me, so I don't know who King Melon and the Princess are. The songs are very simple, and it would appear that particular emphasis has been laid on this quality in the music, which is based on old airs. The piece, from this one copy, promises well, for doubtless A. P. H. has done his part very happily.

W. R. A.

CHAMBER MUSIC

A Quartet in C major, by Johann Christian Bach, for flute (or oboe), violin, viola, and 'cello (Raabe & Plothow, Berlin), is not only good music of its type and time, but also excellent stuff for the teacher. The flute part can be played by a violinist of very moderate skill, and as the other parts offer not the slightest difficulty, we imagine this work would provide an ideal introduction to the study of chamber music. This will never be said of Bernard van Dieren's 'Sonatina Tyroica,' for violin and pianoforte (Oxford University Press), which demands a good deal of skill and sound musicianship. As music, it is always interesting in a cool-headed, almost matter-of-fact fashion. It has not a bar which is not well turned; it has not a period in which trim neatness is not the paramount feature. This, at least, is the impression derived from a first reading. There is more robustness and vitality in the Arensky Trio in D minor, for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello (E. W. Organ, Birmingham). We may like or dislike Arensky's style, but it has a character of its own, which even if it be not of a strong and masterful type is nevertheless clear, distinct, and individual. So many other composers are content to be unlike their fellows, mistaking a negative for a positive quantity. Even when they avoid successfully a resemblance to the style of all others, they are still far from having created a style of their own. B. V.

'CELLO

Bach wrote Sonatas and Suites for violin and 'cello alone. Then for many a year the unaccompanied capriccio was all that could claim some sort of kinship with Bach's form. Reger tried to revive it and seemed at first to fail. Just now, however, a new impulse has apparently given rise to new hopes, and while Ysaye publishes his Sonatas for violin alone, Herr Franz Ippisch challenges criticism with his neatly printed 'Suite' for violoncello solo (Ludwig Döblinger, Leipsic/Vienna). A reading of the suite gives the impression—perhaps unfairly—of a somewhat anxious quest for colour. But the five movements which make up the composition are commendably short, and it seems likely that a really good performance would give reasons for correcting first impressions. I confess, however, that I could not contemplate without serious misgivings a whole evening of new, unaccompanied 'cello or violin music. It is true that the modern enjoys a freedom of choice and colour which was unknown to Bach; but then Bach had qualities only one of which could be and should be imitated—his modesty.

An 'Air in D,' by Arthur Somervell (Joseph Williams), shows the neat, scholastic tastes of its author. The 'cello part is bowed and fingered by Cedric Sharpe. It has not been thought necessary, however, to print either bowing or fingering on the guiding line at the top of the pianoforte part.

O. Rieding's Concerto for 'cello and pianoforte (Bosworth) enjoys the distinction of being easy and effective within its narrow compass. That there is a demand for such music is probable. That the time devoted to it could be better employed is certain. But human nature being what it is, young and very young amateurs cannot be expected to grind away with the determination of an ambitious student who means to make music his life work.

F. B.

VARIOUS BACH TRANSCRIPTIONS

So inveterate a transcriber as Bach would probably rejoice in the numerous arrangements of his own works. Like most early composers he stands the test well, because the music is almost invariably far more important than the medium. The only point on which there is room for more than one opinion concerns the transcriber's attitude towards the original text. Arrangers, as a rule, alter either too much or too little. The workable principle ought surely to be this: the transcription should use the idiom of its new medium, rather than attempt to reproduce the idiom of the original. For example, pianoforte versions of the organ works ought to be pianoforte music rather than more or less unsuccessful endeavours to make the pianoforte sound like an organ. Again, there is a tendency to make pianoforte transcriptions of Bach so difficult as to place them out of the reach of the ordinary player. Many of the organ works transcribed are essentially simple, and they lose, rather than gain, from over-elaborate pianising. Of the examples recently received for review those of Walter Rummel are fine examples of keyboard writing. There are two sets, one consisting of seven Chorale Preludes, and the other of seven adaptations from the Cantatas. The title of the former is misleading, as several of the pieces are not chorale preludes, but movements from the cantatas—'Mortify us by Thy grace,' choruses from the Cantata, 'Ach, wie flüchtig,' and 'Christ lag in Todesbanden' and the introduction to 'Was Gott tut.' These are difficult.

The Prelude on 'Das alte Jahr vergangen ist' is skilfully and effectively laid out. (A few misprints should be put right. The B in the R.H. in the first bar needs a flat. In bar 7, Mr. Rummel's suggested natural seems unwarranted. The B should undoubtedly be flattened. In the final bar the best editions give G natural for the first semiquaver in the second group. Mr. Rummel seems to be led astray by the G sharp elsewhere. And why does he leave the treble A unresolved?) Of the seven adaptations from the Cantatas, only three come for review: 'My heart ever faithful,' 'We hasten to Thee,' and Pan's song, 'To dance, to frolic.' These are skilfully served up, and make considerable technical demands. In some respects an even more interesting set of transcriptions is that of some Preludes by Bach's forerunners and contemporaries—Hanff, Kellner, Lübeck, Buxtehude, Pachelbel, Vogler, and Walther. The work of these men is little known, but the best of it runs Bach very close. Mr. Rummel is inclined to over-elaboration in laying out these pieces, but he has done valuable salvage by thus putting into circulation some fine early organ music that is too little known even among organists. All the above are published by Chester.

Harry Hodge has arranged for strings six of Bach's best Chorale Preludes, 'Schmucke dich,' 'Ich ruf' zu dir,' &c. (Paterson). This medium suits the work admirably, and quartet parties and string orchestras should welcome them. They are issued in two sets of three.

For violinists of good average technique there are three Chorale Preludes arranged for violin solo and pianoforte by Fritz Bennicke Hart (Boosey). The three are 'Christ lag in Todesbanden,' 'Herzlich thut mich verlangen' (better known as the Passion Chorale), and 'Der Tag, der ist so freudenreich.' The pianoforte part calls for a player accustomed to polyphonic writing. These are not the most suitable preludes for violin purposes. There are a good many of the coloratura type whose long and finely-spun melodic line can be delivered effectively only by the organ and violin. A few of these, with the accompanying parts simply laid out (little more than a literal copying of the organ score would be required), would be a boon to fiddlers who wish to explore this side of Bach.

Finally, here is a good example of sensible, practical arranging—Gerrard Williams's version for pianoforte duet of the Organ Prelude and Fugue in G major (Oxford University Press). The Fugue is that whose subject is a major version of the theme of a chorus in the Cantata, 'My spirit was in heaviness.' It is one of Bach's best organ fugues, and the Prelude is also a general favourite. Here and there (for example, at the end of p. 6 of the Fugue), it would, I think, have been better to give the middle voice to the primo so that the secondo might have both hands free for the subject in octaves. Apart from this small point there can be nothing but praise for this commonsense arrangement. (It is a pity, by the way, that the Prelude and Fugue are published separately. Almost alone among Bach's works in this form, they are connected thematically as well as in mood.)

H. G.

FLUTE

A little piece by Debussy, entitled 'Syrinx,' for flute alone (Jean Jobert, Paris), must undoubtedly attract English flute players who know the extraordinary genius Debussy has shown elsewhere in his treatment of this instrument. It is dedicated to a French artist well-known on this side of the Channel, whose untimely death a short while ago many English friends have deeply regretted—Louis Fleury. B. V.

The object of 'Rhythmic Exercises,' by Marion R. Anderson (McDougall's Educational Co.), is 'to provide musical examples for use in teaching the recognition of rhythmic patterns through movement. The teacher who cannot improvise is at once hampered by the very limited supply of music suitable for the purpose. Through these exercises, which are in accordance with the grammar of movement taught in the Dalcroze system, time- and note-values may be shown, and thus, to some extent, the rhythmic sense may be developed.' Whilst the writer is to be commended for her good intentions, and also for the general plan of the book, it must unfortunately be said that the musical examples contain so much crude and faulty writing, that only after drastic revision can the work be recommended.

G. G.

Books 2 and 3 of the capital series known as 'The Hundred Best Short Classics for the Pianoforte' have just been issued. It would be difficult to take exception to any of the choices, and the range is so wide as to make the work valuable on the historical side. There are helpful notes on interpretation (Paterson). From the same house comes also an attractive set of 'Dance movements from Handel,' arranged for pianoforte by J. Michael Diack. The only fault we find here is the inclusion of a fugue—not because of its form (for there are fugues that partake of the character of the dance), but on the score of its quality. Handel wrote some fine fugues—and a good many of the other sort. This is one of the other sort.

The Oxford University Press has published Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater,' for female voices and strings, edited and arranged by Charles Kennedy Scott. The work has been re-scored so as to give the stringed instruments independent parts instead of the doublings of the original. As school orchestras are often minus violas, Mr. Scott has aimed at satisfactory three-part harmony with violins and basses, so that violas, though desirable, are not indispensable. A keyboard instrument may be added at discretion. Latin and English words are given. Certain transpositions have been made, and there are suggestions as to the division into solo and chorus numbers.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Sir Arthur Sullivan: His Life, Letters, and Diaries.' By Herbert Sullivan and Newman Flower.

[Cassell, 21*s.*]

Book after book on Sullivan appears, but, oddly enough, none of them deals at all seriously with Sullivan's music. We hear again and again about his parentage, his brilliant student days, the fashionable friends which he attracted to himself as Bunthorne attracted rapturous maidens; about the various successes at the Savoy, and so on; but about the actual music hardly anything.

The present biographers do not set out to be critical, but they are more than uncritical, they are indiscriminating. 'The Chorister' is 'a superb song' (p. 10). And they say:

> . . . he could have made an immense fortune by 'pot-boiling,' but he refused to 'pot-boil.' His art stood for him as some ever-burning lamp (p. 233).

This is too simple. It stares us in the face that by far the greater part of Sullivan's work, both the best and the worst, was pot-boiling. What will come as a surprise to the reader is Sullivan's half-hearted feeling towards his work for the Savoy partnership during years of its duration.

He would have liked to throw it up after 'Princess Ida' (1884). He felt that it was cramping the music that was in him, but the pressure of success was too strong. Sullivan had acquired expensive tastes, and the Savoy operas were, as Gilbert said, 'a gold mine,' which Gilbert could not for the life of him see any reason for not exploiting to the last yellow grain.

Gilbert was quite frankly out for success, and couldn't have too much. All three partners grew, through force of habit, a trifle greedy. 'Ruddigore' had to be set down a failure, so they all ruefully agreed, as each pocketed £7,000 of the profits. 'The Yeomen of the Guard' (which Sullivan liked best of all Gilbert's librettos) was not successful enough for Gilbert. It did not, he wrote (p. 185):

> . . . warrant us in assuming that the public want something more earnest still. There is no doubt about it, the more reckless and irresponsible the libretto has been, the better the piece has succeeded.

The biographers are inclined to share this greediness. They are pleased to talk of 'big selling songs,' and their comment on the astonishing welcome given to 'Ivanhoe'—a welcome that has never been paralleled in the history of opera—is:

> 'Ivanhoe,' by the claim of merit, should have had a longer run, but it played no more than a hundred and sixty performances.

Only a hundred and sixty consecutive performances!

The six hundred and seventy-two nights of 'The Mikado' and the five hundred and fifty-four nights of 'The Gondoliers' meant complete justification and satisfaction for Gilbert. Sullivan was not quite so sure. But the paradox is that this Savoy work, which he wrote in extravagant haste (five numbers of 'Iolanthe' in one evening between dinner and bed!), and which he all along regarded as slightly derogatory—pot-boiling, in fact—is what we all to-day esteem far above the works, 'Ivanhoe' and the cantatas, into which he flung himself heartily.

But did Sullivan ever wholly fling himself, heart and soul and intellect, into music? We get the impression from this dazzling and disappointing career that some part of his mind was not really engaged. Or how could he, so acute and brilliant a man, have taken up for his most serious efforts subjects that had no genuine interest for him?

He did not learn Wagner's lesson—that the artist had best be engrossed to the last shred of his being in his subject. We cannot believe that the essential Sullivan was wholly engaged in 'The Martyr of Antioch,' 'The Golden Legend,' and 'Ivanhoe.' He worked at those scores with more intensity than at the comic operas. There was more scope for technique. But the manner of approach was much the same. In the inmost Sullivan there cannot have been any more response to the wan and third-rate romance of Longfellow's and Sturgis's poems than to Gilbert's Katisha and Fairy Queen.

Parry was like Sullivan in setting Sturgis to music. We wonder why. Because Sturgis was a pleasant fellow, and one met him everywhere? There was no serious reason. Sturgis's 'Ivanhoe,' and the poems of his which Parry set, show that there can only have been some frivolous, uncritical reason, and frivolity of that sort does not become a good musician. We come to it that Sullivan—and, for that matter, Parry, too—had no æsthetic passion to match his natural musical gifts. Imagine Hugó Wolf setting a man's verses because he had met him at the club!

Music was never quite important enough to Sullivan. Success came to him extraordinarily easily—at the R.A.M., at the Leipsic Conservatorium, and then at the Crystal Palace, at the English provincial festivals, and in the Duke of Edinburgh's circle. We never catch him asking himself whether all that applause was worth having.

It was, of course, much too cheap. There were very few persons in the young Sullivan's England (but Dannreuther was one) whose applause could have had any real meaning for him. The approbation that most of all mattered was to be listened for in his own heart of hearts. He certainly missed it, and at about thirty-six he grew restive. What, then, dulled his response to conscience?

The reader of Sullivan's life, and of his scores, must be struck by his superior genius and its nonfulfilment. The 'serious works' have, in the main, to be put aside as poor things. But look at the song 'Orpheus and his Lute,' which was thrown off in his early days (about 1863). It is as good as much of Schubert. Why are there not dozens of Sullivan's songs of that quality? There are, in fact, only a most meagre few. And what quantities of trash!

The Prince of Wales said that he would travel to the ends of the kingdom to hear the handsome Mrs. Ronalds sing 'The Lost Chord' (p. 84), but he paid no similar compliment to 'Orpheus,' which perhaps Mrs. Ronalds did not sing. Sullivan's England, we see, then, had the most graceful social manners and was perfectly innocent of æsthetic passion. Sullivan's manners can be taken for granted. He was, of course, charming and everywhere persona grata. The artist's passion—Whistler's, Meredith's, Wagner's—was not quite compatible with that 'everywhere.' Here is one grain of explanation.

Another surely lies in the harassing illness (a kidney disease) which seems to have drained the springs of Sullivan's life for twenty years and more. Here lies perhaps a major explanation. The vulture was at his vitals. In those conditions a man's mind cannot be wholly his own. The affliction was not incessant, but we see well enough from the letters and diaries what a spectre haunted the man who had every look of being fortune's favourite.

Those jolly operettas which to thousands and thousands seem to be the sunniest of all music were, as the brief jottings in Sullivan's diary show, largely composed in nights of pain. And moreover during the greater time of the partnership he and his librettist were far from getting on well together. Sullivan and Gilbert were never great friends, and when they were not careful they quarrelled with acerbity.

The biographers themselves do not admit as much; but the documents are here. Quite early in the 1880's Sullivan was tired of Gilbert's 'topsy-turveydom' and the dryness and heartlessness of his jokes. The candid letters that were exchanged after 'Princess Ida' show that the world came very near missing 'The Mikado.' Sullivan wanted more scope, while Gilbert was much offended at the suggestion that the composer was demeaning himself by the collaboration.

Sullivan turned down again and again a libretto of Gilbert's which he called 'the lozenge plot.' We shall sympathise with the musician if we remember how extraordinarily bad Gilbert could be at times—witness 'Haste to the Wedding,' which Sullivan did not set, and 'The Grand Duke,' which he did—to no one's advantage.

Flushed with the triumph of 'The Gondoliers,' Gilbert could say the handsome thing:

> I must thank you again for the magnificent work you have put into the piece. It gives one the chance of shining right through the 20th century with a reflected light.

To which Sullivan replied in the same key. But four months later there was a quarrel about paying for some carpets at the Savoy, and Gilbert writes:

> The time for putting an end to our collaboration has at last arrived. . . . I am writing to Carte . . . that he is not to perform any of my libretti after Christmas 1890. . . . Our united work will be heard in public no more.

And he rushes off to his solicitors. The comment in this naïve biography is:

> The Law had drawn its ugly and sordid trail across a partnership which hitherto had only yielded harmony and success.

When 'Ivanhoe' is ready for performance Sullivan sends an olive leaf in the shape of tickets for the first night. Gilbert's answer is, 'I decline your stalls.'

There was small chance of cordiality after that, though they wrote together 'Utopia' (which, like some other later Sullivan pieces, 'Haddon Hall' and 'The Rose of Persia,' ought surely to merit revival) and, finally, 'The Grand Duke,' for which there is nothing to be said. The two saw each other for the last time on the stage of the Savoy. Sullivan's diary says:

> Call for Gilbert and self. We went on together, but did not speak to each other (p. 249).

The practical value of this book lies in Mr. W. C. Smith's list of works and bibliography. Sullivan, the charmer, charms still, so that his letters and diaries have a reflected interest; but they are meagre enough in themselves. At all events, he wrote better than his biographers, who are terribly sticky, especially in the opening chapters. They have adopted an original mis-spelling for clarinet—

'clarionette.' A pianist is 'a maestro of the pianoforte.' They make Chorley the critic of The Times. They venture upon this rash assumption concerning Sullivan's father, at the time of Arthur's infancy:

> He did not know that in the fullness of Time the musical genius of that son was to bear him to his place in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Queen Victoria, in 1869, sends some compositions by her deceased husband to Sullivan for criticism and revision. Sullivan, we are told (p. 71):

> . . . turned the crotchets into quavers, kept the Prince Consort's melodies complete, and returned to the Court the manuscript perfect for the printer.

It sounds like an audacious practical joke, but we do not like to attribute such indelicacy to Sullivan in the sad circumstances. C.

---

'Londubh an chairn.' Being Songs of the Irish Gaels, in Staff and Sol-fa, with English Metrical Translations. Edited by Margaret Hannigan and Seamus Clandillon.

[Oxford University Press: Three Parts, 3*s*. 6*d*. each; or in one volume, 10*s*. 6*d*.]

Some twenty years ago, a small collection of Irish songs was published by Mr. and Mrs. Clandillon, and the same editors have now given us seventy-five Irish songs, most of which have been handed down traditionally in the family of Margaret Hannigan, going back for several generations, while a few of the best were collected by Seamus Clandillon, Director of the Dublin Broadcasting Station—admittedly one of the finest traditional Irish singers in Ireland. As a sop to the Sassenach, English metrical translations are given of all the songs, which preserve wonderfully the Gaelic flavour of the originals, especially as regards internal vowel-assonance. The Introduction, which runs to thirty-six pages, gives a history of each song and tune, which is decidedly interesting, although a bibliography describing earlier printed versions would have been welcomed by students of folk-songs and tunes. For instance, the air of 'The Pretty Girls of Loughrea' appears in Dr. P. W. Joyce's 'Ancient Irish Music,' published in 1873, while the air of 'The Brink of the White Rock' was composed by Turlogh O'Carolan, and was known as 'Carolan's Cup' in the 18th century—printed by Holden, in in 1806. Quite sprightly is No. 68, ''Tis the Day'—of which Joyce had printed a different version, almost the same as appears as No. 20, under the title of 'The Beggar, or Are you satisfied?' Very beautiful is No. 75, 'Hymn to the Saviour' (Irish words by Tadhg Gaedhealach), though there is also another adaptation, well known to the older generation of people in co. Waterford. But the book will prove a splendid quarry for the folk-song enthusiast.

Produced in irreproachable style, this collection should help to make known many delightful Irish songs and tunes. W. H. G. F.

---

'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' Edited by H. C. Colles. Vols. 2 and 3. D-J and K-O.

[Macmillan, 30*s*. each vol.]

'Grove' cannot be reviewed, in the ordinary sense of the term. No writer can find time to read all the new matter; and even if he could, no editor would find space for all he had to say about it. Besides, 'Grove' is not for reading: we consult it, and are then led on to read willy-nilly. Does anybody ever sit down to one of its volumes for a 'straight' read?

The second and third volumes more than maintain the promise of the first, chiefly, no doubt, because they contain (apparently) less dead weight of material carried over from the former edition. The outstanding article in Vol. 2 is surely Mr. Colles's on Elgar—a piece of real criticism, at once frank and sympathetic. Mr. Scott Goddard deals with Handel in a well-constructed—almost business-like—article. More about the music would have made it more valuable, especially to-day, when Handel's stock is rising. The portrait by Kyte is finely reproduced in colour. Other admirable colour-plates deck the articles on Indian music (Mr. Fox-Strangways) and on the Horn—a delightful old print of a Russian Horn Band of the 18th century; and the frontispiece gives us an Italian Harpsichord from the Donaldson Museum in the Royal College of Music. Portraits are numerous—Fauré, Debussy, Franck, Grieg, Gounod, Joachim, &c.

In Vol. 3 are several new 'full-dress' articles. One on Monteverde was due, and the demand has been well met by Mr. Scott Goddard. Mr. William Wallace is comprehensive, allusive, and sprightly on Orchestration (but Elgar's scoring surely called for mention no less than that of Strauss). Orlando di Lassus has rather more than his share of space—an article of over thirty columns by the Rev. J. R. Milne; the article on the Organ has been brought up to date by Mr. Thomas Elliston. Organ-playing, like the instrument itself, has undergone great changes during recent years, so a new article was needed. Prof. Buck supplies it. The reader who looks to it for a bovrilised primer will be disappointed; but it contains some highly pertinent matter. It is to be hoped that the paragraphs on the present needs of the instrument will be read by organ-builders, though Prof. Buck evidently thinks the 'stern conservatism' of the fraternity will go against their adoption. Players will no doubt agree with him, save in his condemnation of Mixtures. Nothing is easier than to show on paper that Mixtures are inartistic and absurd; but, given a first-rate example, it is as easy to prove their value. In speaking of various schools of organ composition, Prof. Buck takes a very out-of-date view in lumping Merkel and Rheinberger together. He says that 'the German school of the last generation, headed by Rheinberger and Merkel, accepted the fact that the organ was a monotonous instrument, and in consequence their music, in the lump, is incontrovertibly dull.' This looks as though the author knew Merkel better than Rheinberger. The two have little in common, and the difference in the quality and character of their music is shown by the fact that English organists now play Rheinberger more than ever, while Merkel is almost entirely shelved. In speaking of the later German school only Reger is mentioned. His output was colossal, it is true, but Karg-Elert is a far more original composer, and will almost certainly be a figure of permanent importance. A paragraph at the beginning of the article is so just and necessary that we wish it could have had the publicity of the leader page in a daily paper. After paying tribute to the part played by organists in the musical activities of the country, the Professor goes on:

> For various reasons this predominance of the organist is now gradually disappearing. But to its existence we undoubtedly owe the fact that for a long time no country has approached England (and no country approaches her now) either in the high standard of playing at which organists aim, or in the very large number of executants who reach that standard. Of late years we have been visited by many foreign organists of eminence whose press agents have persuaded the public, even before their arrival, that England has lost her pride of place; but, welcome as our visitors are, and skilful as some of them have proved to be, those capable of judging have agreed that they are in no way superior, and in some ways definitely inferior, to many less-advertised Englishmen.

Some day music critics generally will recognise and advertise the fact that we have in this country a group of organists who are technically and artistically on a level with the 'star' performers on the more fashionable pianoforte and violin. But the old failure to take great English organ players seriously has long existed and will not easily be overcome. Apparently Best's greatest admirer was—Liszt!

This organ question has taken more space than was intended, and other matter calling for notice must get none. But one can be no more systematic in reviewing 'Grove' than in reading it. Not always—nor even often—is the attention rightly apportioned. Crops up an out-of-the-way subject, or some detail in one that happens to interest the reader-reviewer personally, and away goes the proportion. But this no-system works out fairly, because the whole ground is covered by the critics more thoroughly and interestingly than by a more methodical plan: as they all miss different articles, no article gets entirely missed. H. G.

---

'Ferruccio Busoni da Empoli' (published by the Comitato per le Onoranze al Grande Concittadino). There is nothing new or of critical value in the pamphlet issued in honour of Busoni by his fellow citizens. The only important matter refers to the artist's parentage, which was Italian on both sides, and not, as has been asserted by various critics and historians, on the father's side only. The mother's maiden name, Weiss, led many astray, who from the German name deduced German nationality. To do so may be safe enough in England, whose natural frontiers cannot be ignored by friend or enemy. It is otherwise on the Continent, where frontiers alter after every war, where interchange of inhabitants goes on in peace-time purely as a matter of trade necessity. One finds people with German or French names in Northern Italy, just as one finds Gallienis and Gambettas and Zolas in France and Paravicinis or Piccolominis in Germany. The family from which Busoni's mother came, if originally of German stock, had been Italian for so many generations that no one ever thought of them in the 'sixties or 'seventies as anything but Italians.

The articles which commemorate the illustrious citizen of Empoli make rather sad reading. The intention is, no doubt, a very creditable one. But the commemoration is late; the artist has been dead some time, and has been adequately remembered elsewhere. Empoli gave him birth—it gave him neither culture nor fame. Italy, indeed, had little share in developing his genius, probably because his father, although a Tuscan, sat at the feet of Liszt at Rome, and had been deeply impressed by Germanic art. Hence the boy was educated in such a way as to fit him to take a place amongst German musicians, which he did early and with considerable success. There is this also to be said—that the boy was never consulted. The father, Ferdinando Busoni, was something of a character, who believed, amongst other things, in calling a spade a spade, and in consequence never got on well with his fellow citizens. He was also a martinet of the first order, and Ferruccio was drilled with German thoroughness. Fortunately, the mother was very different. Her sympathy and her advice (she was herself an excellent pianist) must have sweetened many a hard, laborious hour in the young days of Ferruccio Busoni's career.

B. V.

---

'Memorising Music.' By Gerald Cumberland. [Richards Press, 6*s.*]

This posthumous work is somewhat slight and sketchy for its subject. Cumberland, however, was too good a writer to go very far without starting some interesting or profitable hare. This is the case in his last book, which, but for the failing health of his later years, would no doubt have been more adequate in scope and treatment. He discusses the various methods of memorising—muscular, optical, aural, by analysis, by emotions, &c., and shows that, consciously or not, the memoriser draws on them all in various combinations. Not everybody will agree with his condemnation of the use of a copy by pianists:

> The finest kind of interpretation is that which suggests improvisation . . . Such an effect cannot be secured by a pianist who is playing from a copy, for the audience itself is faced by the fact that the music does not proceed from the player, but from some external source.

This is too naive! Is anybody ever under the illusion that a pianist playing from memory a familiar work (and few play anything else) is its fons et origo? There is much to be said for memory playing, but there is no less to be urged against its being made a fetish. Above all, the pianist who is not afraid to use a copy in public is able to acquire a far larger repertory than the memory-player. The limited range of most 'star' pianists is due to two factors, first, the immense amount of travelling involved in recital tours, and, second, the memory fetish. They are left with neither time nor inclination to study exacting new music.

---

'Practical Hints for Singers.' By George Dodds. [Epworth Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*]

'Nelson's Music Practice: Junior Teachers' Book.' [Nelson, 2*s.* 9*d.*]

'Two Hundred Tunes for Sight-Singing.' By C. S. Lang. [Year-Book Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*]

Mr. George Dodds, who is co-author of an excellent treatise on 'The Control of the Breath,' has done well in selecting and adapting for republication in book form a number of the articles contributed by him during a period of seventeen years to The Choir. The result is a useful little volume which deals in a simple way with many of the practical difficulties which confront both solo singers and choir-trainers, as well as with many aspects of the artistic side of singing, song interpretation, &c. There is a chapter on 'The Musicianship of Singers' which might be read with profit by ninety-nine singers out of every hundred. In discussing 'The Voice as a Musical Instrument,' the writer has some things to say concerning modern song composers with which most teachers will agree. Reference is made to the technical difficulty of many modern song accompaniments, and the hint is thrown out to our song writers 'not to make it well-nigh impossible for those of us who work among singers to introduce their works, save to a few exceptional pupils. . . . The intangibility of the subject-matter of many of these songs, the reliance upon harmonic atmospheric effect rather than that of melodic curve and beauty, make it difficult to arouse enthusiasm in their study by any save the small minority of really cultured musicians who are found in the ranks of singers; and if it has to be added that an accompaniment fit only for virtuosi has to be grappled with, the weak-hearted will still turn with a sigh of relief to the nasty obviousness of the royalty ballad.'

As regards the advisability of solo singers taking part in choral work, the author considers that 'the work of a good choir, with cultured, intelligent training, should benefit a singer, but his enthusiasm must not be allowed to run away with his judgment . . . Don't try to sing as loud as the man next to you . . . Sing within your feeling of comfort, both of throat and breath capacity . . . Never mind the other fellow.' Young singers and teachers may safely turn to this book for guidance. It is easy to read, free from fads, and full of sound commonsense.

Teachers of class-singing will appreciate the admirable series of text-books now being issued by Messrs. Nelson, under the title of 'Nelson's Music Practice.' The complete series will consist of Infants' Teachers' Book, Junior Teachers' Book, Junior Pupils' Book, Senior Teachers' Book, and Senior Pupils' Book. The second of these, now to hand, sets forth an excellent scheme of work, comprising ear- and eye-training; sight-singing (rhythm, pitch, and time); voice exercises; and song singing. The course is well graded, and is sufficiently comprehensive without being overloaded.

Dr. Lang's book is the outcome of some years' experience in teaching sight-singing at Clifton College and elsewhere. His tunes are very carefully graded, and make an interesting and useful course. Examples are given in all the major and minor keys, and twelve rounds, in from three to six parts, are included. Recognising the importance of two-part singing in musical training, and the added interest it gives to class-singing, the author has constructed most of the tunes so that two—and sometimes three—may be sung simultaneously.

G. G.

---

We have received the 'Proceedings of the Musical Association' for the years 1926-27 (Leeds: Whitehead & Miller, one guinea). Of its six excellent papers we have read with special pleasure that on 'Charles Villiers Stanford: Some Aspects of His Life and Work,' by Thomas F. Dunhill—an admirable eulogy, at once discerning and affectionate.

---

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Henry Purcell.' By Dennis Arundell. Pp. 135. Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The Webb System of Music Notation.' By C. W. Thomas. Pp. 41. Arthur H. Stockwell.

'The Art of Pianoforte Playing: Solo and Accompaniment.' By Percival Garratt. Pp. 91. W. Foulsham, 1*s.*

'The Art of Violin Playing.' By Melsa. Pp. 94. W. Foulsham, 1*s.*

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

H.M.V.

Every hearing of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches Nos. 2, 3, and 4 makes me wonder at the comparative neglect of them in favour of No. 1. The association of No. 1 with 'Land of Hope and Glory' only partly explains the situation; the real reason is the inexcusable lack of enterprise on the part of musicians. We see the same factor at work in many other cases. For example, it has taken the musical public about a quarter of a century to discover that Rachmaninov wrote a whole series of Pianoforte Preludes, many of which are as good as the solitary one which has achieved popularity. One would expect musicians to reason thus: 'Here is a fine work: the chances are that there are other fine ones in the same quarter, so I'll investigate.' But they don't.

Here, then, are records of Nos. 3 and 4 of the Elgar Marches, played by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the composer (D1301). They are first-rate in every respect, and as all the four have now been recorded, perhaps conductors will give more frequent performances of the last three.

The Overture to 'Hansel and Gretel,' conducted by Albert Coates, is also a successful bit of recording (D1261).

The Covent Garden Opera Orchestra, conducted by Malcolm Sargent, plays Tchaikovsky's 'Sleeping Beauty' Waltz and Brahms's F sharp minor Hungarian Dance. Good records, but not remarkable judged by the present high standard (C1415). The 'Dance of the Hours,' from Ponchielli's 'La Gioconda,' is recorded in a performance by the New Light Symphony Orchestra, under an un-named conductor (C1403).

The plum this month, however, is one of the very finest sets of chamber music records so far issued. Once more we have that incomparable trio, Cortot, Thibaud, and Casals, at their best, and they could hardly have found a more attractive work than Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor. If a Mendelssohn revival is on the way, these records will give it a push. It would be difficult to find a fault with the performance or its reproduction (DB1072-75).

Some excellent instrumental solos call for a word. Here is Paderewski, brilliant in his own Minuet in G, and dreamy in the opening movement of the 'Moonlight' Sonata (DB1090). Kreisler plays his 'Caprice Viennois,' and plays with the familiar Humoresque of Dvorák. The almost incessant sliding would be condemned in an ordinary player: is it right when indulged in by Kreisler? (DB1091).

Marcel Dupré is recorded in a couple of Bach Chorale Preludes, played on the Queen's Hall organ (E471). 'Christ came to Jordan' is capital, but 'Sleepers, wake!' is too inflexible and the pace is on the quick side. One would have thought no player could deliver Bach's long streaming melody in so slick and matter-of-fact a style, but Dupré shows that it can be done. There is no 'give' until the closing bar. By the way, in the current issue of The Gramophone, 'P. L.,' in speaking of the registration of the first of these two pieces, says that Dupré's 'experiment of using a powerful 4-ft. stop on the pedals to emphasise the melody is bold, but is completely justified by the event.' 'P. L.' will be surprised to learn that the device is not a bold experiment of Dupré's; it was a common device among organ composers long before Bach's day. This piece is only one of many in which the melody is played on the pedals with a 4-ft. (or 8-ft.) stop alone, the real bass being given to the left hand.

The choir of the Chapel Royal, conducted by Stanley Roper, sings capitally in four madrigals by Wilbye, Benet, Weelkes, and Farmer. Inevitably the boys' voices give a slightly ecclesiastical touch which sorts ill with references to Flora and Phyllis; but the excellence of their work more than makes amends (B2608).

Vocal solos include a vivid performance by Florence Austral and Browning Mummery of two familiar extracts from 'Il Trovatore' (D1302); two waltz songs by Pestalozzi and Arditi ('Il bacio'), brilliantly sung by Lucrezia Bori (DA900); and Bizet's 'Agnus Dei' and Adam's 'Noel,' very effectively given by Maartje Offers, with harp and organ accompaniment (DB980).

This month's output includes the first fruits of an ambitious scheme—the complete recording of all the Gilbert-Sullivan operas. The task will be spread over several years, and about a hundred and fifty records will be made. The ball is opened with 'The Gondoliers,' on twelve records (D1334-45). The soloists—too numerous to mention here—include Bertha Lewis, Henry Lytton, and many others familiar to Savoyards. There is a very live chorus, and a more crisp and cheering affair could not be desired.

The Education Department of the Gramophone Company has isssued a couple of excellent little pamphlets by Alec Robertson, as pendants to that entitled 'How to use the gramophone in school.' In 'Listening to an orchestra' records exemplifying various orchestral effects are suggested, and lessons on the subjects are outlined. In 'Picture and story music' some well-known pieces of programme music are discussed. There is a commonsensible Foreword. The booklets are gratis.

---

COLUMBIA

Not the least of the many good turns we owe to the gramophone is the opportunity it gives us of hearing famous foreign orchestras who might rarely or never visit this country. Here, for example, is the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, conducted by Mengelberg, recorded on its own pitch, so to speak—the Amsterdam Concert Hall (L1972-73). This is a notable recording, apart from the excellence of the playing; the work is one that probably not more than one musician in a hundred has ever heard—the Overture to Cherubini's 'Anacreon.' It is sterling music, well worth revival. The odd side of the two records is given to the Allegretto Scherzando from Beethoven's eighth Symphony.

The other example of classical orchestral music pleases me rather less, on all grounds—Schubert's Overture to 'Rosamund.' But this is probably a mere personal preference. The players are the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty (L1998).

There is some capital light orchestral music in a selection from Johann Strauss's 'Die Fledermaus' (9247), and a set of Four Dances from the 'Blue Bird' music of Norman O'Neill, played by the Court Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the composer (4495-96).

Very banal is an 'Aïda' selection (Grand March, Temple Scene, &c.). The most damning indictment of opera lies perhaps in the fact that by its opulence and trimmings it is able to dope large numbers of people—several of them really musical—to the extent of sitting through music that would never be tolerated in a concert-hall. This performance is by the B.B.C. Wireless Orchestra, conducted by Percy Pitt (9259).

First-rate pianoforte records are of Leff Pouishnov playing Paderewski's brilliant Caprice in G and Grainger's 'Shepherd's Hey'—two of the most stimulating of solos (D1588); and of William Murdoch in the A flat Ballade of Chopin (L1952).

On the same high level is the record of a couple of violoncello solos played by Antoni Sala—pieces by Godowsky and Trickliv (4591).

Of the vocal solo records I have heard, the best seem to be those of Norman Allin ('Bound for the Rio Grande' and an air from 'Fidelio': D1952) and William Heseltine (two airs from 'Tosca': 4497). I found it difficult to remain calm while listening to Maria Gentile's two airs from 'Lucia di Lammermoor.' Would this squeezed, unsteady tone, shaky intonation, and general sense of effort be allowable in any but a 'star'? (L1971).

The strong suit in this month's Columbia output is choral music. First in every way comes the set of records of 'The Messiah,' sung by the B.B.C. Wireless Chorus in Westminster Central Hall, conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham.

The sensation (there is no milder word to fit) caused by the performance of this work under Beecham at Queen's Hall a few months ago, naturally led to a recording of his interpretation. But that interpretation was made possible by the co-operation of so fine a choir as the Philharmonic. It is a pity the same body could not have been called on for the recording. The B.B.C. choir is an excellent one, but not yet up to the standard of Mr. Kennedy Scott's singers. Hence some disappointing moments on the choral side. Their occasional failure, however, is not so much in technique as in balance. The men are first-rate, and the altos very nearly as good, but the sopranos do not always rise to the climaxes, and are too often swamped. On the credit side must be set their very neat and pointed florid singing. It would be hard to improve on the best of this, and indeed the whole choir reaches a high standard of execution. Tone is always vital and musical, and the intonation notably good. The soloists may be praised almost without qualification. The only real weaknesses are in the florid singing. Sir Thomas's pace tries them highly, of course, but solo singers so good as these ought to be able to pull out the extra bit of speed in runs so straightforward. Their occasional want of perfect ease and clarity is a reminder of the present-day decline in this part of singers' technical equipment. However, the quartet has excellences that in the past were often missing. For example, their words are extraordinarily clear and (except for a few of the tenor's vowel-shapes) natural. They set a capital standard in steadiness and purity of tone, as well. In fact, the solo records, on the purely vocal side, make most operatic 'stars' seem mere vulgar screamers and shouters—which many of them are. Singing students and teachers will find a whole series of valuable lessons in these records. The quartet are Dora Labette, Muriel Brunskill, Hubert Eisdell (whose relapses into the sentimental, e.g., in 'Comfort ye,' should not be copied; his florid singing, however, is excellent), and Harold Williams. A hearing of the whole set of eighteen records (L2018-35) gives one an impression that Sir Thomas forces the pace a good deal. 'Hallelujah' loses all majesty, and becomes a gabble towards the end. In 'Let us break their bonds' the singers have to snatch at the notes, and the character of the music suffers. The sheep go astray at a gallop: one sees Sir Thomas after them, not with baton, but with a long and minatory crook. The quick pace is in keeping, however, in 'His Yoke is easy,' and this chorus is excellently sung; it would be even more effective without the rather conventional ff bursts.

There should be a warm welcome for this set of records. It is to be hoped, however, that conductors and singers will not be led to conclude that old music may be vitalised by mere speed. There is much more than this in Beecham's reading. The qualities to imitate are the intense vitality of his rhythm, the clear lines, and his pointed treatment of the fugal writing. So uncommonly good are these departments, that a slower pace could have been adopted with no risk of dullness. (By an extraordinary error of judgment, the 'Amen' chorus is omitted, and the last record ends on the half-close cadence of 'Worthy is the Lamb.' This is doubly unfortunate: it gives us an inconclusive finish, and robs us of one of the very finest numbers. The old idea of the 'Amen' Chorus as being merely academic no longer holds. Nobody hearing it worthily sung can ask for a finer rounding-off of 'The Messiah.')

The remaining choral records must be briefly treated. The St. George's Chapel Choir, conducted by Dr. Fellowes, is effective in a couple of carol records—'In dulci jubilo,' 'When Christ was born,' 'The Manger Throne,' and 'The first Nowell' (4578-79); and the chorus of La Scala, Milan, is heard in the Humming Chorus from 'Madame Butterfly' and 'Festa e pane' from 'La Gioconda' (D1591).

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—Audiographic (Popular Edition).

To all the rolls in this edition are added simple and, in most cases, graphic descriptions of the music, calculated to increase the ordinary listener's enjoyment. Whether it is wise or necessary to supply a programme for every piece, is a doubtful point. For instance, the first movement of the Beethoven 'Appassionata' Sonata, brilliantly played by Harold Bauer (D623), has references to Fate-knockings, defyings, fist-shakings, &c.—the kind of thing already overdone in regard to Beethoven. Surely it is possible for the non-musician to appreciate and enjoy the movement without these questionable associations.

On the other hand, there is a vivid description by Thomas Armstrong of the dance to Chopin's 'Polonaise' in A flat, which stimulates the imagination. The pianist is Josef Hofmann at his best (D671).

There is also a 'programme,' written by Percy A. Scholes, for Liszt's 'Dance of the Gnomes' that fits like a glove, and which the younger members of households will highly approve. The illustrations are delightful, and the performance, by Guiomar Novaes, is all it should be. We are instructed, by the way, that this roll is 'not to be exhibited to grown-ups over twelve' (D649).

Another roll in the same category is Fauré's 'Berceuse' from the 'Dolly' Suite. It is played by Cortot, with excellent notes by A. Forbes Milne, and is charming in every way (D635).

Schubert's 'The Erl-King' is a thrilling affair, played by Ignaz Friedman and described by Percy A. Scholes (D687).

Mr. Scholes is responsible, too, for the notes to Murdoch's playing of Debussy's 'Cathédrale Engloutie' (D689).

Eric Grant has written a programme to Rachmaninov's C sharp minor Prelude. It is certainly more healthy than the familiar one of the prematurely buried man, but as we know now there is no definite story here, why not leave something to the listener's imagination? Though so hackneyed it is still a pleasure to hear it as played by Gabrilowitsch (D699).

Last, but by no means least, is Grieg's 'Norwegian Bridal Procession,' given by Rudolph Ganz (D685). Here, again, is something definite to be described, and this is ably done by Ernest Fowles.

PIANOLA

Here we have Borodin's 'At the Convent,' with descriptive notes by Edith Rhett. This is good, although one feels at times that the pianoforte is not the ideal instrument in this case. The pedalling is overdone, some places being badly blurred (D706).

Debussy's 'Girl with the Flaxen Hair' (D684) is described by Louis Aubert and the editorial staff. The rubato here is rather heavy, and the pedalling not altogether satisfactory.

Again, in Paderewski's 'Melody' from the 'Traveller's Songs' the rubato is on the heavy side. The notes are by J. Aikman Forsyth (D648).

There is also a very good roll of Henselt's 'Were I a bird,' with notes by Percy A. Scholes (D658).

This Audiograph Series justifies itself mainly because the notes as a whole are well-written and genuinely imaginative. Musicians who prefer their music 'neat,' so to speak, need not grudge programmatic trimmings to the weaker brethren, the more so as the rolls are issued in two forms—with and without the notes. All types of listener are thus catered for.

BLÜTHNER

Animatic.—The practice of improvising publicly on the pianoforte is now so rare that special interest attaches to an example by Waldemar Sachs, who takes for his theme Mimì's Song from Act 1 of 'La Bohème' (59376).

Teresa Carreño's playing is always enjoyable, and here we have her in Chopin's 'Berceuse' (55757).

The same composer's 'Etude,' Op. 25, No. 12, is given a good performance by Francis Planté, and is very well cut (55774), and his 'Valse,' Op. 64, No. 2, has a much gentler conception than the average artist's from Joseph Stiwinski, whose rapid scale-passages are delightfully clear and delicate (55801).

MacDowell's 'Sonata Tragica' has much in it that is fine, though the sombre note struck in the third movement is not very convincing. The Sonata is very attractive as a whole, and Paul Weingartner plays it with understanding and sympathy (54878-881).

Thomé's rather ordinary and sentimental 'Andante Religioso,' No. 2, is well played by George Stier (57506).

D. G.

Occasional Notes

That critics should differ is inevitable, and a comparison of their findings is among the easiest of futilities. Occasionally, however, an example rouses so much interest that comment seems to be justified. The visit of the Newcastle Bach Choir to Germany provides such an instance. It will be remembered that the Choir performed at the Frankfort Festival Dr. Whittaker's setting of the 139th Psalm. Both work and performance were so emphatically praised and damned that a member of the Choir who was present has collected the criticisms and reprinted them in pamphlet form. Set out side by side, black against white, they are startling. When all allowance is made under the plea of 'many men, many minds,' it is difficult to understand such wide divergences as the following, some of which are surely matters of fact rather than of taste. The Choir 'fought gallantly, but it was a hopeless battle,' says A, whereas B holds that 'there were no noticeable errors, nor even hesitancies so far as technique was concerned, a fine certainty prevailing from beginning to end.' C was sorry that the Psalm should be placed before a Continental audience as a representative English work; D felt the same, and wrote that 'a bit of good English choral music well sung would have come like a shower in the desert.' This, however, is pretty much how it did reach E, who wrote enthusiastically that the Psalm 'came like a breath of fresh air after so much music that was hectic and feverish in character.' Returning to the Choir, we read that 'it is not a virtuoso body,' and 'was far from surmounting every obstacle successfully'; we then discover that it 'performed with astonishing virtuosity,' its singing being 'worthy of the best English choral traditions.' In fact, adds this critic, 'we all felt very proud of ourselves.' (But, as he now knows, only a few of us felt that way.)

All the above quotations are from notices written by Englishmen. As, after all, the important point is the impression made on Continental critics, we turn to them with some anxiety. Was the English case so badly put by these Newcastle singers? Evidently not. Fürtwangler, who knows quite a lot about music, said to the Choir after the performance, 'You should tour the country and teach the Germans how to sing.' Blarney? We see no reason to think so, judging from the enthusiasm with which the Choir's performances of the Psalm and other works were received in such critical centres as the University towns of Marburg, Göttingen, and Münster. The wide difference between the generally favourable — even enthusiastic — verdict of Continental writers and that of British critics has, of course, led to the complaint that we English are biassed in favour of the foreigner and against our own people. We do not think the accusation will lie in the case of responsible writers such as those quoted. We suggest, as an explanation, that the English critics were judging the Newcastle Choir by the standard of crack festival choirs. Our columns have from time to time drawn attention to this habit. A London choir, for example, tackling a difficult new work, has been told that it lacked the opulence of tone and brilliancy of such and such a Yorkshire or Lancashire choir. And almost invariably the reference has been to the latter's performance of music so familiar that the singers had merely to open their mouths and release lots of tonal opulence and brilliance (whether it suited the text or not). A critic who listens to the Newcastle Bach Choir with a Yorkshire ear, so to speak, will of course be disappointed. The aims of the Newcastle singers are not those of Yorkshire choralists in general. They sing well, of course, but they are far from making a fetish of the purely vocal side, either in regard to power or beauty of tone. The Choir exists for the study and public performance of unfamiliar music, new and old, and every season it gets through an amount of work that is equalled by few other bodies—if any. Had the Newcastle Choir gone to Germany with the avowed intention of showing British choralism at its most virile and brilliant, there would have been good cause for complaint. The ambassadors for that kind of trip would be a West Riding choir, with a bagful of Handel.

---

The Columbia Graphophone Company has climbed down and modified its Schubert Centenary Competition. The prizes are now offered for original orchestral works in honour of Schubert. The 'Unfinished' will therefore remain so. The letter of Mr. Walter Damrosch, in response to an invitation to become chairman of the American Jury, puts the case so well that we reproduce the greater part of it:

> . . . I feel very strongly that it should be impressed upon the composers who would like to enter the competition that it is not your purpose to insist on a 'completion' of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. This might prove an impossibility, if not an absurdity. It is difficult to believe that some one to-day could take up the pen that Schubert laid down and write the two missing movements of the work in such a manner as to make it appear as a logical and complete expression of Schubert's individual genius. But I do think that a composer who has a real adoration and enthusiasm for Schubert might write two symphonic movements which, without slavishly endeavouring to imitate 'the Schubert manner,' could be a kind of apotheosis of the master of melody. They might express something of the reverence we all feel for him and for the indescribably beautiful message which his melodic invention so lavishly poured out for us. Such an apotheosis might even contain in loving reverence some snatches of Schubert's own melodies, whether as a Trio in the Scherzo movement or as a sudden revelation during the Finale. Such details should, of course, be left to the fancy of the composer, but it seems to me that on these lines a very interesting contribution to our symphonic literature might be made, something which would be appropriate for a Schubert Centennial, and yet would be an individual contribution from the pen of a living composer.

---

Good progress with the 'Cecil Sharp' Fund was reported at the meeting of the subscribers at the R.C.M. on November 22. Donations so far total £15,408, in addition to the Carnegie grant of £5,000, which has now been earned on the pound-to-pound basis that was made a condition of its offer. A satisfactory point concerning the donations is that the bulk has come in small amounts from far and near —an encouraging sign of widespread interest. Nearly £4,000 comes from America, chiefly, we believe, from the Boston branch of the Folk-Dance Society. The children in a school in the Appalachian Hills gave up meat and pudding for a day, making shift with rice and cocoa, in order to send a donation—forty dollars. A site for the proposed memorial hall has been obtained at the cost of £5,500. The position is good and convenient—on the north side of Regent's Park, at the junction of

(Continued on page 53)

Hail, gladdening Light

SHORT ANTHEM FOR EVENSONG

Words by John Keble (from the Greek) Music by Hugh Blair

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited: New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Larghetto. ♩=76
Organ
pp Sw.
Ped. Sw. coupd.
Soprano Solo
p
f
p
Hail, glad - dening Light, of His pure Glo - ry poured,
p
f
p
Man.
Chorus
pp
Who is the Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - - ly, Blest, . .
Alto
pp
Who is the Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - - ly, Blest, . .
Tenor
pp
Who is the Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - - ly, Blest, . .
Bass
pp
Who is the Im - mor - tal Fa - ther, Heaven - - ly, Blest, . .
pp Sw.
senza Ped.

Copyright, 1927, by Novello and Company, Limited

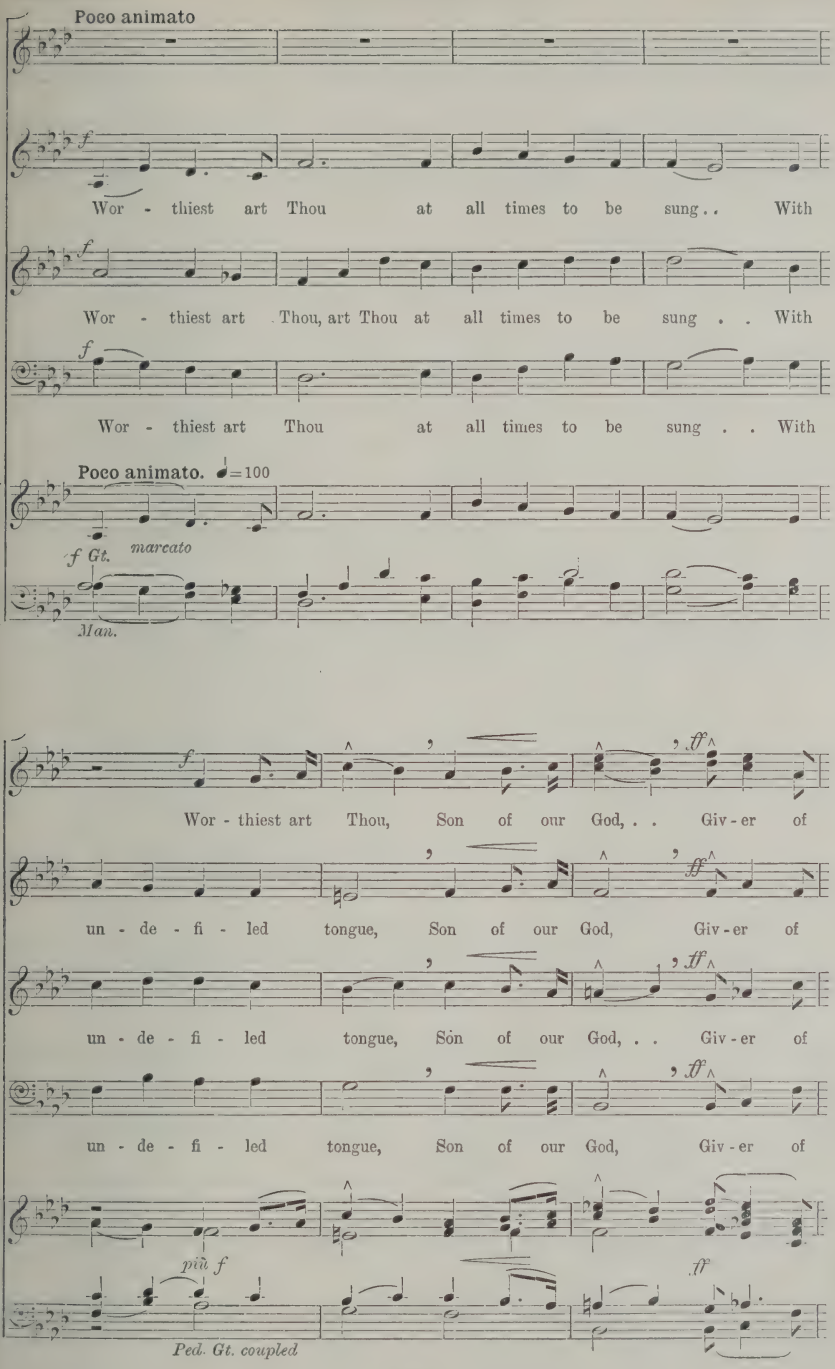
Solo
Chorus
Ho - liest of Ho - lies,
Ho - liest of Ho - - lies,
Ho - liest of Ho - - lies,
Ho - liest of Ho - - lies,
Ped.

Je - - sus Christ, our Lord. . . . .
Je - - sus Christ, our Lord. . . . .
Je - - sus Christ, . . . our Lord. . . . .



Poco animato
f
Wor - thiest art Thou at all times to be sung . . With
f
Wor - thiest art Thou, art Thou at all times to be sung . . With
f
Wor - thiest art Thou at all times to be sung . . With Poco animato. ♩=100
f Gt.
marcato
Man.
f
Wor - thiest art Thou, Son of our God, . . Giv - er of ff
un - de - fi - led tongue, Son of our God, Giv - er of un - de - fi - led tongue, Son of our God, . . Giv - er of un - de - fi - led tongue, Son of our God, Giv - er of più f
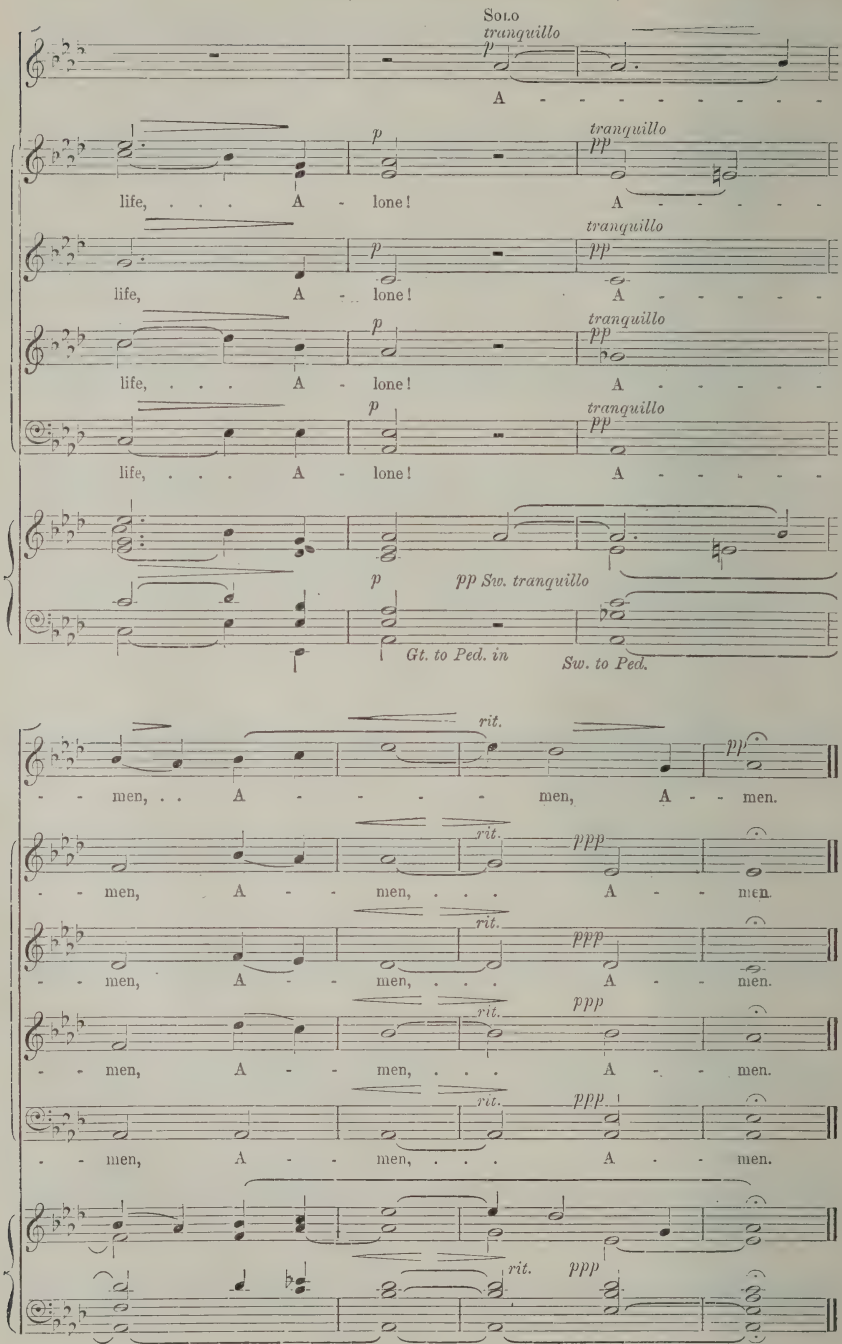
ff
Ped. Gt. coupled



Solo
tranquillo
p
A - - - - - - - - life, . . . A - lone! A - - - - - tranquillo
pp life, A - lone! A - - - - - life, . . . A - lone! A - - - - - life, . . . A - lone! A - - - - - pp Sw. tranquillo
Gt. to Ped. in
Sw. to Ped.
rit.
pp
- - men, . . A - - - - men, A - - men.
ppp
- - men, A - - men, . . . A - - men.
- - men, A - - men, . . . A - - men.
- - men, A - - men, . . . A - - men.

(Continued from page 48.)

Regent's Park Road and Gloucester Road, with a tube station and bus services hard by. The site being larger than is required for the building, and attractively wooded, it is hoped that later an open-air theatre may be added to the original scheme. The memorial will consist of a building containing a hall suitable for folk-dance demonstrations, several large class-rooms, ample offices, and a library in which will be housed the valuable collection of books and MSS. left by Cecil Sharp. The cost of this building will be £20,000, and operations will begin soon. The committee is anxious that the memorial shall start free of debt. It therefore appeals for help in raising the remaining £4,000. Many readers of the Musical Times are keenly interested in the work of the English Folk-Dance Society; to them we warmly commend this effort to perpetuate the memory of Cecil Sharp in the best of all ways—that of continuing and developing the great movement for which he did so much. Donations should be sent to the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. Shuldham Shaw, 7, Lyndhurst Gardens, N.W.3.

The visit of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra caused a good many people to lose their heads. That comparisons should be made between the playing of the Berliners and that of London orchestras was inevitable, but very little basis for such a comparison exists. The visitors have long played regularly under one conductor; they were heard in a programme so familiar that they could have played it practically from memory; and they were obviously keyed up to the occasion. Of course the performance was as nearly faultless as could be, and of the storm of applause the players received nobody grudges them a handclap. But we object to their feats being made an excuse for depreciating the work of London orchestras. Give (say) the L.S.O. the same advantages, turn it on to a programme of chestnuts, and it would, we feel sure, hold its own—and probably a bit more. On the other hand, it is conceivable that the Berlin Philharmonic may have lost something in resource and initiative through being nursed so assiduously. How would it fare with a series of programmes containing a good proportion of new and unfamiliar music, under-rehearsed, and with a constant change of conductor?

How pluckily and resourcefully London players stand up to these conditions is generally admitted. But a general admission is a tepid affair: something with a few degrees more warmth is called for. A tenth part of the applause lavished on the Berlin Philharmonic would give London orchestras a pleasant shock. Why not give it, instead of belittling their efforts by comparing their work with that of a foreign organization blessed with all the advantages London players have long had to do without?

Few benevolent organizations (if any) have a greater claim on musicians than that founded in memory of Gervase Elwes, and known as the Musicians' Benevolent Fund. It is now so firmly established as to make possible an extension of its scope. The Committee feels that this extension should take the form of a Pensions Fund and Convalescent Home for sick and aged musicians, and it appeals for the support of the profession. It points out that the Fund is the only one of its kind that (1) is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, (2) helps every class of musician, irrespective of whether they are members of any society, and (3) distributes its entire funds in charitable work among musicians. The calls on the Fund are so great that no money is available for the proposed new developments. Hence a special appeal, which is signed by Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Dan Godfrey, Sir Landon Ronald, Sir Henry Wood, and Dr. J. B. McEwen. The Committee suggests that musicians who are unable to subscribe directly should help in other ways—e.g., by arranging or giving concerts, organ and other recitals, &c.; by collecting £10 during the coming year and so becoming a Life Member; and, not least, by propaganda work among their friends. The organizing secretary, Mr. Frank Thistleton, asks us to say that if any of our readers care to write to him at 16, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1, he will gladly advise them as to methods of helping the Fund. We understand that Mr. John Goss and many other well-known performers have promised to give concerts in aid; here is a lead which will surely be followed by all members of the rank and file of the profession—for (to put the case on the lowest ground), as it is the rank and file who benefit most, prudence and forethought indicate the wisdom, as well as the duty of lending a hand.

The election of a professional musician to the honourable position of Master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, is a sufficiently rare event to call for note. Dr. G. J. Bennett, the new Master, is the first member of the profession to fill the post for a good many years. We believe Stainer and Bridge were the two most recent professional Masters. They and Dr. Bennett appear also to be the only organists who have served as Master. At the annual banquet of the Company warm tributes were paid to Dr. Bennett by the Dean of Lincoln, Sir Hugh Allen, Dr. Malcolm Sargent, and others.

The post of organist at Exeter Cathedral, made vacant by the appointment of Dr. Bullock to Westminster Abbey, is to be filled by Mr. Thomas Armstrong. The new Exeter organist was one of the Chapel Royal 'Children' for six years; he then became organist at Thorney Abbey, going thence to Peterborough Cathedral as assistant to Dr. Keeton. Later he went to Keble College, where he obtained his M.A. His subsequent posts have been as assistant at Manchester Cathedral and organist at St. Peter's, Eaton Square. Mr. Armstrong has marked literary ability, and has for some years been a regular contributor to the review columns of this journal.

An article in a London daily on 'Money-Making Music,' by Mr. Jack Waller, contains some naive revelations of the modus operandi of the dance-music compilers. For a start, we like his comparison of English and American composers:

> The English composer, who has thoroughly mastered the art and technique of music—who has studied, for example, counterpoint, theory, orchestration, and so on—wants to write symphonies or grand operas. He is not willing to 'degrade' his musical art to the writing of syncopated tunes. In America, on the other hand, composers—like Jerome Kern—who are in every sense of the word real musicians, are willing to commercialise their knowledge of music.

We shall be surprised if any British composers (however erudite or ambitious) are reluctant to 'commercialise' their gifts. On the contrary, their complaint is that they can't commercialise enough. However, much depends on what is meant by the term. Mr. Waller will enlighten us:

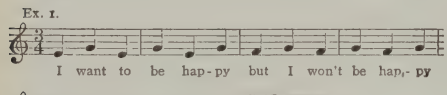
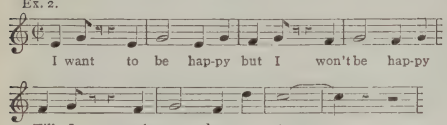
> You may say that the American composer is a base commercialist; and he may be. But you must consider the American point of view. The American is always looking for something new. In his plays, as well as in his musical comedies, he is always trying to find and exploit a new idea. For example, the American composer who wrote the tune 'I want to be Happy' in 'No No Nanette' simply composed an ordinary old-fashioned waltz-tune, and introduced into it inordinately long pauses—a sort of super-syncopation. Before the war we should have played the tune as a waltz:

Ex. 1.



But in 'Nanette' it is given a twist:

Ex. 2.



Subtle, isn't it? What a tune! What a text! And what accentuation! Mr. Waller's solemn use of the term 'composers' for the perpetrators of such fatuities is in itself a joke.

Neither of the passages quoted could have been written by a musician—least of all by a 'real musician in every sense of the term.' And its production is due to the 'commercialisation,' not of knowledge, but of ignorance.

We are glad to read in the Daily Express an indication that our social leaders are beginning to realise their obligations as patrons of art:

> The latest fad of society, the Ural Peasant Singers, ought to take London by storm. These men, who make curious noises by hollowing their tongues and making them revolve against their teeth, are in great demand for parties.

From the Daily News we learn that dining to the accompaniment of organ music is a feature at the new Café Royal. The managing director has obtained from America 'a wonderful organ, and he has gone there to find an organist to play it.' The old country really must wake up. We have long known that she has no opera, and no orchestras, but it was somehow felt that she had a few good organists—good enough, anyway, to drown the noise of the soup.

The Three Towns Deanery Choral Association held its annual Festival service at St. Andrew's, Plymouth, on November 23. About five hundred singers took part, representing fourteen choirs. The canticles were sung to Moreton in E flat, and the anthem was Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father.' Smart's Te Deum ended a fine service. Mr. H. Moreton was organist, and Dr. Ernest Bullock conducted. The success of this Festival should consolidate the revival, which began last year after a longish lapse.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS

Members and friends are cordially invited to attend the distribution of diplomas to successful candidates at the Fellowship and Associateship Examinations, on Saturday, January 21, 1928, at 3 p.m. The President, Dr. W. G. Alcock, will deliver an address, and Mr. W. Wolstenholme, organist of All Saints', St. John's Wood, will play upon the College organ the following pieces selected for the July Examinations, 1928:

Toccata in D minor (Dorian) ... ... J. S. Bach
Prelude in form of a Chaconne, Op. 88, No. 2 Stanford
(Stainer & Bell.)
Romanza, 'La Reine de France' ... ... Haydn
Best's Arrangements, vol. i., p. 199.
(Novello.)
Prelude, 'Rhosymedre' ... R. Vaughan Williams
(Stainer & Bell.)
'Pensée d'Automne,' Op. 27, No. 2 ... Jongen
(Augener.)

After the organ recital there will be an informal conversazione, to which members and friends are invited. Tea and coffee; no tickets are required.

H. A. Harding (Hon. Secretary).

THE SCHOOL OF ENGLISH CHURCH MUSIC: OUTLINE OF MR. NICHOLSON'S PROJECT

Mr. Sydney Nicholson's scheme for the establishment of a training school for Church musicians was advanced a stage on December 6, at a meeting in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster Abbey. The Dean of Westminster presided.

Mr. Nicholson dealt with his scheme under three heads: (1) the object of the school; (2) the kind of training proposed, and for whom; (3) the apparatus required. We condense and give the main points of his very practical address:

THE OBJECT

Under existing conditions the majority of those preparing to become Church musicians have little or no chance of training a choir and accompanying a service until they are actually installed in a post. In other words, they have to gain the necessary experience after, instead of before, entering on their duties. The weekly organ lesson, the purely theoretical talks on voice-production, accompaniment, and so on, are good in their way, but they cannot take the place of practical experience gained in the right surroundings. Many young people are interested in Church music, but have their interest killed by lack of opportunity of trying their hand at practical work in a stimulating and sympathetic environment.

TRAINING

The needs of four types of church had to be considered: (1) the cathedral, and the collegiate church or chapel; (2) the large town church, where a full-time professional musician was usually employed; (3) the smaller or less affluent church, where the music was usually directed by a semi-professional; and (4) the village church, where the services of a trained musician were only rarely to be had. In regard to (1), the fit training was usually available through organ scholarships, though the proposed School would no doubt have its uses for aspirants to such posts. The professional musicians concerned in (2) usually studied at the leading colleges of music; this training could be supplemented by a course of practical work at the School. (3) The semi-professionals—men whose chief means of livelihood was some calling other than musical—would gain much from a central School, especially in cases where they were employed in a business which had branches throughout the country. With the sympathetic co-operation of the heads of such businesses, it might be possible to arrange for the drafting of suitable men to centres where their musical abilities and training were needed. As to (4), the only solution seemed to lie in the provision of trained choirmasters, not attached to any one church, but peripatetic. They would go from village to village, organizing and training, and giving help in various practical ways. Later, it might be possible to arrange for such choirmasters to be responsible for definite areas, under diocesan auspices. A revolution in village church music might thus be brought about, for the present difficulty was due not to shortage of material, but to lack of people competent to get the best out of it.

APPARATUS

The prime need was a chapel, with frequent services of all types, simple and elaborate. There should be no restriction to any one school of thought or style of music, and no question of 'High' Church or 'Low' Church. The requirements varied widely, and whatever a man's private preferences might be, he could not be regarded as an educated Church musician unless he understood them all. Students at the School would gain practical experience in training the chapel choir, and accompanying or taking some other part in the services. There must be a chaplain to look after the purely religious side of the work, and he should also be capable of helping in the musical teaching. There must also be boy choristers, with a nucleus of resident boys.

The social centre of the enterprise would be the hostel, which would provide something like a collegiate life for students able to avail themselves of it. It could also provide accommodation for students coming from a distance for occasional help, 'refresher' courses, and so on. At the head would be a Warden and Director of Studies; and, as lecturers and adviser, experts would be called on. The School would not compete with any existing institutions: it would supplement them. It would not be an examining body, but it would supply candidates for the choir-training examinations held at the R.C.O.

FINANCE

Mr. Nicholson estimated that an assured income of about £7,000 would suffice for a most efficient carrying-out of the scheme. No public appeal had yet been launched, but an endeavour would be made to get into touch with every parish in the country, in order that the scheme might have the support not only of a few wealthy people, but of all who were interested. Among the support promised were gifts as memorials of two who were keenly interested in the project—Lady Mary Trefusis and the late Precentor of Chester.

'The time has now come,' said Mr. Nicholson, in conclusion, 'when we feel that the scheme may be launched with good hope of success. It is the direct outcome of the work that has been going on for the improvement of Church music for the past twenty years, the first stage of which may be said to have culminated in the Report of the Archbishops' Committee on Music in Worship.' He added that it would be necessary as a first step to form a company, limited by guarantee, and not having a share capital; several influential gentlemen had consented to be signatories.

The following resolution was then moved by Sir Walford Davies, seconded by Sir Hugh Allen, and carried unanimously:

> That a company, limited by guarantee and not having a share capital, to be called 'The School of English Church Music,' be formed on the lines laid down by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson; and that Mr. E. F. Knapp-Fisher, the hon. solicitor, be requested to take the necessary steps to get the same registered.

---

'The Church Hymnary,' Revised Edition, Staff, 4*s.*; Sol-fa, 4*s.*; Melody only, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Organ Edition, 10*s.*

'Hymns from The Church Hymnary,' 6*d.*

Handbook to 'The Church Hymnary,' 7*s.* 6*d.*

Hymns and Tunes from 'Songs of Praise,' 4*d.*

'Songs of Praise for Day Schools,' a selection of hymns from 'Songs of Praise' (words only).

'Hymns of Western Europe,' Selected and Edited by Sir H. Walford Davies, Sir W. H. Hadow, and Sir R. R. Terry; with a Preface by the Right Hon. D. Lloyd George.

[Oxford University Press, 6*s.* 6*d.*]

'The Evolution of the English Hymn,' by Frederick John Gillman.

[George Allen & Unwin, 10*s.* 6*d.*]

The interest in hymnody seems to be as great as ever, judging from the steady output of fresh collections and literature. Lately, too, the topic has even called forth leading articles in The Times and other journals, as well as a good deal of matter in the correspondence columns. All this is good, because hymns and their tunes, being used by countless folk from cradle to grave, exert an influence hardly second to that of any other musical form—certainly any other form so small and easily negotiable.

New hymnaries owe much to the 'English Hymnal,' and no attempt is made to disguise the fact. 'The Church Hymnary' follows its lead in the matter of German, Welsh, and other tunes of a national type. Like the 'E. H.,' too, it compromises by retaining some unworthy material. Such compromise is inevitable, apparently; but we may console ourselves with the reflection that in practically every new hymn-book the proportion of weak music grows less. There are many admirable new tunes—a good feature, for hymnody cannot flourish if contemporary composers are not induced to contribute to the stock. The harmonizations in the main have been well done. Here and there one would have preferred a simpler style. For example, 'The First Nowell' is robbed of a good deal of its life by being given too many chords—practically one to each note. And in some well-known tunes the addition of harmony to phrases that were designed to be sung in unison, is liable to irritate. The addition of harmony often weakens the effect. There can be little doubt that Dykes's tune 'St. Cross,' for instance, gains in strength and suitability from the unisonous opening of the last line. There are a couple of over-statements in the Preface. Thus, it is right to warn choirmasters that a rallentando is not desirable in every hymn, but it is wrong to add that in joyous hymns 'the singing ought to be carried on to the very last word without any rallentando.' Such a restriction of retardation to non-joyous music does not hold good in any other kind of musical performance, and we see no reason for making an exception in the case of hymn-singing. Concerning accompaniments, we are told that 'in every case they must be light.' In every case? Surely, a big, strong festive hymn, sung as it ought to be by a crowd, calls for a quality other than lightness. Apart from a few details such as these, the book is excellent. To do justice to its many fine tunes and its practical arrangement would call for columns rather than the paragraphs that are available. It should be added that the prices specified at the head of this article refer to the editions bound in cloth. Other more expensive forms are also issued.

Prof. Moffatt has compiled a work of reference that will be of great service to users of hymnals other than that to which it specially applies. The book is divided into two sections, the first giving copious notes on the words and music of every hymn in 'The Church Hymnary'; the second containing biographical and historical notes on the authors, composers, sources, &c. It runs to nearly six hundred closely-packed pages, and is a mine of interesting fact. Music-type illustrations are used freely in connection with the discussion of tunes that exist in several forms. The handbook is a real achievement of industry and scholarship.

'Hymns of Western Europe' is an anthology rather than a hymnal. It contains an abundance of fine things, and its special character enabled the compilers to eschew feeble tunes which the ordinary hymn-book has to include for reasons of policy. It is a pity that so large a proportion of its good things appear already in most of the hymnals now in use, e.g., 'Abridge,' 'Dix,' 'Martyrdom,' 'Hanover,' 'Adeste, Fideles,' and dozens more. There are, however, some truly splendid old Welsh tunes that are very little known outside the Principality—and that are even in danger of being disused there, if report speaks true. German chorales abound—all good, of course, but some of them good in rather a dull way. The section entitled 'Anthems' is curiously compiled, some of the numbers being mere hymn-tunes, while others are chorales from Bach's cantatas; only the more extended of the latter can be described as anthems. (In several of these, by the way, the giving of Bach's high trumpet parts—sometimes in two-part harmony—to a Great trumpet stop is likely to lead to din rather than music.) Some well-known tunes are not always given in the best versions. For example, 'Orientis Partibus' appears in the stilted 4-4 'A. & M.' form instead of the original 3-4. 'Narenza' has a gathering note in three of its four lines—a confusing and illogical arrangement. The use of bar-lines is unsystematic. In some old tunes they are used very sparingly; in others liberally. An imperfect book, then; with less distinguished musicians as editors the job would no doubt have been rounded-off more tidily. But it contains so much fine stuff that many will be glad to have it at hand. Perhaps somebody will now go a step farther, and give us a collection of entirely unfamiliar tunes, with a good proportion of examples by living composers. Hymn-book compilers have done enough looking back; it is time to look around as well.

Mr. Gillman writes with sympathy and knowledge concerning the texts of hymns—a department with which a musical journal has little to do—and his book will prove a mine in which writers, preachers, and lecturers will dig with profit. On the musical side (relegated to a chapter at the end) he is necessarily sketchy, and a few of his generalisations may be questioned. He is mistaken, for example, in regarding Bach's version of 'Nun danket' as being unsuitable for congregational use. And in a paragraph on the adaptation of folk-song for hymn purposes he cites such trivialities as 'Stella' and 'There is a happy land,' overlooking such examples as 'Innsbruck,' the 'Passion Chorale,' &c., other Lutheran adaptations, and the many successful modern instances to be found in the 'English Hymnal' and in the various carol collections of Charles Wood and G. R. Woodward. And in so brief a discussion of a big subject there should be no space for such remarks as 'It is said that Croft found the first line of "St. Anne," and added the other three. What a pity more such finds cannot be made!' But the main body of the book is excellent. It is good to find the author in his Preface standing up for a recognition of the important part played in the common life by hymns and their tunes. He says truly that 'literary and musical critics are inclined to scoff at the subject, and to conclude that the artistic contents of our hymnals are not worthy of notice; so they turn aside to bestow their attention on folk-song, old ballads, Christmas carols, and negro "spirituals"; not always mindful of the incomparably greater part which the simple hymn and hymn-tune have played in the history of our race.' The fact is, the writer of a good hymn, or the composer of a fine hymn-tune (sometimes even the perpetrator of a bad one, unfortunately!), is assured of a niche in fame's temple denied to many writers of symphonies. But even on artistic grounds it is easy to under-rate the achievement of hymnody. The best hymns are on a level with the pick of our secular lyrics, and the composition of a really clinching hymn-tune is a real feat in the art of the musical miniature. Mr. Gillman's book will help towards an appreciation of that army of writers—some almost unknown in other walks of literature—to whom Christendom owes so much.

AN INTERESTING CAMBRIDGE ORGAN

The Chapel of Jesus College, Cambridge, has lately acquired an organ of unusual interest. The removal, a few years ago, of the West Gallery and its large (and unsatisfactory) organ left the Chapel with a small old organ in the Chancel. This instrument—long credited to 'Father' Smith—was a two-manual, minus pedals. The keys were of the old style—white sharps and black naturals. Investigation showed that the factor was not Smith, but Bishop, who built the instrument for Sir John Sutton, a member of the College. Sir John held strong views on organs, objecting to 'modern overgrown Music Mills' (he should have lived to hear the Liverpool Cathedral organ!), and disliking pedals: 'As fugue playing is not the chief object in an English cathedral, and the consequence of pedals and pedal pipes more especially having been so mischievous, it is much to be desired that they should be removed from cathedral organs.'

This old Bishop organ, on being examined recently by Mr. Arthur Harrison (of Messrs. Harrison), was found to contain two stops much older than the rest. The explanation seems to be that when Sir John's organ was a-building, the Smith organ at Durham was being altered. He was a warm admirer of Smith's work, and the supposition is that the stops were 'conveyed' from Durham. In fact, a contemporary account of the opening of the organ by Walmisley mentions a flute as having come from Durham. Hence, probably, the origin of the local legend that 'Father' Smith was the builder.

This old instrument has been retained intact in the rebuilding recently undertaken by Messrs. Harrison. Great, Swell, and Pedal organs have been added to it, and the result is a four-manual, probably the smallest in existence, and unique in other respects. The tonal effect is described as very attractive. Here is the specification:

| PEDAL | FT. |
|---|---|
| Open Wood | 16 |
| Sub-Bass | 16 |
| GREAT | FT. |
| Double Salicional | 16 |
| Open Diapason | 8 |
| Hohl Flute | 8 |
| Octave | 4 |
| SWELL | FT. |
| Viol di Gamba | 8 |
| Harmonic Flute | 8 |
| Concert Flute | 4 |
| Trumpet | 8 |
| CHOIR (1847) | FT. |
| Open Diapason | 8 |
| Stopt Diapason (Smith) | 8 |
| Principal | 4 |
| Stopt Flute (Smith) | 4 |
| Twelfth | $2\frac{2}{3}$ |
| Fifteenth | 2 |
| Tierce | $1\frac{3}{5}$ |
| Sesquialtera (19, 22) | 2 ranks. |
| ECHO (1847) | FT. |
| Open Diapason | 8 |
| Stopt Diapason | 8 |
| Principal | 4 |
| Open Flute | 4 |

COUPLERS

| | |
|---|---|
| Swell to Great | Great to Pedal |
| Choir to Great | Swell ,, |
| Echo to Swell | Choir ,, |
| Swell Octave | Echo ,, |

We take the above particulars from an interesting article in the Cambridge Review.

THE LATE LADY MARY TREFUSIS

A fund has been opened to provide a memorial to the late Lady Mary Trefusis. As she was a devoted worker in the cause of Church music, and also a warm supporter of Mr. Sydney Nicholson's scheme for a School of Church Music, it is desired to raise a subscription fund by means of which her name shall be permanently associated with the School as one of its founders. The exact application of the fund will be determined later, but the intention is that it shall bear her name, and be assigned to some special purpose, and that, when the School is formed, there should also be some visible memorial. The honorary treasurer is Mr. A. Cyprian B. Webb, 21, Chester Square, S.W.1.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL

On St. Paul's Day (January 25) the music at the morning service (10.0) will consist of Tallis's Litany (in procession), and Beethoven's Mass in C, with full orchestral accompaniment. At Evensong (4.0) the Canticles will be sung to Huntley in E flat, and the anthem will consist of a selection from 'St. Paul' with full orchestra.

SIXTY-SIX YEARS AS ORGANIST

Mrs. Inman has retired from the post of honorary organist of St. Peter's, Finsthwaite, Windermere, after sixty-six years' service. Her uncle was vicar of the parish for forty-nine years, and her husband held the same office for forty-two years.

The organ at Sackville Road Wesleyan Church, Bexhill-on-Sea, originally by Hill, has been rebuilt by Messrs. Hele. It was dedicated on November 9, Mr. Arthur Meale giving a recital, his programme including the D major Fugue of Bach, a Choral Symphonique by Diggle, and his own 'Storm.'

The organ at the Congregational Church, Wren Road, Camberwell Green, was re-opened on November 10, when Mr. Allan Brown gave a recital, playing Schumann's Canon in B minor, Bach's 'Great' G minor Fugue, Wolstenholme's Finale in B flat, &c.

We have received the prospectus of the Glasgow Society of Organists for 1927-28. The enterprise of this body is shown in various features. There is a list of about a hundred works in the Society's Library, which may be borrowed by members—free for one month, sixpence per month thereafter. The Society has also a valuable store of organ and other music at the disposal of its members. A complete roll of the three hundred and four members' names, addresses, and posts also appears. A useful addition is a list of members who are available for deputy work. The arrangements for the present session include a programme of organ music per gramophone, a chamber concert, a violin and pianoforte recital by William Primrose and Rae Robertson, and a performance by combined choirs of 'Elijah.' The opening meetings have been crowded.

The fifty-fourth annual Festival of the London Church Choirs Association took place at St. Paul's Cathedral, on November 17, over thirty choirs taking part. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to settings by Lee Williams, and the anthem was 'How lovely are Thy dwellings fair,' from Brahms's 'Requiem.' Mr. Douglas Hopkins, sub-organist at the Cathedral, accompanied, and Dr. Stanley Marchant conducted.

'Samson' was the chief item in a day of intensive music-making by the choir of Hope Congregational Church, Oldham, the occasion being the annual Festival of the choir. Other works heard were Bach's 'Sleepers, wake!' Purcell's 'Soul of the world,' oratorio selections, and instrumental items—a notable feast, varied and good. Mr. Joseph Lees was conductor, with a capital array of soloists and other helpers.

The All Saints' (Bradford) Bach Choir (Mr. Charles Stott, conductor) gave its third concert at All Saints' Church, Horton Green, on December 7, with a scheme that comprised the Motets, 'Like as a father,' and 'I wrestle and pray,' the Chorale, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' violin solos, Liszt's Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H, and Bantock's 'They that go down to the sea.'

The organ at Malvern Priory Church has been reconstructed by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, and is now a four-manual of fifty-one stops and ample accessories. The dedication took place on December 8, when Dr. Louis Hamand gave a recital, playing Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Saint-Saëns's Fantasia in E flat, his own arrangement of the 'Londonderry Air,' &c.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung at Worple Road Wesleyan Church, Wimbledon, on November 27, with accompaniment on pianoforte (Mr. A. H. Childs) and organ (Mr. D. S. Hayward). Mr. Frank Uppington conducted.

'The Last Judgment' was sung, with orchestral accompaniment, at St. Luke's, Reading, by the St. Luke's Musical Society, on November 30. Mr. Arthur C. Foster conducted.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have completed an organ for St. Michael's, Windmill Hill, Bristol—a two-manual of nineteen stops and nineteen pistons.

Elgar's 'The Light of Life' was sung by the choir of the Presbyterian Church, York, on December 11, conducted by Mr. E. S. Walton, with Mr. A. W. Knight at the organ.

Messrs. Henry Willis are to reconstruct the organs at St. Mary's, Graham Street, S.W., and St. Matthias's Earl's Court.

The organ at Great Meeting Church, Leicester, is to be completely reconstructed by Messrs. J. W. Walker.

RECITALS

Mr. Walter Vale, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W.—Passacaglia and Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Epilogue, Willan.

Mr. Ralph Downes, Keble College Chapel—'Passion' Symphony, Dupré; Sonata No. 4, Four Chorale Preludes, and Toccata in F, Bach.

Mr. Charles Stott, Skipton Parish Church—Grande Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Caprice, Ireland; Scherzo-Fugue, Lemare; Chorale and Fugue, Guilmant.

Mr. N. S Wallbank, Christ Church, Penrith—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Con Moto, Saint-Saëns; Scherzo in G minor, Bossi; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Rev. L. G. Bark, Christ Church, Penrith—Introduction and Fugue in A minor, Russell; Trio in C minor, Bach; Elégie, Vierne; Marcia Religiosa, Urteaga.

Dr. Stocks, St. Asaph Cathedral—Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Allegretto Grazioso and Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; Finale (Symphony No. 4), Widor; selection from 'Gerontius.'

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Marche Militaire, Buck; Chorale Prelude on 'Ein' Feste Burg' and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; 'Eventide,' Brewer; Theme and Variations, Stuart Archer.

Mr. E. H. Daniels, St. Oswald's, Durham—Imperial March, Elgar; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Passacaglia, West.

Mr. James Easson, Holy Trinity, St. Andrews—Sonata, Elgar; Psalm-Prelude in C minor, Howells; 'Scenes in Northumberland,' Frederic H. Wood; 'Gloria in Excelsis,' Harrison; Finale, Wolstenholme; Introduction and Allegro, Keeble; Fugue in G minor, Nares.

Mr. G. D. Cunningham, St. Mellitus, Hanwell—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Allegro Vivace (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Choral No. 3, Franck; Scherzo, Gigout; Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H, Reger.

Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield, Symington Parish Church—Fantasia in G, Bach; Capriccio in B flat, Capocci; March for a Church Festival, Best; Cradle Song, Mansfield.

Rev. W. Lees, St. Lawrence Jewry—Sonata No. 7, Rheinberger; Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells; Allegro Maestoso from Sonata, Elgar; Finale (Symphony No. 5), Dvorák.

Mr. Glanvill Hopkins, St. Andrew's, Holborn—Idyll, Jephson; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Fantasia and Fugue (Sonata No. 9), Rheinberger; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Ostinato, Harvey Grace; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. George Metzler, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Preludio (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger; Pastorale (Sonata No. 1), Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Intermezzo, Hollins; Impromptu in A minor, Coleridge-Taylor.

Mr. Horace Wilfrid King, St. Lawrence Jewry—Chant de Mai, Jongen; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Toccatina, Alcock; Alla Marcia, Ireland.

Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts, Holy Trinity, Guildford—Moto continuo, C. F. Waters; Idyll, 'The Sea,' Arnold Smith; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson; 'Song of Triumph,' West; Three Hymn-Tune Preludes, Charlton Palmer; Minuet, Stanford; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Lemare.

Mr. Archibald Farmer, St. Lawrence Jewry—Chorale and tenth Variation from the Partita on 'Jesu, heed my greeting,' Bach; Fantaisie de concert, de la Tombelle; Six Portraits, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Nelson Govier, Cheshunt Parish Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Allegretto and Marche Triomphale, Lemmens; Sonata in D, West.

Mr. W. Wolstenholme, St. Lawrence Jewry—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; 'Cilurnum' and 'Borcovicus,' Frederic H. Wood; Sketch No. 1 and 'Celebration,' Wolstenholme; and Improvisation.

Mr. W. J. Comley, Cheshunt Parish Church—Allegro maestoso, from Sonata, and Imperial March, Elgar; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; Overture in C, Hollins.

Mr. William H. Scriven, Christ Church, Ware—Fantasia in G and Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata No. 7, Rheinberger; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ernest W. Pettit, choirmaster and organist, St. Cuthbert's, West Hampstead.

Mr. Geoffrey A. Sandwell, choirmaster and organist, All Hallows', East India Dock, E.

Mr. Arthur E. Temple, choirmaster and organist, St. Mary's, Hornsey.

Letters to the Editor

THE PURCELL FANTASIAS

SIR,—Dr. Eaglefield-Hull writes of my transcriptions of Purcell's Fantasias as though they were as full of gross mistakes as his own notorious translations from the French; yet only one wrong note is adduced as evidence. His statement that the unfinished Fantasia in A minor is founded on a ground-bass with two flats in the signature does not inspire confidence in his qualifications as an expert on 17th-century manuscripts. The musical quotation on p. 1075 of your December issue is from the well-known Chacony in G minor, and has nothing whatever to do with the Fantasias.

The theory that Purcell placed an accidental before every note that was to be sharpened or flattened is simply untenable. This can even be seen in the facsimile in the Curwen edition de luxe, and the presence of contradicting, or naturalising, accidentals in the manuscript affords further disproof of the theory. Textual criticism, to be of any value, must be based on surer knowledge and expressed in more coherent language than Dr. Hull seems able to command. The two 'quite gratuitous' E naturals in the alleged 'hornpipe tune' in the second four-part Fantasia (which is not a hornpipe, since Purcell's hornpipes are always in triple time) are plainly marked in the manuscript. Reference is made to a bracketed G natural in bar 36 and an unbracketed one in bar 37 of an unspecified Fantasia. There are no such G naturals in bars 36 and 37 of any of the Fantasias. The pedantically dogmatic statement that 'Purcell never wrote augmented seconds' or augmented fifths in these works is of no value against the evidence of the manuscript itself.

M. André Mangeot added the metronome rates after long and careful rehearsals with his quartet. The justification of his 'absurd' rate for the third three-part Fantasia may be heard from the International String Quartet's gramophone record of the work. The 𝅗𝅥=116 in the Quintet is a misprint for ♩=116, which was twice corrected on the proof-sheets. Dr. Hull's suggestion that the fourth four-part Fantasia is marked 'to go at one rate throughout' is merely untrue, as a glance at the score will show. To assert that because other fantasias become 'brisk' towards the end, this one must necessarily do so is about as sensible as the idea of speeding-up the last movement of the 'Pathetic' Symphony on similar grounds. 'The whole of that Fantasia,' as M. Mangeot has well said, 'is in the character of a dirge.'

Dr. Hull goes out of his way to rob me of any credit to which the 're-discovery' of these Fantasias might entitle me. This is a small and unimportant matter, but if the 'Purcell research scholars' have known these Fantasias 'long enough,' it is hardly to their credit to have kept them so long in the dark. It is more than twelve years since I gave certain of these works to Mr. Eugène Goossens for the use of the original Philharmonic String Quartet, and three of them were performed in London in 1920, by the Pennington String Quartet, at a concert given by Mr. Cecil Gray and myself, after which my by no means 'somewhat hasty' copies were frequently in demand.

Dr. Hull's assurance that he has 'dealt with this important matter in an entirely impersonal manner' is so entirely irrelevant that it actually suggests a guilty conscience for the publication of so many unproven allegations of inaccuracy in an article which is itself so fantastically incoherent and inaccurate.—Yours, &c.,

PETER WARLOCK.

THE ETHICS OF 'BORROWING'

SIR,—Dr. Eaglefield-Hull in his recent 'Music: Classical, Romantic, and Modern' introduces what appears to be a new principle of quotation—the principle that an author may take material from other authors and protect himself by a general acknowledgment, with no specific mention of the source of the quotations. I am not aware that any reviewer has called attention to Dr. Hull's idea, and it certainly seems to be worth a little discussion.

Dr. Hull's general acknowledgment (in his Preface) reads as follows:

> 'This book I have made for my own pleasure; I have taken stones for my walls, and tiles for my floors, wherever good material came to hand, without always troubling to acknowledge it when the lifting is as apparent as the use of the stones and columns from Hadrian's Wall by the church-builders of Northumberland. Such an adaptation of warlike material to peaceful ends I hold entirely justifiable.'

Dr. Hull then mentions that 'in the past' he has 'profited much by the polemical writings of' a number of writers whom he mentions (Ernest Newman, Edwin Evans, Edward J. Dent, &c.), and—leaves it at that.

What is meant by adapting 'warlike material to peaceful ends' it is difficult to see, though perhaps Dr. Hull can explain this to us. What is meant by taking 'stones for my walls and tiles for my floor . . . without always troubling to acknowledge it' is seen from the following use of material from Mr. Frank Rutter's 'Evolution in Modern Art' (Harrap, 1926), which book and which author are not, so far as I am aware, anywhere mentioned in Dr. Hull's book:

| DR. HULL (p. 365) | MR. RUTTER (p. 116) |
|---|---|
| 'Sir Michael Sadler, in delivering a lecture at Leeds University in 1916, on "Premonitions of War in Modern Painting," stated that he had been so much impressed by Kandinsky's pictures that he had asked the artist whether he had had any clear vision of the imminence of war in Europe when he painted them. The artist replied that he had not actually foreseen the outbreak of hostilities, but he had been "conscious of an immense conflict of forces in the spiritual world." Yet, although all that the artist had had in his mind, when he painted his picture entitled "Composition," was "a conflict of spiritual forces," it is not difficult to discover that the pattern is based on an artillery gun, puffs of smoke, and houses falling to pieces.' | . . . 'Sir Michael Sadler, who in the winter of 1915 delivered at Leeds a lecture on "Premonitions of War in Modern Painting." In this lecture he stated that he had been so impressed by Kandinsky's work that he had asked the artist whether he had any clear vision of the imminence of war in Europe. The painter replied that he had not actually foreseen the outbreak of hostilities, but he had been conscious of "an immense conflict of forces in the spiritual world." . . . I analysed one of his "abstract" pictures, which Sir Michael Sadler had in his possession very early in 1914. I discovered that the pattern was based on an artillery gun, on puffs of smoke, on houses falling to pieces. The painter maintains that all he had in his mind when he painted the picture was "a conflict of spiritual forces."' |

I suppose that every author is consciously or unconsciously indebted to previous authors, and perhaps most authors at one time or another repeat occasional phrases or short passages they have read without realising they are doing so. This is, however, surely a very different matter from taking lengthy passages from the work of another author and deliberately quoting them practically verbatim without crediting the original. Are we to accept without demur the suggestion that indebtedness in such a case can be decently covered with the blanket of a general acknowledgment in the Preface?—Yours, &c.,

PERCY A. SCHOLES.

[Dr. Eaglefield-Hull writes: 'The Editor has kindly allowed me to see Mr. Percy Scholes's letter, and I hasten to say that my book makes very careful acknowledgment of all authors quoted. The playful Introduction (from which Mr. Scholes has deliberately omitted the qualifying phrase) was intended to cover any omissions of acknowledgments which may have occurred unintentionally. I do not regard the one he quotes as such a one; for I have merely given the credit back to its proper author, Sir Michael Sadler, as any intelligent reader can see for himself. I do not remember Mr. Rutter's book, and it is much more probable that I took the passage from some newspaper report, as I was much interested in Scriabin and Kandinsky, and was corresponding with Sir Michael Sadler at the time. Mr. Scholes seems to want the sixteen last words credited to Mr. Rutter. I will gladly do this in the approaching third edition, if Mr. Rutter (not Mr. Scholes) wants it; although I do not acknowledge that he has any specific right to them. I know the picture very well, and have often used these words (there are no others) in discussing it with friends. It is also discussed and reproduced in Sir Michael Sadler's "Spiritual Harmony" (1914). What is the matter with Mr. Scholes, who usually has a fairly clear mind?']

[We submitted Dr. Hull's letter to Mr. Scholes, whose reply will be printed in next month's issue. Meanwhile, Mr. Scholes asks us to state that in his copy of Dr. Hull's book the paragraph quoted above contains no 'qualifying clause.'—EDITOR.]

MUSICIANS' BENEVOLENT FUND

SIR,—May we through the columns of your valuable paper, bring to the notice of your readers the urgent need of the Musicians' Benevolent Fund?

After several years of valuable pioneer work, the Fund has established itself as an organization of vital importance to the entire musical profession of Great Britain. The time has now come when it is necessary to make an even wider appeal, in order to enlarge the scope of the Fund's activities by founding a Pensions Fund and Convalescent Home for sick and aged musicians, and the object of this appeal is to ask all those of your readers who are musicians, or who may be interested in the welfare of British music, to help us to carry on our Samaritan work on adequate lines.

The Fund is the only one in this country, entirely supported by voluntary contributions, that helps every class of musician irrespective of whether they are members of any Society, and that distributes its entire funds in Samaritan work for the relief of distress in the musical profession.

Unfortunately, the number of applications for assistance is at all times far greater than the money at the disposal of the Committee. It will be obvious, therefore, that no funds are at any time available for either a satisfactory pensions scheme, or for founding a Convalescent Home.

The smallest donations will be most gratefully acknowledged, and if as many musicians and others as possibly can, will undertake to collect £10 before the close of 1928, our scheme for a Pensions Fund and Convalescent Home will be not a dream of the future, but a reality.

We are glad to be able to announce that the Corporation of the City of London, on the proposal of the Guildhall School of Music, has decided to open our subscription list with a grant of £250, and we are hopeful that many of your readers will be able to send a small donation to the Musicians' Benevolent Fund, 16, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.—Yours, &c.,

(Signed)

EDWARD ELGAR (President).
HENRY BENTINCK (Chairman of the Executive Committee).
VICTOR BEIGEL (Vice-Chairman of the Executive Committee).
HUGH P. ALLEN
DAN GODFREY
JOHN B. MCEWEN
LANDON RONALD
HENRY J. WOOD
(Patrons).

16, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

DURHAM MUSICAL EXAMINATIONS

Sir,—I think 'Student' (December, p. 1118) has no cause for complaint. What of the candidate—sometimes a blind man—who does the same thing, by travelling hundreds of miles to the R.C.O. for one section?

No, Sir; there should be no exceptions for any work. Let all candidates have the same privilege, or none. Take my own case, as an instance: I am a war candidate, of four years' serving. All Universities granted exemption from Matric. to war candidates. I found this out only when too late, so I was barred from the privilege that much younger men than myself enjoyed, and have now completed their degree. This is where the rub comes; no one should be exempted, or all. I travelled six hundred miles last June to sit for Durham Matric., and failed, so I shall have to go again! I can only suggest that 'Student' writes to the Durham authorities.—Yours, &c.,

Fiat Justitia.

Royal Hotel, College Green, Bristol.

DIPLOMAS

Sir,—Re musical diplomas: I endorse all that your correspondent, 'Pianist' (December, p. 1115), says on this subject.

Would not the following plan have the desired result? To add another letter to the four existing ones, e.g., an L.R.A.M. in Pianoforte would be L.R.A.M.P.; in Violin, L.R.A.M.V.; Singing, L.R.A.M.S.; Class-singing, L.R.A.M.C., &c. There would be no such thing as a plain L.R.A.M. or A.R.C.M., and the added letter would be a short way of stating for which subject the diploma was obtained.

If the R.A.M. could be induced to follow this method through your intervention, the Musical Times would have the gratitude of many.—Yours, &c.,

Bedford Hotel, Buxton. Kathleen Boland (Teacher).

Sir,—My attention has been drawn to a letter which appeared in your September issue, written by 'Pianist,' of Great Yarmouth, and to your remarks on p. 910 of the October number, in which you mention the case of an L.R.A.M. (conductorship) and A.R.C.M. (military bandmastership) who is teaching subjects in which he has gained no diploma. You will note, in passing, that I do not use the term theatrical conductorship, which designation is most misleading. Except for playing an orchestral instrument—the violin in my case—this examination deals entirely with orchestration and harmony, and does not touch the fringe of anything connected with the stage.

I think I am correct in stating that I am the only civilian musician to hold these two diplomas in the subjects stated. I was certainly the first civilian to gain the A.R.C.M. in military bandmastership (see enclosed reprint from The Era), and only one other civilian has been successful since. Coupling this statement with the fact that the advertisement you quote is word for word the same as one I inserted once only in a local weekly, it is beyond question that you refer to me, and to me only.

Now, Sir, you accuse me of a glaring abuse in using my diplomas when advertising as a teacher, and I must emphatically reply that in accusing me you are also accusing ninety per cent. of the teaching profession of a similar abuse.

It is a pity you did not make inquiries about me from a reputable source, for, had you done so, your remarks would never have been written.

I wish you to know that I was a busy and successful teacher in this town before I gained the diplomas in question. To use your own words, I 'parade the fact' that I am a registered teacher because I was able to show, without mention of my diplomas, that I had earned the right to be registered.

In support of this, may I just mention that over a hundred of my pupils have been successful in various exams. of the Associated Board and Trinity College? And I cannot refrain from alluding to the fact that at the time you, Mr. Editor, were adjudicating at one of the recent Norfolk and Norwich Competition Festivals, a pupil of mine gained first place and silver medal in one of the violin sections.

In this county of Norfolk there are musicians who possess degrees, and who have been extraordinarily successful in preparing pupils for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. diplomas in pianoforte teaching, although they themselves do not possess diplomas in that subject, though they do for others.

According to your reasoning, these very excellent, cultured musicians are guilty of the same glaring abuse.

What about the F.R.C.O., the A.R.C.M. (organ or harmony), or the L.R.A.M. (organ or harmony), who teaches the pianoforte and singing, and perhaps the violin? There are hundreds of such in the country. Do you accuse all these of glaring abuse?

I consider the indictment you have made is both unjust and indefensible.

The action of the Yarmouth musician in sending you my advertisement was a despicably mean one, as he, with all other musicians of this town, knows well that I am an established teacher, with a teaching experience of at least twenty-five years.

It is high time, by the way, that he knew the difference between a degree and a diploma.

In conclusion, I would like to say that if you require further proof of my capability as a teacher, I shall be pleased to send you a number of letters of appreciation from past pupils, some of whom have made good in the profession.—Yours, &c., W. M. Chapman.

21, Lichfield Road,
Gt. Yarmouth.

[We insert Mr. Chapman's letter in full, despite its length and belatedness, in order to avoid the slightest appearance of unfairness. We fail to see, however, that he has cause for complaint. The paragraph to which he takes exception was quite impersonal. If the numerous letters we have received on this subject may be taken as a guide, the majority of the teaching profession are of opinion that the use of the initials L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. with no indication as to the subject for which the diploma was granted, is misleading. We are prepared to accept Mr. Chapman's statement as to his own success as a teacher in subjects other than those to which his diploma refers, but we hold to the views expressed in our 'Occasional Note.' The fact that a teacher is able to advertise for pupils in pianoforte, organ, violin, singing, &c., quoting as credentials diplomas gained for conducting and military bandmastership, is, we still maintain, a glaring abuse. This is a reflection on the system, not on Mr. Chapman's ability as a teacher. For one military bandmaster and conductor who is able to teach half-a-dozen other subjects there must be many who cannot, and an exception here and there does not affect the general principle, i.e., that the public have a right to know the subject for which a teacher's diplomas are granted. His efficiency in other departments should be guaranteed by pupils' and parents' references.—Editor.]

GIVE US MORE MAHLER!

Sir.—Your words about the performance of Mahler's 'Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen' are but an echo of what many of us who have studied Mahler's works from the scores have often expressed. Why can we not have a lot more of him?

It is always a matter of surprise to me that a choir like Mr. Kennedy Scott's has not seized on the eighth Symphony, with its truly stupendous choral writing, and the B.B.C. that magnificent seventh, for performance at a 'National' concert.

What applies to Mahler applies, unfortunately, to so many others. We could, to our ultimate advantage, hear more of Bruckner, Reger, Ravel, and d'Indy (especially the second Symphony in B flat of the last-named), and of our own countrymen—Bantock, McEwen, and Holbrooke.—Yours, &c., Norman H. Demuth.

Elfin Grove, Bognor.

ABSOLUTE PITCH

SIR,—Your correspondent, 'A Reader' (December, p. 1120), revives the old question of 'absolute pitch.' Of course there is really no such thing, any more than there is 'absolute' light, or heat. The peculiar gift which we call by this name cannot be anything but a tenacious memory for the actual sound of some particular musical instrument. To an absolute pitcher (I am one to some extent) the notes of, say, his pianoforte, become individualised. Each key is inseparably associated in his mind with its corresponding sound. He has thus unconsciously set up a standard by which he judges the pitch of other instruments and of music in general. He automatically applies his 'fixed-doh' standard to all the music he hears, and is worried when other people's doh differs in pitch from his own. This gift is a useful one; but it can also, as 'A Reader' remarks, be an embarrassing one at times, as, for instance, in church, when the organ happens to be a semitone above one's pianoforte. If anyone doubts the fact that the whole question is one of musical memory, and is inclined to think that this 'absolute' feeling is somehow born in him, may I suggest the following line of thought? We are all born without the power of imagining any sound, or indeed anything else. All musical sounds, or rather all the vibrations, which give us the sensation of sound, are produced by instruments, including our own voice. It follows from this that any musical imagination we may develop is derived from sources outside ourselves. We bring nothing into the world with us in the way of music. All we can bring is a brain fitted to acquire a sense of sound if opportunity arises. The instruments which have created all our music certainly have no absolute standard of pitch, so it is equally certain, to me at any rate, that such a thing cannot possibly exist.—Yours, &c.,

J. ARTHUR CLEGG.

'Pensarn,' Malvern Link.

SOLO-SINGING AT COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVALS

SIR,—The present arrangements under which scores of competitors all sing the same song are boring to judges, audience, and competitors. Can we improve them? Attempts are made in some senior classes (by giving the competitors absolute choice of song, or a modified choice) to introduce a certain amount of variety, but this throws a great strain on the judge. He has frequently to select winners from a large mass of competitors singing different songs, sometimes in different voices.

The interest of the audience is to hear as many different songs as possible, well sung. The interest of the judge is to decide a simple issue, such as 'Is A better than B?' not 'Is A better than the rest of the alphabet?' The interest of the competitors is to get as much skilled criticism and encouragement from the judge as they can. The winning of prizes is, or should be, secondary, for if they heed the criticism they will in time win the prizes. Can these three interests be reconciled? Yes, by adopting the 'Cup-Tie' or 'knock-out' system of competition, which would work as follows.

Suppose the (convenient) number of sixty-four competitors entered for a class. With the receipts for their entrance fees they would receive an intimation that they would be expected to have ready five different songs of their own choice. This would not be a great hardship, as very few competitors at musical festivals have a répertoire of less than five songs. They would send in the list of songs in the order in which they desired to sing them.

When the competition day came the sixty-four would be drawn in pairs, and would each sing the first song on the list. The judge would select from each pair the winner and the loser. The thirty-two losers would be handed their mark-sheets, and could go home. The thirty-two winners would then be drawn in sixteen pairs, and would sing the second song on their lists. The judge would again select winners and losers from each pair, and the sixteen losers would receive their mark-sheets. Similarly the sixteen winners would be reduced to eight, and then to four semi-finalists, to two finalists, and to one winner.

The first prize would go to the winner of the final, the second prize to the loser of the final, first-class certificates to the four semi-finalists, and second-class certificates to all competitors securing more than a certain number of marks.

Some interesting and useful rules might be introduced. For instance, holders of second-class certificates in that class in previous years might be excused the preliminary round, while holders of first-class certificates might be excused two preliminary rounds. Semi-finalists and finalists might have to sing from memory. In the event of a tie in any round a 'sight-test' might be called for to settle it.

Now let us consider the three different interests. The audience would listen to a varied concert, steadily increasing in quality and in excitement. The best competitors would get the most criticism. The judge would find that in nearly all cases he could judge between two candidates with fairness, and if he honestly thought they were equal the sight-test would settle the issue. The atmosphere of boredom which surrounds many musical festivals would be removed.—Yours, &c.,

E. R. SCOVELL.

Beaconsfield.

[There is much in Mr. Scovell's scheme. Perhaps some experienced Festivalites will let us have their views—briefly.—EDITOR.]

A WORD FOR STRICT COUNTERPOINT

SIR,—The review of the books on counterpoint by Dr. Kitson and Dr. Pearce, which review was largely a defence of strict counterpoint, and the subsequent letters by Mr. Spanner and Dr. Pearce, have all been of interest to this far-off reader. I should like to add a humble voice in the praise given to the 'dismal science.' (Dismal it never was to me, first as a grand-pupil, then as a pupil, of Dr. Pearce.)

I believe thoroughly in all that has been written as to the value of strict counterpoint as mental discipline, training in the resources of one key, and so on. Besides this, there is a practical value which I have noted during years of work in accompanying choirs. The passages which are ungrateful to ordinary singers are invariably those in which the strict rules of melody are ignored. Such passages are worth working over if some special dramatic effect is the result, but in most cases there seems no reason for their presence, except the bad excuse that the composer was ill-trained or negligent.

Strict counterpoint is a gymnasium where genius is not crippled, but strengthened, and where the man of mere talent learns to be at least efficient.—Yours, &c.,

16, Shepard Street, Cambridge, Mass., U.S.A. H. LOUISE BURCHELL.

WHY NOT AN ENGLISH OPERA?

SIR,—The Corporation of London has decided to expend £500 on the production at the Guildhall School of Music of—an opera by a living British composer? Oh, no!—Flotow's 'Martha'! What a waste of money in mounting such an old-fashioned work, when so many interesting new operas are neglected! There is Mr. Dunhill's 'Enchanted Garden,' which won a Carnegie prize, published, but not performed; Mr. Herbert Ferrer's 'Penelope' (most interesting to listen to on the wireless); Cyril Scott, and Josef Holbrooke, obliged to seek German aid, and so on. What other country in Europe would so misapply such a sum? What has Sir Landon Ronald to say about it; would he not rather choose some deserving British work?—Yours, &c.,

Guernsey. JOHN MATTHEWS.

ORGAN MUSIC 'CONVEYED'

SIR,—I should be glad to know if any of your readers have by chance come into possession of copies of organ music bearing my name, as I have during the past few months lost a considerable quantity from the Parish Church at Dewsbury, where I hold the post of organist and choir-master. The music consists of a number of bound volumes, and also single copies, and has apparently been stolen with the idea of selling it to some one in the profession.—Yours, &c.,

C. C. DAWSON.

Oak Dene, Savile Town, Dewsbury.

BRITISH MUSIC IN NEW ZEALAND

SIR,—For those of us out here in New Zealand who are engaged in the work of furthering the interests of music generally, and especially amongst the school teachers, students, and children, it is a difficult task to create a real interest in British music. The wave of enthusiasm which has spread over England for the work of early English composers, and for the work of those who to-day are bringing the Home Country once more to the forefront, has hardly reached this country. It is not yet realised here that conditions have changed at home, and that British composers and British musical institutions are doing work of which any country might be proud.

A start has been made, however. At public lectures the gramophone is proving invaluable as a means for bringing the music of Holst, Vaughan Williams, John Ireland, Frank Bridge, Joseph Holbrooke, and many others to a first hearing, and some of the easier and shorter choral works are being done by a musical society here and there.

But in too many places there is incredulity. Many of our people left England in the days before the present renaissance had started; in those days when England still looked to the Continent for everything musical.

It is true that we have a liberal share of concerts given by various Continental artists; but as these performers usually limit their choice of music to about a score of well-worn works which have already been heard ad nauseam, it is perhaps too much to expect of them that they should include some of the outstanding modern British works in their programmes.

Visits by British artists bringing with them exclusive programmes of British music are sorely needed. Could not the British National Opera Company, the English Singers, the choir of St. John's College, Cambridge, two or three of our leading pianists and violinists, and one of our best orchestras, start a series of tours through the Dominions for the purpose of showing distant parts of the Empire that British music past and present is something of which to be proud?

There is a very real enthusiasm for music in New Zealand. The excellent work initiated by Mr. Douglas Tayler, the Government Adviser in Music, is already bearing fruit in the schools. It is no uncommon occurrence to hear children singing English folk-songs and shanties in the streets, and it seems to be the favourite recreation of students in certain centres.

It is sincerely to be hoped that something may soon be done on the lines suggested above.—Yours, &c.,

T. VERNON-GRIFFITHS
(Conductor, Royal Christchurch Musical Society).

Flat 2, 365, Montreal Street,
Christchurch, New Zealand.

THE LATE EATON FANING'S DEGREE.

SIR,—In your obituary notice of Eaton Faning, one sentence reads as if Cambridge had conferred the Degree of Mus. D. honoris causa. Faning graduated in the usual way, and I well remember his telling me that the only question put to him by Stanford in the 'Viva' for Mus. B. was: 'How many barrel-organs do you meet, as a rule, between your house and the station?' (This was in 1893, when Faning was Director of Music at Harrow, and his brother was Chaplain at King's College.) He said that he was quite unable to answer the question, but no others were asked! As a matter of fact his examiners were either former pupils or colleagues of his at the R.C.M.; rather a comical situation!—Yours, &c.,

JOHN IVIMEY.

Marlborough College, Wilts.

EAR TROUBLE.

In our November number a correspondent wrote in regard to an aural defect which made certain notes sound excruciatingly out of tune. He asked for advice from his fellow-readers. On the eve of going to press we learn that his case has attracted the attention of a well-known London doctor, who happens also to be a musician. As a result we are glad to be able to promise that an article on the subject will appear next month.

BIRTH-DATE OF VINCENT WALLACE

SIR,—In your December number (p. 1117), Mr. Algernon Ashton says that Vincent Wallace was born on June 1, 1814. But there is documentary proof—in fact, the baptismal certificate—to show that the date was March 11, 1812.—Yours, &c.,

'OLD MORTALITY.'

Kensal Green.

A QUESTION OF AGENT

SIR,—In the list of subjects for the Royal National Eisteddfod of Wales, to be held at Treorchy in 1928, a statement is included to the effect that Messrs. J. & W. Chester are the agents of Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel.

I am now informed that the accredited and sole agents are the British & Continental Music Agencies, 125, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.C.2, and shall be obliged by your giving this correction due prominence in your paper.—Yours, &c.,

W. P. THOMAS
(Hon. General Secretary).

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Vocalist (lady) wishes to meet lady pianist for mutual practice. One evening a week. Must be a good sight-reader.—Miss N. ROBINSON, 14, Belsize Crescent, N.W.8.

Lady wishes to meet accompanist for difficult songs. Fortis Green, N.2, district.—M. R. K., c/o Musical Times.

Lady (contralto) wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. West-End studio or N. London.—E. H., 90, Tottenhall Road, Palmers Green, N.13.

Experienced violinist (young gentleman) wishes to join other musicians for mutual practice. Brixton district.—N. F. H., c/o Musical Times.

Second violinist wishes to join string quartet. Inexperienced, but capable reader.—A. B., 85, Grant Road, Battersea, S.W.11.

Contralto, accustomed to part-singing, wanted to complete mixed-voice quartet. Good sight-reader preferred. N. or N.W. London.—QUARTET, c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman pianist and accompanist wishes to meet instrumentalist or singer for mutual practice. Has spare time mornings.—H. F. LING, 33, Nightingale Road, Harlesden, N.W.10.

One or two baritones and basses required to complete party for practice of male-voice glees, quartets, &c. S.E. district. Also gentleman pianist who would act as accompanist.—GLEES, c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. London district.—G., c/o Musical Times.

Lady viola player seeks practice in chamber music. Streatham or neighbourhood preferred.—ALPHA, c/o Musical Times.

Violin and viola players wanted to complete string quartet for mutual practice. Tuesday and/or Thursday evenings. Good library available. Ilford district.—LLOYD, 22, Kingswood Road, Goodmayes, Essex.

Sharps and Flats

I heard Melba and Caruso sing; the fuss that is made over stars of the stage makes one wonder how such stupidity can exist amidst the great learning and civilisation of London.—The Maharajah of Burdwan.

From the critic's point of view the Albert Hall is excellent, for even if you do come a little late, you are still in time for the echo.—Carl Saerchinger.

Opera is finished! Consider America—only two opera centres there—Chicago and New York. Paris has two theatres for opera; Germany, well! . . . . Sir Thomas Beecham, I admire him, and I do hope he will succeed in this country with his scheme; he is a great man. But the young composers—opera has no future for them. A symphony concert and a recital, so, so. But opera, no, it is of the past; the people want it no longer.—Alfred Cortot.

I do not wish Sir Thomas Beecham any harm, but I hope he will not get his 2*d.* a week. Why continue to nourish the dreadful thing? Grand opera is like nothing on earth, or, I sincerely hope, in heaven either. Its preposterous conventions outrage both Truth and Reason. Why perpetuate them? Why keep it alive?—F. B. J. Sharp (Savage Club).

Like the sacred fires of classic myth, the spirit of Wales is a flame bearing in it an essence of godhead which no human machinations can quench. It is a flame which will burn in my heart until I die. So I cannot leave Wales—ever.—Leigh Henry.

. . . Beethoven's 'Sonata Appassionata,' a fine composition, which, though somewhat lengthy, is never inclined to jar by reason of the remarkable runs and trills . . .—Lancashire Paper.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The two outstanding happenings of last month were the orchestral concert at Queen's Hall and the Review Week. The former important event once again emphasised the high standard attained by the Academy orchestra. I have written elsewhere of the all-round excellence and enthusiasm of the strings, but should like to repeat that this excellence and enthusiasm were not confined to two or three desks, as so often occurs in better-known organizations, but extended from first to last. The concert began with a first-rate performance of the 'Rienzi' Overture, and even better still and more remarkable was Liszt's 'Les Préludes.' I was much impressed by the tone of the 'cellos. Sir Henry Wood is to be congratulated on the results of his hard work, and it was pleasant to see his smile of pride at the applause of the large audience. He gave up his baton to four student-conductors in Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, and a very good job they made of it. It was apparent that each of these young men had the score in his head—indeed, one ventured so far as to dispense with it altogether. Of the soloists, Miss Hilda Bor played the first movement of the Beethoven Concerto in G exceedingly well. She is a pianist with a real sense of rhythm. Miss Joan Coxon sang a Mozart aria. Her voice, if on the small side, is pretty. Miss Valetta Iacopi sang with much dramatic power Parry's 'Wilt thou take vengeance,' from 'King Saul.' This young lady promises well, and so does Mr. Wilfred Miles, his contribution being a good performance of 'Sound an Alarm.' Review Week is a great institution, and once again proved a success from both the instructional and entertainment points of view. Among the celebrities who lectured were Mr. St. John Ervine ('Youth and the Arts'), Mr. Harold Craxton ('Pianoforte Playing'), Mr. Herbert Withers ('Some Aspects of Chamber Music, the Literature and Players'), Prof. Campagnac ('Mind and Music'), Mr. Frederick Keel ('The Singer's Technical and Artistic Equipment'), Prof. Rankine ('The Use of Light in the Reproduction of Speech and Music'), Mr. Wilton Cole ('Elocution, Some Hints on Performance'), Prof. A. M. Hind ('Rembrandt'), Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell ('The Military Band'), Mr. W. H. D. Rouse ('The Nine Muses'), and Mr. Hugh Crichton Miller ('The Creative Temperament and the Philosophical Outlook'). A representative and all-embracing list. The week quite appropriately wound up with a performance of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' by the students' choir and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Read. Ten singers were concerned in the solo parts, and generally it may be said that they displayed ability and intelligence. The young lady who sang 'Prepare thyself' is a good Bach vocalist. Mr. Read inspired his forces with fine vigour, and the performance was marked throughout with great vitality. Duke's Hall was crammed, even beyond the doors. The students' chamber concert on November 16, was interesting if only by reason of the inclusion in the programme of compositions which may be called 'house products,' an excellent scheme. Three songs by Sybil Barlow, an ex-student, showed originality, and this is especially true of 'The Call of the Piper'; they were well sung by Miss Jessie Hewson, who has both a good voice and clear diction. Freda Robertson, a student, was responsible for three songs, of which 'Come, Oh come, my life's delight' was outstanding. they were sung by Miss Barbara Pett-Fraser, who has a promising voice, and the composer was at the pianoforte. A young viola player, Mr. Herbert Powell, gave an excellent performance of a Fantaisie on a Folk-Melody by Greville Cooke. This composition leaned towards the commonplace. On December 5, Miss Winifred Copperwheat, a very good viola player, and manifestly one of Mr. Lionel Tertis's students, played a movement of a Sonata in D minor by John Ticehurst, also a student. It is a promising effort, and Mr. Ticehurst was very fortunate in his interpreter. At the same concert Dvorák's 'Biblical Songs' were exceptionally well sung by Mr. James Topping, a pupil of Mr. Thomas Meux. He has a pure tenor voice of power and quality, and, furthermore, uses his head.

It is of interest to record that Mr. John Barbirolli, who took Sir Thomas Beecham's place as conductor (and moreover proved himself a most efficient substitute at the London Symphony concert on December 12), was an Academy student, and studied the violoncello under Mr. Walenn. F.

The following awards have been made: Sainton-Dolby Prize (soprano) to Jean E. Kemp (Glasgow), Grace Reynolds being highly commended, and Jessie Hewson and Irene G. Morden commended. Battison Haynes Prize (composition) to Ivor R. Davies (London). Hubert Kiver Prize (organ) to Edward Power Biggs (Westcliff), Douglas L. Hawkridge being highly commended, and Cyril J. Mitchell commended. Rutson Memorial Prize (baritone or bass) to Robert Alva (London), Ronald Cliff being commended. Rutson Memorial Prize (contraltos) to Valetta E. Iacopi (Gateshead-on-Tyne), Phyllis Browning-Turner being very highly commended, and Freda Townson and Margaret Hale highly commended. R.A.M. Club Prize (composition) to Freda Robertson (London). Philip Leslie Agnew Prize (male pianists) to Eric Brough (London), Robert O. Edwards being commended. Fred Walker Prize (contraltos) to Freda E. Townson (Bolton). Hine Gift (composition) to E. John Palmer (Westgate-on-Sea). Charles Lucas Prize (composition) to Robert O. Edwards (London), Frederic Jackson being commended. Potter Exhibition (male pianists) to Yelland Richards (Leighton Buzzard), Frederic Jackson being very highly commended, and Eric Brough and Guy Baron highly commended. Westmorland Scholarship (female vocalists) to Freda Rich (London), Phyllis Edmundson being highly commended. J. and J. Brough Prize (flute) to Thomas E. G. Walker (Stoke-on-Trent).

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The last Patron's Fund Rehearsal of the term gave a hearing to two works by British composers—a Concerto for strings (David Evans) and a Symphonic Poem, 'The Optimist' (Herbert Bedford). These compositions, happily contrasted examples of youth and maturity, made a very favourable impression, Mr. Evans's modernity serving as a foil to the more equably balanced manifestations of Mr. Bedford's ideas. Opportunity was found at the same rehearsal for the performance of Liszt's 'Hungarian Fantasia' by Miss Millicent Silver, a pianist of considerable attainment and promise for the future.

Of the numerous recitals and concerts given during the last fortnight of the term it is not possible to write in detail, but certain performances invite notice. Special mention should be made of Miss Audrey Piggott's success in Elgar's 'Cello Concerto and of Miss Jean Cotton's performance of a 'Fantaisie' for pianoforte and orchestra by Aubert, at the last orchestral concert. Among students' compositions of interest performed during the term were a cycle of Scottish Songs arranged for vocal quartet, and a North-Country Suite for orchestra by Mr. Jeffrey Mark, the first-named proving highly attractive and planned on excellent, if somewhat sophisticated, lines.

For some time past the Teachers' Training Class has had under its care, both for individual lessons and for classwork, some sixty junior exhibitioners of the College chosen by examination from the L.C.C. schools. These small students gave striking evidence of their progress under the tuition of the Training Class by giving a morning concert at the end of the term with a mammoth programme of some thirty items, at the close of which Mr. R. Jacques inveigled the audience, 'one and all, both great and small,' to join in community singing, the parents being quite outclassed by their offspring.

The College has to mourn the decease, within a few days of each other, of two members of its teaching staff, Mr. Daniel S. Wood, the flautist, and Mr. Charles Turner, the timpani player. Mr. Wood, an old scholar of the College, and one of the most distinguished pupils of the late W. L. Barrett, whom he succeeded as Professor of the Flute, had been connected with the College as scholar and professor for nearly forty years. It is no exaggeration to say that in his profession he was among the best beloved of his fellow men; kindly and generous in thought and deed, he lived for his art to the end, to a degree that is rare among those who find their enthusiasm sapped by the routine of concerts, teaching, and the stress of a busy professional life. Possibly, but for his persistence in fighting against ill-health and his determination to fulfil his obligations, he might be with us to-day. But his lion-hearted loyalty to his art and his profession were his undoing, and a short illness, manfully endured, brought the end all too soon.

Mr. Turner was perhaps not so well known as his colleague, but many will remember him as a familiar figure in most of the orchestral concerts of note for many years past, and will recall the tributes of admiration accorded him by the Continental conductors under whose direction he played.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Michaelmas term ended on December 10, finishing another successful year in the history of the College.

The usual terminal concert was given at Grotrian Hall on December 1, when the choir and chamber music classes acquitted themselves in a manner that evoked high appreciation from a large audience.

At the orchestral concert at Queen's Hall the College orchestra performed the 'Rosamunde' Overture (Schubert), Symphonic Poem, 'Vltava' (Smetana), and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, under the conductorship of Mr. Joseph Ivimey. A somewhat novel item was the singing of vocal duets by the Misses Barbara Young and Hilda Maple.

Miss Edith Pope, who sang 'O Don Fatale,' by Verdi, Miss Myra Cohen, who played Mendelssohn's 'Capriccio Brillante,' and Miss José à Beckett in the Max Bruch Violin Concerto, were exceedingly well received.

The forthcoming term commences on January 9. The inaugural address to students is to be given by Mrs. Mary Davies. Opportunity will be taken to present prizes, medals, and diplomas gained during 1927.

The Board has conferred Honorary Fellowship on the following professors at the College: Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Maud Winter, Mr. Joseph Ivimey, Mr. Ludwig Lebell, and Mr. Dawson Freer. The Honorary Licentiateship (L.T.C.L.) has been conferred on Mr. Louis Mennich, local secretary of the Brighton centre.

Two oil paintings have recently been acquired, one of Handel, by Hudson, the other of Dr. Croft, by Sir Godfrey Kneller. These pictures will be of great interest to students of 18th-century music.

Mr. Beck Slinn, a former scholar at the College, and now a member of the examining staff, has recently been appointed organist at St. Nicholas's Church, Aberdeen.

Dr. E. F. Horner has been elected Dean of the Faculty of Music in the University of London, and also, appointed by the Senate, an examiner for degrees in music in the same University. Dr. Horner has been re-appointed examiner for degrees in the University of Birmingham, and visiting-examiner at the Birmingham and Midland Institute School of Music.

TONIC SOL-FA COLLEGE

The eightieth birthday of Mr. Leonard C. Venables was made the occasion of a presentation from the Council of the College. The gift consisted of a H.M.V. gramophone and a set of records, with an address signed by the President, Sir Henry Hadow, testifying warmly to the valuable services rendered by Mr. Venables during fifty-four years as a member of the Council, twenty-eight years of chairmanship of the executive committee, and as an examiner for thirty-six years. Reference was made also to his fruitful labours as lecturer, conductor, and author.

MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF TO-DAY

A paper by Mr. Clement M. Spurling, on 'Music in Public Schools of To-day,' with special reference to his work at Oundle, opened the fifty-fourth session of the Musical Association at Central Hall, Westminster, on November 8. Mr. Spurling said that progress had been going on steadily in our public schools for many years, and in this forward movement music had not been left behind. Some people seemed to think and talk as if it had; but, as a fact, the place that music held in most public schools, the amount of time given to it by boys, and the importance attached to it by almost every one connected with our schools, were most striking.

There were people who said that boys should be given and should hear only the best music; that it was a crime to allow them to hear bad music, and that it must be our constant endeavour to keep it from them. There were other people who said that you could not expect boys to like or appreciate the really great music—that it was beyond them, that it was over their heads, that they would take no interest in it, and would become bored by it. Neither set of people were really right. In the speaker's opinion, it was not possible to put all music in two distinct compartments—the one good, the other bad. There were degrees of quality which could not be defined so sharply. It was sometimes stated that it was the plain duty of music-masters in schools to prevent boys from hearing any music but the very best: and that they should wage perpetual war against the silly, vulgar dance music, and against the boys who liked it, or played it, or practised it—for unless they did so, the musical taste of the future generation would be deplorably lowered. People who wrote and spoke after this manner had very little faith in the discriminating powers and the good taste of boys.

The only certain way of getting boys to appreciate the best music was to let them—if they so wished—hear all kinds of music, in order that they might learn the difference between what was good and what was worthless, and to let them choose between the right and the wrong music. When this was done, they invariably chose the right music every time. They learned to get satisfaction and pleasure from the good, whilst they became 'fed up' with the rubbish. It was no use in anything where boys were concerned to practise the ostrich-like attitude. It was impossible to avoid this silly music, since it was encountered at every turn—in theatres, cinemas, and restaurants, and even at some concerts. If when boys came to school they showed a preference for feeble music, let them learn it, learn to play it well, and take pains over it. It was his (Mr. Spurling's) own custom to do so, but in such cases he always drove a bargain and insisted that when they had got all they could out of the vulgar, sloppy stuff, they should learn something of his choice, good but not necessarily classical, and spend as much time and pains over that. They would invariably realise that the time spent over the stupid piece had been less profitable, and the time spent over something good was better worth doing.

To give an illustration. In the autumn of 1922 it came to his knowledge that certain boys had brought back to school some jazz instruments and were practising together surreptitiously. He made them come out into the open, had them given proper instruction, and helped in it himself. They had to give a public performance, at which quite a high state of efficiency was shown. All this time, these same boys were either singing or playing in the B minor Mass, so that they were constantly comparing the two works throughout the term. The next term no more was heard of the jazz band, nor ever since. But this year, after Christmas, some boys had started orchestral practices on their own, and seized upon Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March and Grieg's Norwegian Dances.

Give boys a chance, trust them, put before them the big masterpieces, get them to take part in them; they would very soon realise that they were wrapt up in a big thing, and interest and enthusiasm would soon be kindled. Have confidence in them, show them that you have faith in them, let them see that you thoroughly believed they were capable and they would respond to you as no one else on earth would respond. Boys loved the excitement of joining in something big; they liked nothing better than tackling a difficult piece of work when they were working at it all together and when they were properly led. Trust the mind and taste of a boy, and he would invariably plump for beauty and sincerity if he was properly guided and led. Let boys take part in great works. Don't ask them merely to listen; that in itself was not sufficient; they must join in somehow. They would soon like it, and appreciation would follow.

In order to give all boys a true foundation of good taste, and in order to show them what good music was made of, we must at all costs teach them some suitable Bach and Beethoven. If music-lessons were to be of real value, every lesson must be an appreciation lesson, intimately comparing the right and the wrong music, minutely analysing the good and the poor. At the same time we must not make the mistake of for ever and always trying to make people understand good music. We must be more content with allowing them simply to enjoy it. Understanding and study were not an essence of enjoyment; one was not a corollary of the other. Ear-training and sight-reading were the most important parts of anyone's equipment, if they were to get the fullest enjoyment and use out of music. If more attention and ordinary common-sense were bestowed on these two subjects, boys and others would be all the better musicians.

At Oundle School the choir numbered about three hundred out of a gross total of five hundred and seventy boys, but every boy in the school had a copy of whatever music was sung in the Chapel, every boy sang in every part of the service, and that was one of the ways in which he learned to read music. Whole-hearted singing was expected, and, if necessary, insisted upon. The wrong notes of the few did not matter in the least among the right ones in so large a number of voices.

The Choral Society consisted of about two hundred and fifty boys. During the Lent and Summer terms various short works were learned. In the Michaelmas term the whole time was devoted to the choral work which the school was studying. It was at these practices that consciously and subconsciously the boys laid a sure foundation in reading music. It was here that many boys who did not know whether they cared about music or no, because they had never been given a chance of taking part in it, learned to love enthusiastically and intelligently the greatest treasures of art. Boys must be led to appreciate what was good in music. It was not enough to point to music and ask them to become listeners. They must take a part, however small, in something big, a something worth listening to,; the full meaning of the music and its message would then be reached. Place great music in their hands, give them the opportunity of taking a real intelligent part; don't tolerate mere careless following, and they would gain first a little interest, then a little knowledge, and later real appreciation and keen enjoyment.

The music classes at Oundle embraced the study of music as an art and as a language, in addition to ascertaining the connection between music and history. Primarily composed entirely of volunteers, the growth had been such that there were now several forms of boys taking the subject in set times in school hours, generously given by the headmaster. Each member of the form had a simple text-book, and with a plentiful supply of gramophone records and scores, together with the aid of a 'Duo-Art' pianoforte, the necessary equipment was complete. Some individual research was called for from the older members of the classes. Concerts were given to the boys, and the works to be heard were made as familiar as possible by means of illustrated talks upon them. The importance to boys of various ages, and whilst at school, of hearing great music well-interpreted by the best artists was obvious.

'THE CORONATION OF POPPÆA'

Readers of the Musical Times have already made the acquaintance of Monteverde's 'L'Incoronazione di Poppæa' in the critical articles of Mr. R. L. Stuart and Mr. J. A. Westrup, whose joint labours made possible the production of the opera by the Oxford University Opera Club from December 6-10. It is hardly necessary to say more about the opera itself than to record its dramatic quality in performance, the presence in embryo of almost every element which has since won devotion to the art of opera, and the balance of these many elements in a proportion which only a mature artist could have commanded. It is a first-rate drama of real life, set forth in an excellent text, set in its turn to rapidly moving music, which leads naturally to outstanding scenes that give to the producer as well as to the composer and the performers scope for their several arts.

Tributes in the daily press to the production and the performance were inevitably inadequate, since the opera itself demanded full discussion. The stage setting was as rich in effect as it was simple in design. Three steps led to a dais in the shape of an irregular pentagon on the left side of the stage, which was curtained. Curtains screening half of the stage were sometimes used, and the lighting gave sufficient variety to every scene. There was therefore no need for changes of scenery, and Mr. Michael Martin-Harvey, the producer, showed the greatest resource in providing an imaginative setting with the greatest economy of material. Production as an art in itself still has inadequate recognition in this country, but it was gratifying to observe modern ideas being put to good use and accomplishing exactly the kind of thing that was wanted.

The score requires only first and second violins, basses, and cembalo, which meant in performance a dozen strings and pianoforte. These forces were not really quite adequate. A warmer tone from the strings, especially since there were no violas, would have added to the sensuous beauty for which Monterverde had so much feeling. Ideally a harpsichord is needed to give its unique sparkle to orchestration of this type and period—the pianoforte sounds too dead and becomes monotonous. Mr. Westrup, who directed the performances in the ancient manner, partly conducting, partly playing the pianoforte, contrived, however, to get what was possible by a bold style of treatment of the figured bass.

The singing of the undergraduate members of the cast showed an improvement on last year. Diction was excellent throughout and delivery was bolder. Some of the voices, e.g., the two Roman sentries, had not the solidity one would expect of war-tired veterans, and the madrigal of Seneca's pupils was distinctly anæmic, but against this must be set the most admirable performance of Mr. Evernden in the part of Amor. A vigorous start was given to the opera by the Prologue, in which Amor discomfits Fortune (Miss Marie Howes) and Virtue (Miss Dorothea Webb), who are having a lively altercation. Miss Webb, whom we know as a thoughtful singer of Lieder, showed unexpected dramatic abilities, and appeared to be quite at home on the stage. Miss Denne Parker's presentation of the wronged Empress, Octavia, was a study that could not have been bettered. Her voice lends itself to the portrayal of dramatic situations and strong emotions, and her appearance was that of a Roman matron to the life. As the Nurse, Miss Hylda Garnette was not made up to look old enough, but her singing of the part had style. The name-part was taken by Miss Dorothy Augood, whose voice, either by nature or wrong production, was much too acid for so voluptuous a part, and her manner of singing too much that of the musical comedy stage to be suitable for opera; but her characterization and acting made her a worthy partner of Mr. Sumner Austin (Nero), who, as always, made everything alive whenever he was on the scene. Mr. Grisewood sang the important rôle of Seneca with dignity, and Mrs. Bertha Phillips that of Drusilla with charm and sweetness, as was required of them. Mr. Stuart has a good voice, which he uses very well, but not much feeling for acting, so that he hardly showed the full force of the conflict in Otho's breast. Miss Nesta Truman, as the maid-servant in the delicious little intermezzo, has a pretty voice, and promises to be a good singer. There was not much for the ballet to do, but Mr. Martin-Harvey used them as supers, with whom he made some strikingly beautiful groups. F. S. H.

BRITISH NATIONAL OPERA COMPANY AT GOLDERS GREEN

'MANON' IN ENGLISH

The Company opened its season on November 28 with Massenet's 'Manon,' newly translated and now performed by the B.N.O.C. for the first time in London. The translation disappointed. It was too scrupulously fitted to the musical line, at the cost of spontaneity and naturalness in the lighter and more colloquial phrases. The grotesque English of many opera translations is a great handicap to opera in English. It sounds comic, and reminds the audience of Gilbert's parodies.

Mr. Eugène Goossens, sen., conducted. The playing was not quite neat or even accurate enough. But the choral singing was excellent, and in fact the chorus maintained throughout the series of performances a good quality of tone and dramatic sense. The tenor, Mr. Heddle Nash, scored a success. He is a small man with a light voice. We beg him not to try to make it a 'great' voice. It is delightfully musical, and there are but few of the men in the B.N.O.C. who could not learn something from his free and full-throated production. In the more playful moments Mr. Nash lacked ease and finish as an actor, but in the tender and passionate music he seemed a born singer. It is amazing to find him reproached, in some quarters, for 'forcing.'

The Manon, Miss Marguerite Anderson, was graceful, but her bearing was too shy and maidenly for the part. Her middle voice was pretty. She must learn to 'cover' her upper notes. Mr. Percy Heming's Lescaut was excellent. He is both actor and true singer, and a great support to the Company.

Mr. Aylmer Buesst conducted 'Valkyrie' on November 29. The orchestra could give us little more than a sketch of the score, and some Wagnerians would say that in such conditions the opera were better omitted from the repertory. There was, however, a houseful, largely of young people, who were no doubt learning their Wagner and so being led to go on in due time to more ambitious productions.

The interest of the performance lay in Mr. Horace Stevens's Wotan, which was truly distinguished. He bore himself with great dignity, and sang well—at times, as in the earlier part of Act 3, very finely indeed. For Wagner-singing his mezza-voce was hardly significant enough. A fault of detail was the extreme narrowness of his o vowel in such words as 'holy,' which failed to carry. Mr. Stevens is a great acquisition to the Company.

Miss Ancrum's Brünnhilde was stately, but her voice lacked the power and concentrated sonority wanted by the music. She seemed a too tender and yielding Valkyrie. Miss Rachel Morton as Sieglinde had a pleasing but hardly a commanding voice. She would do better not to open her mouth so wide on narrow words. She habitually distorted the vowel in 'grace' and 'day.'

Mr. Walter Hyde, the Siegmund, sang with art, but with less ardour and variety than we have sometimes had from him. Miss Constance Willis, Fricka, sang boldly and freely. Only there might at times have been more subtlety of phrasing. Mr. Norman Allin's deep and dark tone was valuable in Hunding's music.

'FIGARO'

'Figaro' was a very pretty spectacle, thanks to the Beecham scenery and the fitness of the looks of the performers to the parts. Only Mr. Herbert Langley was excessively boisterous and simple for Figaro. We could not believe that Almaviva would have tolerated such a great, cheery fellow as this for his valet. Figaro must surely be small and obsequious, and under all his vivaciousness a trifle disillusioned and sad. Mr. Langley's Figaro belonged to Fielding, not Beaumarchais.

'Aida' was handsomely staged, and the chorus sang admirably. The men gave us a mellow quality of tone rarely heard (notably in Scene 2). The whole performance was acceptable. Mr. Heming's Amonasro stood out for its dramatic force. The Aida, Miss May Blyth, had fair qualifications for the great part. She had at least started on the right way. Her voice was of good volume and was used aright, but her singing wanted development and intensity. There was a stately Amneris in Miss Clara Serena, who had, too, the voice. Often we wished her attack and her intervals to be cleaner, but it was a most promising performance. The tenor, Mr. Parry Jones, was a rough diamond. He won admiration by his plucky and competent tackling of a great number of different parts, but his voice, naturally a vigorous and resonant organ, was too seldom used to the best effect. Only at some moments were we given a hint of the warmth of which it might always be capable if he sang with a steady breath-control and fully opened throat.

'The Barber of Seville,' on December 2, was very gaily and entertainingly performed. Nothing shows off the B.N.O.C. to greater advantage. Mr. William Michael as Figaro was droll and spirited. Miss Licette was Rosina and Mr. Nash the Count.

In 'Carmen' we heard a newcomer, Miss Elsie Boardman. It was courageous for a quasi-amateur to undertake a part which has provoked failure after failure. Of course it was too much for her, and yet she was by no means out of the picture. In particular she sang charmingly. Her tone flowed, and the quality always pleased the ear. As an actress she was best in Act 1. She was a vivacious Carmen, plucky and likeable, but the sensuousness and the spice of dark devilry were lacking. Some details in which Miss Boardman was clumsy could be put right with a little coaching.

The Don José was Mr. Tudor Davies, whose voice we persist in admiring while persisting in the belief that there are possibilities in it that he has never realised. Is it Caruso's example which has led him to this kind of choked and gulping production? Certain phrases, for all that, rang out with splendour. Miss Doris Lemon sang Micaela and Mr. Langley the Toreador.

'THE MASTERSINGERS'

'The Mastersingers' suffered from much the same disabilities as 'Valkyrie.' Mr. Shanks's Sachs lacked weight and richness. A most delightful performance was given of David by Mr. Nash. It was a surprising but a very successful stroke of casting. To get David so done, with fun and impishness in the acting and with such musical singing, was a rare experience. Mr. Michael's Beckmesser was very clever.

This same talented artist and disappointing singer (disappointing, because he insists on roughly misusing a voice of splendid possibilities) was the life and soul of an excellent performance of 'Gianni Schicchi.' On the next night he sang Wolfram in 'Tannhäuser' in a leaden way. The Tannhäuser was Mr. Parry Jones, who did his best work of the season in Act 3, and the Elisabeth Miss Rachel Morton.

In 'The Magic Flute' Miss Noel Eadie sang the Queen of Night's formidable music very prettily. Miss Licette was successful in Pamina's beautiful G minor song, but elsewhere she might have done better by taking more care to avoid a weak tremolo in her upper range. Mr. Parry Jones was Tamino and Mr. Michael the Papageno. Mr. William Anderson's fine voice told well in 'Isis and Osiris,' but was for some reason unsteady in the beautiful E major song. The second bass, Mr. Bernard Ross, had a fine voice of which we wanted to hear more. C.

'THE LEPER'S FLUTE'

The B.N.O.C. performed Mr. Ernest Bryson's opera 'The Leper's Flute' for the first time in London during its recent two weeks' season at Golders Green Hippodrome. It is an opera so good in some respects, so promising in others, that one sincerely hopes Messrs. Ian Colvin and Ernest Bryson will 'carry on'—Mr. Colvin with a keener eye for the needs of his collaborator, Mr. Bryson with a wider appreciation of the possibilities of the stage. Some very significant additions have been made to the opera since it was given at Glasgow last year; they occur in the third Act. This remains the weakest part of the work, but some of the additions hold the seed which to us seems to promise most for a future venture. The opening of the Act is not well conceived. Mr. Bryson meant, no doubt, to produce a 'realistic' effect by the discordant cries (uttered ad lib.) of the vendors in the market-place, accompanied by a quaver pattern in the orchestra. The orchestra suggests music, the stage crowd the spoken word, but the two do not combine. The additional matter shows a stronger grip of dramatic style. Dominique's song (also new), however, is a concession to popular taste which so discriminating a composer as Mr. Bryson should not have made. There is no harm in a thoroughly popular opera, and there is no reason why Mr. Bryson should not write one. But then it would have to be consistently popular in character. 'The Leper's Flute' cannot be turned into popular opera by the inclusion of facile, lively tunes. These could only repel those whom the quiet, dignified grace of the rest attracts.

The performance was careful and adequate on the part of Mr. Tudor Davies and Miss Constance Willis, most admirable on the part of Mr. Percy Heming. F. B.

THE BRISTOL OPERA SEASON

The short season of opera given at the beginning of last month at Bristol deserves notice for three excellent reasons. In the first place it is encouraging to find that the public gave more generous support to the enterprise in 1927 than it did in 1926. In the second place this was an attempt to abandon the well-worn route and strike out in a new direction. Mozart's 'Così fan tutte' and Stanford's 'The Travelling Companion' are not in the usual repertory. Lastly, the performances, apart from occasional flaws due mainly to inevitable circumstances, showed a degree of intelligence and skill far above the average. There is no need to go into details in respect of the Mozart opera, interpreted by the same company which played it in 1926. 'The Travelling Companion,' on the other hand, cannot be dealt with in so summary a fashion, since the opera is little known, and has never been given so far in a vast theatre with all the scenic apparatus it demands. It represents Stanford's last work for the stage, written at a time of life when other problems than those of the theatre are apt to beset the musician who is also a thinker. To this we would attribute the excessive seriousness, if not the gloom, of certain pages. It begins rather badly. The Prelude, although well written, insists on the lofty morals of the story; its tone of dark, heavy brooding is wholly unrelieved by contrasting elements; it stands for darkness and nothing but darkness. The play for which it should prepare us deserves something different. It has a moral lesson, but tucked away in the last corner, so that before we reach it we have to pass through scenes of a diverting and thrilling character. And Stanford has done justice to these as to the serious scenes. But while in the play the balance is even, in the music it hangs on the wrong side. It would be interesting to see how the omission of the Prelude might restore it. There is such a thing as a last straw. We also believe that a re-arrangement of the scenes would help to keep the interest alive. There is no point in having an interval while only a few hours are supposed to pass between the two scenes in the courtyard of the Palace, nor should an interval be necessary between the slaying of the ogre and the claiming of victory. Once the ogre is dead we know what is going to happen, and it seems unwise to give us time to discover it and to communicate our discovery to our neighbours. These alterations do not imply changes in the score, and the orchestral description of the Princess's flight (beginning with a trumpet phrase which seems written for that purpose) would stand as an entr'acte.

At Bristol, well-designed scenery and the capital singing above all of Messrs. Steuart Wilson and W. Johnstone-Douglas suggested that the opera has far greater merit than we thought possible after the first, hardly adequate, performance in Lancashire. F. B.

NEW BAX SONATA

The first public performance of a new Pianoforte Sonata by Arnold Bax was given at the Liverpool Centre of the British Music Society on November 18, Miss Harriet Cohen being the pianist. Mr. Bax is having a great innings at the moment, and though we have yet to measure ourselves with his chief orchestral and choral compositions, a considerable amount of his chamber music has been played latterly at Liverpool. The general features of his style are thus fairly well-known—its rich polyphony, its melodic fertility, and its decorative arabesque: finally, its spreading, proliferous form. The new Sonata, which is cast in three extended movements, has these general characteristics. The first movement, though an essential aspect of the more recent Bax, is harmonically rather drastic in places. Its emergence from a kind of elemental chaos to a condition of restless striving, though intellectually plain enough, was not completely convincing at a first hearing—it is, perhaps, none the worse for that. The slow movement has haunting beauties: the wealth of Bax's native melody and his shimmering harmonies, so remote from common things, are here full of poetic suggestion. The sudden introduction of a quasi-folk-tune in full flower has the effect of a homely plant in a conservatory of exotic blooms. It was at a first hearing the only thing that seemed not entirely inevitable in this very lovely movement. As to the last movement, it has some enchanting rhythms, but gave the impression of being less organic than the others. It is odd that while Mr. Bax is the most difficult of contemporary composers to pin down under a formula, the succession of his works tempts one always to look for the typical Bax in them. That is, perhaps, the instinctive tribute one pays to his individuality as a stylist.

The Sonata, which bristles with difficulties, was brilliantly played by Miss Cohen. It was not merely a feat of imagination to comprehend the extraordinary subtlety of much of the writing, but a masterly display of keyboard technique into which the orchestral suggestion of so much of Bax's pianoforte work entered powerfully. A. K. H.

SCHÖNBERG AT PARIS

BY OUR PARIS CORRESPONDENT

The presence of Arnold Schönberg in our city may be considered as significant of the international spirit in musical relationship which is nowadays readily fostered in the main countries of Europe as well as in the United States. At Paris, Schönberg has won fame, admiration, and recognition more easily than in his native Vienna. His first presentation to the public at large occurred some four or five years ago, when the late André Caplet, at the head of the Pasdeloup Orchestra, conducted the 'Five Pieces for Orchestra' with no more than moderate protest on the part of the public. When this is compared with what had been going on at Vienna ever since 1898, the attitude of the Parisian concert-goer may be defined as fairly comprehensive and open-minded. Music of Schönberg's later period was given three years ago, when Darius Milhaud conducted, at two successive concerts, 'Pierrot Lunaire,' with Madame Marya Freund as reciter and singer.

These isolated performances could give us no sufficient hold on Schönberg's art as a whole. Besides, there was considerable doubt among musicians as to the propriety of accepting some of the master's more daring harmonic and contrapuntal methods. Most of the latter, however, had already been adopted here, and rashly used by some of the younger composers, whose motto seems to be 'ever ahead' at all costs. So far, therefore, as musical audacity is concerned, the public was duly prepared to meet the test. The first Schönberg concert took place in the big Pleyel Hall, on December 8, with the Colonne Orchestra. The composer conducted. The audience was of select Paris society, and included many official personages, foremost among whom was M. Painlevé, the Minister of War. The programme consisted of the two Chorale Preludes of Bach, scored for large orchestra by Schönberg; the 'Dove's Recitative,' from the 'Gurre-Lieder'; the symphonic poem, 'Pelleas and Melisande,' Op. 5; and 'Pierrot Lunaire,' described as melodramas composed of three times seven poems by the poet Albert Giraud, the music having been originally written to the German text of O. E. Hartleben. From this German text a second French setting was made by Mr. B. Mechin, so that the poem as given at this concert was the result of two successive translations.

There is little to be said about the first item of the programme. Some of Bach's Chorales range among the highest summits of music, and their discreet and masterly amplification as realised by Schönberg can only reveal to us in a more imposing degree all that is monumental and still very human in the Cantor's art. The 'Gurre-Lieder' form a work for soli, chorus, and orchestra, the text being by Jens P. Jakobsen. It belongs to the first period of Schönberg's production, and was composed almost entirely between 1898 and 1900. The symphonic poem, 'Pelleas and Melisande,' was finished in 1903, and performed two years later at Vienna, under the direction of Gustav Mahler. In both these works Schönberg proves to be endowed with a lyric and deeply fervid nature, expressing itself in the accepted musical language of its environment at the time, namely, post-Wagnerian tradition as developed mainly by Mahler. The 'Dove's Recitative,' from the 'Gurre-Lieder' is a beautiful piece of music of a dramatic character, pregnant with noble emotion and belonging to the harmonic world created by the second Act of 'Tristan.' Chromaticism is often mitigated by thematic melodies of considerable amplitude. Though proceeding from the same æsthetics, 'Pelleas and Melisande' marks a big step forward, and well nigh exhausts the possibilities of polyphonic writing within the sense of a most enlarged tonality. On this subject it is interesting to quote Egon Wellesz, a pupil of Schönberg and author of a study on the master's art. 'This work,' he says, 'is one of the most polyphonic that has ever been written; it is astonishing to remark the infinite tissue of themes, framed in contrary voices, imitated by themselves, and combined in a marvellous melodic thread. Thus, the scene of the tower has no less than five themes proceeding in numerous imitations of themselves. Certain instrumental effects are of an unheard-of boldness: such is the terrifying glissando of the horns in the scene of the cavern.' So far as boldness is concerned, it is a relief for the critic to note that the advanced public at Paris is by now well trained to the mark, and is no longer upset by any terrifying effects produced by horn glissandi or by any other instrumental prowess. There is little to be gained by setting up any comparisons between Schönberg's Symphonic Poem and Debussy's opera on the same subject, but it may be said—as many are inclined to think—that by trying to prove too much Schönberg has risked a weakening of his argument. Notwithstanding this reservation, 'Pelleas and Melisande' received a hearty welcome. It may be considered as one of those powerful works which, along with Stravinsky's 'Rite of Spring' and some minor items of similar character, constitute typical examples of dynamism in music.

With 'Pierrot Lunaire' we are in the presence of a fully worked-out specimen of Schönbergian composition of the later period. The large orchestra gives way here to a few solo instruments, namely, the pianoforte, flute (or piccolo), clarinet and bass-clarinet, violin, viola, and violoncello. In each of the twenty-one poems the composition of the performing group varies within these limits. The melodic lines, after having rid themselves of any romantic tint, behave all through the work with an independence little short of unfettered fancy. Counterpoints weave around each other networks of musical tissue, that can be analysed by or interpreted from no pre-established point of view. On a pianoforte reading of the score there may be many a passage that is incongruous with the musical sense even of quite advanced musicians. But when the instrumentalists get hold of their parts, when the vocalist begins her arduous task of giving the text half-way between singing, declaiming, and simply speaking, there hardly comes a note that may be cruel to the ear or repulsive to the sense of expression, if not of music. It should, nevertheless, be frankly admitted that so far as music itself is concerned it is as yet difficult for many to make sense of Schönberg's music. The human being must reduce to his own sense of the relative any sensation that comes upon him from the outside world. While listening to 'Pierrot Lunaire' this sense is painfully strained and is often completely at a loss. While as yet profoundly distrustful as to the future fecundity of the musical æsthetics practised by Schönberg, we need not hesitate to admit that 'Pierrot Lunaire' hits its mark inasmuch as it aims at interpreting instrumentally the sonorous impression made on the musician by Albert Giraud's poems. Such a statement falls little short of proclaiming this work as a masterpiece in its own, and we fear, very limited kind. Whether it will remain such for many still living, or for those to come, is open to question.

Madame Marya Freund won unanimous admiration for her singing of the 'Dove's Recitative' in the 'Gurre-Lieder,' and especially for her ineffable performance of the vocal part in 'Pierrot Lunaire.' Schönberg conducted the excellent Colonne Orchestra with subtle and nervous precision, and made a success of his first visit to Paris.

PETRO J. PETRIDIS.

London Concerts

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Brahms's B flat Pianoforte Concerto and Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony, both comparatively out-of-the-way works, composed the Philharmonic concert, conducted by Oskar Fried, on November 17. Arthur Schnabel, a very fine specimen of the intellectual pianist, took up the defence of Brahms, and to such effect that the Concerto might have been one of the gayest and most triumphant in the repertory, instead of one of the most subdued (not to say low-spirited)—to judge by the audience's signs of pleasure.

The 'Faust' Symphony is a celebrated historical monument. Because of its importance and its associations it can be listened to with interest, whereas if it were not by Liszt it would surely be with Kaikobad. Its musical relations are Berlioz and Meyerbeer—a baroque family. It is well to be broadminded, but where are you without convictions? See the mixture of Gothic and Renaissance on the west front of Milan.

Then there is the Goethean chorus at the end—'Woman is man's redeemer.' Is it just a compliment, a 'Your eyes are lodestars'? No, but much more—a philosophy, a rule of life, on which the German equivalent of 'The Divine Comedy' and of 'Paradise Lost and Regained' is built. One has read up the idea, but has forgotten just how it is maintained, and one is always meaning to make sure of it again. Anyhow, it belongs to that class of poetry which, like puns, loses all sense in translation; but the B.B.C. choir and Mr. Walter Widdop exposed it in peculiarly unconvincing English.

A question which arose in the course of the Symphony, but which ought in all decency to be marked private and confidential, was whether Liszt was really good at composition. If he was, why did that long first movement seem to stick and so often have to be flogged? It is always going to begin but never actually gets going. How comes it that Wagner can with:

Ex. 1.

assert unanswerably that labour can achieve and life have a meaning, whereas Liszt with:

Ex. 2.

leaves us still waiting for his real reason and justificatory word? C.

The concert on December 8 exemplified the sound sense of giving a new work a chance by including in the programme a 'star' turn. The first performance in England of the seventh Symphony of Sibelius thus took place before a large audience, many (perhaps most) of whom had come to hear Casals. For them the Sibelius was plainly hard fare. In fact, it was not easy for anybody; music of this tough, stern sort needs several hearings before one can get on friendly terms with it. But even a first acquaintance showed its strength. It is good to find a composer making no hint of concession, either to popularity or to any of the fashionable modes in contemporary music. He neither toys with mediævalism nor flirts with Muscovy. One is left with an impression of a downright personal utterance. Sincerity is a ticklish quality to talk about in connection with music; there are enough fakes and successful imitations to make us wary. But if ever one felt safe in describing a work as sincere, it was on this occasion. It had an excellent performance, but its reception indicated puzzlement, politely expressed. The enthusiasm was reserved for Casals, who played exquisitely the Dvorák Concerto, and in response to the insatiables, an unaccompanied Bach Suite (which served them right). The programme included also Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Busoni's Tanz-Walzer, and the Granados-Wood Three Spanish Dances. Sir Henry Wood conducted so finely that he may be forgiven the over-garish scoring of the last item. H. G.

BERLIN PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

A good deal of extra-musical interest attached to this event (Queen's Hall, December 2). It was the first post-war visit of a German orchestra—or, indeed, of any considerable German musical organization, and the entry of the first member of the Orchestra started a series of welcoming noises that developed into an ovation when Fürtwangler appeared. Not a doubt of it—the hatchet was being buried. The programme was designed, naturally, for the maximum of show with the minimum of risk. But even so, the 'Tannhäuser' Overture was a poor choice for the wind-up. The 'Meistersinger' would have given greater scope, without the marked drop in musical interest. The remaining items could hardly have been bettered—the 'Freischütz' Overture, Brahms's second Symphony, and 'Till Eulenspiegel.' There were a few uncertain entries at the start of the Weber; the Symphony was beautifully finished; and 'Till' had the performance of a life-time. The 'Tannhäuser' Overture ended with a 'gallery' touch, the brass ('bells' up) blazing out the Pilgrim theme in a way that roused the enthusiasm of ninety per cent. of the audience. The other ten kept their head and regretted the drowning of the rest of the orchestra. Fürtwangler's actions are many, and mostly his own; he is a conductor to see—until one begins to wish for a quieter method. He has an eloquent left hand, but it must always be doing something. Not a chord can be held for more than a beat without calling the fingers into action. Music is full of the equivalents of the minutiæ of language: it is as if a writer should underline all his conjunctions and prepositions. He is prone to drag and sentimentalise, too. Something of his physical exuberance has been caught by many of the orchestra. Solid and stolid players there were, who threw the flamboyant into relief. The 'cellists—especially the leader—swayed and drew sweeping Suggia-like bows; and, above all, the cymbalist prefaced every crash with a full-width spread of arms. 'O ye millions,' he seemed to say, 'O ye millions, I embrace you'—woosh! The large audience grew more and more enthusiastic as the evening proceeded—slowly, for the concert began late, and the intervals were long. The corridor at half-time echoed with comparisons to the detriment of English players. Yet, from an orchestra of repute, playing under its accustomed conductor a programme of familiar things, a less admirable performance would have been a surprise. Our own Philharmonic Orchestra, in two concerts under Wood, has lately given us something more of a feat by its capital all-round playing of unfamiliar works, especially in a Sibelius Symphony and in some Mahler songs. However, an English audience, always a bit short of genuine critical sense, can hardly be expected to weigh things on an occasion such as this. Enthusiasm at the end was emotional and unbounded, one wildly applauding lady leaving her seat and as good as Prancing (there is no other word) before the platform. On the following Sunday, at the Albert Hall, the Berliners were again acclaimed, in a badly chosen programme that included Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on a theme of Tallis, which ought to have been played at Queen's Hall instead, and Beethoven's first Symphony—which seemed quite ill-suited to the occasion. H. G.

PHILHARMONIC CHOIR

The B.B.C. Choir's performance of Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus,' which was the first in London, came in for severe criticism, but that of the Philharmonic Choir under Mr. Kennedy Scott, at Queen's Hall, on December 14—the first concert performance here—was of a festival standard. The work makes an immediate impression by its picturesqueness and passion. It is a cry from the heart, painful and angry. Although Kodály is admired by Mr. Cecil Gray, his Psalm will affright no one. In fact, it has just the qualities of spontaneity and exotic colour that Dvorák's admirers will take to. There is a limp in the principal tune, which may become rather trying with familiarity. Mr. Steuart Wilson sang the important solos excellently.

The choral Antiphon from Vaughan Williams's set of baritone hymns made a fine opening to the concert. Dame Ethel Smyth conducted two of her shorter choral pieces. Then came Brahms's Requiem, under Mr. Kennedy Scott. The choir was in fine form. All that was lacking to make a performance of the greatest distinction was for the conductor to forget that he had been choirmaster, and to give the music its freedom. A certain nervous fussiness in his beat just took the edge off the listener's pleasure. The baritone, Mr. George Parker, was out of tune, and unprepared for Mr. Scott's tempi in the first solo, but recovered later. The soprano, Miss Gladys Currie, sang 'Ye who now sorrow' with a purity and steadiness that are uncommon. With a rather more definite shaping of the words, her performance would have been beyond criticism. C.

HAROLD BROOKE CHOIR

This small and highly-disciplined body gave an interesting concert on December 14, in the hall of Bishopsgate Institute—a medium-sized hall of fine acoustic properties, to which concert-givers might well turn their attention. Musicianship was everywhere apparent—in the choice and arrangement of the programme as well as in performances which often showed distinction of phrasing and interpretation.

The first half of the programme was devoted to small choral works. Some part-songs by Pearsall were followed by some songs with harpsichord, sung by Stuart Robertson; and Holst's Six Part-Songs for female voices to words of Bridges were sung with real insight and sense of the beauty both of words and music Pearsall's eight-part (the original) setting of 'In Dulci Jubilo,' showed that if little had been sacrificed in re-arranging for four voices, the little was of real significance.

An abridged version of Purcell's 'King Arthur' completed the programme, and the music must have been a revelation to many listeners (in the full sense, for the work was broadcast). It is splendid stuff, full of vitality and beauty, with some exhilarating rhythmical touches.

The choir sang well and with contagious enthusiasm. As usual with small choirs, such faults as crept in came with the attempt to get big effects. These we all know. But the prevailing impression was that of a keen, musical, finely-trained choir.

Mr. Harold Brooke was well backed up by a small string orchestra led by Mr. Harry Idle. Mrs. Margaret Hodsdon played the harpsichord, and the soloists were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss A. L. Hargraves, Messrs. William Webber (alto), Roland Jackson, and Stuart Robertson. T. A.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY

To Mr. Arthur Fagge is due the credit for reviving an oratorio which, applauded perhaps too noisily on its first appearance, has been too soon forgotten. Sir Walford Davies's 'Everyman' is not a second 'Dream of Gerontius,' but it has qualities of its own which cannot be ignored. The music is not dramatic, and this spells weakness, for the theme is the most dramatic the thought of man can imagine. It was tremendously dramatic for the writer of the mystery which forms the libretto of the oratorio. We are pretty sure of a tossing in crossing the bar, and no artist can gain anything by ignoring it. On the other hand, Sir Walford Davies has a tender and almost mystic touch which becomes well those parts of the poem in which we are made to realise that after the stress there are, beyond, the vast calm waters of an unbounded ocean. At any rate, these parts conveyed an impression of depth and sincerity which were realised in the performance of the chorus and soloists. F. B.

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY: AN AMERICAN WRITER'S IMPRESSION

Fortunate for the Royal Choral Society that it had for a first number Brahms's 'Requiem.' Fortunate, I say, because after an unexpected and unannounced postponement from the previous week, after beginning the concert ten minutes late, after all the fog had come in to hear, too, and after the joy of sitting in those chairs of the Inquisition provided in the balcony, only so profound and moving a work could have introduced the mood of music.

Comment on the 'Requiem' would be superfluous. Fortunately it is apparently heard often in London, as it is in New York. The chorus did particularly good work in Part 3, 'Lord, make me to know the measure of my days upon earth,' in which also Miss Stiles-Allen sang the soprano solo with a fine, clear tone. In the first part, 'Blessed are they that mourn,' the chorus and orchestra did not agree, but this seemed less due to the singers than to sharp tuning of the instruments, especially the flute. Perhaps flutes don't like fog. Mr. Balfour did not wholly solve the very difficult problem of orchestra-chorus conducting. Maybe we shall some day have to have two conductors for such works, with synchronised beating, for certainly the technique which serves well with the chorus—and this Mr. Balfour has—is not nearly precise enough for the orchestral passages.

The chorus, in my opinion, did better work with Mr. Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' which the composer conducted admirably. Possibly because it is less melodic, and with dissonant progressions, the chorus paid more attention to its business! The orchestra was rather lost under the weight of two choruses and a half-chorus. The part-writing for the voices is very interesting. We are long past the stage to-day of any alarm at dissonance. Our judgment must be based on what the composer does with his material. To me, on first hearing, the most beautiful part is the two plain-songs which appear in the introduction. These offer splendid material for development. But the work is rather short for such elaborate division of choruses. Of Mr. Holst's extraordinary ability, this work is ample evidence.

As in New York, the audience deserves its share in the criticism—and seldom gets it. Perhaps with our eight-and-six we purchase immunity. There is the young lady who hums vigorously during the interval after the Brahms, when all we ask is silent contemplation. There is the neighbour who nudges her companion and whispers when Mr. Holst uses a chord with a minor ninth. And then, of course, there is always Me turning the leaves of my score during the number—and writing incompetent criticisms afterwards for competent listeners!

LEONARD ELSMITH.

THE B.B.C.

The B.B.C. has been blamed for devoting too much time to the classics, and also for not giving them all that is due to them; it has been held responsible for the inferiority of the apparatus of the listener-in; it has been censured on a variety of trifling points, but never for the one heinous offence it has committed, and goes on committing: for this corporation, with all its assured and conspicuous wealth, has given and is giving us the worst orchestral performances ever heard in London. Last year their six trombones at the Albert Hall proclaimed an utter lack of artistic sense and judgment. This year at Queen's Hall they have assembled an orchestra which sounds as if it were composed in great part of 'substitutes.' Sir Landon Ronald does not lack energy and determination. But even he could not overcome the listlessness of the players. No doubt some of them are men of distinction, willing and anxious to do their best. But whether the B.B.C. knows it or not, one incompetent man, one sluggard, is enough to make unanimity impossible in the strings; one ill-tuned wood or brass instrument throws the whole out of gear. They played Weber and Schubert. Madame Suggia played Boëllmann's Variations. F. B.

CASALS AS CONDUCTOR

The L.S.O., in engaging Pablo Casals to conduct one of its concerts, made sure of a good audience. It is a natural thing to wish a man who distinguished himself in one capacity should attempt something new. It is the next best thing to doing something unusual ourselves. Moreover conducting, like 'cello playing, is music, and there was a reasonable hope that Casals should make a good job of it. The L.S.O. concert proved pretty conclusively that training and circumstances cannot be disregarded with impunity. Casals, by training a 'cellist, tried—and tried vainly—to get from the orchestra something like the sweetness of tone, the clearness of execution, which characterise his own performances. Had he used the time at his disposal in testing different tempi his good taste would have told him that his own were hopelessly wrong. His misreading of Brahms's 'St. Anthony' Variations can only be explained by the circumstances in which the soloist works. Any amateur who had heard the usual, accepted version of the Variations could not but notice how dull the work sounds when played at a funereal tempo. If Casals did not see it, we must ascribe it to the fact that soloists in the green room do not know what is happening on the platform. His tempi were slightly less erratic in Beethoven's seventh Symphony and Strauss's 'Don Juan.' F. B.

JOHN BARBIROLLI AND THE L.S.O.

Sir Thomas Beecham was prevented by an accident from conducting the London Symphony Orchestra's concert on December 12. Mr. John Barbirolli, hitherto unknown on the Queen's Hall rostrum, stepped into his shoes at short notice—a piece of daring on the part of a young man, for the Symphony of the evening was nothing less than Elgar's in E flat. But Mr. Barbirolli proved himself to have the self-confidence of ten.

The performances were a succession of brilliant improvisings. A young man who can pull off such an event should go far. Judged without allowances, Mr. Barbirolli's Haydn was brutal and his Elgar a torrent. Pablo Casals gave us the only serene moments of the evening, in his Concerto. But the young conductor let no one go away without knowing that he had talent, audacity, and a remarkable will of his own. It is good that youth should now and then be allowed its fling. The world in general is all too much in the hands of middle age. C.

THE TUDOR SINGERS

It was a surprising and regrettable fact that the Tudor Singers after their successful concert of last year had only half a hall full at Æolian Hall on December 9. They are an enthusiastic band of a dozen amateurs and semi-professionals who individually possess good voices but are not all fully-trained singers, whose ensemble, however, is as good as one could wish. Their programmes are always extremely interesting, and on this occasion contained several motets and madrigals by Weelkes, and one or two liturgical pieces by Taverner and Whyte. Mr. Cuthbert Bates, the conductor, 'has a concern,' as the Quakers say, for these and the other early Tudor composers who have not shared fully in the revival of the Elizabethans. They are certainly worth hearing, but the Sanctus from Taverner's 'O Michaell' Mass revealed strength and weakness mixed, a fine vigorous and spacious opening leading into some rather diffuse counterpoint. But though we may not always get the sure touch of the composers of the golden period, we should be glad to hear more of this early music from these same singers, whose intelligent and artistic interpretation makes everything they do, from Robert Whyte through Byrd to Vaughan Williams, a pleasure to hear. Mr. Steuart Wilson and the Robinson String Quartet contributed some Elizabethan songs, and Vaughan Williams's 'On Wenlock Edge' cycle, with string accompaniment, so completing a programme that consisted, except for one Italian Motet by Nanini, entirely of English vocal music. F. S. H.

ARTHUR SCHNABEL

Arthur Schnabel if a pianist unlike any other. One is conscious in listening to him of a powerful and original mind revealing unsuspected meanings and complications in music as familiar as Brahms's Intermezzi and Beethoven's 'Waldstein' Sonata. His tone is as a rule dry in anything above a piano, but a sudden touch of the pedal will sometimes irradiate it, while in his pianissimo he has an endless variety. He played to a full house at Grotrian Hall for the Pianoforte Society on November 20, and appeared less like a pianist playing music than like a scientist who discourses on a fascinating subject.

F. S. H.

ISOLDE MENGES AND HARRIET COHEN

It is good to see among our first-rate violinists and pianists a growing tendency to give joint recitals. Clearly the general public approves; and the musician to whom solo programmes are not often attractive can count on hearing a good proportion of unhackneyed and important works. Isolde Menges and Harriet Cohen joined forces on December 16 with the happiest results, drawing on three B's—two of the established ones, with Bax as a worthy third. Bax, in fact, seemed to be the 'draw.' His Sonata in D, placed between that in G of Brahms and Beethoven's No. 10, caught both late-comers and early-goers. And although the playing was fine throughout, there seemed an extra pinch of excellence for Bax. D. H.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Of the four soloists who appeared at the concert given on December 3 by T.C.M. students, the most interesting was little Miss Jose à Beckett, who played the second and third movements of Max Bruch's G minor Concerto. It would be idle to pretend that her performance was note-perfect, or that she did justice to all aspects of Bruch's music. Some passages were distinctly more finished than others. The lovely melodies of the slow movement obviously made no deep impression on the player; and her style, such as it is at present, is by no means free from questionable points. But little Miss à Beckett is none the worse for this. Experience has proved again and again that fruit that has quickly ripened does not necessarily taste better than other, and the infant prodigy is not unlikely to end a disappointed adult. We liked the young violinist's playing just because it is natural and unaffected; because it has nothing of that passionate urgency which can only come by rights with experience; because it was pure in conception and neat in performance. Properly guided along the hard road that avoids the tempting oasis of popular success and applause, Miss Jose à Beckett should in time develop into an intelligent, gifted, and sensible violinist. B. V.

Several choral concerts took place round about our press days—too late for this number (and too early for the next), e.g.—those of the Oriana Choir (Christmas music, with folk-dancing by the E.F.D.S.); the Railway Clearing-House Choir, conducted by Mr. John E. West (an excellent programme of male-voice music by Morley, Wilbye, Vaughan Williams, Dvorák, Stanford, Parry, and Grieg's 'Landerkennung'); the combined forces of the London and Alexandra Palace Choral Societies in 'The Messiah,' at the Albert Hall, conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham; and the Royal Choral Society's concert of carols, &c., conducted by Mr. H. L. Balfour.

The Faversham Institute Philharmonic Society, with chorus and orchestra of about a hundred, gave 'Elijah' in the Parish Church on December 15, conducted by Mr. W. J. Keech. The solos were sung by members—Miss Q. Hopkins, Miss D. Jordan, Mr. F. P. Richards, and Mr. Herbert Dobbie.

Music in the Provinces

ATTLEBOROUGH.—At the Town Hall, on November 22, the Norwich Chamber Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Cyril Pearce, played a Purcell Suite, Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite, Handel's twelfth Concerto Grosso, and three folk-tunes arranged by Rutland Boughton.

BARROW.—Among the works sung by the Barrow Madrigal Society, under Mrs. Bourne, on November 24, were Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Weelkes's 'On the Plains,' Parry's 'Tell me, O love,' Cornelius's 'O Death, thou art the tranquil night,' and Colin Taylor's 'In the warm blue summer weather,' for female voices. The Ackerley Trio from Bradford played chamber music.

BATH.—At a recent Pump Room concert the orchestra played Liszt's 'Les Préludes' and Foulds's 'Celtic Suite,' and Mr. Gordon Stanley, a Cornish tenor, made his debut.

BEDFORD.—The Musical Society opened its sixty-first season with a concert of small choral works, among which were Bach's 'Praise the Lord all ye heathen' and Charles Wood's 'Honour, Glory, and Laud.' Mr. H. J. Colson conducted.

BIRMINGHAM.—The principal event of the late autumn was a performance, much to be admired in many ways, of 'The Apostles' given by the Festival Choral Society and the City Orchestra on November 17. The solo singers were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Gladys Palmer, Mr. Steuart Wilson, Mr. Stuart Robertson, Mr. Roy Henderson, and Mr. Arthur Cranmer. Dr. Adrian Boult conducted as long as his strength permitted (he has recently been suffering from a serious illness), and then gave his place to Mr. Graham Godfrey, the chorusmaster. Dr. Boult has been ordered to spend two months in Egypt for the sake of his health, and is expected to return to his professional work by the end of January. His work was taken up by Mr. Joseph Lewis on November 27, when the City Orchestra played Elgar's 'Polonia' and German's 'Theme and Six Diversions.' On December 1, Sir Landon Ronald conducted a programme that included Elgar's 'Falstaff,' of which he gave a brilliant and sympathetic interpretation. Mr. Robert Casadesus played a Pianoforte Concerto in D of Mozart. Mr. Joseph Lewis again conducted the City Orchestra on December 4, when the programme at the West-End Cinema included Dvorák's fourth Symphony.——Beethoven's Mass in C was performed at the Town Hall, on November 19, by the Midland Musical Society, under the direction of Dr. E. Darby.——A new sacred cantata, 'A Psalm of Praise,' by Joseph H. Adams, was given for the first time on December 3, the performers being the Choral and Orchestral Association, four soloists, and the composer as conductor. The work is pleasantly written in a style and idiom that flourished at the end of last century, and imposes no difficulties upon singers or listeners.——Various chamber music programmes have given opportunities for hearing Debussy's Quartet, Trios by Arensky (D minor) and Schubert (E flat), a Quartet Allegro by Rimsky-Korsakov, Tchaikovsky's first Quartet, and harpsichord solos played by Mr. Michael Mullinar.

BLACKBURN.—The Orchestral Society, numbering eighty players under the direction of Mr. E. Romaine O'Malley, played Beethoven's third 'Leonora' Overture and Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony, on November 22.

BLACKPOOL.—The Choral and Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Percy M. Dayman, gave 'Elijah,' with well known soloists, on November 17.

BOGNOR.—At a concert given by Mr. Miroslav (violin), Mr. Josef Holbrooke and Mr. Norman Demuth (pianists), the programme included a 'Habanera' for two pianofortes by Mr. Demuth, Reger's Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Beethoven, also for two pianofortes, and Mr. Holbrooke's Violin Concerto, 'The Grasshopper.'

BOLTON.—Bantock's 'Sappho' song-cycle was sung by Miss Stephanie Baker at a concert given by the Bolton Musical Artists' Association.——The choir of the Philharmonic Society contributed Bruch's ''Neath the Throne of Mercy' and Bainton's 'Ballad of Semmerwater' to a miscellaneous concert.

BOSTON.—The season's programme of the Choral Society under Dr. J. Bernard Jackson's direction includes a chamber concert, 'The Messiah,' 'The Seasons,' and Mozart's G minor Symphony.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Percy Godfrey's fourth Symphony, performed for the first time in 1926 by the orchestra of the Royal Marines, was given by the Municipal Orchestra under Sir Dan Godfrey, at a Thursday Symphony concert. ——Ravel's 'The Tomb of Couperin,' Glazounov's sixth Symphony, and Brahms's fourth were the features of the next three programmes.——A Cyril Scott and Frank Bridge recital was given at one of the fortnightly concerts of the local branch of the B.M.S.

BRADFORD.—Parry's 'The Vision of Life' was performed by the Bradford Old Choral Society on November 16, the soloists being Miss Flora Woodman and Mr. Harold Williams. Mr. Wilfred Knight conducted.—— The Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Malcolm Sargent, gave Holst's 'Hymns from the Rig Veda' and, with Miss Margaret Balfour as soloist, Brahms's Alto Rhapsody.—— At the Subscription concert on November 18, the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty, played Beethoven's fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini,' and, with Mr. Gaspar Cassado, Dvorák's B minor Violoncello Concerto.——The Leeds Symphony Orchestra came to the Theatre Royal on a Sunday and played the 'Cockaigne' Overture and 'Pathetic' Symphony, under Mr. Julius Harrison.——The programme of a Delius evening by the British Music Society included the Sonatas for violin and for 'cello, and a number of songs.——The New Choral Society, under Mr. George Firth, gave an all-English programme on December 10, the features of the programme being 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' the 'Lady Radnor Suite' (conducted by Mr. Chalmers Park), and other works by Parry.——On December 11 Mr. John Goss and the Cathedral Quartet gave a programme for the Philharmonic Society.——At the third Subscription concert an interesting programme, including a Mozart Divertimento, was given by fifteen players of the Hallé Orchestra under Sir Hamilton Harty.

BRIGHTON.—'Israel in Egypt' was performed by the Harmonic Society under Mr. Percy Taylor on November 19. ——The Sussex section of the Southern Railway Musical Society sang male-voice part-songs, including Coleridge-Taylor's 'Viking Song,' on December 3, Mr. Arthur Richardson conducting.——Two meetings of the Sussex Women Musicians' Club were devoted to a lecture-recital by Miss Eleanor Wilkinson on old keyboard music—with illustrations played on an 18th-century harpsichord and on a clavichord—and a Brahms programme.

BRISTOL.—The Philharmonic Society opened its season on November 19 with an orchestra of sixty-six and a choir of a hundred and seventy under the direction of Mr. Arnold Barter. The chief event of the evening was a well-considered performance of Elgar's second Symphony, in which the orchestra showed its good qualities. Grieg's Concerto was played by Mr. Frank Merrick. The choral numbers were Handel's 'Hark, how the woods' (from 'Atalanta'), Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Gibbons's 'What is our life?'——A well-chosen programme, given by the Bristol Ladies' Choir, under Miss Florence Bradfield on December 5, included Colin Taylor's 'Slumber Songs of the Madonna' and Geoffrey Shaw's 'How far is it to Bethlehem?'——The audience joined in the 'Hallelujah Chorus' when the Choral Society gave 'The Messiah' under Sir Herbert Brewer on December 10.——About two thousand children came to the Central Hall on December 9 to hear Mr. Maurice Alexander's amateur orchestra in a programme that included Beethoven's fourth Symphony. ——A new operetta, 'The Secret of Castle Dangerous,' by Dr. C. W. Pearce was performed, with the help of a small string orchestra, by the children of the Royal School for the Blind, under the direction of Mr. A. H. James.——A notice of the opera season is given on p. 67.

BURY.—The first concert of the Bury Athenæum Musical Society was given on November 15. Mr. Baguley Waters conducted the choir of eighty voices and the orchestra in Rachmaninov's Choral Prelude, 'Weep no more,' and Bach's 'Peasant Cantata.' The ladies of the choir sang Hamerik's 'Harvest Dance.'——Mr. John Goss gave a recital on December 6.

BUXTON.—Foulds's 'Celtic Suite' and Suppé's Overture 'The Wanderer's Goal' were among the works played at a Pavilion Sunday concert.

CAMBORNE.—The first two movements of Beethoven's ninth Symphony and the 'Emperor' Concerto were played by the Cornwall Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Charles Rivers. The pianist was Mr. Frank Laffitte.

CAMBRIDGE.—A large audience heard the Philharmonic Society chorus sing Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' at the Guildhall.——During the week ending November 19, the London String Quartet played all the Beethoven Quartets.——A note on the performance of Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus' will be found on p. 75.

CARLISLE.—Holst's Fugal Concerto for flute and oboe, four Scarlatti pieces, and Beethoven's 'Ritter' Ballet Music were in a recent programme of the Cumberland Orchestral Society. Mr. Tom Clay conducted.

CHESTER.—The Catterall and London String Quartets played at the Refectory on December 5 and 12.

COLCHESTER.—At Moot Hall, on November 15, the Colchester and District Musical Society, conducted by Mr. W. F. Kingdon, performed 'A Tale of Old Japan,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and the Gloria from the B minor Mass. The accompaniments were played by a local orchestra, with assistance at the organ.

COVENTRY.—The concert version of 'Carmen' was given by the Choral Society on November 17, with accompaniment supplied by the Musicians' Union Orchestra and a pianist. Mr. John C. Potter conducted.

DERBY.—At the concert organized by the Derby and District Organists' Association, the Derby Co-operative Choir sang 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' Parry's 'My soul, there is a country,' and other works, under the direction of Mr. F. J. Stevenson.——The whole of 'Hiawatha' was given by the Choral Union on November 29, with Miss Doris Vane, Mr. Walter Glynne, and Mr. Roy Henderson as principals, and Sir Henry Coward conducting.

DISS.—The concert version of 'Carmen' was given by the Choral Society under Mr. W. H. Aldrich on November 29. The principals were Miss Faith Hooper, Miss Diana Trevanion, Mr. Frederick Steger, and Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, who also sang Bach's 'O'er mountain and valley.'

DORKING.—The Madrigal Society and the Orchestral Society combined to give an excellent concert under Mr. Henry Wardale, the principal work performed being 'God's time is the best.'——A week before this the Lener Quartet had played for the Music Club.

EASTBOURNE.—Mozart's 'Requiem' was sung by the Choral Union at St. Saviour's Church under the direction of Mr. J. R. Dear.——At the Devonshire Park concerts, Capt. Amers has conducted Rimsky-Korsakov's third Symphony, a Paganini Violin Concerto (with Melsa as soloist), and de Falla's 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain.'

HALIFAX.—Beethoven's Mass in C and Bach's Magnificat were sung to good effect on November 24, by the Choral Society, under Dr. A. C. Tysoe. The Leeds Symphony Orchestra assisted and took part with Miss Kathleen Frise-Smith in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto.—— The Orchestral Society numbered over fifty players for a performance of Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, under Mr. J. N. Bates.

HARLESTON.—The Harleston and District Choral Society, which gave no concerts last year, resumed work under Mr. G. W. Ritchie with a performance of Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden.'

HASLEMERE.—Beethoven's C sharp minor Quartet and Brahms's Sextet were played by the Hungarian String Quartet and others on December 2.

HEREFORD.—The singing of the Choral Society in 'Hiawatha' was greatly admired on November 22. Dr. Percy Hull conducted.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The fine qualities of the Choral Society were well revealed in a performance of 'The Apostles' given under the direction of Sir Henry Coward. Miss Elsie Suddaby and Mr. Norman Allin were among the solo singers.——Marsden Choral Society opened its season with 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and a choral fantasia on 'The Mastersingers.' Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes conducted. ——Mr. Harold Hallas sang Brahms's 'Magelone' Cycle at his twenty-first recital.

HULL.—Beethoven's eighth Symphony and the B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto by Tchaikovsky, played by Miss Betty Humby, were the features of the concert given by the Philharmonic Society under Sir Henry Wood on November 24.

IPSWICH.—The Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Edgar Wilby, played Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony and Bantock's 'Russian Scenes' on December 1.

LANCASTER.—The programme of the Lancaster Orchestral Society's concert under Mr. N. S. Wallbank on December 10 included three movements of Beethoven's second Symphony.

LEAMINGTON.—The B.B.C. concert given on December 2, with the Birmingham Studio Symphony Orchestra of sixty-five players, was conducted by Sir Henry Wood. 'Don Juan,' a 'Wand of Youth' Suite, and the fifth 'Brandenberg' Concerto were the principal works.

LEEDS.—One of the chief events in an eventful season was the concert of the Choral Union on November 16. The programme, which was admirably carried out under Sir Henry Coward's direction, consisted of a concert version of Gluck's 'Orpheus' and Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter.' The Leeds Symphony Orchestra assisted, and the soloists were Miss Margaret Balfour (Orpheus), Miss May Blyth (Euridice), Miss Eda Bennie (Amor), and, in the cantata, Mr. William Hayle.——The Philharmonic Society, now brought to a high pitch of virtuosity by Dr. Bairstow, showed its quality on November 30 in Brahms's 'Triumphlied,' Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' and Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore.' Mr. Roy Henderson, soloist in the Brahms, sang also a Bach Air and a song from 'Boris Godounov.'——The University Musical Society sang madrigals and part-songs under Mr. J. L. Slater on December 2.——Brahms's 'Requiem' was performed by a choir of two hundred and Mr. Maude's String Orchestra at the Parish Church, under Dr. Tysoe. ——Mr. Maude's Orchestra gave an interesting and diversified programme on November 26. It consisted of a Vivaldi Concerto, the eighteenth Concerto Grosso, Elgar's 'Introduction and Allegro,' Parry's 'Lady Radnor' Suite, Coleridge-Taylor's Novellette in A, Alfred Wall's 'Pastorale and Bourrée,' and Warlock's 'Serenade.'——On the same evening the Leeds Symphony Society, under Mr. Harold Mason, played Beethoven's C minor Symphony as part of a popular programme.——A week later Mr. Julius Harrison conducted the Leeds Symphony Orchestra in d'Indy's 'Le Camp de Wallenstein,' and M. de Greef played the 'Emperor' Concerto.——Bach's 'Come, Redeemer of our race' was included in a programme of vocal quartet music at a mid-day University recital.

LEICESTER.—A comparatively small audience came to hear Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony sung by the Philharmonic Society, on November 23. Sir Henry Wood conducted a performance that did great credit to the Society. Miss Mary Congreve and Mr. Roy Henderson were the soloists.——Dr. Malcolm Sargent conducted the Leicester Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's seventh Symphony on December 7.

LINCOLN.—At the annual concert of the Musical Society on November 30, Dr. G. J. Bennett, the choir of over two hundred singers, and an orchestra mainly composed of Hallé players, gave a selection from 'Tannhäuser' and Charles Wood's 'Dirge for Two Veterans.'

LIVERPOOL. — The performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' given by the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union did not diminish the choir's great reputation. Dr. Hopkin Evans conducted, and Mr. John Coates sang the part of Gerontius.——Sir Hamilton Harty conducted the Philharmonic concert on November 15, when the programme contained the 'Chasse Royale,' from 'Les Troyens,' Dvorák's Symphonic Variations, and Stanford's first Irish Rhapsody. ——The next Philharmonic concert was all-Wagner, Sir Henry Wood conducting. —— 'Shamus O'Brien' was given with pianoforte accompaniment by the Liverpool Repertory Opera Company on November 25.——Members of the Liverpool Bach Choir assisted at Dr. Whittaker's fifth Alsop lecture on Bach by singing the fifty-sixth Church Cantata, first number by number, with comments by the lecturer, and then as a whole.

LUDLOW.—Nine towns and villages helped in the concert of South Shropshire choirs given at Ludlow on December 2. The programme, given under Mr. Arthur Fagge's direction, was miscellaneous. The concert was in aid of a fund, to be raised in memory of the late W. H. Leslie, for the furthering of choral music in the district.

LUTON. — At Mr. Claude Powell's concert on November 24, the feature of the programme was a new Saxophone Concerto by Josef Holbrooke, with the composer conducting.

MANCHESTER.—The Dramatic Symphony, 'Romeo and Juliet,' by Berlioz, performed at the Hallé concert on December 1 under the direction of Sir Hamilton Harty, had not been heard in England since the Manchester performance of 1906. It takes two hours to perform. 'N. C.' in the Manchester Guardian wrote:

> 'The melodies do not challenge the heavens: they are tender, frail as common humanity . . . . And yet this same Berlioz has been cursed with a legend these many years; he has been presented to us as a Victor Hugo run to seed, a windy romantic! Our own view is that there are pages and pages in Berlioz's "Romeo" which steal for music some of the sweetness of Shakespeare himself.'

At other Hallé concerts among the works played have been Dvorák's 'Cello Concerto, with Mr. Cassado, and the Overture to 'Die Fledermaus' by Johann Strauss (November 17); Mahler's fourth Symphony, called 'The Heavenly Life' (November 24); Glazounov's fourth Symphony and the 'Enigma' Variations (December 8). ——The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra played under Herr Fürtwangler at the Brand Lane concert of December 4, and were well received by a crowded audience. The programme consisted of Brahms's second Symphony, 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and the Overtures to 'Tannhäuser,' 'Die Meistersinger,' and 'Der Freischütz.'——The works played at the Municipal concert of December 5 included Berlioz's 'Benvenuto Cellini' Overture.——The Glasgow Orpheus Choir gave a concert in Free Trade Hall on November 19.—— 'The Hillside,' a new choral work by Eric Fogg, was produced by the Municipal Choir, under the composer's direction, on November 21. It is a 'Ballade' for soprano, baritone, chorus, and orchestra, to a text drawn from Tagore.—The C.W.S. Male-Voice Choir, conducted by Mr. Higson, sang Bantock's 'War Song of the Saracens' and Morley's 'Ho, who comes here' at its concert on November 30.——The Catterall Quartet played a Mozart programme in November, and Miss Jo Lamb's Quartet played Elgar's work in December.—A Tuesday mid-day concert took the form of a self-accompanied recital by Miss Helen Henschel.

MUCH HADHAM.—It is good to find small communities flying at high game. At this Hertfordshire village, on December 16, the local Musical Society, with a choir of twenty-five voices, a dozen strings, five wind instruments, drums, and pianoforte, gave Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas Oratorio' to a church-full of their neighbours. The programme included also arias and carols, and Corelli's 'Christmas' Concerto. The soloists were Miss Veronica Mansfield, Mr. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Michael Dykes Bower. Mr. Mark Pasteur conducted an ambitious undertaking that was thoroughly justified by its success.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Dr. Whittaker conducted the Bach Choir in four Church Cantatas at St. Nicholas's Cathedral on November 26, three of the Cantatas being heard for the first time at Newcastle.——Dowland, Morley, and Parry were well represented in the concert given by the Oriana Choir under Mr. A. F. Milner, on November 30.——The new Carrick-Tilley Choral Society gave its first concert on December 6, with a programme of part-songs conducted by Mr. George Robertson.——December 7 was the date of four evening concerts by neighbouring choral societies — the Prudhoe Gleemen under Mr. Harry Harland; the Y.M.C.A. Choral Society in 'The Messiah,' under Mr. A. W. Lambert; the Jarrow Philharmonic Society; and the Armstrong College Choral and Orchestral Societies in Dvorák's 'Te Deum,' Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, and Beethoven's eighth Symphony.——Mr. Edgar Bainton conducted the Philharmonic Orchestra in the 'Enigma' Variations and Borodin's second Symphony on November 27.

Newcastle-under-Lyme.—Mr. Alwyn P. Lovatt conducted the Male-Voice Glee Union, on December 1, in Bridge's 'Bold Turpin,' Basil Johnson's 'The splendour falls on castle walls,' and his own part-song, 'The Watchman' (Herrick). The Philharmonic Trio played a Trio by Goepfart.

Northampton.—Mr. C. J. King and the Musical Society announced the first performance at Northampton of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' on December 9.

Norwich.—Schumann's first Symphony was the principal work in the Philharmonic Society's programme, conducted by Dr. Bates, on December 6.——The Municipal concerts opened with a miscellaneous programme on November 26.——The Norwich String Quartet, formed of local players, gave two concerts of classical works to good attendances at Stuart Hall on December 1.

Nottingham. — Nottingham Philharmonic Society celebrated its coming-of-age on November 24 with a presentation to Mr. William Turner, its founder and conductor.——At Mr. Turner's annual concert on December 3, his Ladies' Choir joined with the Philharmonic in a miscellaneous programme.——Mr. C. E. Riley's twenty-five years' connection with the Madrigal Society was also celebrated with a presentation on December 6.——Mr. Allen Gill conducted the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society on November 23 in concert selections from 'Carmen' and 'Faust.'——The Virtuoso Quartet played to the Music Club on December 1.

Oxford.—The first three parts of the 'Christmas Oratorio' and the 'Song of Destiny' were sung by the Oxford Harmonic Society on November 27, under Mr. Jacques, Bach's accompaniment being played on the organ, and that of Brahms on two pianofortes.——'Israel in Egypt,' which had not been heard at Oxford for over twenty years, was announced for December 4.——A notice of the production of Monteverde's 'Poppæa' will be found on p. 65.

Painswick.—The Delius Violin Sonata (Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. Gerald Moore) and songs by Brahms (Mr. Dale Smith) were given at a Saturday afternoon concert of the Music Club.

Plymouth.—The Orchestral Society played the 'New World' Symphony under Mr. Walter Weekes on November 30.

Portsmouth.—A large audience heard Portsmouth North End Choral Society perform 'The Hymn of Praise' and 'The Revenge' under Mr. Ernest C. Birch on December 7. It was announced that Sir Edward Elgar would conduct the Society in 'Caractacus' on April 18.——The Philharmonic Society opened its season with a Wagner concert under Lieut. R. P. O'Donnell.

Rotherham.—The Choral Society's programme on December 1 consisted of most of 'The Creation' (twenty-four numbers out of thirty-three) and the concert selection from Gounod's 'Faust.' The music was well performed under Mr. Granville Naylor.

St. Albans.—Holbrooke's new Saxophone Concerto was performed by Mr. W. Lear at Mr. Claude Powell's afternoon concert on November 24, before being performed at Luton in the evening.

Sheffield.—An abridged version of 'Israel in Egypt' and two choruses from Bantock's 'Vanity of Vanities' were among the works finely sung by the Musical Union on November 17, under the direction of Sir Henry Coward.——The programme given by the Amateur Musical Society on December 6, under Dr. Staton, consisted of the Choral Symphony and Parry's 'Song of Darkness and Light.' This was the Society's hundred and twenty-eighth concert. Dr. Staton's Chesterfield Musical Union helped in the last movement of the Symphony.

Seaton.—The East Devon Orchestra gave a concert on December 6, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Billingsley, the chief items in the programme being the first movements of the 'Unfinished' Symphony and Beethoven's fifth.

Shrewsbury.—The Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. F. G. Rowland, performed 'The Creation' on November 17.——A week later the Orchestral Society's programme, under Mr. F. C. Morris, included Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un faune.'

Southampton.—The Philharmonic Society opened its thirty-fourth season on December 7 with a New World programme—Dvorák's fifth Symphony, Vaughan Williams's 'Towards the Unknown Region' (Walt Whitman), and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Beside the ungathered rice he lay.'

Southport.—The Orchestral Society's programme under Mr. Matthews, on November 25, included the 'Cockaigne' Overture, a Concerto Grosso by Vivaldi, Massenet's Suite 'From Foreign Parts,' and the 'Emperor' Concerto, played by Mr. Solomon.——Miscellaneous programmes were given by the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Mr. H. Hill Whitfield, on Sunday, December 4, and the Harmonic Male-Voice Choir under Mr. Peter Whiteside, on December 6.

Stourbridge.—'A Tale of Old Japan' was performed on November 21 at the hundred and fifty-third concert of the Stourbridge Concert Society. Mr. Arthur Woodall conducted.

Winchester.—The Choral Symphony was performed three times at the Guildhall on November 24. The Winchester Music Club formed the nucleus of a performing body that comprised singers from the choirs of Compton and Shawford (Mr. G. R. Crawford), St. Cross (the Rev. H. Arthur Collins), Winchester City (Mr. G. P. Peachell), and Winchester College. Professional wind players came from London; the four solo singers were from the Royal College of Music. The conductor was Dr. George Dyson, musical director of the Music Club. The morning performance was of the nature of a rehearsal; the afternoon performance was for a largely juvenile audience; and the chief performance was given to a crowded audience in the evening. The whole venture was a great success in every way.

Wolverhampton.—Miss Astra Desmond sang the part of 'Carmen' in the concert version of the opera performed by the Choral Society under Dr. Darby.——Berlioz's 'Faust' was given by the Music Society with well-known soloists on December 1. Both chorus and orchestra were excellent under the direction of Dr. Malcolm Sargent.

Worcester.—Sir Ivor Atkins conducted the Festival Choral Society on December 6 in Brahms's 'Liebeslieder Walzer' and Bach's 'Come, Jesu, come.'

Worthing.—The Worthing Madrigal Society, recently formed under the direction of Mr. Frank Davey, gave its first concert on December 7, the chief works being 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and 'The Banner of St. George.'

KODÁLY'S 'PSALMUS HUNGARICUS' AT CAMBRIDGE

The performance of Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus' at Cambridge (the first in England) proved an event of surprising interest. Interest indeed is not a rare ingredient of musical performances; but it is seldom a wholly musical interest, as was the case at Cambridge. In the 'Psalmus Hungaricus' one sees Kodály completely free from the obsession of those moderns who write music as if they hated it, and anxious only to go as far as they possibly can from musical traditions. He shows his modernity clearly enough in his treatment of harmony, but there is not a chord in the whole 'Psalmus' that should cause annoyance to grammarians. The music is robust, and even violent, but so is the theme, which represents King David calling upon Heaven to avenge his wrongs and smite the offenders. Such sentiments cannot be adequately expressed in the methods of the 'bread-and-butter-Miss.' Dissonance here is not only justified, it is necessary, since it stands for a world that is out of tune: for a mind distressed. That is why we did not resent the fact that Mr. Frank Mullings was so frequently 'off' the right note. Perhaps the effect was intended. Certainly the famous singer who commands the highest fee obtains some very striking effects by some such dodge.

The chorus sang exceedingly well, and credit should be given to Dr. Rootham, who undertook the onerous task of preparing them. Kodály himself conducted, and obtained a remarkable ensemble. F. B.

Competition Festival Record

GUERNSEY.—The Eisteddfod, held in November soon after the Jersey Eisteddfod, showed that the smaller island has as musical a population as the larger. The many competitions in the syllabus were well supported (there were fifty juvenile pianists in one class), and the standard of performance drew frequent praise from the adjudicators.

HALIFAX.—This Festival, held for the sixth time on November 25-26, is highly esteemed by northern choirs, the two chief choral male-voice classes causing a fine gathering of the best talent and training. Seven mixed-voice choirs, chiefly from Yorkshire, set up a close competition, the markings at the head being: Halifax Madrigal Choir (Mr. H. Shepley), 268; Sowerby Bridge Madrigal Society (Mr. B. Wadsworth), 265; Harrogate Tudor Jacobean Choir (Mr. J. Anumson), 262. It was several years since the famous Halifax Choir had competed at its home festival. In the male-voice class Lancashire predominated. Nelson Orion (Mr. H. Sutcliffe) won against Manchester Orpheus (Mr. G. S. Smith) and three other choirs. Local orchestras made an excellent competition in the playing of Mozart movements. Halifax Orchestral Society (Mr. J. Nicol Bates) was first. One of the test-pieces—a tenor solo—was a setting of Mary Coleridge's poem 'Gibberish,' by Harold Clayton, a Halifax musician.

LONDON, NORTH.—For eight days (November 11-19) the long syllabus of the North London Festival was worked out at the Public Halls, Prince of Wales Road, Kentish Town. The principal classes, held on the first of the Saturdays, drew competitors from far afield, challenge shields being carried off by Nottingham Philharmonic Society, Sheffield L.N.E.R. Male-Voice Choir, William Turner's Ladies' Choir, Nottingham, and Barmborough Main Orchestra, Mexborough. The best string orchestra was Miss Ethel Loder's, Finchley. There were a great number of competitors for solo singing and various forms of children's music.

LONDON, SOUTHERN AREA.—This comprehensive title covers a wide field, including as it does all parts of South and West London and South of the Thames. Founded in 1922, the Festival has grown continuously. The last, held at Wandsworth Town Hall, concluded on November 26, and attracted eleven hundred and twenty-eight individual entries, totalling upward of three thousand performers. Greater public interest and an improved standard were outstanding features, and the adjudicators were agreed that performances showed an all-round, perceptible improvement over last year. A few of the more important prizes were awarded as follows: Ladies' Choirs, The Streatham Singers (Mr. F. C. Haggis); Girls' Clubs, Miss Walter's Girls' Club, Norwood; Equal-Voice Choirs, Miss Walter's Choir; Elementary Schools, St. Mary's Roman Catholic School, Battersea (Miss McCarthy), and Wix's Lane L.C.C. School, Clapham Common (Miss F. M. Watson); High School Orchestras, &c., Wynne Orchestra (Miss Winifred Wyard). Two nine-guinea exhibitions were presented as a memorial to the late Dr. F. N. Abernethy, the former chairman of the Festival. Mrs. Lester Jones, who founded the movement, is still hon. secretary of the Festival.

MILLOM.—The seventh Festival, held on December 1-3, represented local interests in a district where music is cultivated with enthusiasm. Some singing of a very good standard in the choral classes led to the following results: Male-Voice Choirs, Millom (Mr. J. Bond) first, and Barrow Bach Choir (Mr. W. Broome) second by one mark; Mixed-Voice Choirs, Barrow Bach Choir first, Haverigg (Mr. J. Wood) second, and St. James's Choir, Millom (Mr. H. G. Cooke), third. The Barrow Choir was also first in the ladies'-voice section.

NORTHAMPTON.—The thirty-sixth Eisteddfod, extended to cover four days (November 16-19), brought some good contests. Seven choirs competed in the chief mixed-voice class, Irthlingborough Madrigal Choir (Mr. W. Jacquest) taking first place. Primrose Hill Congregational Choir (Mr. F. A. Facer) was the best of ten Ladies' Choirs, and was also top of the Church choir class against six other choirs. Among the mixed-voice country choirs which sang Somervell's 'The Grasmere Carol,' Cogenhoe Choral Society (Mr. W. C. J. Grant) won the first prize.

PLYMOUTH.—The Festival was organized by the Plymouth Centre of the British Music Society, on November 21-23. New competitions for oratorio and folk-song were included, and the number of competitors rose to over a thousand. All the prescribed test-pieces were by British composers. The class for male-voice choirs brought some particularly good singing from Morley Choir (Mr. W. P. Leverton), who took first place, Royal Dockyard Draughtsmen (Mr. G. Bollard), and Dolcoath Mine Choir (Mr. W. E. Eustace). There were a great number of juvenile pianists.

SWINDON.—From November 14 onwards many days were occupied by the 'Eisteddfod' of the Swindon Free Church Council. There was classes for various forms of church choral singing, school singing, and solo singing and playing. Among the performers who showed the highest merit were those who came from Saxford Street School, under the direction of Mr. H. Painter—a choir and an orchestra of boys.

---

The following competition Festivals have also been held: BACUP (the St. John Ambulance Festival) on November 11 and 12; the Elementary Schools Festival at BURTON on November 22; the ninth Eisteddfod of the COLCHESTER and District Sunday School Union on November 16; COLNE Festival on December 2 and 3, where the chief choral awards were won by Steeton Male-Voice Choir (Mr. H. Wrathall) and Todmorden Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. J. Crowther); CONSETT, where the fourth Festival was an advance in every way on previous years; the fifth ECCLESHILL Musical Festival, which attracted twenty-two choirs from West Riding city schools on November 18 and 19; the twelfth annual GOODMAYES Festival on four Saturdays in October and November; ILKESTON Sunday School Union Festival on November 19; a Festival held for the eighth time at INDIAN QUEENS on November 24 and 25; TORQUAY Schools Festival on November 25 and 26.

The new address of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals is 22, Surrey Street, Victoria Embankment, W.C.2. (Tel.: Central 6911.)

---

The Index of Vol. 68 (January to December, 1927) of the Musical Times is now ready, and will be sent, post free, to subscribers, on application to the publishers.

Music in Scotland

EDINBURGH.—The programmes of the Paterson Orchestral concerts followed the same general lines as those of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union concerts, noticed below, but included a special Christmas Holiday concert for young people, with a programme attractive to old and young alike. The Scottish Orchestra was directed throughout the month by Vladimir Golschmann, who was very favourably received. The soloists were Nicolas Orloff (pianoforte) and Mischa Elman (violin).——At the second of the Reid Orchestra Symphony concerts, Prof. Tovey played with the orchestra (Miss Mary Grierson conducting) Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto No. 15, in B flat, and Schumann's 'Introduction and Allegro Appassionato,' Op. 92. Prof. Tovey directed the orchestra in Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' Overture and the C minor Symphony, and in Sinigaglia's 'Rapsodia Piedmontese' (violin soloist, Mr. Watt Jupp). At the third concert, the Reid Orchestra joined forces with the Edinburgh Choral Union, under Prof. Tovey's direction, in a performance of the ninth Symphony. The programme included Wagner's 'Faust' Overture and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' sung by the Choral Union under its own conductor, Mr. Greenhouse Allt. ——Prof. Tovey's Sunday concerts during the month included (1) a recital by Nicolas Orloff and Prof. Tovey of works for two pianofortes, including Mozart's Sonata in D, Brahms's Sonata in F minor, and (in its original version) Schumann's Andante and Variations, for two pianofortes, two 'cellos, and horn; (2) a vocal quartet concert by the Northern Singers, at which Brahms's 'Liebeslieder' and 'Zigeunerlieder' and Walford Davies's 'Nursery Rhymes' were sung and played; (3) a performance of two Trios for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello—Beethoven's Op. 97, in B flat, and Schubert's Op. 100, in E flat; and (4) a vocal and pianoforte recital, at which Miss Poppy Dickson sang songs by Haydn, Arne, Parry, Schumann, Debussy, Ravel, and Moussorgsky, and Prof. Tovey played the 'Moonlight' Sonata, the Handel-Brahms Variations, and Chopin's F minor Ballade.——The Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Ralph T. Langdon) played at its first concert Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor, the 'Leonora' No. 3 and 'Ruy Blas' Overtures, and German's 'Gipsy' Suite. Mr. Philip Powell (tenor) was the soloist.——The Falconer String Quartet gave a series of three chamber concerts, and presented String Quartets by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, and Brahms, and, with Miss Ruth Waddell as additional 'cellist, Schubert's String Quintet in C major, Op. 163.——At the third of the series of lecture-concerts for school children, under the joint ægis of the Education Authority and Messrs. Paterson, Mr. Herbert Wiseman talked on 'Colour and Imagination in Music,' and the orchestra, led by Mr. Watt Jupp, played illustrative pieces by Bach, Weber, Strauss, Mendelssohn, and Tchaikovsky. At the fourth, Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay sang folk-songs and old ballads, and the children did some community singing. At the fifth, Mr. Wiseman talked on 'Musical Terms,' illustrated from Schumann's 'Forty-three Pianoforte Pieces for the Young.' At the sixth and last, 'Time, Rhythm, and Accent; and Eurhythmics,' were discussed, and illustrated by teams from seven Edinburgh schools, Miss Barbara Hogg directing.—— Miss Elsie Cochrane (a well-known Edinburgh soprano) and Mr. Harold Fairhurst (violin) gave a recital.—— Edinburgh University is about to confer upon Mr. T. H. Collinson an honorary Mus.Doc. degree, a distinction long overdue to a musician whose unusual gifts are only exceeded by his talent for self-effacement. The University of Edinburgh is by way of being careless about the distinguished musicians who honour the city by belonging to it. Has it never heard of Marjory Kennedy Fraser?

GALASHIELS.—At the second of the Galashiels subscription concerts a miscellaneous programme was submitted by a number of well-known artists, of whom Adila Fachiri (violin) was the most outstanding.

GLASGOW.—The incursion of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir (Mr. Hugh S. Roberton) into oratorio ('The Messiah') has raised probably as much discussion as the performance with which Sir Thomas Beecham fluttered the London dovecotes last season. The Orpheus performance presented some new features. The solos 'Every valley' (tenor), 'Rejoice greatly' (soprano), 'The people that walked in darkness' (bass), and 'Why do the nations rage' (bass) were sung by the massed voices of the particular section of the choir. The effect in 'Rejoice greatly' was brilliant, and in 'Why do the nations' thrilling. The remaining solos were sung by members of the choir from their places in the choir seats. Sincerity and simplicity were the characteristics, and in some cases, notably in the soprano 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' and the contralto solos, the effect was moving in the extreme. In the chorus work, superlatively well sung, the pace seemed at times a little fast, but texture, mobility, and clearness and significance of diction far surpassed anything we have heard before in this work. Pianoforte and organ (despite the outstandingly fine work of the pianist, Miss Ailie Cullen) proved a poor substitute for the orchestra, and at times we missed the opulence of line and weight of tone which can only be had from a very much larger body of voices. Nevertheless, a remarkable performance. ——The Glasgow Bach Society gave a chamber concert, at which the Society's chamber orchestra of some thirty players, conducted by Mr. F. H. Bisset, played the No. 4 Suite in D, the Concerto in D minor for two violins (Miss Bessie Spence and Mr. Spence Malcolm), the Concerto in F major for pianoforte and two flutes (Mr. Wilfrid Senior, Mr. Alfred Picton, and Miss Jean Dick), movements from two of the Church Cantatas, and a Purcell Suite.—— At its first concert this season, the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, eighty strong, under the very capable direction of Mr. J. Peebles Conn, played a Haydn Symphony (No. 13 in G), the 'Euryanthe' and 'Semiramide' Overtures, Stanford's Irish Rhapsody No. 1, and Grieg's 'Holberg' Suite for strings. Mr. Harry Dorman, a young Glasgow pianist, made quite a workmanlike job of the Grieg Concerto, but seemed rather shaken up in his solos.—— Mr. Robert Watson (baritone) and Mr. David McCallum (violin), both prominent in the musical life of Glasgow, gave an enjoyable recital together in Berkeley Hall. Mr. McCallum's best performance was the Bach E major Concerto, the biggest thing we have yet had from him. ——Mr. Adolphe Borschke gave a second pianoforte recital, this time under the auspices of the Slavonic Society of Scotland. The programme comprised for the most part operatic mélanges (mainly Russian), transcribed for the pianoforte by the recitalist. Of these, and of one of the player's own compositions, the less said the better. ——Under the ægis of the British Music Society, Glasgow centre, Mr. George Parker (baritone) gave a recital of songs by Schubert, Brahms (the 'Four Serious Songs'), Hugo Wolf, and Max Reger.——At the third and fourth of his Cramb Music Lectures at Glasgow University on 'Music in Social History,' Dr. George Dyson discussed the domestic music of the 16th and 17th centuries, and played a number of pieces on the harpsichord. Some singers from the Perth Madrigal Society, conducted by Mr. D. T. Yacamini, sang several groups of Elizabethan madrigals.

HELENSBURGH.—At the first of the Helensburgh Subscription concerts, Miss Helen Henschel and Mr. John Goss gave a vocal recital, each singer contributing two groups of art- or folk-songs, and the two combining in four vocal duets. At the second concert Mr. Frederic Lamond gave a Beethoven pianoforte recital.——At the second of the Max Mossel Subscription concerts at Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Ayr, and Bridge-of-Allan, Maggie Teyte sang with that perfection of diction in which she has few equals. Youra Guller was entirely delightful in pianoforte solos, and the violinist Francescatti played with elegance and finish, but lacked breadth and showed a tendency to subordinate the whole to its parts.

PAISLEY.—At its first concert, the Paisley Choral Union, conducted by Dr. W. Rigby, sang 'Judas Maccabæus.'

SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—At the last College concert of the term Prof. de Lloyd conducted the chorus and orchestra in Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasy on Christmas Carols,' B. J. Dale's 'Before the Paling of the Stars,' and selections from the 'Christmas Oratorio.' Mozart's Symphony in E flat was also given.——On December 4, Mr. G. Stephen Evans gave a lecture on the 'Art of Listening,' with illustrations by the Aberystwyth Orchestral Society.

BANGOR.—The principal event of the month was the performance of 'The Messiah' by the University College Choral Society, supported by the Bangor Orchestral Society, on November 23, with Miss Stiles-Allen, Miss Bessie Davies (student), Mr. Evan Lewis, and Mr. Rhys Davies as soloists. Mr. E. T. Davies (the College Director of Music) conducted. The choir, which included a hundred and thirty students, sang with splendid vigour and flexibility throughout. The College weekly concert programmes have included, as usual, many interesting chamber works. On December 1 an inter-collegiate string quartet played Beethoven's posthumous Quartet in A minor and the Goossens Sketches with great success. The same Beethoven Quartet was played by the London String Quartet at the Bangor Musical Club on December 6. The final concert of the term, the hundred and fiftieth of the series, was devoted to carol singing, a performance of Haydn's 'Toy' Symphony, by students, Mozart's Flute Quartet in A, and the 'Kreutzer' Sonata. At a dramatic performance on December 14, the College orchestra played the 'Coriolanus' Overture, 'Casse-Noisette' Suite, and a chain of Welsh Folk-songs arranged for orchestra by Mr. E. T. Davies, who conducted.

CARDIFF.—The weekly College concerts have included a performance of Purcell's Te Deum by a small choir. On December 10 the University College Choral Society and Orchestra gave Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas Oratorio,' Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasy on Christmas Carols,' and Parry's 'There is an old belief.' On December 12 the same body repeated the 'Christmas Oratorio' in Llandaff Cathedral, Prof. David Evans conducting on both occasions. ——On November 23, a concert of chamber music was given by the London String Quartet in the Girls' High School.——On December 4, the Cardiff Musical Society gave Bach's B minor Mass. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Rispah Goodacre, and Messrs. Francis Russell and Harry Goodacre. Mr. Warwick Braithwaite conducted. ——On December 11, the Tabernacle Choral Society gave Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas Oratorio,' conducted by Mr. E. J. Richards.——A week of amateur grand opera began on December 12, the opening performance of Gounod's 'Faust' apparently achieving a great success.

HAWARDEN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.—The Trio attached to University College, Bangor, gave a lecture-concert to the pupils of the Hawarden County School, and an evening public chamber music concert. The programme included Vaughan Williams's 'The lark ascending.' On the next day the same Trio visited elementary schools at Buckley, Queensferry, and Connah's Quay, giving lecture-concerts at each.

NEWPORT (MON.).—On November 24 the Newport Choral Society, conducted by Mr. H. E. Sims, gave 'Judas Maccabæus.' The orchestra was led by Mr. Busfield, and Mr. Miles assisted at the organ.

NEWTOWN (MONTGOMERY).—The Llandinam and Newtown Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. R. Allen, gave 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and excerpts from 'Elijah,' on December 12. The soloists were Miss Myfanwy Rowlands, Miss G. Oliver, and Messrs. J. W. Phillips and H. Evans.

PENARTH.—On November 29 the Penarth Choral Society, supported by an orchestra led by Mr. Busfield, gave Haydn's 'Spring' and Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.' The conductor was Mr. H. W. Downing.

SWANSEA.—The Swansea Chamber Music Society joined with the National Council of Music in arranging a children's concert on the occasion of the visit of the Virtuoso String Quartet on December 6. Items in the programme were Beethoven's String Quartet, Op. 18, No. 2, Dvorák's 'Nigger Quartet,' and Haydn's Quartet in G. In the evening the Society's concert included Frank Bridge's 'Fantasy Quartet.'

Music in Ireland

BELFAST. — One of the most memorable of recent concerts was that which commemorated the Beethoven Centenary on November 25, when the choir and orchestra of the Philharmonic Society performed the Choral Symphony under the direction of Sir Hugh Allen. The other works in the programme included the Violin Concerto, played by Mr. William Primrose, and excerpts from 'Fidelio.' —— The British Music Society's concert on November 18, was largely a sonata recital by Miss Margaret Huxley (violin) and Miss Doreen Gibson (pianoforte).——Pianoforte recitals have been given by Cortot and Miss Ethel Bartlett.

DUBLIN.—The new Symphony Orchestra organized by 2RN Station gave a successful experimental concert at the Metropolitan Hall on November 26. Mr. Harold White conducted Beethoven's first Symphony and added spoken comment on this and other works in the programme. The Civil Service Choir assisted the audience in community singing.——Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony was the principal work of those played by the Orchestral Society under Commendatore Esposito and Dr. Larchet on December 3. Songs were contributed by Lady Harty (Miss Agnes Nicholls). ——At the concerts of the Royal Dublin Society the most noteworthy performances have been those of the Virtuoso String Quartet in two concerts on November 14; Castelnuovo-Tedesco's 'Nottambuli,' played by M. Cassado and Madame Gordigiani on November 21; Esposito's Violin Sonata in E minor, Op. 46, played by Signor Grossi and the composer on November 28; and the six Quartets played by the London String Quartet in the afternoon and evening of December 5.——A lecture-recital of Beethoven Pianoforte Sonatas was given by Mr. Frederick Dawson on December 1.——A thoroughly satisfying performance was that of Father John Burke's choir of fifty boys in a programme of carols on December 6.

Musical Notes from Abroad

HOLLAND

Mr. Evert Cornelis and the Utrecht 'Toonkunst Choir, in deciding to give a performance of 'The Messiah' with English text and as far as possible with the original orchestration, have achieved more than could be expected. One critic described the occasion as being that of 'the first performance of Handel's "The Messiah" in Holland,' and generally the musical advantages of the English version over the usual German translation are acknowledged. 'Fuller sonority,' 'freer rhythm,' 'typical English character,' are the kind of expression common in the criticisms, while the public attended the performance in large numbers, and grew more and more enthusiastic as it proceeded. The English soloists—Elsie Suddaby, Astra Desmond, Steuart Wilson, and Arthur Cranmer—also won excellent opinions for their fine phrasing and generally good interpretations. The result is an improved feeling towards not only the use of English words in works in which the composer used these himself, but also towards British music as a whole. Another interesting little event, arranged and conducted by Mr. Cornelis with the Utrecht Stedelyk Orchestra, was a programme of works by Corelli, Vivaldi, and J. S. Bach, in which one was able to see the contrast between the styles of three great composers of more or less the same period. The two earlier composers, it must be said, came off surprisingly well in comparison with their great successor. Revivals are the order of the day, and the Rotterdam 'Toonkunst' Choir has given, in concert form, Moussorgsky's 'The Fair at Sorochinsky' and Debussy's 'The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian,' the former only to the point to which it was carried by the composer himself. This proved pleasant, though not particularly striking; but the Debussy was almost surprising in the amount of effect that was obtained by simple means. I understand that a repetition of this is likely to take place shortly. The choir at The Hague affiliated with the same society generally prefers light works, as it is in this category that Dr. Wagenaar, its gifted conductor, is most happy. For the first concert of the season 'The Barber of Bagdad' was chosen, and choir, principals, orchestra, and conductor all shared in a big success. Leyden beat Utrecht in linguistic achievement by singing Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus' in its original language, and again the advantages from the purely musical point of view were evident. Alike for the composer, who was present, and for the conductor, Anton Tierie, and his forces it was a triumph. A very different type of Hungarian music is that of Dohnányi's 'Ruralia Hungaria,' played under the direction of the composer at Amsterdam and at The Hague. This is based entirely upon Hungarian folk-songs, and provides some light and piquantly scored pictures of country life. In both towns Dohnányi was received with the utmost enthusiasm, both as composer and as soloist. Another foreign composer who has recently brought his own work here is Carl Nielsen, whose new Violin Concerto was played at Amsterdam by Telmanyi. The work is somewhat sombre in general tone, and succeeds best where the composer has been content to allow the steady flow of sober melody and harmony to go its way without break. In the places where he has made concessions to the soloist's tendency to display the work is less satisfactory.

A number of young enthusiasts have started a new Study Circle for Modern Music at The Hague, besides giving concerts both in that city and at Amsterdam of works by contemporary composers of various countries. Unfortunately, both in matters of art and of business, their intentions are better than their achievements, so that it is very doubtful whether they will meet the success their intentions and hard work deserve. They have, however, brought forward seldom-heard works by Paul Hindemith, Heinrich Kaminski, Rudolf Mengelberg, Milhaud, Sigtenhorst Meyer, and Alex Voormolen, besides some of moderate promise by Max Vredenburg, himself a member of the Circle.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

VIENNA

ERICH KORNGOLD'S NEW OPERA

Seldom has a new opera been expected with more anticipation, perhaps anxiety, at Vienna than Korngold's new work. Twofold were the expectations: the composer's friends hoped for a crowning achievement of the young man's career; and those with a more scrutinising attitude expected at least a tangible proof of Korngold's ultimate advancement from a prodigy to the rank of a finished, mature composer. That both groups were to some extent disappointed by 'The Miracle of Heliane' was, perhaps, not surprising.

Korngold's position, viewing it from all angles, is a difficult one. His talent is unquestionable; his 'genius,' so readily proclaimed by a certain group, is more open to doubt. The omnipotent position of his learnèd critic-father has smoothed the path for his career; but now that he has to march his own road, he finds it plastered with prejudices, even a certain antagonism germinated by the all too enthusiastic press propaganda waged by his path-makers, particularly in the press which his father controls. The publicity which this press is bestowing upon young Korngold (a publicity unprecedented in this region, and bordering on the comical) is a fatal gift. It creates, with the general public, expectations which even a stronger work than 'Heliane' could not possibly fulfil; and, with the initiated, a mistrust which Korngold's new opera is entirely too weak to dispel. Furthermore, one need not be a Freudian to recognise the fact that each individual is the product of his environment; and the environment in which Korngold has been brought up is one of unconditional conservatism in things musical. These men have pressed Korngold junior into the rôle of a 'musical bulwark'—a rôle which Erich Korngold plays with visible discomfiture and, judging by his latest score, not without occasional efforts to regain his freedom. In 'Heliane' one feels clearly, in spots, that Erich Korngold shakes his shackles; he has not—so far—been strong enough to break them. Will he be able to do so in the future, and when? The one-time prodigy is now well over thirty years of age. His early manifestations were remarkable for one so young. Has he since proceeded to a maturity commensurate with his age?

Frankness compels the statement that in some respects 'Heliane' is not an advancement over Korngold's first operas, but rather the opposite. Korngold's sense for theatrical effectiveness seems to have left him completely when he chose this boisterous, pathetic, almost comical book which Hans Müller has concocted from an originally beautiful and spiritual work of Hans Kaltneker. Its characters are of paper, not of flesh and blood. They are cinema types: either heroes or villains. They talk much, and much too loudly. They indulge in lengthy and noisy discussions on events of small human interest.

With such a book Korngold's opera was doomed to failure, even were its music greater than it is. The chief trouble of this music is that even now, in his thirtieth year, Korngold has not as yet found and developed a musical idiom of his own. He started out, sixteen or more years ago, by harvesting on the fields of Strauss and Puccini. What he writes to-day is still a composite of Strauss and Puccini; only it is no longer 'Salome' that he imitates, but 'Elektra,' and 'Turandot' rather than 'Tosca'—which implies that cacophonies are now more freely distributed throughout his score. But Korngold arrives at such cacophonies not by logical leading of the orchestral 'voices' ('linear counterpoint,' a principle of certain modernists, is, of course, taboo with him), but by mere chance of chord-construction. His chords are again thick, denser than ever, hypertrophic in structure and orchestration. For the Viennese production, it is rumoured, many 'middle notes' (and they are copiously employed) had been sacrificed for the sake of transparency. But the process was not thoroughly enough carried out. Economy is not one of Korngold's virtues, either in orchestration or in proportions or dynamics, or indeed in the apportioning of dramatic effects. The music of 'Heliane' is in a veritable fever-heat from beginning to end, and thus leaves no room for gradations and true climaxes. Korngold's melodies show again the embarrassing wealth of 'soaring' octaves for the lyric utterances, and the familiar heavily-accentuated chords for the dramatic situations. There is again that superabundance of melodic turns and twists which virtually preclude the logical conclusion of a given melody. Korngold's tunes begin well, and end nowhere. He modulates back and forth: it is as though one would stir a small well with a huge stick—this music moves about, but it does not flow. There is really one fine melody—Heliane's long Aria in the second Act; but that, too, becomes diffuse as it proceeds, and an orchestral ocean ultimately swallows the brooklet. A choral tornado drowns the larger portion of the third Act. One longs for economy and thrift, while Korngold revels continually in noisy orchestral and choral explosions.

This opera is from beginning to end a profound error. It is the heroic battle of one who, voluntarily or involuntarily, undertakes to fight his own epoch. 'Anti-romanticism' is one of the slogans of the young modernistic composer. 'Heliane,' then, was intended as a pamphlet for romanticism, an antidote to an opera like Krenek's 'Jonny spielt auf.' But, like any young man of his period, Korngold is inherently un-romantic, and the romanticism that he brings forth is laboured, far-fetched, and laden with problems and complexes of the 20th century; and with a mysticism that is foreign to opera as a species. Thus 'Heliane' was destined to remain a hybrid. One regrets to see so much honest, serious work expended upon the experiment. The production which the Vienna Staatsoper gave to this opera was the most elaborate and carefully prepared imaginable. Franz Schalk at the conductor's desk did his utmost to make the score appear clear and transparent. The singers, compelled to sing at the top of their voices almost constantly, were mainly excellent: Lotte Lehmann as Heliane, Alfred Jerger as the conventionally sinister King, Rosette Anday in the impossibly melodramatic rôle of the Messenger (a composite of Kundry and the Nurse from Strauss's 'Die Frau ohne Schatten'), and Jan Kiepura, the 'golden-voiced' Polish tenor, as the Stranger. Lothar Wallerstein's stage direction was very good, save for a lapse—in the last Act—into the 'motion chorus' mania now current on the German stage. The most modernistic stage methods, however, could not disguise the fact that what we heard and saw was nothing but good old Meyerbeer with an up-to-date neurasthenic trimming.

BRITISH MUSIC

The Philharmonic Orchestra, now under the joint direction of Franz Schalk and Wilhelm Fürtwangler (since Weingartner's retirement to Bâle), is this season supplementing its regular subscription series by a number of extra concerts under various conductors. One of these supplementary concerts was given—à propos of the exhibition of British paintings which attracted so much attention at Vienna—at a concert of British music, and assumed the character of a great social event. Paul Kerby, introduced as a young British conductor and well known here chiefly through his co-operation in the organization of the 1927 Salzburg Festival, was the conductor, and the programme included compositions by Sir Edward Elgar (the 'Enigma' Variations, the 'Cockaigne' Overture, and 'Pomp and Circumstance'); Gustav Holst ('The Planets'—previously conducted here, although in incomplete form, by Adrian Boult and Felix Weingartner); Frederick Delius ('On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring'); and old English madrigals, sung by the excellent boys' choir from the Court Chapel. Concerts such as this contribute a great deal towards the establishment of a much needed understanding of British music in this country. This end will be furthered if for similar occasions the works of young British modernists are included in the programme. A composer like Sir Edward Elgar has long been acknowledged here. The Teutonic mentality, with its strong leaning towards labelling and classification, has apportioned to him a rôle in British music similar perhaps to that of Brahms in German music, while Delius is regarded as the representative of impressionism. Knowing a few (only a few) specimens of the young British modernists' products, the Teutonic mind, strongly bent on 'organic,' 'systematic' evolution, is wont to search for the 'missing link.' A concert demonstrating the development of British music from its classics to composers like Bliss, Bax, Goossens, or Lord Berners, will be a welcome and instructive object-lesson.

PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

CHARLES F. HOPE ROBSON, at Edinburgh, in his fifty-seventh year. A director of the century-old Scottish firm of Patersons, music dealers, and an enthusiastic and cultured amateur, he was known to a wide public and to solo artists of international reputation as the directing head for twenty-five years of Edinburgh's principal concert scheme, the Paterson Orchestral Concerts.

WILHELM STENHAMMAR, composer and pianist, at Stockholm, on November 20. Born in 1871, a native of Stockholm, he studied at the Conservatory in that city and became assistant music-director at the Stockholm Royal Theatre. Since 1919 he had been a conductor at Gothenburg. His works include two operas, a symphony and other orchestral pieces, &c.

ALFRED KIRKLAND, at Crouch End, on October 31. He was born at Mansfield in 1857, coming to London and establishing his organ-building business when but a youth of seventeen. In 1923 the firm amalgamated with Messrs. Hill.

DANIEL WOOD, at Cricklewood, on November 30. He was principal flautist of the London Symphony Orchestra, and a Professor at the R.A.M. and R.C.M. He studied at the latter institution, and had retained his connection therewith ever since.

A stained-glass window in memory of ZIPPORA MONTEITH FISCHEL has been placed in Grace Episcopal Church, Whitestone, New York. Madame Fischel was a soprano who was specially successful in oratorio. Before settling in America, about thirty years ago, she was popular in London, where she had studied with Randegger. She died on November 25, 1926.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

E. M. N.—We cannot spare space for detailed analysis of works. Moreover, if you are able to grapple with the technical side of Grieg's Pianoforte Sonata in E minor, your musicianship and knowledge of form ought to be sufficient to enable you to dissect it for yourself. The Sonata presents no difficulties in this way, so if you have never done any analysis, make a start now. Musical Analysis, Form—the terms sound forbidding, but the job itself is easy and interesting. Begin by distinguishing the main constituents of each movement, and later proceed to follow up the development of various themes and figures. (See, for example, what liberal use the Finale makes of the rhythmic figure  drawn from the first subject.) You ask also for hints on performance. No work could well need less. It is so brimful of poetry and lyrical feeling that only a robot could play it woodenly or coldly.

LYRE.—The harp is not reckoned amongst the most difficult instruments, but all depends on the natural aptitude of the student and on the degree of skill he means to attain. Your knowledge of the pianoforte should stand you in good stead, and after you have mastered the principles of harp playing you can use some pianoforte studies and practise these, since the repertory is somewhat limited. You will find Tombo's 'Technique of Harp Playing' (Breitkopf) useful at the beginning, and later on A. Haly's 'Technical Studies' (Universal Edition) will help you. But the safest course is to seek a few lessons at first, for only a teacher can see exactly what you need most. Later, you could work by yourself. Even then an occasional lesson may save time, and speed your progress considerably.

S. L. (Delhi).—(1.) The wind instrument most suitable for your taking up with a view to performance in a room is undoubtedly the flute. Your fancy is for the cor Anglais, but the repertory is limited compared with that of the flute, and its tone, in solo use, soon palls. The same objections apply to your other fancy, the basset horn. The flute is now enjoying something like popularity as a solo instrument, and there is no lack of good music for it, old and new. (2.) The tuning range of wind instruments is not wide enough to enable them to be tuned to high or low pitch. They are built in either one or the other of the two pitches in common use, and must stick to it. (3.) The chief orchestras in this country use low pitch, and military bands high.

C. C. H. S.—(1.) Mr. Cecil Gray's book 'A Survey of Contemporary Music' is provocative, and therefore stimulating. We don't think it will 'help in the appreciation of modern music,' because the only way to appreciate anything is to become familiar with it. As you say, 'Mr. Gray's opinions are very different from those of other critics': Mr. Gray sees to that, and the value of his book lies a good deal in these differences, and in his trenchant way of expressing them. (2.) We do not know the Violin Sonata of Francis J. Morgan, nor do we recall any public performances of it.

S. J.—You did rightly in dropping the teacher who gave you rubbish to play. But the organ can hardly be mastered without a teacher, so we advise you to look round for a good one, instead of fending for yourself, as you seem disposed to do. There ought to be no difficulty in finding what you want in so populous a town as yours. If, however, you are unable to take lessons (and your remark about spending all your pocket money on your last lot suggests a difficulty) work away methodically at Alcock's 'The Organ' (Novello). Write again if you want further help.

C. H. S. N.—There is an opera called 'Don Quixote,' usually credited to Purcell. It appears, however, that his participation was limited to one song, 'From rosie bow'rs.' This song was printed in 'Orpheus Britannicus,' with the note, 'This was the last Song that Mr. Purcell Sett, it being in his Sickness.' It is included in the Novello album of Twelve Songs by Purcell.

S. M. X.—We know of no book dealing specially with choral conducting. Your best course is to study (1) conducting in general, and (2) choir-training, and from your knowledge of the two work out a practical method. You will find much of value in No. 2 of Paterson's Festival Booklets, wherein Hugh S. Roberton deals with choral training.

W. A. V. H.—We know too little about pianoforte trading and tuning to be able to advise you. No doubt a letter to the Editor of the Music Trades Review (5 & 6, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.2) would bring you some useful information.

E. W. S.—The fingering in organ and harmonium playing is now pretty much like that used on the pianoforte. You can have no better guide than Alcock's 'The Organ' (Novello).

ALLEGRO.—Elliston's 'Organs and Tuning' (Weekes, 25s.); or the article in the new 'Grove' will suffice.

EAR-TESTS AT THE R.C.O.

Replying to 'F. L.,' in our last number, we said that the ear-tests at the R.C.O. examinations are played on the organ. This was a mistake, due to our confusing these tests with the chords played to blind candidates. The ear-tests are played on the pianoforte, not on the organ.

WILLIAM LOMAS
(Late Royal College of Music, Manchester)
TENOR.
ORATORIO, OPERA, BALLAD, AND SACRED
Gloucester Cathedral.
45, St. Mary Street, Gloucester.

MUSICAL HISTORY.
MR. E. THURLBY-WATERSON'S Comprehensive Postal Course ensures thorough tuition in the History of Music. Useful memory aids are a special feature of each lesson. Fee for (the Course of) 12 lessons, One Guinea. Send stamps for specimen lesson to 19, Cambridge Road, Southend-on-Sea, Essex.

ORATORIO BAND PARTS complete, with Full Score, for Hire. "MESSIAH." "ELIJAH." "CREATION." Pope, 17, St. Augustine's Parade, Bristol.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.
WANTED, BASS (not Baritone) SINGER. Stipend, £100 per annum. Good sight-reader essential. Cathedral experience desirable. Applications, stating age, and whether married, and enclosing copies of not more than three recent testimonials, to be sent immediately to the Rev. Canon Davis, The Liberty, Wells, Somerset.

ORGANIST and MUSICAL DIRECTOR required for Southfields Wesleyan Methodist Central Hall. New three-manual organ (electric action). Apply (letters only), stating age, qualifications, experience, and salary required, to Organ Secretary, Wesleyan Central Hall, Durnsford Road, S.W.19.

ALTO required, St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C. Light duties. Good sight-reader essential. £15. Write, G. J. Metzler, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6.

CHURCH ORGANS from £100 per annum. Two manuals and pedals. Many high-class instruments to choose from. Write, Organ Works, Manor Road, Hastings.

TO MUSICAL SOCIETIES, ETC.—Contralto is willing to give services. Apply, "F. Y.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPYING, Transposition, Arrangements, Band Parts, &c., Smith, 40, Coniston Rd., Muswell Hill, N.10.

CONTENTS.

| | PAGE |
|---|---|
| The Nature of Harmony. By Matthew Shirlaw | 17 |
| The Opening Motive of 'Boris Godunof.' By M. D. Calvocoressi | 19 |
| Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' | 21 |
| The Fingering of Scales and Arpeggios on the Pianoforte. By A. E. F. Dickinson | 23 |
| Bach and the Clavier. By Eric Blom | 25 |
| The Art of Explanation. By Robert H. Hull | 27 |
| A Contribution to the History of the Flute. By Alban Voigt | 28 |
| Music in the Foreign Press. By M. D. Calvocoressi | 29 |
| Facsimile Letters No. 12: Sims Reeves | 30 |
| The Truth of Art. By Percy Rideout | 31 |
| Points from Lectures | 34 |
| New Music | 35 |
| The Musician's Bookshelf | 41 |
| Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' | 45 |
| Player-Piano Notes | 47 |
| Occasional Notes | 48 |
| Church and Organ Music | 54 |
| Royal College of Organists: Distribution of Diplomas | 54 |
| The School of English Church Music: Outline of Mr. Nicholson's Project | 54 |
| Letters to the Editor | 58 |
| The Amateurs' Exchange | 62 |
| Sharps and Flats | 62 |
| Royal Academy of Music | 63 |
| Royal College of Music | 63 |
| Trinity College of Music | 64 |
| Tonic Sol-fa Colleges | 64 |
| Music in Public Schools of To-day | 64 |
| 'The Coronation of Poppæa' at Oxford | 65 |
| British National Opera at Golders Green | 66 |
| The Bristol Opera Season | 67 |
| New Bax Sonata | 67 |
| Schönberg at Paris | 67 |
| London Concerts | 68 |
| Music in the Provinces | 71 |
| Kodály's "Psalmus Hungaricus" at Cambridge | 75 |
| Competition Festival Record | 75 |
| Music in Scotland | 76 |
| Music in Wales | 77 |
| Music in Ireland | 77 |
| Musical Notes from Abroad | 77 |
| Obituary | 79 |
| Answers to Correspondents | 79 |

MUSIC.

'Hail, gladdening Light.' Short Anthem for Evensong. By Hugh Blair ... 49

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:

1. 'Song of the Volga Boatmen.' Arranged for Male Voices, by H. Balfour Gardiner.
2. 'If I had but two little wings.' By C. Hubert H. Parry, arranged as a Two-Part Song for Female Voices, by John Pointer.

DURING THE LAST MONTH
Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BLAIR, HUGH.—"Hail, gladdening Light." Short Anthem for Evensong. (No. 1019, The Musical Times.) 3d.

HAVERGAL, CECILIA.—"The Christmas Love." Carol. 1d.

HEWSON, G. H. P.—"Crossing the Bar." For S.A.T.B. 4d.

MATTA, A. L.—The Lord's Prayer, in F. Monotone with Choral Harmonies. 3d.

MONCKTON, E.—"Who are these like stars appearing." Hymn (with Descant). 2d.

ROBSON, R. WALKER.—"O Lord, support us." Anthem. 3d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 427, contains the following music in both notations. "The early morning." Unison Song. GEORGE RATHBONE. "The Little Clock." Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY. "Old King Cole." Round. E. T. SWEETING. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1479. "Oft in the stilly night." Arranged with Descant by GEOFFREY SHAW — 2d.

1480. "Mine eyes have seen the glory" (American National Hymn). Arranged with optional Descant in Canon, by H. A. CHAMBERS — 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

SUTTON, ETHEL K.—"Far off bells at evening time." A Christmas Song, 2s.

TAYLOR, COLIN.—"John Gilpin." Set for Female (or Boys') Voices. Violino Primo, 1s. 6d.; Violino Secondo, 1s. 6d. Castanets and Tambourine, 8d.

TAYLOR, E.—"Britain's Emblem." Song. 2s.

THIMAN, ERIC H.—"In the bleak midwinter." Song. In two keys, D and F. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2547. "Loch Lomond." Scottish Air. Arranged for Mixed Voices, by THOMAS F. DUNHILL 2d.

WEST, JOHN E. (arranged by).—"Song of the Volga Boatmen," in C. 1s. 6d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ADAM, ADOLPHE.—"O Holy Night." Arranged for Tenor Solo and Chorus of Men's Voices, by MARK ANDREWS. (No. 912, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

ANDREWS, MARK.—"The Song of the Star." Christmas Duet for Soprano and Tenor. 50 cents (2s.).

BANKS, H. C., JUN.—"Slow sinks the Sun." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. Unaccompanied. (No. 348, Modern Series.) 15 cents (8d.).

BINDER, A. W.—"Constancy." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 350, Modern Series.) 12 cents (6d.).

BLAIR, HUGH.—"Sing to the Lord a Joyful Song." Anthem. Tenor (or Soprano) Solo and Mixed Voices. (No. 880, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

BULLIS, C. H.—"Blessed art Thou, O Lord God." (No. 897, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

CAMPBELL, B.—"Jesus, Master, Whose I am." Offertory. Song for High or Medium Voice. 50 cents (2s.).

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"The Four Horsemen." A Sacred Cantata in three parts. 75 cents (3s.).

DICKINSON, C.—"World, rejoice! The Saviour Christ is born." Eight-part Chorus and Solo Quartet. (No. 142, Sacred Choruses.) 25 cents (1s.).

GAUL, H.—"Benedicite Omnia Opera Domini." Shortened Setting. (No. 878, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

HALL, W. H.—"Saviour, Whose love is like the sun." (No. 26, Supplementary Hymns.) 5 cents (3d.).

LUTKIN, P. C.—"Christians, awake, salute the happy morn." Motet for Soprano Solo and Mixed Chorus. (No. 913, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

—— "The waits are singing in the lane." Christmas Carol for Mixed Voices. (No. 917, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

MACKINNON, H. A.—"If I were Lord of the Sun." Song for Bass Voice. 50 cents (2s.).

—— "John." Spiritual Song for Solo Voice. 50 cents (2s.).

—— "Wistaria." Song for Mezzo-Soprano Voice. 50 cents (2s.).

SMITH, D. B.—"An Ancient Carol." S.S.A.A. (No. 918, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

VIBBARD, H.—"The dusky cherub." Part-Song for S.S.A. (No. 357, Modern Series.) 10 cents (6d.).

VITTORIA (arranged by E. H. Geer).—"Jesu, the very thought of Thee." Anthem for S.S.A.A. (No. 901, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—Holy Communion, for Unison or Mixed Voices. (No. 869, Church Music Review.) 50 cents (2s.).

YOUNG, S.—"The Pulley." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 911, Church Music Review.) 15 cents 8d.)

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, 3s.: Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

THE SOLITUDES OF THE PASSION

A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA.

For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus, with Hymns for Choir and Congregation.

Price 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The music is devotional and very singable."—Musical Times.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS ... | 2 | 6 |
| ANTHEMS: The desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |
| I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 4 |
| PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ... ... | 0 | 3 |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

---

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

---

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

---

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

---

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE.

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK

(OP. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
(Vocal parts, 1s. each.)

An Edition with Latin words (Stabat Mater) may also be had.

---

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY. SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, With Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

---

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.
THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.
ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY
G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR
TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH
HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION
FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE
(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY
E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY
GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
(An Edition with Latin words may also be had, price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.)

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,
FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS
TOGETHER WITH
HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 1½d.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION
ON THE
SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY
FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED EDITION

OF

BELSHAZZAR

AN ORATORIO

FOR THREE OR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL.

Price Three Shillings.

The estimated time of performance is about 1 hour 45 minutes, and the work is scored for Strings, 2 Oboes (2 Bassoons, 2 Trumpets, Drums), and Continuo. A judicious interchange between organ and pianoforte (or harpsichord) is recommended for the Continuo. If it is impossible to employ a keyed instrument, all the passages left unscored by Handel have been scored for Strings, and are included in the String parts as cues.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION

OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Orchestral Parts on hire.

Also published separately.
ACT I.
PRICE 1s. 6d.

The time of performance of the complete concert edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete Score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AN ABRIDGED
CONCERT EDITION
OF

CARMEN

AN OPERA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GEORGES BIZET.

SELECTED AND ADAPTED

BY

W. McNAUGHT.

THE LIBRETTO FROM THE ENGLISH VERSION OF THE COMPLETE OPERA BY

LUCIA YOUNG.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.
Tonic Sol-fa, Price 2s.
Book of Words, price 4s. 8d. per 100.
STRING PARTS ... 29s. 6d.
Newly Printed Full Score and Wind Parts on hire.

The time of performance is about 1 hour 15 minutes. For this edition a new full score has been prepared with cues, so that the orchestra may either be full, or reduced to: Strings, 2 Flutes (each changing to Picc.), 1 Oboe (1st, changing to English Horn), 2 Clarinets, 1 Bassoon (1st); 2 Horns (1st and 2nd), 2 Trumpets (or Cornets), 1 Trombone (2nd); Timpani; Percussion.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AN ABRIDGED
CONCERT EDITION
OF

KING ARTHUR

AN OPERA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

LIBRETTO BY JOHN DRYDEN.

MUSIC BY

HENRY PURCELL.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.
Orchestral Parts on hire.

The time of performance is about 1 hour 15 minutes, and the work is scored for Strings, (Flutes), Oboes, and Trumpets. For most of the songs Purcell supplied only a figured bass, for which a pianoforte should be used (unless a harpsichord is available), as well as to "fill in" throughout the work. The unscored passages have also been scored for strings for use when a pianoforte is inconvenient. The Orchestra may therefore be (a) Strings only; or (b) Strings and Pianoforte (Harpsichord), with or without the addition of any of the wind instruments.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK

BOOK II.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

| TUNE. | METRE. | HYMN. |
|---|---|---|
| Abridge ... ... ... ... | C.M. ... | Be Thou my Guardian |
| Aberystwyth ... ... ... ... | 7.7.7.7.D. ... | Jesu, Lover of my soul |
| Alleluia, dulce Carmen ... ... | 8.7.8.7.8.7. ... | Alleluia, song of sweetness |
| Capetown ... ... ... ... | 7.7.7.5. ... | Three in One, and One in Three |
| Caswall ... ... ... ... | 6.5.6.5. ... | Glory be to Jesus |
| Crüger... ... ... ... ... | 7.6.7.6.D. ... | Hail to the Lord's Anointed |
| Dix ... ... ... ... ... | 7.7.7.7.7.7. ... | As with gladness men of old |
| Duke Street ... ... ... ... | L.M. ... | Fight the good fight with all thy might |
| Dundee ... ... ... ... | C.M. ... | The people that in darkness sat |
| Ebenezer ... ... ... ... | 8.7.8.7.D. ... | Hail, Thou once despisèd Jesus |
| Farley Castle ... ... ... ... | 10.10.10.10. ... | 'Lift up your hearts.' We lift them |
| Franconia ... ... ... ... | S.M. ... | Bless'd are the pure in heart |
| Lincoln ... ... ... ... | C.M. ... | Lord, in Thy Name Thy servants plead |
| London New ... ... ... ... | C.M. ... | God moves in a mysterious way |
| Mannheim ... ... ... ... | 8.7.8.7.8.7. ... | Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us |
| Merton ... ... ... ... | 8.7.8.7. ... | Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding |
| O Filii et Filiæ ... ... ... (1st Version) | 8.8.8. ... (with Alleluias) | O sons and daughters, let us sing |
| O Filii et Filiæ ... ... ... (2nd Version) | 8.8.8. (with Alleluias) ... | |
| Old 124th ... ... ... ... | 10.10.10.10.10. ... | Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face |
| Passion Chorale ... ... ... | 7.6.7.6.D. ... | O Sacred Head, surrounded |
| Praise, my soul ... ... ... | 8.7.8.7.8.7. ... | Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven |
| St. Albinus ... ... ... ... | 7.8.7.8. (with Alleluias) ... | Jesus lives! no longer now |
| St. Cross ... ... ... ... | L.M. ... | O come and mourn with me awhile |
| St. Cuthbert ... ... ... ... | 8.6.8.4. ... | Our Blest Redeemer, ere He breathed |
| St. James ... ... ... ... | C.M. ... | Thou art the Way; by Thee alone |
| St. Michael ... ... ... ... (Old 134th) | S.M. ... | Above the starry spheres |
| St. Stephen ... ... ... ... | C.M. ... | O God of Hosts, the mighty Lord |
| St. Thomas ... ... ... ... | 8.7.8.7.8.7. ... | Lo! He comes, with clouds descending |
| Southwell ... ... ... ... | S.M. ... | Thou Judge of quick and dead |
| Stuttgart ... ... ... ... | 8.7.8.7. ... | Earth has many a noble city |
| Tallis' Ordinal ... ... ... | C.M. ... | O God unseen yet ever near |
| University ... ... ... ... | C.M. ... | The God of Love my Shepherd is |
| Veni Creator ... ... ... ... | L.M. ... | Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire |
| Veni Sancte Spiritus ... ... | 7.7.7.7.7.7. ... | Come, Thou Holy Spirit, come |
| Westminster ... ... ... .. | C.M. ... | My God, how wonderful Thou art |

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

(VOCAL).

CANTATAS.

s. d.

ATONEMENT, THE (Op. 53). A Sacred Cantata for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. The words written by ALICE PARSONS .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 5 6

Paper boards, 6s. 6d. Cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. per 100. String Parts, 28s. 6d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

BLIND GIRL OF CASTÉL-CUILLÉ, THE (Op. 43). For Soprano and Baritone Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. The Poem translated from the Gascon of JASMIN, by H. W. LONGFELLOW. Revised Edition .. .. .. 4 0

Paper Boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 17s. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

BON-BON SUITE (Op. 68). Baritone Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra. The Words by THOMAS MOORE .. .. .. 3 0

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 4s. per 100. String Parts, 11s. 3d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

ENDYMION'S DREAM (Op. 65). For Soprano and Tenor Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Words by C. R. B. BARRETT .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 6

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. String Parts, 10s. 6d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HIAWATHA. SCENES FROM THE SONG OF (Op. 30). For Soprano, Tenor, and Baritone Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Words by Longfellow. Complete .. .. 5 6

Paper Boards, 6s. 6d. Cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3s. Vocal Parts, 3s. each. Book of words, with Analyses by J. BENNETT and A. J. JAEGER, 1s. 4d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100. Full Score, 63s.

SEPARATELY FROM THE ABOVE:—

1. HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST (Op. 30, No. 1). For Tenor Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra .. .. .. 2 6

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 12s. 9d. Wind Parts, on hire only. Full Score, 25s. Vocal Score, German Words, by FERDINAND FREILIGRATT, 4s. 6d. Pianoforte Solo (Arr. by JOHN POINTER), 5s. 6d.

2. THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA (Op. 30, No. 2). For Soprano and Baritone Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra 2 6

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 11s. 3d. Wind Parts, on hire only. Full Score, 25s. Pianoforte Solo (Arr. by JOHN POINTER), 5s. 6d.

3. HIAWATHA'S DEPARTURE (Op. 30, No. 4). For Soprano, Tenor, and Baritone Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra .. .. .. .. .. .. 3 0

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 18s. Wind Parts, on hire only. Full Score, 30s.

KUBLA KHAN (Op. 61). A Rhapsody for Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra. The Words by COLERIDGE .. .. .. 2 6

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. String Parts, 15s. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

MEG BLANE (Op. 48). A Rhapsody of the Sea for Mezzo-Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra. The Words written by ROBERT BUCHANAN .. .. .. .. 3 0

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 10s. 6d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

TALE OF OLD JAPAN, A (Op. 76). For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. The Poem by ALFRED NOYES .. .. .. 4 0

Paper boards, 5s. Cloth, gilt, 6s. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. String Parts, 16s. 3d. Full Score and Wind Parts (on hire only).

SONGS.

s. d.

AMERICAN LYRICS, SIX (Op. 45). (Contralto or Baritone):—
1. O THOU, MINE OTHER, STRONGER PART .. .. .. 2 0
2. O PRAISE ME NOT .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
3. HER LOVE .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
4. THE DARK EVE HAS LEFT US .. .. .. .. 2 0
5. O SHIP THAT SAILEST .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
6. BEAT, BEAT, DRUMS. (Full Score and Orchestral Parts, MS.) .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

AS THE MOON'S SOFT SPLENDOUR (Op. 37, No. 5). (SHELLEY.) For Contralto or Baritone .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

BLOOD-RED KING HUNG ROUND THE MOON, A (Op. 37, No. 3). (BARRY DANE.) In G minor and C minor .. .. .. 2 0

CANOE SONG (Op. 37, No. 2). (ISABELLA CRAWFORD.) In D flat and F .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

ELEANORE (Op. 37, No. 6). (ERIC MACKAY.) In D, B flat, A, and C. Full Score and Orchestral Parts in D and A only, MS. 2 0

GREAT IS HE WHO FUSED THE MIGHT. Drinking Song, from "Ulysses." For Tenor .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

HIAWATHA (Movements from):

HIAWATHA'S VISION. Dramatic Scena From "Hiawatha's Departure." English and German Words. Full Score, 6s. Orchestral Parts, MS. For Baritone .. .. .. 2 0

ONAWAY! AWAKE, BELOVED! From "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" (Op. 30, No. 1). In D flat, Baritone; in G flat, Tenor. (String Parts, 2s. 8d. Wind Parts, 4s. 8d. Full Score, 7s. 6d. Military Band Parts, 7s. 6d.) (Orchestral Parts to Tenor key only.) 2 0

SPRING HAD COME. From "Hiawatha's Departure." English and German Words. Full Score, 5s. 6d. Orchestral Parts, MS. For Soprano .. .. .. 2 0

O SET THE SAILS. From "Ulysses." For Tenor .. .. .. 2 0

SONS OF THE SEA. (SAROGINI NAIDU.) In F minor and E minor. Full Score and Orchestral Parts in F minor, MS. .. .. 2 0

SOUL'S EXPRESSION, THE (Op. 42). Four Sonnets by ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING. Contralto .. .. .. .. 4 0
1. The Soul's Expression; 2. Tears; 3. Grief; 4. Comfort. Full Score and Orchestral Parts, MS.

SWEET EVENINGS COME AND GO, LOVE (Op. 37, No. 4). (GEORGE ELIOT.) In F and B flat .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

WHO CALLS? (From "Endymion's Dream.") (The Words by C. R. B. BARRETT.) Tenor .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

YOU'LL LOVE ME YET (Op. 37, No. 1). (ROBERT BROWNING.) In G minor and B minor .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

DUET.

KEEP THOSE EYES. (THOMAS MOORE.) Soprano and Tenor .. 3 0

ANTHEMS AND SERVICE.

BREAK FORTH INTO JOY .. .. .. .. .. .. 0 4
BY THE WATERS OF BABYLON. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. 0 4
IN THEE, O LORD, HAVE I PUT MY TRUST. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. 0 4
LIFT UP YOUR HEADS. Sol-fa, 1½d. .. .. .. .. 0 4
LORD IS MY STRENGTH, THE. Sol-fa, 3d. .. .. .. .. 0 4
NOW LATE ON THE SABBATH DAY. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. 0 3
O YE THAT LOVE THE LORD. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. 0 4
TE DEUM. In F .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 0 6
BENEDICTUS. In F .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 0 6
JUBILATE. In F .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 0 4
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS. In F .. .. .. .. 0 6

PART-SONGS, ETC. (S.A.T.B.)

BY THE LONE SEASHORE. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. 0 3
EVENING STAR, THE. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. .. 0 3
LEE-SHORE, THE. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. .. 0 4
LORD! HEARKEN TO ME. Epilogue. Chorus, 8 Voices. (From "Meg Blane") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 1 0
SEA-DRIFT. (Op. 69.) Rhapsody. For 8 Voices. Sol-fa, 6d. .. 0 8
SONG OF PROSERPINE. Sol-fa, 1½d. .. .. .. .. 0 3
WHISPERS OF SUMMER. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. 0 3

PART-SONGS FOR FEMALE AND BOYS' VOICES.

ENCINCTURED WITH A TWINE OF LEAVES. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. 0 4
FROM THE GREEN HEART OF THE WATERS. (From "Ulysses.") Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 0 4
PIXIES, THE. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. .. .. 0 4
WHAT CAN LAMBKINS DO. Sol-fa, 2d. .. .. .. .. 0 4

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPOSITIONS
BY
S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.
INSTRUMENTAL.

ORCHESTRA.

BALLADE IN A MINOR (Op. 33). For full Orchestra. s. d.
String Parts, 6s. 9d. Wind Parts, 15s. 8d. Full Score .. 11 6

BALLADE IN D MINOR (Op. 4). For Violin and Orchestra.
String Parts, 3s. 4d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES, FOUR (Op. 22):—
1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.
2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.
3. VALSE DE LA REINE.
4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra, complete, 9s. Wind Parts for Small Orchestra, complete, 10s. 5d. Wind Parts for Full Orchestra, complete, 17s. 5d. Full Score (Full Orchestra), complete, 11s. 6d. Full Score (Small Orchestra), complete, MS. Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and Strings, each Number, price, 3s. Separate String Parts, 8d. each. Military Band Arrangement, by DAN GODFREY, Jun., 19s.

HEMO DANCE (Scherzo) (Op. 47, No. 2). For Full Orchestra.
String Parts, 7s. 6d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HIAWATHA, OVERTURE TO THE SONG OF (Op. 30, No. 3). For Full Orchestra.
String Parts, 7s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 10d. Full Score, MS.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST. SELECTION FROM (Op. 30, No. 1). (Arr. for Small Orchestra by W. G. ROSS.)
String Parts, 8s. 3d. Wind Parts, &c., 15s. 6d. Pianoforte Conductor Part, 2s. 3d. Full Score, MS.

IDYLL (Op. 44). For Full Orchestra.
String Parts, 3s. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

NERO, INCIDENTAL MUSIC TO (Op. 62):—
PRELUDE.
String Parts, 4s. 2d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.
FIRST ENTR'ACTE (Finale).
String Parts, 4s. 2d. Wind Parts, 14s. Full Score, MS. Pianoforte Conductor Part, 2s. 3d.
SECOND ENTR'ACTE (Prelude) (Poppæa).
String Parts, 3s. 4d. Wind Parts, 13s. 8d. Full Score, MS. Pianoforte Conductor Part, 3s.
INTERMEZZO (Singing Girls' Chorus).
String Parts, 3s. Wind Parts, 4s. 4d. Full Score, MS. Pianoforte Conductor Part, 8d.
EASTERN DANCE.
String Parts, 3s. 4d. Wind Parts, 8s. 4d. Full Score, MS Pianoforte Conductor Part, 1s. 6d.
PROCESSIONAL MARCH.
String Parts, 3s. 4d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.
SUITE OF FOUR PIECES:—
PRELUDE (SECOND ENTR'ACTE) (Poppæa).
INTERMEZZO (Singing Girls' Chorus).
EASTERN DANCE.
FINALE (FIRST ENTR'ACTE).
String Parts, 12s. Wind Parts, 34s. 9d. Full Score, MS. Cornetti transposed from the Trumpet part, 2s. 3d.

NOVELLETTEN, FOUR (Op. 52). For String Orchestra, Tambourine, and Triangle. Full Score .. .. .. each 4 0
Parts—No. 1, 3s. 8d.; No. 2, 3s. 8d.; No. 3, 3s. 8d. No. 4, 6s. 2d.

ROMANCE IN G (Op. 39). For Violin and Orchestra.
String Parts, 3s. 4d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

SCENES FROM AN EVERYDAY ROMANCE (Op. 41). Suite for Full Orchestra.
String Parts, 14s. 3d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

SOLEMN PRELUDE (Op. 40). For Full Orchestra.
String Parts, 3s. 4d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS ON AN AFRICAN AIR (Op. 63).
String Parts, 10s. 6d. Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE. Concert Overture for Full Orchestra.
String Parts, 8s. 3d.
Full Score and Wind Parts on Hire only.

MILITARY BAND.

s. d.
CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES, FOUR .. .. .. .. .. 19 0
HIAWATHA. ONAWAY! AWAKE, BELOVED! (Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast, From) .. .. .. .. .. .. 7 6

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE.

BALLADE IN D MINOR .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES, FOUR .. .. .. .. .. 4 6
1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
2. VALSE RUSTIQUE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
3. VALSE DE LA REINE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
4. VALSE MAURESQUE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
HEMO DANCE (Scherzo) .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3 6
IDYLL .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
NERO, INCIDENTAL MUSIC TO:—
EASTERN DANCE .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
INTERMEZZO (Singing Girls' Chorus) .. .. .. .. 2 0
PRELUDE .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
FIRST ENTR'ACTE (Finale) .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
SECOND ENTR'ACTE (Prelude) (Poppæa) .. .. .. .. 2 0
NOVELLETTEN, FOUR. No. 1, in A; No. 2, in C; No. 3, in A minor; No. 4, in D .. .. .. .. .. each 2 0
ROMANCE IN G .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

BALLADE IN A MINOR .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES, FOUR .. .. .. .. .. 4 0
1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
2. VALSE RUSTIQUE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
3. VALSE DE LA REINE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
4. VALSE MAURESQUE .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
HIAWATHA, OVERTURE TO THE SONG OF .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
HIAWATHA (movements from)—
DEATH OF MINNEHAHA, THE (Arr. by JOHN POINTER) .. 5 6
HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST (Arr. by JOHN POINTER) .. 5 6
NERO, INCIDENTAL MUSIC TO:—
EASTERN DANCE .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
INTERMEZZO (Singing Girls' Chorus) .. .. .. .. 2 0
PRELUDE .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
PROCESSIONAL MARCH .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
FIRST ENTR'ACTE (Finale) .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
SECOND ENTR'ACTE (Prelude) (Poppæa) .. .. .. .. 2 0
SUITE OF FOUR PIECES .. .. .. .. .. .. 6 0
1. PRELUDE (SECOND ENTR'ACTE) (Poppæa).
2. INTERMEZZO (Singing Girls' Chorus).
3. EASTERN DANCE.
4. FINALE (FIRST ENTR'ACTE).
SCENES FROM AN EVERYDAY ROMANCE .. .. .. .. 5 0
SOLEMN PRELUDE .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS ON AN AFRICAN AIR .. .. .. 3 6

ORGAN.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST. A SELECTION OF MOVEMENTS FROM. Arr. by HUGH BLAIR .. .. .. 4 0
SHORT PIECES, THREE (complete) .. .. .. .. .. 2 0
Or singly:—
MELODY ("The Village Organist." Book 12) .. .. .. 1 6
ELEGY ("The Village Organist." Book 15) .. .. .. 1 6
ARIETTA ("The Village Organist." Book 16) .. .. .. 1 6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW EDITION.

POCKET SING-SONG BOOK

FOR SCHOOLS, HOMES

AND

COMMUNITY SINGING

CONTENTS.

A-hunting we will go
All people that on earth do dwell (Old 100th)
All through the night
Arethusa, The
Ash Grove, The
Auld Lang Syne
Bay of Biscay, The
Begone, dull care
Bells of Aberdovey, The
Blow, blow, thou winter wind
Blue Bell of Scotland, The
Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond, The
British Grenadiers, The
Campbells are comin', The
Camptown Races
Charlie is my Darling
Coasts of High Barbary, The
Come, lasses and lads
Come, let's be merry
Dashing away with the smoothing iron
Down among the dead men
David of the White Rock
Drink to me only with thine eyes
Early one morning
Flight of the Earls, The
Girl I left behind me, The
Glory to Thee, my God, this night (Tallis)
God rest you merry, gentlemen
God save the King
Golden Vanity, The
Good-morrow, Gossip Joan
Harp that once through Tara's halls, The Heart of Oak
Heave away, my Johnny
Here's a health unto His Majesty
I saw three ships
John Brown's body
John Peel
Keel row, The
Land of my Fathers
Lass of Richmond Hill, The
Last Rose of Summer, The
Let the hills resound
Londonderry Air
March of the Men of Harlech
Marching thro' Georgia
Marseillaise, The
Meeting of the Waters, The Mermaid, The
Minstrel Boy, The
My Lady Greensleeves
Now thank we all our God
O no, John !
Oak and the Ash, The
Oh, dear ! what can the matter be
Oh ! we can play
Old Folks at Home
Old King Cole
One man went to mow
Onward, Christian Soldiers
Poacher, The
Polly Oliver
Polly-wolly-doodle
Rio Grand
Rounds: Come, follow me
'Tis humdrum
Chairs to mend
Rule, Britannia
So early in the morning
Summer is a-coming in
There was a simple maiden
This great world is a trouble
Tight little Island, The
Twelve days of Christmas
Vicar of Bray, The
Wanderer, The
We be Three Poor Mariners
When I was a Tailor
When Johnny comes marching home
Wi' a Hundred Pipers
Widdicombe Fair
Will ye no come back again
Young May Moon, The

Size 6½ in. by 5 in., rounded corners, and lined paper cover. The songs are generally set in low keys with simple pianoforte accompaniments. The voice part is printed in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa notations.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Words only, price 4*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PAXTON'S COMMUNITY SONG BOOK

A Comprehensive Collection arranged for Optional, Unison, or Four-part Harmony Singing.

NATIONAL SONGS AND AIRS.
SEA SONGS AND CHANTEYS.
ROUNDS AND CATCHES.
NEGRO SONGS AND SPIRITUALS.
HYMNS AND ANTHEMS.
CAROLS. PART-SONGS.
TRADITIONAL SONGS AND CHORUSES.

CONTENTS.

NATIONAL SONGS AND AIRS.

Belgian National Song.
British Grenadiers.
God Bless the Prince of Wales.
God Save the King.
Hail, Columbia!
Maple Leaf for Ever.
Marseillaise.
Men of Harlech.
O Canada!
Red, White, and Blue.
Rule, Britannia!
Star-Spangled Banner.
Wearing of the Green.

SEA SONGS AND CHANTEYS.

Arethusa.
Bay of Biscay.
Blow, Boys, Blow!
Blow the Man Down.
Dead Horse.
Hanging Johnnie.
Hardy Norseman.
Heart of Oak.
Johnny Bowker.
Life on the Ocean Wave.
Reuben Ranzo.
Rio Grande.
Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep.
Sally Brown.
Shenadoa.
Tom Bowling.
Tom's gone to Hilo.
Whisky for my Johnnie.

ROUNDS AND CATCHES.

Gabriel John.
I Cannot Sing this Catch.
London 's Burning.
Old Chairs to Mend.
Poor Thomas Day.
Three Blind Mice.
Tinker.
Would you Know My Celia's Charms?
Would you Sing a Catch?

TRADITIONAL SONGS AND CHORUSES.

Annie Laurie.
Auld Lang Syne.
Bailiff's Daughter of Islington.
Blue Bell of Scotland.
Bonnie Banks o' Loch Lomon'
Canadian Boat Song.
Charlie is my Darling.
Come, Lasses and Lads.
Girl I left behind me.
Harp that once through Tara's halls.
Here 's to the maiden of bashful fifteen.
Home, Sweet Home.
John Peel.
Killarney.
Last Rose of Summer.
Minstrel Boy.
Sally in Our Alley.
There is a Tavern in the Town.
There was a Jolly Miller.
Vicar of Bray.
Weel may the keel row.

HYMNS AND ANTHEMS.

Abide with me.
All people that on earth do dwell.
Easter Hymn.
Eternal Father, Strong to Save.
Glory to Thee, my God, this night.
God is a Spirit.
Hallelujah Chorus.
Homeland.
Jesu, Lover of my soul.
Lead, Kindly Light.
Nearer, my God, to Thee.
Now the sun's declining rays.
O God, our Help in ages past.
Praise the Lord, ye Heavens adore Him.

CAROLS.

Bethlehem.
Christmas Song.
Christians, Awake!
Good King Wenceslas.
O come, all ye faithful.
The First Nowell.
While Shepherds watched.

NEGRO SONGS AND SPIRITUALS.

Carry me back to Old Virginny.
Deep River.
Go Down, Moses.
John Brown's Body.
Massa's in de cold ground.
My Old Kentucky Home, Good-Night.
Nobody knows the trouble I've seen.
Old Folks at Home.
Peter, go ring dem bells.
Steal away.
Swing low, sweet chariot.

PART-SONGS.

Departure.
Drink to me only.
Dulce Domum.
In this hour of softened splendour.
Londonderry Air.
Long day closes.
Many Happy Returns of the Day.
Motherland of Ours.
Old Rustic Bridge by the Mill.
O who will o'er the downs so free?
Parting and Meeting.
Softly fall the shades of evening.
Song of the Volga Boatmen.
Sweet and Low.
Sweet Genevieve.
When Evening's Twilight.

PRICE 1/4. Words only, price 3d. 25 copies for 5/-

PAXTON'S COMMUNITY SONG PROGRAMMES

Complete contrasted programmes for a 2-hours' performance, with hints on "How to Make a Community Sing-Song a Success." Full words and music.

First Programme.

Chairman's Opening Remarks.

1. Charlie is my Darling ... ... ... Traditional Song
2. Rio Grande... ... ... ... ... ...Sea Chantey
3. London's Burning ... ... ... ... Round
4. There was a Jolly Miller ... ... Traditional Song

Interlude (Vocal, Orchestral, &c.)

5. Shenadoa ... ... ... ... ... Sea Chantey
6. Three Blind Mice... ... ... ... ... Round

INTERVAL.

7. Men of Harlech ... ... ... ... Traditional Song
8. Swing low, sweet chariot ... ... Negro Spiritual

Interlude (Vocal, Orchestral, &c.)

9. John Peel ... ... ... ... ... Traditional Song
10. Repetition of Favourite Number in Programme ...
11. Lead, Kindly Light ... ... ... ... Hymn

Second Programme.

Chairman's Opening Remarks.

1. Blow, Boys, Blow ... ... ... Sea Chantey
2. Old Chairs to Mend ... ... ... ... Round
3. Drink to me only ... ... ... Traditional Song
4. Old Folks at Home ... ... ... Negro Spiritual

Interlude (Vocal, Orchestral, &c.)

5. Londonderry Air ... ... ... ... ... Irish Song
6. John Brown's Body ... ... ... ... Negro Song

INTERVAL.

7. Blow The Man Down ... ... ... ...Sea Chantey
8. Poor Thomas Day ... ... ... ... Catch

Interlude (Vocal, Orchestral, &c.)

9. Killarney ... ... ... ... Traditional Irish Song
10. Repetition of Favourite Number in Programme ...
11. Auld Lang Syne ... ... Traditional Scotch Song

Words and music for each programme, 3d. Words only, sheets 1d. each, 3/- per 100.

W. PAXTON & Co., LTD., 22, HIGH ST., NEW OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.C.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SEVEN PART-SONGS

FOR FEMALE VOICES AND STRINGS.

WORDS BY

ROBERT BRIDGES.

MUSIC BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 44.)

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Say who is this ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| 2. | O love, I complain ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 3. | Angel Spirits of sleep ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 4. | When first we met ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| 5. | Sorrow and joy ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 6. | Love in my heart from Heaven ... ... | 3d. |
| 7. | Assemble all ye maidens ... ... ... | 8d. |

String Parts, Nos. 1-6, complete, 2s. 8d.
Ditto, No. 7, 2s. 8d.

"'Assemble all ye maidens' is very beautiful, with that cold, pure beauty which the composer knows so well how to get from a few simple vocal strains, long sustained drone or pedal notes on the strings, and a basso ostinato in quintuple time enriching the rhythmic movement of the later stanzas."—The Times.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILL BE PUBLISHED JANUARY 6.

PART-SONGS for MALE VOICES

(A.T.B.B.)

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

A Harnet zet in a hollow tree.

A TRADITIONAL BALLAD.

Price 4d.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.

WORDS BY

THOMAS GRAY.

Price 3d.

The despairing lover.

WORDS BY

WILLIAM WALSH.

Price 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY

F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

STRING PARTS, Price 8s.

An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published.

Price 3s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JOHN GILPIN

POEM BY

WILLIAM COWPER.

SET FOR FEMALE (OR BOYS') VOICES IN UNISON.

(Second Part Optional.)

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

(Two Violins and Percussion Optional)

BY

COLIN TAYLOR.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SEVENTEEN SONGS

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL.

Edited and arranged, with accompaniment for the Pianoforte, by

ARTHUR SOMERVELL.

Price Four Shillings.

CONTENTS.

A PASTORAL ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MR. JOHN PLAYFORD.
AH! CRUEL NYMPH.
AH! HOW PLEASANT.
AH! WHAT PAINS.
AN ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MATTHEW LOCKE.
ANACREON'S DEFEAT.
CEASE, O MY SAD SOUL.
HOW DELIGHTFUL 'S THE LIFE.
I FAIN WOULD BE FREE.
IF MUSIC BE THE FOOD OF LOVE (2nd Version).
LET EACH GALLANT HEART.
LOVE ARMS HIMSELF.
OLINDA.
ON THE BROW OF RICHMOND HILL.
SAWNEY IS A BONNY LAD.
THE FATAL HOUR COMES ON.
THE QUEEN'S EPICEDIUM (ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF QUEEN MARY, 1695).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Save Half the Cost of your Music Library

by buying from Foyles, who hold an exceptionally wide range of second-hand copies (in good condition) of Orchestral, Vocal, and Pianoforte Music, Oratorios, Operas, Text-Books, Albums, &c., at greatly reduced prices.

Call and examine the stock at leisure, or write asking for Catalogue of Music Dept., mentioning definite requirements.

SPECIAL OFFERS.

Black's Dictionary of Music and Musicians

Covering the entire period of Musical History from the earliest times to 1924. Originally 21*s.* net. Offered, brand new, at 7*s.* 6*d.*, postage 6*d.*

THE HEART OF MUSIC. By Chapin. The story of the Violin from earliest times to the present day. Published 6*s.* net. Offered, in new condition, at 3*s.* 6*d.* post free.

Above sent on approval. Quote Offer 122.

NEW MUSIC AND TEXT-BOOKS
Supplied on the best terms and quick delivery guaranteed.

Instalment Terms can be arranged in Great Britain for all Music and Books.

Music and Books purchased; Best prices paid.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,
119-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

A NEW PART-SONG

FOR S.A.T.B.

"WE HAVE HEARD THE LUTE"

COMPOSED BY

ROBERT F. JARMAN.

PRESS NOTICES.

"The choir excelled themselves in their rendering of Mr. Jarman's new part-song. With its unorthodox touches, this is a difficult piece to sing unaccompanied, but the choir never faltered, and maintaining a good, bright tone to the finish, they revealed Mr. Jarman's effort as one of much beauty and originality in part-song writing."—Sunderland Daily Echo.

"Mr. Robert F. Jarman's skilfully conceived miniature suite (for small orchestra), and his part-song, "We have heard the lute," were deservedly appreciated features of the . . . . concert."—North Mail and Newcastle Chronicle.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE MASQUE OF COMUS

BY JOHN MILTON.

THE ORIGINAL MUSIC BY

HENRY LAWES.

Together with Incidental Music, Dances, &c., by William Lawes and other contemporary composers.

SELECTED AND ARRANGED BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

THE MUSIC ONLY
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

The complete edition, with Libretto, Notes on the Music, and Suggestions for Performance, price 3*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS OF THE FAVOURITE OPERAS ADAPTED FOR CONCERT USE.

BALFE.
*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 3s.

BIZET.
*CARMEN.
Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.

DONIZETTI.
*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 3s.

FLOTOW.
*MARTHA.
Price 3s.

GOUNOD.
*FAUST.
Price 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

PURCELL.
KING ARTHUR.
Price 2s. 6d.

VERDI.
*IL TROVATORE.
Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER.
TANNHÄUSER.
Price 3s.

WALLACE.
MARITANA.
Price 3s.

Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORGAN MUSIC

SUITABLE FOR PERFORMANCE AT CINEMAS, ETC.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| J. BENEDICT. | | |
| Variations on Arne's "Where the bee sucks" ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| DUDLEY BUCK. | | |
| At Evening ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| WALFORD DAVIES. | | |
| Solemn Melody ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| EDWARD ELGAR. | | |
| Contrasts (The Gavotte) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| PERCY E. FLETCHER. | | |
| Fountain Reverie ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Matinale ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| R. G. HAILING. | | |
| Chanson de Joie... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| KING HALL. | | |
| Canzone ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| ALFRED HOLLINS. | | |
| Allegretto Grazioso ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Barcarolle... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Berceuse ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Evening Rest ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| In Springtime ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Intermezzo in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Maytime (Gavotte) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Minuet ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Morning Song ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Spring Song ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| EDWARD J. HORSMAN. | | |
| The Curfew ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| BERNARD JOHNSON. | | |
| Pavane in A ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| S. KARG-ELERT. | | |
| Harmonies du Soir ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| EDWIN H. LEMARE. | | |
| Andantino in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Chanson d'Eté ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Elegy in G ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Intermezzo in B flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Madrigal ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Minuet Nuptiale ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Pastorale in E ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Reverie in E flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Romance in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| J. A. MEALE. | | |
| Chanson d'Espoir ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| J. RAFF. | | |
| Cavatina ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| SCHUBERT. | | |
| Ave Maria ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Serenade ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| BERTHOLD TOURS. | | |
| Allegretto Grazioso ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Menuetto ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| TSCHAIKOWSKY. | | |
| Chanson Triste ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Chant sans Paroles ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Andantino (Symphony No. 4) ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ERIC WEBSTER. | | |
| Berceuse ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| H. DAVAN WETTON. | | |
| Andantino in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| H. A. WHEELDON. | | |
| Cantilene ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 6 |
| Canzona ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| W. WOLSTENHOLME. | | |
| Canzona ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 6 |
| Romanza and Allegretto in E flat ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES

FOR THE ORGAN

SET VI.

| No. | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | ADAGIO FROM SEXTETT (OP. 81) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | BEETHOVEN |
| 2. | ALLEGRO GRANDIOSO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | HUGH BLAIR |
| 3. | LARGO IN E FLAT... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | E. BUNNETT |
| 4. | MODERATO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | GEORGE CALKIN |
| 5. | BERCEUSE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | CÉSAR CUI |
| 6. | ADAGIO IN D ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | OTTO DIENEL |
| 7. | POSTLUDE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN |
| 8. | IMPROMPTU IN A ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | A. M. GOODHART |
| 9. | WEDDING MARCH ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | A. GUILMANT |
| 10. | MARCH FROM "ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY"... ... ... ... | HANDEL |
| 11. | LIEDER OHNE WORTE, No. 9 ... ... ... ... ... ... | F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY |
| 12. | ALLEGRO IN C ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | GUSTAV MERKEL |
| 13. | ANDANTE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | REISSIGER |
| 14. | POSTLUDE IN F ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | J. VARLEY ROBERTS |
| 15. | PRELUDE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | B. LUARD-SELBY |
| 16. | PRELUDE IN A ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | HENRY SMART |
| 17. | ANDANTE CON MOTO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | CHARLES STEGGALL |
| 18. | ALLEGRETTO GRAZIOSO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | BERTHOLD TOURS |
| 19. | COMMUNION IN B FLAT ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | FERRIS TOZER |
| 20. | CON MOTO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | JOHN E. WEST |

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

Cloth, Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A SELECTED LIST OF # NOVELLO'S LIGHT PIECES
FOR PIANOFORTE.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| ARENSKY, A. | Romance in A flat | 2 | 0 |
| ARMSTRONG, F. ALFORD | Autumn Leaves | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, ,, | White Heather. Valse | 2 | 0 |
| BREWER, A. HERBERT | Auf Wiedersehen | 2 | 0 |
| CARSE, ADAM | Gavotte in G | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Three Miniatures: 1. Humoresque 2. Love Song 3. Scherzetto } Complete | 2 | 6 |
| COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. | Four Characteristic Waltzes: 1. Valse Bohemienne 2/- 2. Valse Rustique 2/- 3. Valse de la Reine 2/- 4. Valse Mauresque 2/- } Complete | 4 | 0 |
| COWEN, FREDERIC H. | Four English Dances, in the Olden Style: 1. Stately Dance 2. Rustic Dance 3. Graceful Dance 4. Country Dance } Complete | 4 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Minuet d'Amour | 2 | 0 |
| ELGAR, EDWARD | Chanson de Matin | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Chanson de Nuit | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Mazurka | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Serenade Mauresque | 2 | 0 |
| ESIPOFF, STEPÁN | L'Absence | 2 | 0 |
| FLETCHER, PERCY E. | Reflections (after verses from Longfellow): 1. Snowflakes 2. Spring 3. Sunset } Complete | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Toy Soldiers' March | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Two Bagatelles: 1. Valsette 2. Pizzicato } | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Valse Arabesque | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Valse Lyrique ("Smile of Spring") | 2 | 0 |
| GERMAN, EDWARD | Three Dances from "Henry VIII": 1. Morris Dance 2. Shepherds' Dance 3. Torch Dance } Complete | 3 | 0 |
| HOLBROOKE, JOSEF | Souvenir de Printemps | 2 | 0 |
| HOLLINS, ALFRED | Intermezzo | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Spring Song | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Valse Impromptu | 2 | 0 |
| MANNS, OTTO, JUNR. | A Northern Cradle Song | 2 | 0 |
| PITT, PERCY | Air de Ballet | 2 | 0 |
| RAWLINSON, HAROLD | Aubade | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Serenade | 2 | 0 |
| SCOTT-BAKER, H. | Mazurka | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Pantomime | 2 | 0 |
| WEBSTER, ERIC | Vignettes: 1. Valse 2. Reverie 3. Petit Scherzo } Complete | 2 | 0 |
| WENDT, THÉOPHIL | Cantique d'Amour | 2 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS.

SMALL COLLECTIONS OF SONGS

(FOLIO).

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| AUSTIN, E.SONGS FROM THE HIGHWAY (Six Songs) (Baritone) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| BELL, W. H.SIX LOVE LYRICS (Contralto or Baritone) ... ... ... | 4 | 6 |
| BOUGHTON, R.FOUR SONGS IN TWO SETS. Each set | 2 | 0 |
| BOYLE, G. F.SIX SONGS (Soprano) ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| BREWER, A. H.SPRIG OF SHAMROCK (Four old Irish Airs) (High or low voice) | 3 | 6 |
| CAPEL, J. M.JUST BEFORE BED-TIME (Six little Songs for good children) ... | 4 | 0 |
| CARSE, A.VOYAGE OF LOVE, THE (Five Songs) (Contralto or Baritone) ... | 4 | 0 |
| COBB, G. F.THREE SACRED SONGS (Contralto) ... ... ... | 6 | 0 |
| COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.SOUL'S EXPRESSION, THE (Four Sonnets), Op. 42 (Contralto) ... | 4 | 0 |
| CRIMP, H. E.WILDERNESS WAY (Three Songs of Childhood) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| DAVIES, E. H.FIVE SONGS OF CHILDHOOD ... | 3 | 0 |
| FLETCHER, P. E.FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS (Soprano) ... ... ... | 3 | 6 |
| HILL, A.SONGLETS FOR CHILDREN (Six Songs) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| TWILIGHT SONGS FOR LITTLE CHILDREN (Six Songs) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| HODGKINSON, N.SIX LITTLE SONGS (Contralto) ... | 3 | 0 |
| MACKENZIE, A. C.FOUR SONGS BY TENNYSON (Soprano) In two Sets, each ... | 2 | 0 |
| MARCHANT, S.NONSENSE SONGS (Five Songs) (Contralto) ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| MARRIOTT, N.THREE SONGS (Mezzo-Soprano or Contralto) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| MONTFITCHET, M. DE.THREE CRADLE SONGS (Mezzo-Soprano) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| NEWMARCH, R.SIX RUSSIAN SONGS (Selected)... | 3 | 0 |
| PITT, P.TROIS POÉSIES (Three Songs) (Soprano) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| RESSE, E. P.FOUR FOLK-SONGS (Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone) ... | 3 | 0 |
| ROECKEL, J. L.ILLUSIONS (Three Songs) (Baritone or Contralto)... ... | 4 | 0 |
| SOMERVILLE, R.THREE SONGS OF FRIENDSHIP (Three keys, C, D, E) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| STAINER, J. (ARR.).SIX ITALIAN SONGS (Mezzo-Soprano) ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| STEGGALL, R.FOUR SHAKESPEARE SONGS (Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone) ... | 4 | 0 |
| WAGNER, R.FIVE SONGS (Soprano or Tenor) | 3 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A MODERN SCHOOL FOR THE VIOLIN

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

| | | s. | d. | | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1A. | TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position) | 3 | 0 | 1B. | STUDIES ... ... ... (1st Position) | 3 | 0 |
| 2A. | DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) | 3 | 0 | 2B. | DITTO ... (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) | 4 | 0 |
| 3A. | DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position) | 4 | 6 | 3B. | DITTO ... ... (1st to 5th Position) | 4 | 6 |
| 4A. | DITTO ... ... (all Positions) | 4 | 0 | 4B. | DITTO ... ... ... (all Positions) | 4 | 6 |
| 5A. | DITTO ... ... ... Do. | 4 | 0 | 5B. | DITTO ... ... ... Do. | 4 | 6 |
| 6A. | DITTO ... ... ... Do. | 4 | 6 | 6B. | DITTO ... ... ... Do. | 4 | 6 |

CLOTH BINDINGS.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Book 1. | (1A and 1B, bound together) in Cloth ... ... ... ... | 7 | 6 |
| ,, 2. | (2A and 2B, bound together) Do. ... ... ... ... | 8 | 6 |
| ,, 3. | (3A and 3B, bound together) Do. ... ... ... ... | 10 | 6 |
| ,, 4. | (4A and 4B, bound together) Do. ... ... ... ... | 10 | 0 |
| ,, 5. | (5A and 5B, bound together) Do. ... ... ... ... | 10 | 0 |
| ,, 6. | (6A and 6B, bound together) Do. ... ... ... ... | 10 | 6 |

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a number of Pieces are published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part is furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| No. 13. | TWELVE FOLK DANCES FROM DENMARK (1st Position) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 14. | SONATA IN G MINOR. G. TARTINI (All Positions) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 15. | OVERTURE TO SAMSON. G. F. HANDEL (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 16. | SONATINA IN D. FRANZ SCHUBERT (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 17. | EIGHT HYMN TUNES. VARIOUS COMPOSERS (1st Position) | 2 | 3 |
| No. 18. | STYRIAN DANCES (LANDLER) (Op. 168). JOSEF LANNER (1st to 5th Position) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 19. | PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR. J. S. BACH (Advanced) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 20. | SONATA IN G (No 8). JOSEPH HAYDN (1st to 6th Position) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 21. | CONCERTO IN A MINOR. J. S. BACH (1st to 6th Position) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 22. | CONCERTO IN A MINOR. PIERRE RODE (Op. 9). (All Positions) | 3 | 6 |
| No. 23. | TWELVE CAROLS ... ... ... (1st Position) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 24. | SONATA IN A (KÖCHEL, No. 305). W. A. MOZART (1st to 5th Position | 3 | 0 |
| No. 25. | RÊVERIE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 22, No. 3). (Advanced) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 26. | FOUR LITTLE PIECES (From Op. 8). IGNAZ PLEYEL (1st Position) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 27. | SARABANDE AND TAMBOURIN. JEAN-MARIE LECLAIR (1st to 5th Position) | 3 | 0 |
| No. 28. | BOURRÉE AND GIGUE. J. S. BACH (1st and 3rd Positions) | 2 | 3 |
| No. 29. | BALLADE AND POLONAISE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 38). (Advanced) | 3 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

By Appointment to H.M. King of Spain

The Piano Chosen by the Great Masters

LOVERS OF MUSIC are specially invited to visit the Chappell Showrooms or the establishment of their nearest Chappell Dealer in order to appraise for themselves the wonderful Tonal Purity and Lightness of Touch which distinguishes the Chappell.

CHAPPELL

THE CHAPPELL PIANO COMPANY LIMITED
50, New Bond Street, London, W.1

JUST PUBLISHED.

WALTER MORSE RUMMEL

ADAPTATIONS FOR PIANOFORTE

OF THE WORKS OF

J. S. BACH

SERIES III.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. | ORCHESTRAL OVERTURE. "THROUGH AFFLICTION WE ENTER THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN" (146th Church Cantata.) | 3 | 0 |
| 2. | LEOPOLD SERENATA. "THY NAME, LIKE UNTO THE SUN" ... ... ... ... ... (Secular Cantata, Bach Gesellschaft Edition Year XXXIV.) | 2 | 0 |
| 3. | CEMBALO OBBLIGATO. "LET NEVER LOVE DECEIVE THEE." ... ... ... ... ... (Secular Cantata for Bass Voice, "Amore traditore," Bach Gesellschaft Edition Year XI., Book I.) | 2 | 0 |

"... These series certainly represent a valuable addition to the Bach repertory."—Musical Leader.

"... We know of no other transcriptions so free, so effective, and so entirely suited to the instrument."—Musical Opinion.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1, Saturday, December 31, 1927.

No. 234. IF I HAD BUT TWO LITTLE WINGS.—C. Hubert H. Parry. Price (4d.).

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION

OF

TWO-PART SONGS

FOR

FEMALE OR BOYS' VOICES.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 24. | *After the Rain ... ... ... ... | Ciro Pinsuti | 3d. |
| 53. | *Alexander (humorous) ... ... ... | A. H. Brewer | 3d. |
| 91. | *All Must be Well ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 5. | *All Seek for Rest ... ... ... | ... Franz Abt | 3d. |
| 1. | *Angel, The ... ... ... ... | ... Rubinstein | 4d. |
| 214. | *At Dawn of Day ... ... ... | F. H. Cowen | 4d. |
| 48. | At Rest with Thee ... ... ... | Carl Reinecke | 3d. |
| 164. | *Aubade ... ... ... ... ... | ... J. Ireland | 2d. |
| 148. | Autumn ... ... ... ... ... ... | A. H. Behrend | 4d. |
| 114.§ | *Autumn Song, An ... ... ... | H. A. J. Campbell | 3d. |
| 37. | *Autumn Song ... ... ... ... | Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 113. | Awake! Awake ... ... ... ... | ... E. C. Ford | 6d. |
| 111. | Baby-Bye ... ... ... ... ... | N. Davenport | 3d. |
| 228. | *Barcarolle ... ... ... ... ... | ... C. Hoby | 3d. |
| 191. | Beacons... ... ... ... ... ... | F. W. Wadely | 3d. |
| 225. | *Bees ... ... ... ... ... ... | P. E. Fletcher | 4d. |
| 7. | *Bells at Eve ... ... ... ... | ... Franz Abt | 4d. |
| 101.§ | *Berry Time ... ... ... ... | H. A. J. Campbell | 4d. |
| 54. | Beware ... ... ... ... ... ... | Carl Reinecke | 3d. |
| 109. | *Bird Raptures ... ... ... ... | G. F. Huntley | 3d. |
| 98.§ | *Bird Songs ... ... ... ... | H. A. J. Campbell | 4d. |
| 122. | Birdie ... ... ... ... ... ... | ... Rubinstein | 4d. |
| 173. | Birds ... ... ... ... ... ... | F. H. Cowen | 4d. |
| 144. | Birds in Council, The ... ... ... | ... E. C. Ford | 6d. |
| 19. | Bird's Question, The ... ... ... | ... Franz Abt | 4d. |
| 88. | *Blackberries... ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 6. | *Boatman's Song ... ... ... ... | ... Franz Abt | 4d. |
| 222. | *Bonnie banks of Loch Lomond, The | Scottish Folk-Song (arr.) | 3d. |
| 209. | Bullfinch, The ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 4d. |
| 67. | *Butterfly's Ball, The ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 220. | *Camel's Hump, The ... ... ... | ...E. German | 4d. |
| 135. | *Charming Chloe ... ... ... ... | E. T. Sweeting | 4d. |
| 219. | *Cherry Ripe ... ... ... ... | ...C. E. Horn | 3d. |
| 156.§ | *Christmas Greeting, A ... ... ... | ... E. Elgar | 8d. |
| 174. | *Cleansing Fires ... ... ... ... | F. H. Cowen | 4d. |
| 176. | *Cloud, The ... ... ... ... ... | ... Rubinstein | 4d. |
| 137. | *Come to the Field ... ... ... | A. Richards | 2d. |
| 107. | *Coming of May, The ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 2d. |
| 75. | *Comrades To-day ... ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 53. | Contentment... ... ... ... ... | Carl Reinecke | 3d. |
| 65. | Cradle Song... ... ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 8. | Crystal Streamlet ... ... ... | ... Franz Abt | 4d. |
| 169. | Curfew ... ... ... ... ... | F. H. Cowen | 4d. |
| 184. | Dainty Lady, The ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 3d. |
| 186. | Day Dream, The ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 3d. |
| 159. | Days when we Gathered Daisies ... | B. L.-Selby | 2d. |
| 67. | *Dewdrop's Folly, The ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 3d. |
| 96. | *Do Your Very Best ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 110.§ | *Doubt not Thy Father's Care ... ... | E. Elgar | 3d. |
| 165. | Echoes ... ... ... ... ... ... | F. H. Cowen | 4d. |
| 90. | Elfin Frolic, An ... ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 3d. |
| 194. | English Names ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 4d. |
| 20. | *Evening ... ... ... ... ... | Henry Smart | 3d. |
| 200. | Evening ... ... ... ... ... ... | ... Ch. Wood | 4d. |
| 118. | Evening Hymn ... ... ... ... | N. Davenport | 3d. |
| 86. | Evening Peace ... ... ... ... | Karel Bendl | 4d. |
| 225. | Evening Song ... ... ... ... | P. E. Fletcher | 4d. |
| 162. | *Evening Song ... ... ... ... | ... J. Ireland | 4d. |
| 44. | *Evening Song ... ... ... ... | Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 113. | *Evensong, An ... ... ... ... | H. W. Parker | 3d. |
| 141. | Ever Onward ... ... ... ... | ...E. C. Ford | 4d. |
| 21. | *Faint not, Fear not ... ... ... | Henry Smart | 4d. |
| 208. | *Fairies, The ... ... ... ... | P. E. Fletcher | 4d. |
| 64. | Fairy Dance, The ... ... ... ... | ... F. Corder | 4d. |
| 95. | Fairy Fancy, A ... ... ... | ... Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 92. | Fairy Workmen ... ... ... | ... Myles B. Foster | 4d. |
| 58. | Faithful Love ... ... ... ... | Carl Reinecke | 3d. |
| 61. | Faithlessness ... ... ... ... | C. Mühlfeld | 3d. |
| 154. | *Fall of the Leaf, The ... ... | ... Schumann | 3d. |
| 145. | Flowers I love best, The ... ... | ...E. C. Ford | 3d. |
| 52. | Fount of Music, The ... ... | Carl Reinecke | 3d. |
| 136. | *Fountains, Waken ... ... ... | A. Richards | 2d. |
| 150. | *Full Fathom Five... ... ... | ... J. Ireland | 2d. |
| 80 | Funeral, A ... ... ... ... | Karel Bendl | 4d. |
| 94. | *Get Up... ... ... ... ... | Myles B. Foster | 3d. |
| 85. | *Gipsy Pair, A ... ... ... | Karel Bendl | 4d. |
| 193. | Glow-worm, The ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 3d. |
| 108. | Golden Silences ... ... ... ... | G. F. Huntley | 3d. |
| 163. | Golden Slumbers ... ... ... ... | A. H. Brewer | 4d. |
| 56. | *Good-Night ... ... ... ... | Carl Reinecke | 3d. |
| 215. | *Goslings, The (humorous) ... ... | J. F. Bridge | 3d. |
| 36. | *Greeting ... ... ... ... | Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 195. | Greeting, The ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 3d. |
| 124. | Hail, Cuckoo! ... ... ... ... | N. Davenport | 2d. |
| 175. | *Hark the Curfew Stealing ... ... | F. H. Cowen | 2d. |
| 41. | *Harvest Field, The ... ... ... | Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 43 | *Home, Far Away ... ... ... ... | Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 121. | Homeward ... ... ... ... ... | Henry Rogers | 4d. |
| 180. | Hour of Parting, The ... ... ... | ... Rubinstein | 3d. |
| 227. | *How sweet the moonlight sleeps ... | G. Rathbone | 4d. |
| 62. | I Know a Bank ... ... ... ... | ...C. E. Horn | 3d. |
| 25. | *I sing, because I love to sing ... | Ciro Pinsuti | 3d. |
| 204. | *I waited for the Lord ... ... ... | Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 34. | *I would that my love ... ... ... | Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 73. | *In Mary's Garden ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 3d. |
| 9. | In the Forest ... ... ... ... | ... Franz Abt | 3d. |
| 77. | *In the Forest (Im Walde) ... ... | Karel Bendl | 4d. |
| 228. | *It was a lover and his lass ... ... | E. German | 4d. |
| 199. | La Fileuse ... ... ... ... ... | ... Ch. Wood | 4d. |
| 223. | *Laughing Song ... ... ... ... | P. E. Fletcher | 4d. |
| 192. | *Lavender ... ... ... ... ... | E. T. Sweeting | 4d. |
| 120. | Let the Rafters Ring ... ... ... | M. A. Sidebotham | 4d. |
| 26. | Life is Passing Away ... ... ... | Ciro Pinsuti | 4d. |
| 10. | *Like the Lark ... ... ... ... | ... Franz Abt | 3d. |
| 147. | Lilies ... ... ... ... ... ... | A. H. Behrend | 4d. |
| 97. | Lined with Gold ... ... ... ... | ... Myles B. Foster | 4d |
| 168. | Linger, O Gentle Time ... ... | F. H. Cowen | 4d. |
| 196. | *Lonely Knight, The ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 4d. |
| 22. | *Lord is my Shepherd, The ... ... | ... H. Smart | 3d. |
| 203. | *Love and Summer ... ... ... ... | John E. West | 4d. |
| 74. | Love has Come ... ... ... ... | E. M. Boyce | 3d. |
| 84. | Lovers, The ... ... ... ... ... | Karel Bendl | 3d. |
| 158. | *Lullaby ... ... ... ... ... | ... Brahms | 2d. |
| 206. | *Madrigal of Spring, A ... ... ... | P. E. Fletcher | 3d. |
| 76. | Magdalen at Michael's Gate... ... | E. M. Boyce | 3d. |
| 82. | Marriage Song, A ... ... ... ... | Karel Bendl | 3d. |
| 28. | *May Song ... ... ... ... ... | R. Schumann | 3d. |

*Pieces marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*

§ Band Parts, or with Accompaniment for Pianoforte and other instruments.

(Sept.—1927.) LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED. MADE IN ENGLAND

IF I HAD BUT TWO LITTLE WINGS

WORDS BY S. T. COLERIDGE

MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY

ARRANGED FOR TWO VOICES AND PIANOFORTE BY JOHN POINTER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Copyright, 1927, by Novello and Company, Limited

Original edition for Mixed Voices in THE MUSICAL TIMES, No. 650; and in NOVELLO'S TONIC SOL-FA SERIES, No. 992.

IF I HAD BUT TWO LITTLE WINGS

p
you! . . . to you! . . . But thoughts like these are dear! . . . to you! . . . But thoughts like these are
p p poco rit. pp a tempo
i - - dle things, . . . And I . . . stay here. But poco rit. pp a tempo
i - - dle things, . . . And I stay here. But p poco rit. pp a tempo
Ped. *
cres.
in my sleep to you I fly: I'm al - ways with you in my sleep! The
cres.
in my sleep to you I fly: I'm al - ways with you in my sleep! The cres.

world . . is all one's own, . . . is all one's own. But world is all one's own, . . . is all one's own. But cres.
Ped. Ped. *
then one wakes, . . and where am I? All, all a - then one wakes, . . and where am I? All, all a - pp poco rit.
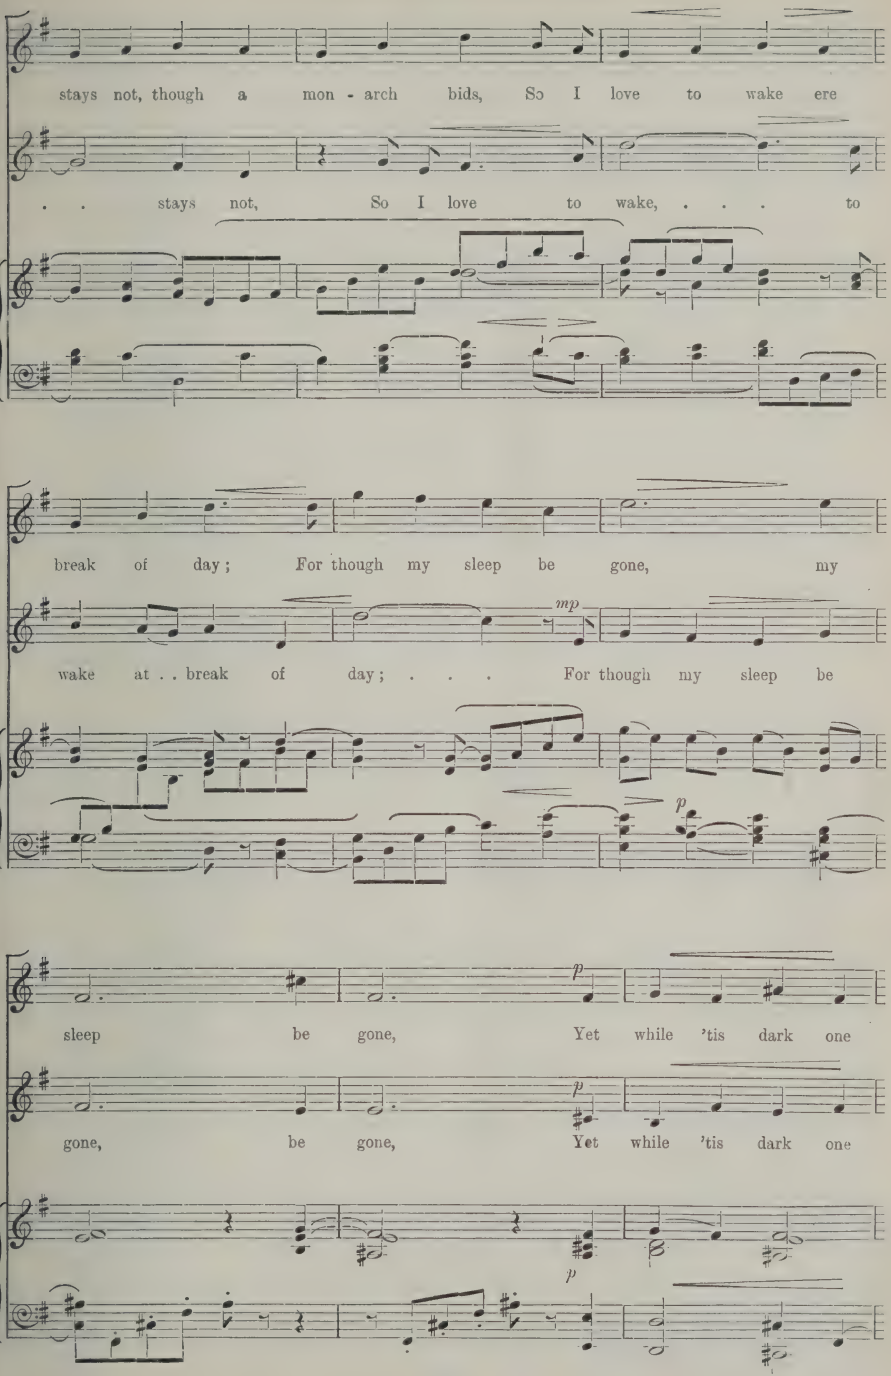
Ped. *
- lone. . . . . Sleep
- lone. . . . . Sleep
a tempo
dim.



stays not, though a mon - arch bids, So I love to wake ere . . stays not, So I love to wake, . . . to break of day; For though my sleep be gone, my wake at . . break of day; . . . For though my sleep be mp
p sleep be gone, Yet while 'tis dark one gone, be gone, Yet while 'tis dark one
p
p shuts one's lids, . . . And still . . . dreams on, and shuts one's lids, . . . And still dreams on, and

p
Ped.
*
still dreams on, For while 'tis dark . . . one shuts . .
still . . dreams on, . . . one shuts . . .
pp
poco rit.
a tempo
. . . one's lids, . . . and dreams, . . . . and still dreams, . .
. . . one's lids, . . . and dreams, . . Yet while 'tis dark one . . . and still dreams on, and still dreams, . .

shuts one's lids, and still dreams . . . on, and dreams, . . .
p
p
p
. . . and dreams, . . . . and still
. . . and dreams, . . . . and still
dim.
rit.
dim.
rit.
dim.
rit.
sempre dim.
dreams on. . . . . .
dreams . . . on. . . . . .
pp
pp
pp
dim.
Ped.
*

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION

OF

TWO-PART SONGS

FOR

FEMALE OR BOYS' VOICES.

39. *Maybells and the Flowers ... ... Mendelssohn 3d.
51. Meeting again ... ... ... ... Carl Reinecke 3d.
160. *Meeting of the Waters, The ... ... Irish Air (arr.) 2d.
2. *Merry Maidens, The ... ... ... ...Rubinstein 4d.
230. Midsummer Song ... ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 4d.
68. *Moon, The ... ... ... ... ... Myles B. Foster 4d.
50. Moonlight Song ... ... ... ... Carl Reinecke 3d.
11. Mountain Music ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 4d.
69. Music of the Woods, The ... ... Myles B. Foster 3d.
45. *My Bark is Bounding ... ... ... Mendelssohn 3d.
123. *Night ... ... ... .. ... ...Rubinstein 4d.
103.§*Night Wind ... ... ... ... H. A. J. Campbell 4d.
197. *Now the bright Morning Star... ... ... Ch. Wood 3d.
59. Numerous as the Bright Stars ... ... C. Mühlfeld 3d.
207. *Nymphs and Shepherds ... ... ... ... Purcell 3d.
12. *O Come, ye Flow'rets ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 3d.
131. O Lady, leave thy Silken ... ... R. F. M. Akerman 3d.
205 *Oh the Summer Night ... ... ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
38 *O wert thou in the cauld ... ... Mendelssohn 3d.
13 O'er the Sands ... ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 4d.
100.§*Old Oak, The... ... ... ... H. A. J. Campbell 4d.
14. On the Blue Sea ... ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 4d.
47. Ousel, The ... ... ... ... ... Carl Reinecke 3d.
27. *Out in the Sunshine ... ... ... Ciro Pinsuti 3d.
139. *Over Hill, over Dale ... ... ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.
130. Over the Mountains ... ... ... ... M. Shaw 4d.
132. Over the Oceans (Part I., Weg der Liebe) ... Brahms 4d.
35. *Passage Bird's Farewell, The... ... Mendelssohn 3d.
210. Peacock, The (Pavane) ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 3d.
93. Phœbus ... ... ... ... ... ... Myles B. Foster 3d.
104. *Posy, The ... ... ... .. ... E. M. Boyce 2d.
49. Praise of Music .. ... ... ... ... Carl Reinecke 3d.
125. Proud Delia ... ... ... ... ... N. Davenport 2d.
217.§*Ring out, wild bells ... ... ... ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
218. *Rolling down to rio ... ... ... ...E. German 4d.
40. *Sabbath Morn, The ... ... ... ... Mendelssohn 3d.
16. Sabbath on the Sea ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 3d.
15. *Sabbath Repose ... ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 3d.
229. Sad Spring ... ... ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 4d.
126. Sea Fairies, The ... ... ... ... J. F. Barnett 6d.
99.§*Shadow Dance ... ... ... H. A. J. Campbell 3d.
189.§*Shepherds' Dance, The (Henry VIII.) ...E. German 4d.
224. *Shepherd's Evening Song ... ... E. H. Thiman 3d.
152. *Shepherd's Sweet Lot, The ... ... B. Luard-Selby 2d.
233. *Shining Stars, The ... ... ... G. Rathbone 3d.
190. *Silent Land, The ... ... ... ...A. R. Gaul 4d.
119. Sister, Awake! ... ... ... ... N. Davenport 3d.
42. *Song from "Ruy Blas" ... ... ... Mendelssohn 3d.
83. Song of Love, The... ... ... ... Karel Bendl 4d.
134. *Song of the Dunes ... ... ... ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.
65.§*Song of the Gale, The ... ... ... Myles B. Foster 3d.
71. Song of the Mowers, The ... ... ... J. Shaw 4d.
81. Song of the Nightingale, The... ... Karel Bendl 4d.
112. *Song of the Summer Birds ... ... ...Rubinstein 4d.
146. Spring ... ... ... ... ... ... A. H. Behrend 6d.
60. Spring and Love ... ... ... ... C. Mühlfeld 3d.
3. Spring Greeting, A... ... ... ... ...Franz Abt 4d.
106. *Spring is Come ... ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 2d.
116.§*Spring Song, A ... ... ... H. A. J. Campbell 3d.
29. *Spring Song ... ... ... ... ... R. Schumann 3d.
70. *Spring Song ... ... ... ... ... Myles B. Foster 4d.
161.§*Stars of the Summer Night ... ... ... E. Elgar 8d.
79. *Summer Evening, A... ... ... ... Karel Bendl 3d.
140. Summer Night, A ... ... ... ... ...E. C. Ford 4d.
117.§*Summer Song, A ... ... ... H. A. J. Campbell 4d.
170. Summer's Call, The ... ... ... F. H. Cowen 6d
153. *Sun does Rise, The... ... ... ... B. Luard-Selby 4d.
105. *Sunshine ... ... ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 2d.
212. *Swallow, The ... ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 4d.
31. *Swallow's Flight, The ... ... ... ...B. Haynes 4d.
155. *Sweet Echo ... ... ... ... ... W. G. Alcock 4d.
151. *There is a garden in her face ... ... ... J. Ireland 2d.
221. *There is a green hill far away ... Ch. Gounod 4d
177. *There was Joy in Heaven ... ... Henry Smart 2d.
166. Thought of Home, A ... ... ... F. H. Cowen 4d.
231. Three Fishers ... ... ... ... arr. J. Hullah 4d.
172. To Daffodils ... ... ... ... F. H. Cowen 4d.
198. To Daffodils... ... ... ... ... ... Ch. Wood 3d.
171. *To-Day ... ... ... ... ... ... F. H. Cowen 6d.
129. *To Diana ... ... ... ... ... ... M. Shaw 4d.
181. *Tom-Tit... ... ... ... ... ... Colin Taylor 4d.
30 *To the Nightingale ... ... ... R. Schumann 3d.
102.§*Traveller, The ... ... ... H. A. J. Campbell 4d.
216. Traveller's Song ... ... ... E. H. Thiman 4d
57. Truth and Trust ... ... ... ... Carl Reinecke 3d.
142. Twilight ... ... ... ... ...E. C. Ford 4d.
127. *Under the Greenwood Tree ... ... ... C. Hoby 4d.
232. *Under the Greenwood Tree ... ... ... Ch. Wood 3d.
187. *Ursula Dancing ... ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 3d.
32. *Violets ... ... ... ... ... ... F. H. Cowen 4d.
63. §Violets ... ... ... ... ... ... G. R. Betjemann 4d.
18. *Violet's Plea, The... ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 3d.
188. Voice of Spring, The ... ... ... ... H. Rhodes 4d.
185. *Waltz, The ... ... ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 4d.
17. *Wanderer's Joy, The ... ... ... ... Franz Abt 3d
33. *Wanderer's Night Song ... ... ... ...Rubinstein 3d.
55. Wanderer's Song, A ... ... ... Carl Reinecke 3d.
138. *Water-Lily, The ... ... ... ... J. L. Hatton 4d.
182.§*Wet sheet and a flowing sea, A ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.
78. What is Love? ... ... ... ... Karel Bendl 3d.
167. What the Birds Say ... ... ... F. H. Cowen 4d.
232. When cats run home ... ... ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
133. When love hath entangled ... ... ... Brahms 4d.
23. Where the weary are at rest ... ... Henry Smart 3d.
178. *Wild Flowers ... ... ... ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
211. Willow Wrens, The ... ... ... E. M. Boyce 3d.
149. Winter ... ... ... ... ... ... A. H. Behrend 4d.
115.§*Winter Song, A ... ... ... H. A. J. Campbell 3d.
4. *Wish for the Mountains, A ... ... ... Franz Abt 3d.
72. Wood Note, A ... ... ... ... ... J. Shaw 4d.
89. *Work and Play ... ... ... ... Myles B. Foster 3d.
157. *Ye Banks and Braes ... ... ... A. M. Richardson 4d.
213. *You Spotted Snakes ... ... ... ... Mendelssohn 4d.
201. Young and Old ... ... ... ... ... Ch. Wood 3d.
179. *Zephyr among the Flowers ... ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
46. *Zuleika and Hassan ... ... ... Mendelssohn 3d.

*Pieces marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*
§ Band Parts, or with Accompaniment for Pianoforte and other instruments.

(Sept., 1927.) LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

No. 605. SONG OF THE VOLGA BOATMEN.—Arr. by H. Balfour Gardiner. Price (4*d*.).

THE ORPHEUS.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES AND PART-SONGS FOR MALE VOICES.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation

No.

69 Absence ... F. Schneider 3d.
364 *After many a dusty mile E. Elgar 6d.
567 *Ah! were I on yonder plain Mendelssohn 8d.
74 *Ah! with me ... R. Seyfried 4d.
526 *Alexander (humorous) A. H. Brewer 3d.
325 All among the barley E. Stirling 3d.
11 All things love thee J. L. Hatton 4d.
436 Allan Water arr. H. E. Button 3d.
187 Alpine hunter's song ... J. Raff 3d
486 An Analogy... C. H. H. Parry 3d.
434 An Autumn evening L. de Rillé 4d.
237 An old rat's tale (humorous) J. F. Bridge 6d.
438 *Annie Laurie arr. H. E. Button 3d.
550 Arethusa, The ... W. Shield 4d.
393a*Arrival of the conspirators, The L. de Rillé 4d.
396 As the moments roll (Glee) S. Webbe 3d.
400 As torrents in summer E. Elgar 3d.
176 *At Andernach in Rhineland F. Abt 4d.
201 At break of day ... R. Schumann 6d.
284 At that dread hour (Faith) (Glee) S. S. Wesley 4d.
163 Autumn is come again (5 V.) F. Corder 6d.
244 Awake, my love ... T. Distin 3d.
367 Awake, my lyre (Glee) (5 V.) B. Johnson 8d.
217 Bacchanalian ... ... ... 4d.
461 Bacchanalian chorus J. W. Elliott 6d.
279 Bacchanalian song H. Clarke 6d.
332 Ballad when at sea, A A.H.Brewer 6d.
546 *Ballade ... ... G. Bantock 6d.
327 Balmy night ... J. Robinson 3d.
402 Balmy sweetness (Glee) J. Bayley 3d.
56 Banish, O maiden O. Lorenz 2d.
115 Banners wave, the drums are beating, The ... ... Kücken 4d.
514 *Battle song ... ... L. de Rillé 4d.
25 Do. ... ... R. Schumann 6d.
99 Beauteous clouds... H. Werner 3d.
308 Beauty was lying by a spring C. H. Lloyd 4d.
2 *Beleaguered, The... A. Sullivan 4d.
471 Bells of spring, The R. Schumann 6d.
319 Beware ... ... John E. West 3d.
45 *Bind my brows (Glee) J. Stainer 6d.
394 Blind raven, The ... W. H. Bell 3d.
475 Blossom or snow ... R. Schumann 3d.
451 Boat song ... G. A. Macfarren 4d.
110 * Do. ... ... F. Schubert 3d.
563 Bonnie banks of Loch Lomond, The (Scotch air) arr. 4d.
322 *Boot and saddle G. Bantock 4d.
581 Bowl, The ... ... E. Boyce 4d.
525 *Boy (humorous) A. H. Brewer 4d.
580 Bramble, The ... ... E. Boyce 4d.
441 *Break, break, break R. Rogers 4d.
160 Breathe, my harp... ... Bishop 4d.
38 Breathe soft, ye winds (6 V.) Calkin 4d.
48 *Bright sword of liberty Weber 3d.
447 *Bushes and briars (arr.) ... ... 3d.
227 Cab catch (humorous) A. J. Caldicott 6d.
82 Calm eyes of beauty R. Seyfried 3d.
206 Calm is the lake ... ... F. Abt 6d.
502 Canadian boat song (arr.) ... ... 1½d.
457 Canst thou forget the silent tears J. W. Elliott 4d.
564 *Cargoes ... H. B. Gardiner 4d.
291 Cavalier's song, A ... P. Pitt 4d.
534 Cavaliers, The ... R. Pech 6d.
90 *Chapel, The ... C. Kreutzer 4d.
23 Chase, The ... Ch. Gounod 8d.
380 * Do. ... ... L. de Rillé 8d.
28 Cheerfulness (Glee) C. Pinsuti 8d.
450 Chinese (Burlesque) March J. Otto 4d.
579 Choric Measure ... E. Boyce 3d.
386 Choir of bright beauties, A (Glee) J. Elliott 6d.
372 Chough and crow... H. R. Bishop 6d.
376 *Christian martyrs, The L. de Rillé 8d.
183 Cold blows the wind G. C. Martin 4d.
588 *Come away, death T. F. Dunhill 4d.
4 Come away, pretty maiden Schafer 3d.
51 Come, boys, drink and merry be H. Maczbner 6d.
188 Come, brothers, gaily drink J. Raff 6d.
40 Come fill, my boys J. B. Calkin 4d.
212 Come fill ye right merrily C. E. Stephens 6d.

No.

162 Come follow me (Glee) E. T. Driffield 6d.
155 Come let us join the roundelay W. Beale 3d.
158 Come live with me A. Carnall 4d.
251 Come, my dear one, share my gladness ... J. V. Roberts 3d.
339 Come, my soul, awake Pearce 4d.
316 Come, sweet lass G. F. Huntley 6d.
276 Come to me, dreams of Heaven H. W. Schartau 6d.
482 *Comrades' song of hope A. Adam 3d.
124 Convivial song ... B. Molique 4d.
191 Cossacks' drinking song J. Raff 3d.
268 Counsel, The ... L. Spohr 3d.
22 Courtly bard, The (Kitty fell) (Glee) ... ... J. Goss 8d.
280 Cradle song ... A. Stenz 3d.
330 *Creation's hymn Beethoven 3d.
542 Crossing the bar T. F. Dunhill 3d.
506 Do. ... C. Lee Williams 3d.
240 Cryer, The (humorous) King Hall 6d.
95 Cuckoo, The ... L. Spohr 6d.
343 Cupid, look about thee J. Stainer 6d.
238 Cupid once upon a bed of roses (Glee) J. V. Roberts 4d.
154 Dance, The ... ... ...J. Otto 6d.
432 Do. ... ... L. de Rillé 6d.
392 *Dear land of beauty ,, 4d.
8 Dear land of my fathers ... ... 3d.
478 *Dear little shamrock, The arr. H. E. Button 3d.
75 Dear maid ... ... L. de Call 3d.
207 Departure ... ... ... F. Abt 3d.
520 Departure of the Apostles, The L. de Rillé 8d.
175 Dim and grey appear the mountains ... ... F. Abt 4d.
578 *Dirge ... ... ... E. Boyce 3d.
540 *Dirge of kisses, A P. E. Fletcher 4d.
47 Disdain returned ... E. Stirling 6d.
86 Doctor St. Paul ... ... Zelter 2d.
505 Dormi, Jesu (5 V.) C. Lee Williams 3d.
356 *Down in yon summer vale C. Wood 3d.
439 *Drink to me only with thine eyes arr. H. E. Button 3d.
232 *Drinking song, A H. Goetz 4d.
499 Do. ... ... L. de Rillé 4d.
273 Do. ... ... L. Spohr 6d.
262 Do. (Hark, brothers) ,, 4d.
6 Drum March, The ... Krugh 4d.
456 *Duncan Gray (Trio) A. M. Richardson 4d.
111 Dying child, The I. I. Viotta 2d.
522 *Early one morning arr. T. F. Dunhill 3d.
255 Echoes ... ... J. B. Calkin 3d.
543 Do. ... ... T. F. Dunhill 3d.
243 Do. ... ... Oliver King 3d.
463 *Eldorado ... ... C. Pinsuti 4d.
324 Encouragement to a lover C. Lee Williams 3d.
106 Equinox, The ... C. Kreutzer 3d.
147 Evening ... ... ... F. Abt 4d.
54 * Do. ... ... L. de Call 3d.
35 * Do. ... ... H. Leslie 3d.
460 * Do. ... ...A. S. Sullivan 3d.
125 Evening bell on the mountain, The C. G. Belcke 4d.
511 Evening song ... L. de Rillé 4d.
328 Eventide ... ... J. Robinson 3d.
91 *Every rustling tree ... Kuhlau 3d.
553 *Fair Semele's high-born son Mendelssohn 8d.
284 Faith (Glee) ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
508 Faithless Sally Brown C. Lee Williams 8d.
295 *Far down the green valley C. H. Döring 3d.
161 Fare thee well, and if for ever (5 V.) C. A. Macirone 6d.
211 Farewell, A ... R. Mahllig 3d.
146 *Farewell, thou lovely forest glade (arr. F. Abt) Esser 3d.
208 Father's watchful eye, The F. Abt 8d.
366 *Feasting I watch ...E. Elgar 6d.
523 *Festival song ... G. Bantock 6d.
446 *Fill the bowl with rosy wine (T.T.B.B.) ... John E. West 6d.
445 Do. (A.T.B.B.) ,, 6d.
185 Fisherman's song ...J. Raff 4d.
403 *Fleeting life (5 V.) P. Cornelius 8d.
292 Flirt, The (humorous) J. F. Bridge 4d.

No.

184 *Fly to my mistress (Glee) C. H. Lloyd 4d
231 *Forest scene, A ... H. Goetz 4d
10 *Franklyn's dogge leped over a style, A (humorous) A. C. Mackenzie 8d.
507 Frog and the crab, The (humorous) C. Lee Williams 4d.
314 *Frog, The (humorous) E. Newton 4d.
565 From yonder rustling mountains G. J. Elvey 8d.
544 *Full fathom five T. F. Dunhill 4d.
477 Gather ye rosebuds A. M. Richardson 4d.
390 *Gentle peace ... L. de Rillé 3d.
142 Gentle sounds are floating J. G. Müller 6d
398 Give a man a horse he can ride C. H. Lloyd 3d.
321 *Give a rouse ... G. Bantock 4d.
501 *Glories of our blood and state, The... ... ... G. Bantock 4d.
171 Glorious May H. Hofmann 4d
247 Go, happy rose ... F. Iliffe 4d.
443 Go, rose (Glee) ... W. Beale 4d.
117 Go, speed thy flight... F. Otto 4d
204 God and our country R. Mahllig 3d
194 God rules alone ... J. Raff 3d.
331 *God save the King arr. J. Barnby 3d.
13 Going away ... J. L. Hatton 6d
113 *Gondolier's serenade Schubert 6d
450 Gongs are beating, The J. Otto 4d.
221 Good-night ... ... C. Barton 4d.
229 Do. ... ... H. Goetz 4d.
352 Do. ... ... C. Harris 4d.
135 Do ... ... F. Kücken 4d.
263 Do. ... ... L. Spohr 4d.
346 Good-night, beloved M. B. Foster 4d.
337 Do. ... ... C. Pinsuti 4d.
234 *Goslings, The (humorous) J. F. Bridge 6d.
177 Grave of a singer, The F. Abt 2d.
164 Great Orpheus was a fiddler (humorous) A. C. Mackenzie 8d.
594 Ha, ha! this world doth pass (Trio) T. Weelkes 4d.
341 Hail, sweet peace ... J. B Lott 6d.
110 *Hail to the Chief ... F. Schubert 3d.
451 Do. ... G. A. Macfarren 4d.
429 *Handy man, The W. Spaniser 3d.
487 Hang fear, cast away care Parry 3d.
139 Hard times ... ... J. Durr 6d.
215 Hardy Norseman's house of yore The... ... ... Pears I. 2d.
59 Hark! above us ... C. Kreutzer 3d.
262 Hark! brothers, hark! L. Spohr 4d
306 Hark! hark! the lark H. Clarke 4d.
21 Hark! heard ye not (Glee) (5 V.) J. Goss 8d.
355 Hark! jolly shepherds Brewer 4d.
6 Hark! the merry drum Krugh 4d.
305 *Harmony ... ... W. Beale 8d.
513 Do. ... ... L. de Rillé 6d.
199 Have a care ... ... R. Schumann 6d.
533 He that hath a pleasant face J. L. Hatton 3d.
47 He that loves a rosy cheek E. Stirling 6d.
67 *He who trusts in ladies fair Eisenhofer 4d
233 Heave the anchor W. A. Barrett 6d.
422 Hen and the carp, The Moellendorff 8d
18 Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee J. L. Hatton 4d.
583 Her hair the net of golden wire G. Williams 3d.
598 *Herald, The ... E. Elgar 4d.
186 Herdsman's song ... J. Raff 3d.
114 Hie thee, shallop ... F. Kücken 6d
107 Hilarity ... ... S. H. Dehn 3d
391 *Holiday song, A L. de Rillé 8d
157 Home they brought her warrior dead ... ... J. Barnby 3d.
3 *Homeward watch, The H. Smart 3d.
336 Hope (Chorus) ... G. Garrett 8d.
109 Hope and fear ... F. Otto 3d.
360 How beautiful is night (Glee) (5 V.) J. L. Ellerton 8d.
29 How dear to me the hour (Glee) C. Pinsuti 8d.
340 How shall I woo thee A.H. Brewer 6d.
584 How sleep the brave G. Bantock 4d
543 How sweet the answer Dunhill 3d.
243 Do. ... ... Oliver King 3d.

MADE IN ENGLAND

SONG OF THE VOLGA BOATMEN

ENGLISH WORDS BY W. G. ROTHERY

ARRANGED FOR MALE VOICES BY

H. BALFOUR GARDINER

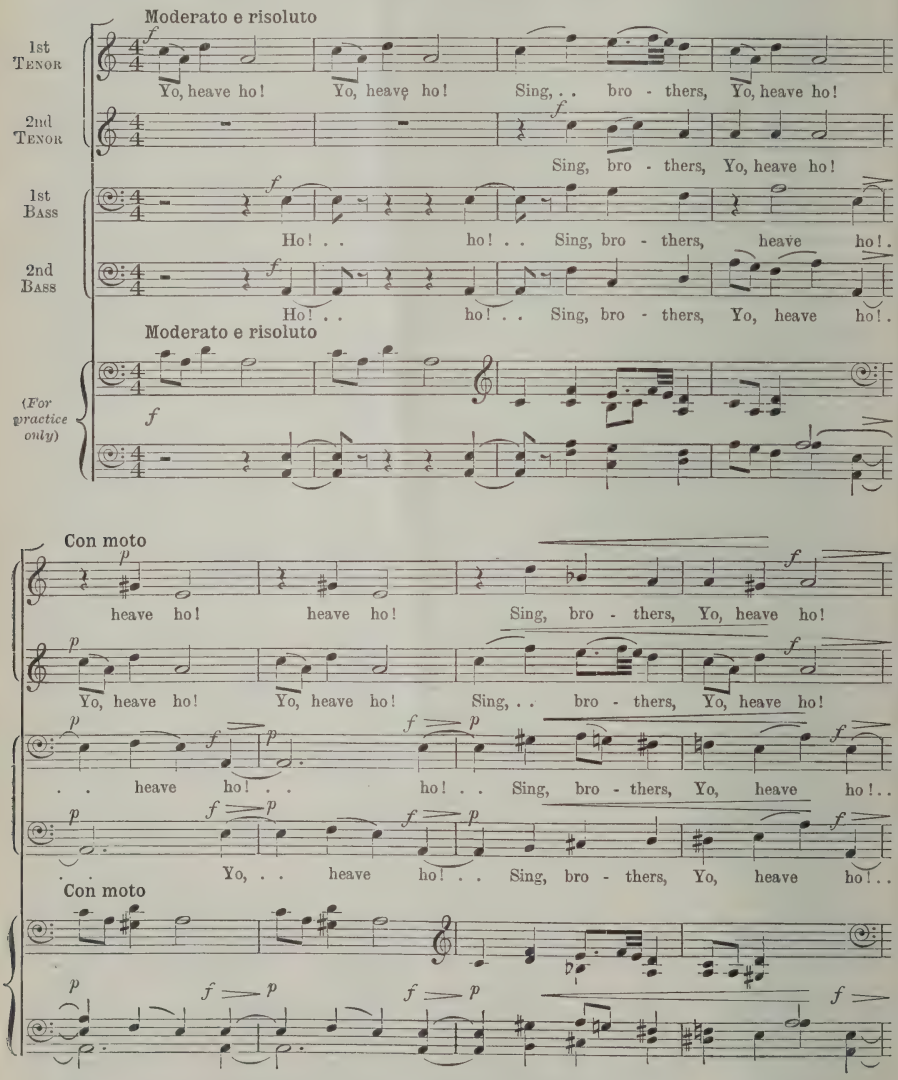
LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Moderato e risoluto
1st Tenor
Yo, heave ho! Yo, heave ho! Sing, . . bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
2nd Tenor
Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
1st Bass
Ho! . . ho! . . Sing, bro - thers, heave ho!.
2nd Bass
Ho! . . ho! . . Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!.
Moderato e risoluto
(For practice only)
Con moto
heave ho! heave ho! Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
Yo, heave ho! Yo, heave ho! Sing, . . bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
. . heave ho! . . ho! . . Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!..
. . Yo, . . heave ho! . . Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!..
Con moto

Copyright, 1927, by Novello and Company, Limited

Also published for S.A.T.B. in NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK, No. 1433

SONG OF THE VOLGA BOATMEN

When the waves at . . day-break shine, Bend your shoul - ders to the line,

When the waves at day-break shine, Bend your shoul - ders to the line,

. . When the waves at day-break shine, Bend your shoul - ders to the line,

. . When the waves at day-break shine, Bend your shoul - ders to the line,

Wide is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho! . .

Wide is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave . .

Wide is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave . .

Wide is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, ho! . . Yo, . .

Animando

. . . Yo, heave ho! . . Haul, . . bro - thers, heave ho!

ho! . . heave . . ho! heave ho! Haul, . . . bro - thers, heave ho!

ho! . . Yo, . . heave ho! . . Haul, bro - thers, heave ho!

. . . heave ho! Haul, . . . bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!

Animando

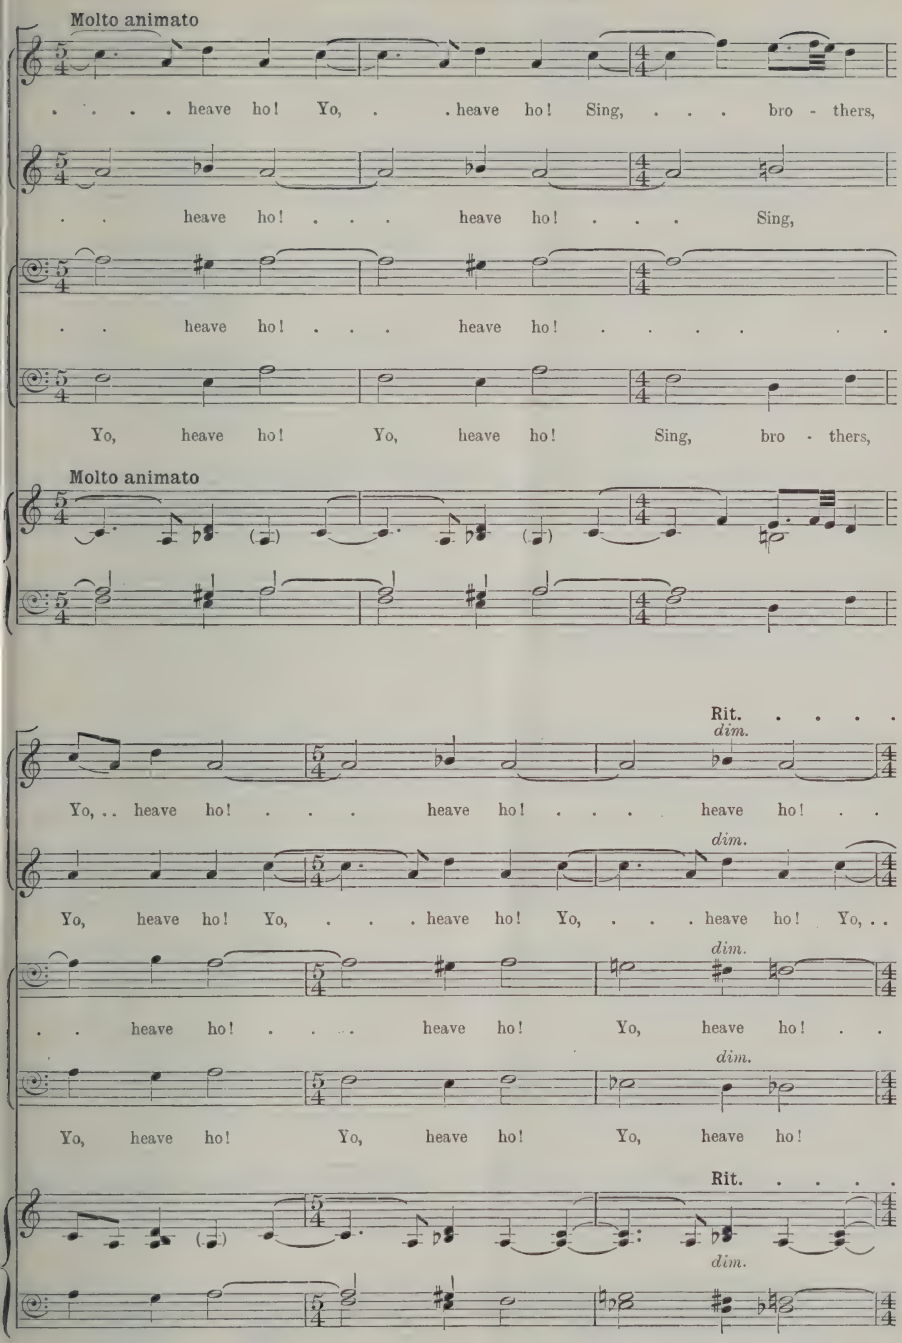
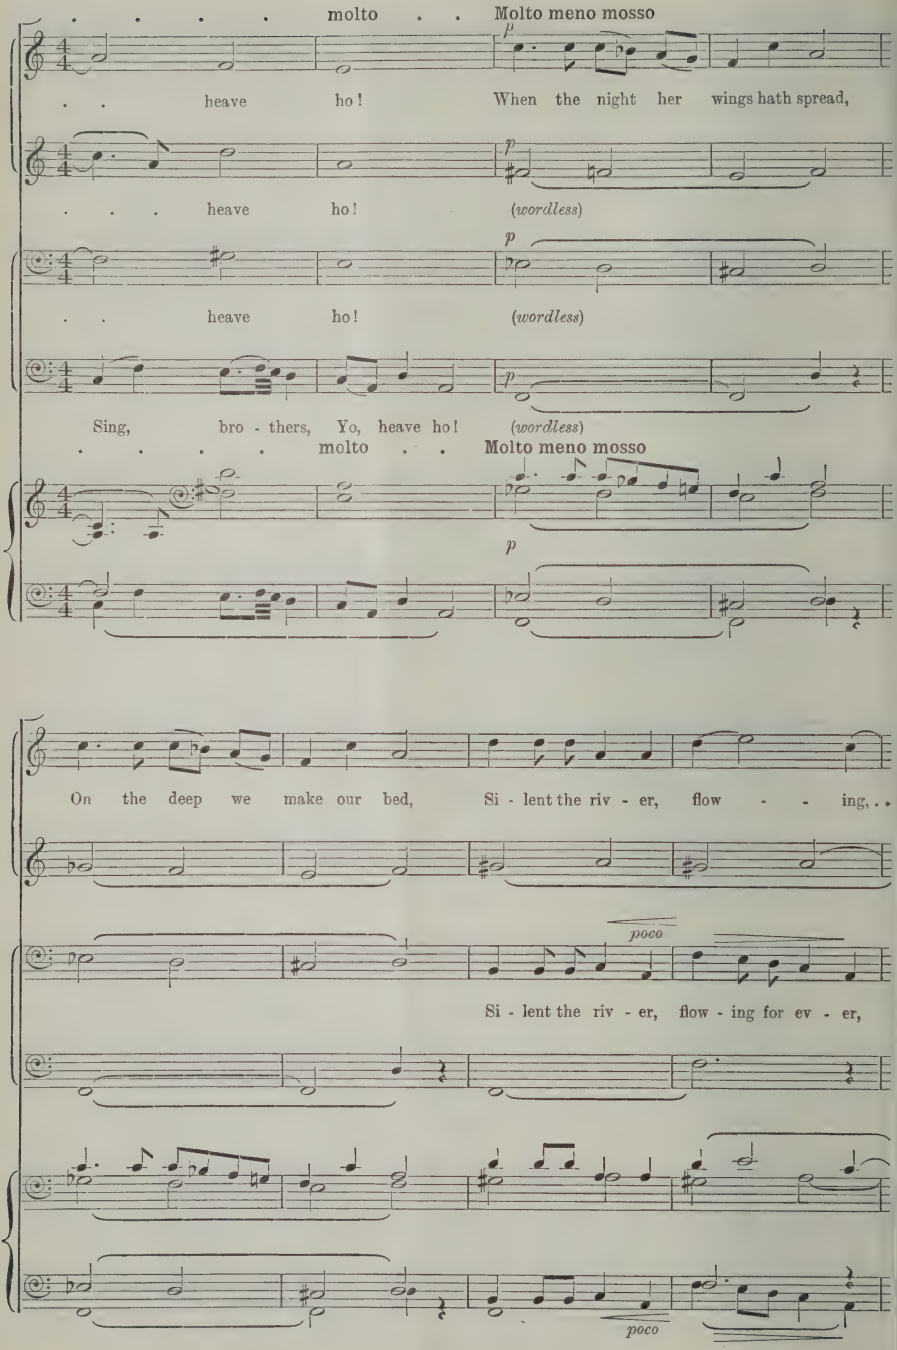
Più animato
più f
Yo, heave ho! Yo, heave ho! Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
Yo, heave ho! Yo, heave ho! . . Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
heave ho! Yo, . . . heave ho! Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
Più animato Yo, heave ho! Sing, . . bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!
sempre f
When the mid - day sun is high, Might - i - ly . . our oars we ply;
When the mid - day sun is high, Might - i - ly our oars we ply;
When the mid - day sun is high, Might - i - ly our oars we ply;
When the mid - day sun is high, Might - i - ly our oars we ply;
Deep is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho! Yo, . .
Deep is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho! . .
Deep is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho! . .
Deep is the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho!



Molto animato
. . . . heave ho! Yo, . . heave ho! Sing, . . . bro - thers,
. . heave ho! . . . heave ho! . . . Sing,
. . heave ho! . . . heave ho! . . . . . .
Yo, heave ho! Yo, heave ho! Sing, bro - thers,
Molto animato
Rit. . . . .
dim.
Yo, . . heave ho! . . . heave ho! . . . heave ho! . .
dim.
Yo, heave ho! Yo, . . . heave ho! Yo, . . . heave ho! Yo, . .
dim.
. . heave ho! . . . heave ho! Yo, heave ho! . .
dim.
Yo, heave ho! Yo, heave ho! Yo, heave ho!
Rit. . . . .
dim.



molto . . Molto meno mosso
p
. . heave ho! When the night her wings hath spread,
p
. . . heave ho! (wordless)
p
. . heave ho! (wordless)
p
Sing, bro - thers, Yo, heave ho! (wordless)
. . . . . molto . . Molto meno mosso
p
On the deep we make our bed, Si - lent the riv - er, flow - - ing, . .
poco
Si - lent the riv - er, flow - ing for ev - er, poco

sempre p
. . Flow, ri - - - er, soft - ly flow, soft - ly flow, . . .
p
poco
(wordless) soft - - - - - ly
poco
Flow, . . ri - ver, soft - - ly flow,
poco
soft - ly flow, . . . . soft - - ly flow. . .
soft - ly flow, soft - - - - ly flow. . .
flow, soft - - ly flow. . .
poco
soft - - - ly flow, soft - - ly flow. . .

THE ORPHEUS.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES AND PART-SONGS FOR MALE VOICES.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

| No. | | |
|---|---|---|
| 391 | How sweet thy modest light A. S. Burrows | 6d. |
| 301 | *Hunt is up, The ... J. Bennet | 4d. |
| 228 | Do. ... ...J. L. Hatton | 2d. |
| 200 | Hunter's morning song, The R. Schumann | 6d. |
| 5 | Hunting song, A ...J. G. Müller | 3d. |
| 300 | Do. ... ... E. Peirs | 4d. |
| 44 | Do. ... ... S. Reay | 6d. |
| 97 | Huntsman's joy, The C. Kreutzer | 4d. |
| 104 | Huntsman's song ... Pohlenz | 6d. |
| 34 | *Hushed in death (Glee) H. Hiles | 8d. |
| 329 | *Hymn before action H. W. Davies | 4d. |
| 357 | Do. (ad lib acc. to the song) | 6d. |
| 597 | Hymn of the Homeland, A A. Sullivan | 2d. |
| 315 | Hymn to Cupid, A (6 V.) G. C. Martin | 8d. |
| 180 | *Hymn to Cynthia ... B. Tours | 4d. |
| 513 | Hymn to harmony ... L. de Rillé | 6d. |
| 410 | *Hymn to the sun ... ... | 6d. |
| 538 | I fear thy kisses, gentle maid A. H. Brewer | 3d. |
| 254 | I love my Jean G. J. Bennett | 3d. |
| 41 | I loved a lass ... S. Reay | 4d. |
| 239 | I prithee send me back my heart King Hall | 4d. |
| 288 | Do. ... J. V. Roberts | 6d. |
| 369 | Do. (Glee) ... J. Stainer | 4d. |
| 76 | I tell thee, boy ... Grassini | 6d. |
| 27 | I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre (Glee) ... T. F. Walmisley | 6d. |
| 168 | Do. (Glee) (5 V.) S. S. Wesley | 6d. |
| 561 | *I would I were the glow-worm (Irish Air)... ... ... arr. | 4d. |
| 203 | If doughty deeds (Glee) G. F. Cobb | 6d. |
| 387 | If music be the food of love (Glee) G. Benson | 6d. |
| 140 | Image of the rose, The G. Reichardt | 3d. |
| 309 | *In Absence ... ... D. Buck | 4d. |
| 174 | In dulci jubilo ...H. Hofmann | 6d. |
| 595 | Do. ... R. L. Pearsall | 4d. |
| 202 | In full chase ... R. Schumann | 6d. |
| 298 | In laudem amoris (Glee) J. Barnby | 4d. |
| 172 | In springtime H. Hofmann | 6d. |
| 495 | In the midst of life P. Cornelius | 6d. |
| 287 | In the pleasant summer day (Glee) W. Beale | 6d. |
| 425 | In this hour of softened splendour (A.T.B.B.) C. Pinsuti | 3d. |
| 420 | * Do. (T.T.B.B.) ,, | 3d. |
| 532 | Inn of life, The ... M. Delmas | 6d. |
| 63 | Integer vitæ ... ... F. Fleming | 3d. |
| 72 | Invitation to the dance Pohlenz | 3d. |
| 537 | Invocation ... ...E. Paladilhe | 4d. |
| 35 | *It is the hour ... H. Leslie | 3d. |
| 421 | It is the miller's daughter F. A. J. Hervey | 4d. |
| 256 | It was a lover and his lass Ch. Wood | 4d. |
| 587 | * Do. ... T. F. Dunhill | 4d. |
| 334 | It was an English lady bright Ch. Wood | 6d. |
| 365 | *It's oh! to be a wild wind E. Elgar | 3d. |
| 285 | Ivy, The (5 V.) C. Lee Williams | 4d. |
| 344 | Jack Horner (humorous) (Glee) T. Distin | 6d. |
| 378 | *Jesu, our only hope of heaven L. de Rillé | 3d. |
| 554 | *John Peel (Old English) ... arr. | 4d. |
| 448 | Jolly ploughboy, The (arr.) ... | 3d. |
| 462 | *Joy to the victors A. Sullivan | 4d. |
| 415 | *Keys of heaven, The arr. H. E. Button | 6d. |
| 81 | King Joy ... ... H. Werner | 4d. |
| 297 | Kiss, The (Glee) ... J. Barnby | 4d. |
| 260 | Know ye the land ... L. Spohr | 4d. |
| 216 | Ladies, The ... A. C. Mackenzie | 3d. |
| 78 | Do. ... ... Reichardt | 6d. |
| 466 | *Laird o' Cockpen, The G. Bantock | 6d. |
| 509 | Lament, A arr. H. E. Button | 3d. |
| 510 | *Land o' the leal, The ,, ,, | 3d. |
| 545 | Land of little people, The E. W. Naylor | 4d. |
| 527 | *Lass of Richmond Hill, The A. H. Brewer | 4d. |
| 122 | Last day of May, The B. Molique | 4d. |
| 345 | Last rose of summer, The arr. T. Distin | 3d. |
| 178 | Laughing ... ... F. Abt | 2d. |
| 293 | Leaves to one another say, The C. H. Döring | 4d. |

| No. | | |
|---|---|---|
| 602 | Lee Shore, The P. E. Fletcher | 4d. |
| 32 | Let maids be false so wine be true G. C. Martin | 6d. |
| 28 | Let me play the fool (Glee) C. Pinsuti | 8d. |
| 417 | Let my voice ring out C. H. Lloyd | 3d. |
| 517 | Let the hills resound B. Richards | 6d. |
| 118 | Let us be joyful ... Schneider | 4d. |
| 335 | Life ... W. H. Cummings | 3d. |
| 470 | *Life's crown is love Schumann | 4d. |
| 222 | Like apple blossom white and red C. H. Lloyd | 3d. |
| 474 | Like pearls the dewdrops rest (5 V.) R. Schumann | 3d. |
| 424 | *Linden blossom, The Moellendorff | 3d. |
| 353 | List! for the breeze (Glee) J. Goss | 3d. |
| 524 | *Little Sandman, The (arr.) ... | 4d. |
| 572 | *London Town ... E. German | 6d. |
| 561 | *Londonderry air, The ... arr. | 4d. |
| 1 | *Long day closes, The A. Sullivan | 3d. |
| 89 | Lord, I pray Thee, set me free Kalliwoda | 3d. |
| 469 | *Lotus flower, The R. Schumann | 3d. |
| 136 | *Love and courage ... L. Spohr | 4d. |
| 361 | Love for such a cherry lip John E. West | 4d. |
| 375 | Love in my bosom like a bee F. C. Woods | 4d. |
| 167 | Love spell, The T. B. Evison | 4d. |
| 484 | Love wakes and weeps C. H. H. Parry | 3d. |
| 60 | *Lovely night F. X. Chwatal | 2d. |
| 252 | *Lover's counsel, A F. H. Cowen | 4d. |
| 42 | Love's good-morrow ... S. Reay | 3d. |
| 340 | Love's philosophy A. H. Brewer | 6d. |
| 516 | *Lucifer in starlight (6 V.) G. Bantock | 8d. |
| 521 | *Lullaby, A ... J. Brahms | 2d. |
| 518 | Do. ... C. Lee Williams | 3d. |
| 574 | *Lullaby of love, A P. E. Fletcher | 3d. |
| 57 | *Lutzow's wild chase Weber | 3d. |
| 485 | *Mad dog, The C. H. H. Parry | 6d. |
| 226 | *Maiden fair, O deign to tell (Trio) (humorous) Haydn | 4d. |
| 98 | *Maiden, listen ... C. F. Adam | 3d. |
| 310 | Majestic night ... H. R. Bishop | 6d. |
| 493 | *Marching ... ... J. Brahms | 3d. |
| 320 | *Marching along ... G. Bantock | 4d. |
| 103 | Mariner's return, The (7 V.) Hoesler | 6d. |
| 79 | Mariner's song, The M. Haydn | 3d. |
| 412 | Marriage of the frog and the mouse, The (humorous) A. H. Brewer | 6d. |
| 52 | Married and single H. Werner | 3d. |
| 549 | Marseillaise, The ... arr. | 3d. |
| 547 | May-Day ... ... J. B. Lott | 6d. |
| 68 | Do. ... ... R. Müller | 2d. |
| 244 | May Morning ... T. Distin | 3d. |
| 483 | *Men of Harlech arr. J. Tilleard | 3d. |
| 43 | Merrily rolls the mill stream on S. Reay | 6d. |
| 428 | Merry frogs, The W. Speiser | 4d. |
| 144 | Merry May, The ... ... F. Abt | 4d. |
| 317 | Midnight ... ... E. Sachs | 4d. |
| 246 | Midnight and noon H. Clarke | 3d. |
| 431 | Midnight guard, The Grétry | 3d. |
| 193 | Mighty king is wine, A J. Raff | 3d. |
| 116 | Miller's daughter, The A. Härtel | 8d. |
| 83 | Miner's song, The Annacker | 4d. |
| 468 | Minnesingers, The R. Schumann | 3d. |
| 600 | Minstrel Boy, The ... ... (arr.) | 3d. |
| 270 | Minstrel's life, The L. Spohr | 3d. |
| 271 | *Minstrel's voyage, The ,, | 4d. |
| 294 | Moon looks down, The Döring | 3d. |
| 503 | Mopsa ... C. Lee Williams | 3d. |
| 339 | Morgenlied... ... C. W. Pearce | 4d. |
| 384 | Morning ... ... G. B. Allen | 6d. |
| 476 | Murmur not when roses fade R. Schumann | 3d. |
| 311 | *Music all powerful (Glee) T. F. Walmisley | 3d. |
| 100 | *Must I then part from thee Otto | 3d. |
| 347 | My dearie ... ... M. B. Foster | 3d. |
| 437 | My heart is sair arr. H. E. Button | 3d. |
| 427 | *My heart's dearest W. Speiser | 3d. |
| 39 | My lady is so wondrous fair J. B. Calkin | 3d. |
| 313 | My true love hath my heart C. Lee Williams | 3d. |
| 326 | *Need I say how much I love thee ... ... J. Robinson | 3d. |

| No. | | |
|---|---|---|
| 472 | *Night march, The R. Schumann | 4d. |
| 209 | Night watchman's call, The F. Abt | 6d. |
| 37 | Night winds that so gently flow, The ... ...J. B. Calkin | 4d. |
| 210 | Nightingale, The (Trio) Weelkes | 3d. |
| 593 | Nightingale, The ... A. Rowley | 3d. |
| 197 | Norman Cider, The A. E. Dyer | 4d. |
| 153 | *Northman's song, The Kücken | 3d. |
| 283 | Not a drum was heard A. M. Goodhart | 8d. |
| 120 | Not a spot on earth P. Winter | 3d. |
| 44 | Now night her dusky mantle folds S. Reay | 6d. |
| 596 | Nursery Rhymes (humorous) A. Carse | 4d. |
| 71 | O cruel maid ... Kalliwoda | 3d. |
| 143 | O Fatherland ... F. Abt | 3d. |
| 373 | *O flame of gold ... L. de Rillé | 4d. |
| 458 | O hush thee, my babie Sullivan | 4d. |
| 354 | O little barbinger of day (Glee) J. Goss | 4d. |
| 298 | O love, they wrong thee much (Glee) J. Barnby | 4d. |
| 213 | O mistress mine Cruickshank | 6d. |
| 166 | Do. (Glee) E. T. Driffield | 4d. |
| 66 | O most holy One (O Sanctissima) | 3d. |
| 500 | O my city ... ... L. de Rillé | 8d. |
| 413 | *O my luve's like a red, red rose A. H. Brewer | 3d. |
| 440 | O night... ... J. L. Hatton | 3d. |
| 370 | *O peaceful night ... E. German | 3d. |
| 442 | O stille nacht ... E. German | m.4o |
| 19 | *O thou whose beams (Ossian's Hymn) (Glee) (5 V.) J. Goss | 4d. |
| 133 | O wert thou in the cauld blast F. Kücken | 3d. |
| 430 | Oh proud and haughty maiden W. Speiser | 3d. |
| 560 | *Oh! the noble Duke of York (Old English) (humorous) arr. | 4d. |
| 557 | Oh the summer night (Glee) W. H. Cummings | 8d. |
| 435 | Oath of the forest, The L. de Rillé | 4d. |
| 393d | *Oath, The ... ... | 6d. |
| 230 | October song ... H. Goetz | 3d. |
| 236 | Ode to the terrestrial globe (humorous) ... J. F. Bridge | 4d. |
| 50 | O'er moor and mountain L. Spohr | 3d. |
| 254 | Of a' the airts ...G. J. Bennett | 3d. |
| 87 | Oft when eve has rest bestowed L. de Call | 3d. |
| 272 | Old affection ... L. Spohr | 3d. |
| 189 | Old Bacchus ... C. F. Ackers | 3d. |
| 490 | *Old hunter, The ... J. Brahms | 3d. |
| 382 | *Old soldier's dream, The (9 V.) P. Cornelius | 6d. |
| 70 | On fragrant myrtles J. G. Müller | 4d. |
| 494 | On guard ... ... J. Brahms | 2d. |
| 151 | On the march ...V. E. Becker | 6d. |
| 282 | One by one ... ... M. Wurm | 3d. |
| 192 | One little star in Heaven J. Raff | 3d. |
| 444 | *Only a pin (humorous) Brewer | 4d. |
| 5 | Onward roaming, never weary J. G. Müller | 3d. |
| 569 | Orb of Helios ... Mendelssohn | 8d. |
| 489 | Orpheus ... C. H. H. Parry | 4d. |
| 373 | Our maxim... ... H. Hofmann | 4d. |
| 496 | Out of the deep ... L. de Rillé | 3d. |
| 100 | Parting (Must I then) F. Otto | 3d. |
| 65 | Do. (O why should) ,, | 4d. |
| 323 | Partings ... arr. Mendelssohn | 3d. |
| 407 | Passing-bell, The P. Cornelius | 4d. |
| 266 | Pastoral ballad, A ... J. Booth | 4d. |
| 181 | *Patriot, The ... C. H. Lloyd | 3d. |
| 409 | *Patriot's vow, The P. Cornelius | 8d. |
| 30 | Peace (A Fable) (humorous) (Glee) J. F. Bridge | 8d. |
| 223 | Do. (5 V.) C. Lee Williams | 3d. |
| 96 | Peace of mind ... Steinacker | 6d. |
| 467 | *Peaceful lake, The R. Schumann | 3d. |
| 399 | *Phantom host, The F. Hegar | 8d. |
| 454 | *Pibroch of Donuil Dhu arr. G. Bantock | 6d. |
| 36 | Do. ... ... H. Leslie | 4d. |
| 406 | *Pilgrim's song, The P. Cornelius | 3d. |
| 452 | *Piper o' Dundee, The (arr.) ... | 6d. |
| 93 | Pleasing pain... ... L. de Call | 3d. |
| 393c | *Prayer to Isis, A ... L. de Rillé | 3d. |
| 180 | *Queen and huntress B. Tours | 4d. |

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,020—Vol. 69. Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

FEBRUARY 1 1928

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d. Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SEVENTH SEASON, 1927-1928.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, at 2.30 p.m.

HIAWATHA - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS CAROLINE HATCHARD.
MR. FRANCIS RUSSELL.
MR. PETER DAWSON.

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, at 2.30 p.m.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS
(ELGAR).

MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. STEUART WILSON.
MR. HOWARD FRY.

Conductor: SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.: Unreserved, 3s. 6d.: Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Toccata in D minor (Dorian), J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 10, p. 196; Augener, p. 360; Peters, Vol. 3, No. 3.)

Prelude (in form of a Chaconne), Op. 88, No. 2, Stanford. (Stainer & Bell.)

Romanza, "La Reine de France," Haydn. (Best's arrangements, Vol. 1, p. 199.)

The selected pieces for the July, 1928, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1928.

The Choir-Training Diploma and Certificate Examinations will both be held between Monday, May 14th, and Saturday, May 19th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, April 23rd. Application for Membership (or re-election) must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before April 23rd.

A LECTURE on Schubert's Quintet in C, Op. 163, will be given on Saturday, February 11th, at 3 p.m., at the Royal College of Organists, by Sir Hugh P. Allen, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D., D. Litt. (The work is selected for analysis at the Fellowship Examination in July, 1928.) The Quintet will be played by Students of the R.C.M., by permission of Sir Hugh P. Allen, Director. Violins, Ernest Sealey, and Helen Stewart; viola, Mary Gladden; 'celli, Helen Just, and Audrey Piggott. Admission free, no tickets required.

Examination Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,982nd) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on February 7th, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll).

President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., Mus. D., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LENT HALF-TERM
begins Monday, 20th February.

The complete String Quartets of
HAYDN.

Serial Performances every Thursday, at 3 p.m., by ENSEMBLE CLASS, under LIONEL TERTIS, F.R.A.M.

Tickets free, on application to the Secretary.

CHAMBER CONCERTS,
DUKE'S HALL, 13TH and 29TH FEBRUARY, AT 3 P.M.

L.R.A.M.

Last day of entry for the Easter Examination, 14th February, but entries will be accepted up to 28th February on payment of a late fee of 5*s.*

PROSPECTUSES, and full particulars, from
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

The Royal College of Music.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
{ HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D.Litt.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt., F.R.C.M.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing, French Classical Drama.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply. MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1927-1928.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music. Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1927-28.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 12 to December 3, December 5 to March 10, and March 12 to June 8.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

Manchester School of Music.

Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892).

Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class.—Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

The Royal College of Music.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D.Litt.
Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, D.Litt., F.R.C.M.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND EXHIBITIONS.

The following Scholarships and Exhibitions will be competed for at the Royal College of Music on or about FEBRUARY 8th, 1928:

TWO VIOLIN SCHOLARSHIPS:

Open to Males ONLY between the ages of 15 and 18.

FOUR OPERATIC EXHIBITIONS:

One for Soprano or Contralto.
One for Tenor.
Two for Baritone or Bass.

These Exhibitions provide for free Operatic training at the Royal College of Music from one to three years.

Full particulars and Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

A.R.C.M.

The NEXT EXAMINATION in all subjects commences on MONDAY, April 16, 1928.

LAST DAY for receiving entries, Monday, February 20, 1928.

SYLLABUS and all particulars can be obtained on application to the Registrar at the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1928: J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B.

PRIZE COMPETITION FOR ORIGINAL COMPOSITION.

Award: "FINALE IN D,"
BY B. J. MASLEN, F.R.C.O.
(Organist and Choirmaster, St. Stephen's, Lansdowne, Bath).

ADJUDICATORS:
EDGAR T. COOK. JOHN E. WEST. J. WARRINER

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary,
De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

THE PEEL ORCHESTRA.—Vacancies all instruments. Excellent library; applications invited. Write, Hon. Secretary, Mr. George E. Barber, 19, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

GREAT MUSICIANS

recommend

MACKINNON'S MUSICAL MEMORY

Tobias Matthay
Harold Bauer
Alfred Cortot
Serge Koussevitzky
Myra Hess
Irene Scharrer
Leff Pouishnoff
Katharine Goodson
Stewart Macpherson
Ivor Newton
Martha Baird
Ivan Phillipowsky
Adrian Boult
Maurice Cole
Maurice Besly
Percy Scholes
Keith Douglas
Rae Robertson

THE FEE IS
£3 : 3 : 0

CORTOT

The world-famous Pianist writes to Miss Mackinnon:

"J'ai lu avec le plus vif intérêt votre remarquable travail sur la mémoire musicale. Vous avez élucidé avec une rare intelligence toutes les données de ce redoutable problème, et votre ouvrage sera d'une précieuse assistance pour tous ceux qui sont désireux de se souvenir d'une œuvre complètement et parfaitement."— (Signed) ALFRED CORTOT. 12/12/1927.

Here are examples of the unsolicited testimonials from correspondents received daily by Miss Mackinnon:

"You have not only taught me how to memorise, but how to go about practising in the right way. In fact my playing has improved in every way."—C. M., Hampstead, 15/11/27.

"I have found your valuable advice a very great help in violin, organ, and piano playing."—E. M. Martin, Lostwithiel, Cornwall, 8/12/27.

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET
(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE).

To MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, 1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3.

Without any obligation on my part please send me your free booklet on "MEMORY TRAINING."

Name.....

Address.....

.....

"BY CORRESPONDENCE."

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
(Mus. Doc., Lond.), L.R.A.M.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Touch, and Technique (for Pianoforte Diplomas).
(4.) Trinity College Diplomas.
(5.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.
(6.) Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. (London and Durham).
(7.) Separate Subjects.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

DR. SPRANKLING also gives PERSONAL LESSONS in Bristol and London. Special Coaching for all Pianoforte Diplomas.

Address:
DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.
Telephone: Bristol 3033.

Master the Art of Relaxation in your Pianoforte Playing.

No one is really content to remain an average or mediocre performer, so avail yourself of the means to attain a high artistic standard as an executant by means of my CORRESPONDENCE COURSE. For a moderate outlay this will teach you thoroughly how

Relaxation and Applied Weight Touch

IN ALL DEPARTMENTS OF YOUR Pianoforte Playing can be acquired. Improvement in the technique of TONE PRODUCTION will be noticeable at once, and perseverance in continuing the study will be encouraged by the REMARKABLE RESULTS that follow. NO OTHER CORRESPONDENCE COURSE OF SUCH AMBITIOUS CHARACTER and MINUTE DETAIL HAS EVER BEEN PUT FORWARD BEFORE.

My success is due to the care with which I coach and help every pupil individually—dealing with all their difficulties personally and thoroughly.

An interesting brochure with full particulars of the NEW REVISED COURSE will be sent to all bonâ fide inquirers who write giving particulars of the standard of playing they have reached.

PERSONAL LESSONS DAY AND EVENING.

Write, The Secretary,
THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
Pianoforte School,
11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.2.

Four Lectures by Sir Walford Davies,
At 6 p.m., On FORM and PHRASE in MUSIC.

Tuesday Jan. 31st.—In Folk-Song and Folk-Dance.
Wednesday, Feb. 1st.—In Vocal Music.
Thursday, ,, 2nd.—In the Classical Dance Form.
Friday, ,, 3rd.—In the Sonata.

PIANO PLAYING
WITHOUT DRUDGERY

THE
'FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD'
SYSTEM

is not merely a series of practice-saving Exercises but a complete System of Touch and Technique.

Read these three extracts from Pupils' Reports. I have many hundreds of these to show to intending pupils.

"I have just won an appointment here by competition. I should not have been able to do this if I had never known of your exercises."

"I may say I have made rapid improvement this last three or four weeks and am playing difficult orchestral programmes with ease and confidence at sight, and without rehearsals."

"I have passed my examination with honours. I have derived more benefit from your System than I have ever done from practising the most difficult studies."

SEND TO-DAY for my illustrated booklet, "Light on Pianoforte Playing." It explains my system fully and gives details of fees and postal lessons. Many eminent musicians, including the late Sir Frederick Bridge, have used my system.

When writing, be sure you say whether you are an Average or Advanced Player; or if a Beginner whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free, from

M. MACDONALD SMITH,
94 Gower Street, London, W.C.1

From Brain to Keyboard
Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

GROVE'S GREAT WORK

REVISED AND BROUGHT UP-TO-DATE.

VOLS. I. TO IV. NOW READY. VOL. V. READY FEBRUARY 7.

The Musical Mirror.—"I unhesitatingly say that no student, competent musician, publisher, or anyone connected with music, could afford to be without it. It is a life investment. There are few dictionaries of any kind that could be read through from cover to cover without a feeling of boredom or nausea. 'Grove' can be read and re-read, for it is a human and living record of lives, events, words, terms, and history."

The Spectator.—"Mr. Colles is to be warmly congratulated upon his enlightened and fair-minded editorship, which has renewed the lease of this national institution and made it habitable once more, even to the extent of hanging twenty-four new coloured pictures upon the walls thereof."

Musical Opinion.—"Of the labour and enthusiasm of the editor and his assistants, one can say nothing less than that their work lives so long as Grove endures."

GROVE'S DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS

EDITED BY

H. C. COLLES, M.A., MUS.B., F.R.C.M.

The work is illustrated in a most interesting manner with Portraits and Musical Instruments. The illustrations consist of 24 plates in colour and 72 plates in half-tone.

Vol. I. A to C - - - 773 pp. ready
Vol. II. D to J - - - - 880 pp. ready
Vol. III. K to O - - - 787 pp. ready
Vol. IV. P to Sonatina - - 842 pp. ready
Vol. V. Song to Z - - 809 pp. ready Feb. 7

THE VOLUMES ARE SOLD SEPARATELY AT 30/- NET EACH.

SPECIAL EDITION. Half-bound in dark green Morocco gilt, with gilt tops, and marbled end papers. 40s. net each.

ERIC BLOM in Musical News.—"What every reader will especially appreciate is the fact that the vast mass of articles on every conceivable musical subject is now presented in a more compact and accessible form, by a uniform method of recasting the whole of the old material according to a general plan, and reducing duplication by means of cross-references. Mr. Colles has succeeded in fitting in an immense amount of new matter without appreciably increasing the size of the work. . . . A notable achievement."

The Musical Times.—"Nothing is so admirable that it cannot be improved, and 'Grove,' always good, is now better than ever. First, let thanks be given for some conveniences in arrangement. In the new articles of considerable length, the paragraphing, with titles in capitals, is a real help; so, too, is the settting forth of birth and death dates immediately after the subject's name. Formerly we had to hunt down columns of close type in order to discover such facts. Illustrations are numerous, and among them are some fine examples of colour printing."

The Times.—"It has always been a dictionary that will pronounce with the finality of authority on all appeals submitted to it. In its new form, as far as can be judged from the first volume, it is more than ever a dictionary with an answer to every question."

 Send for Free Illustrated 16 pp. Prospectus.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., St. Martin's Street, London, W.C.2.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,

MARLBOROUGH PLACE, ABBEY ROAD, N.W.8.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11TH, 1928.

Organ, Violin, and Violoncello
RECITAL

AT 3.30 P.M.

PROGRAMME.

BACH: Prelude and Fugue in E minor.

WIDOR: Allegro Vivace, and Allegro Cantabile. (From 5th Symphony).

RHEINBERGER: Suite for Organ, Violin, and 'Cello.
1. Con Moto. 2. Theme with Variations.
3. Sarabande. 4. Finale.
(Op. 149.)

WAGNER: "The Ride of the Valkyries."

W. IRWIN-HUNT. Solo Organ.
LEONARD N. FOWLES, Mus.Doc. (Oxon.). Solo Violin.
H. T. TRIGGS. Solo Violoncello.

The Church is near Marlborough Road (Met.), Maida Vale (Tube), and South Hampstead (L.M.S.) Stations; also all Bus Routes along Finchley Road, Abbey Road, and Maida Vale.

ST. JAMES'S CHURCH, Muswell Hill, N.

ORGAN RECITALS
will be given
By Mr. H. A. BATE,
every Saturday, at 5.45 p.m., from 21st January to March.

Harrison organ. Console may be seen after any recital. Programmes of the Series may be had from the Verger.
41 Bus from Highgate Tube Station passes the Church.

LEAMINGTON AND COUNTY OPEN COMPETITIVE
MUSICAL FESTIVAL

SATURDAY, JUNE 16th, and
THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY,
JUNE 21st, 22nd, and 23rd.

SYLLABUS (Price 6d. each) now ready, from
THE SECRETARY,
TOWN HALL, LEAMINGTON.

ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.

TREORCHY, AUGUST 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 1928.

List of Subjects, 1s.; Postage, 3d.
Publishers: Hughes & Son, Wrexham.

Further information and particulars of Special Prize of an Upright Piano in a Pianoforte Playing Competition, from the Hon. General Secretary, Eisteddfod Office, Treorchy.

CENTRAL HALL, THURSDAY, FEB. 16, AT 8.

WESTMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY.

"God's time is the best," Bach. "Spring," Haydn.
"Alexander's Feast," Handel.

STILES-ALLEN. DOROTHY WEBB.
BEN MORGAN. EDWARD DYKES.
Narrator ... ... SIR HARRY BRITTAIN, M.P.

Orchestra selected from Queen's Hall and New Symphony Orchestras.
Conductor: VINCENT THOMAS.

POPULAR PRICES: 3s. 6d., 2s. 4d. (Res.); 1s. 2d. (Unres.); from Miss G. M. Harvey, 316, Long Lane, East Finchley: Mr. E. W. A. Campbell, 471, Green Lane, Goodmayes; and Central Hall.

BOURNEMOUTH
Musical Competitions Festival.

SECOND YEAR.

MAY 19th to 26th, 1928.

Choral, Solo Instrumental, and Vocal Classes. Elocution. Folk-Dancing.
Orchestral and Band Contests.
OVER 100 CLASSES.

Entries close April 2nd, 1928.

Syllabus and Entry Forms from the Hon. Sec.,
Mr. HADLEY WATKINS,
Cairns Memorial House, Bournemouth.

SCARBOROUGH
Competitive Musical Festival.

APRIL 26th, 27th, 28th, 1928.
GRAND HALL, THE SPA.

Solo, Duet, Quartet, Choral, Orchestral, School Choir, Etc., Competitions.

Syllabus now ready, and may be had from
Mr. F. CROMACK, Secretary,
Scarborough Townsmen's Association,
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough.

STRATFORD AND EAST LONDON
MUSICAL FESTIVAL

For Essex and E. London and Open Competitions.
The Premier Festival; 46th Year.

Open Choral (Mixed, Men, and Ladies' Classes).
Open Solo Classes for Solo Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, and Elocution.
Over 100 local Classes.
Reduced Rail Fares. Now a Pre-Easter Festival.

Entries close February 20th.

Syllabus free from JOHN GRAHAM,
74, Park Hall Road, East Finchley, N.2.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS

PRESIDENT: E. MARKHAM LEE, M.A., D. Mus. (Cantab.), F.R.C.O.
VICE-PRESIDENT: LEWIS HANN, A.R.A.M.

LONDON AND HOME COUNTIES CENTRE

HON. SECRETARY: ORTON BRADLEY, M.A.

The next Meeting of Members will be held at the

WIGMORE HALL, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1,

ON SATURDAY, 11TH FEBRUARY, 1928, AT 5.30 P.M., when PROFESSOR DONALD F. TOVEY (Reid Professor of Music, Edinburgh) will give a LECTURE-RECITAL, entitled

BACH'S LAST OPUS,

With Illustrations covering a wide range of Bach's Works.

(Professor Tovey is preparing a new Edition of Bach's "Art of Fugue," and has completed the unfinished Fugue on the basis of evidence of Bach's intentions.)

19, BERNERS STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

FRANK EAMES,
General Secretary.

THE ART OF IMPROVISATION
PLAYING BY EAR AND MEMORISING

can be learnt by ANYONE who can play the piano at all.

My short postal Course will teach YOU to play by ear, to compose at the keyboard, and to MEMORISE written music with ease and certainty, and to improve your TECHNIQUE and general musical ability.

My booklet, "The Piano and its Possibilities," is sent free and post free, on receipt of a post-card. State whether "Beginner," "Elementary," or "Advanced."

MR. H. CRAWFORD,
KINGSLEY GREEN, HASLEMERE.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS.

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Musical Times: "The idea is so simple and practical."

Music: "Cannot fail to be of service."

"Thank you for all your valuable help."—R. F. L.

AFTER THE THIRD LESSON.—"May I express my satisfaction at the undoubted improvement in my sight-reading."—A. H.

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON.
('Phone: Croydon 2703.)

EIGHTEENTH
GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL.
28th APRIL to 12th MAY, 1928 (inclusive).
COMPETITIONS IN 169 CLASSES.
SYLLABUS now ready. Price 1s. (post free).
From Festival Office, 46, Gordon Street, Glasgow.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glenholme, Hessle High Road, Hull, Yorks.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.)

A.R.C.O.—F.R.C.O.

Recent Successes ... A.R.C.O. - 31 F.R.C.O. - 10

A.R.C.O.

4TH ATTEMPT.

A student failed FOUR TIMES (under other tuition). This student passed after working with us for four months.

F.R.C.O.

FAILED 6 TIMES.

A London student FAILED SIX TIMES (under other tuition). After passing, he wrote, "The Lessons and correction of work have been a revelation to me."

JULY, 1928 (3 COURSES).

1. Revision - - - 10 Lessons.
2. Ordinary - - - 20 Lessons.
3. Guarantee Course.

SINGLE SUBJECTS: ORCHESTRATION, PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT, ESSAY, FORM, HISTORY.

FREE - GUIDE TO MATRIC., MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M., A.T.C.L., ETC.

CONSULTATIONS AND PERSONAL TUITION.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

"SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810.)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A simple and very effective appliance for giving strength and flexibility to the fingers.
Recommended by Editor of the Musical Times.

IMPROVED MODEL.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.*; postage and packing, 3*d.*

BYEWAYS, CLIFF ROAD, SEABROOK, HYTHE, KENT.

THE TECHNIQUER

A BOON TO ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.
Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.
BUSONI and THE TECHNIQUER.

Extract from a letter:
"A pianist is not imaginable without hands. Their physical culture is therefore of importance.
In fact, there are some functions which belong exclusively to the mechanical department.
Mr. Pitcher's apparatus . . . proves helpful against stiffness and inflexibility of the hands. I wish his good results may ever increase."—FERRUCCIO BUSONI.

Send for list of testimonials and full particulars post free.
"Hand Development," with 16 Photos. 1*s.* 6*d.*
Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.
President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Instruction in all Vocal and Musical Subjects.
Voice-Curing Courses for loss of tone and all Vocal defects.
OPERATIC CLASS now forming under A. DAVIES, A.R.C.M.
CHORAL CLASS under F. T. DURRANT, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., F.I.S.S.C.

The Daily Telegraph says: "A number of pupils . . . . came through the test with infinite credit to themselves and to those who are responsible for their artistic welfare."

Particulars from Sec., Miss MAIMIE M. HEATH. Mayfair 3819.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

| | |
|---|---|
| SOLO-PLAYING. | SCORE-READING. |
| TRANSPOSITION. | ACCOMPANIMENT |
| ESSAY. | (with list of 75 Solos). |

3*s.* each. 10*s.* 6*d.* the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.

Price 5*s.*

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 166, COUNTY ROAD, WALTON, LIVERPOOL.

THE JOY OF PERFECT MEMORY PLAYING

The power to give pleasure in your playing is measured simply and solely by the extent of the interpretative imagination you are able to read into the music, and by the ability to transform this intangible mental conception—through the agency of your instrument—into terms of beautiful sound. Memorise your music by the

Master-Method of Memory-Playing

and you will begin to feel, for the first time in your life, that real freedom of interpretation, that intense joy in playing, which can only be inspired by playing from memory with complete confidence. Take the first step by sending for my free Book, "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing," which is sent free, and post free, and learn how YOU can play from memory with ease and certainty. It discusses fully the whole problem of reliable memory playing; gives full details of my short Memorising Courses for the PIANO, VIOLIN, 'CELLO, ORGAN; contains many signed and addressed testimonials from grateful students in all parts of the world, together with my personal guarantee of success. Please state whether you play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ, and whether a moderate or advanced player.

A post-card will do.

SEPARATE COURSES FOR PIANO. VIOLIN. 'CELLO. ORGAN.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
194, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM (A.R.C.M.).

SOPRANO.

"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.

"Her extraordinary, bird-like purity and clarity."—Surrey Advertiser.

"Possesses a voice of remarkable purity and strength."—Surrey Advertiser.

41, Avondale Road, South Croydon. 'Phone: Croydon 2703.

ROSA ALBA.

SOPRANO.

"The first of weight from Australia."—Morning Post, London.

"The rare temperament which makes a song live."—Hastings Observer.

"Free from the distressing vibrato."—Musical Opinion.

Concerts. Masonics. Oratorio. Opera. Orchestral.

94A, Kennington Park Road, London, S.E.11.

Tel.: Reliance 1102; or Agents.

Vocal Lessons given.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.

Lecture-Recitals of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.
Pupils prepared for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Scholarships and Festivals.

28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

Lessons given at above address or West-End Studio, Cricklewood Conservatoire of Music, N.W.2; and Highbury Conservatoire, N.5, &c. Primrose 3869.

PHYLLIS WRIGHT, L.R.A.M.

CONTRALTO.

Oratorio, &c. Vacant dates to Good Friday.

Recent Engagements:
B.B.C., Ealing Philharmonic, &c.

12, St. Alban's Crescent, Woodford Green, Essex.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR.

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

Shirley, Park Road, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

WILLIAM LOMAS

(Late Royal College of Music, Manchester)
TENOR.
GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.
ORATORIO, OPERA, BALLAD, AND SACRED.
45, St. Mary Street, Gloucester.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L., PERFORMER, EX-CATHEDRAL CHORISTER, FIRST-PRIZE WINNER, STRATFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.)

TENOR.

"Mr. Millard Thompson is a tenor of the robusto style, first and last dramatic, vigorous, and incisive. He had immense reserves of ringing tone and mastery of expression. . . . He sang so clearly that his theme was unmistakable." "HIAWATHA."—Letchworth Citizen.

"Gave proof of high artistic merit . . . . all being sustained at a high level of vocalisation." "THE MESSIAH."—Middlesex Chronicle.

ORATORIO, BALLAD, AND SACRED.

The Croft, 49, Headstone Lane, North Harrow, Middlesex.

VERNON HARRISS

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medalist. BASS.

Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

MR. PERCY BEADLE (A.R.C.M.)

Gives Lessons in Singing and Voice-Production.

Æolian Hall Studios, New Bond Street, W.1.

TO COMPOSERS.

NICHOLAS GATTY

MUS. DOC. CANTAB.

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.

For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, W.1.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

ALBERT GARCIA

CARRIES ON THE TRADITIONS OF HIS GRANDFATHER, THE LATE MANUEL GARCIA.

STUDIO: 59, QUEEN'S ROAD, N.W.8.

ELIZABETH LEVY

L.R.A.M., GOLD MEDALLIST.

TOBIAS MATTHAY'S PIANOFORTE METHOD taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for Scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

MISS MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).

Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.

26, Onslow Square, S.W.7. Tel.: Kensington 3627.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.
RUSSIAN MUSIC.
CONCERTS AND RECITALS.
TALKS AT THE PIANO.

For terms, apply to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

ORGAN LESSONS.

GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O.

specializes in the teaching of Organ Playing
at
ST. STEPHEN'S WALBROOK, E.C.4,
and coaches for all practical diplomas.

SINGLE LESSONS.

2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6. Tel: Putney 4208.

W. ORGAN

SOLO ORCHESTRAL OR BACH TRUMPET.

65, Clova Road, London, E.7.

E. SIMS-HILDITCH

LECTURER AND ADJUDICATOR.

Address, 37, Victoria Street, Crewe.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.

Particulars on application.

Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1. Langham 3909.

YOUNG MUS. DOC.

COACHES BY CORRESPONDENCE.

ALL branches of Music, including Paper Work for Professional and Higher Examinations.

Send stamped, addressed envelope and specimen of work for FREE LESSON.

FEES FROM 2s. EACH LESSON.

"H. K." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

MR. J. C. BRYDSON

MUS. BAC. (DUNELM.), L.T.C.L.

POSTAL TUITION IN MUSICAL SUBJECTS.
PREPARATION FOR EXAMINATIONS.

FEES FROM 10s. 6d. FOR TEN LESSONS.

A Student wrote recently:—"Thanks for encouraging me to start on such a Course. When I saw the advertised cost of the lessons I was sceptical of their being genuine. However, I have no hesitation in saying that I am getting better tuition now than I previously obtained for £3 3s. per term."

Address:—"Balcary," Kegworth, near Derby.

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG, Mus. Bac., A.R.M.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L. Correspondence Lessons in all subjects. Preparation for diplomas. 131, Warbreck Drive, Blackpool, N.S.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

SUCCESSES (with those for January, 1928) include 3 F.R.C.O. (1 for Jan., 1928). 3 A.R.C.O. 2 L.R.A.M.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MADAME ALBA, Professor of Singing (Italian Bel Canto). Specialist—Breath Control. Cramer's Studios, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L.Mus.T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

VIOLONCELLO.—Miss Florence Bass, pupil of and assistant-teacher to Jacques Van Lier, gives tuition on the violoncello. Also accepts engagements for solos, &c. 6B, Sisters Avenue, S.W.11. Phone: Battersea 5835.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-27... 324 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-27... 88 " " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work (25 Successes.)
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint. (21 Successes.)

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple), 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone: Battersea 0916.

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. inst. Also large four-manual organ. Pieces registered and phrased.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

| | |
|---|---|
| 1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920. | 1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921 |
| 1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924. |
| 9 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., July, 1925. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1926. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1926. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. | 4 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., July, 1927. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1927. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. |

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1. 2/8 post free.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION by F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L. (Registered Teacher). Any Exam. One guinea ten lessons. Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, &c. Courses in History, Choir-Training, Aural Tests, Analysis, R.C.O. July Exams. Successful F.R.C.O. pupil writes: "Many, many thanks for your valuable help." Address: BM/JRMB, London, W.C.1.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (all music Exams.) by recognised and well-qualified Professor. 1s. 6d. per lesson, and postage. Stamp for specimen. Composers advised and assisted. "W. H. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., PIANOFORTE.—Special Coaching by Arthur Ellershaw, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., &c. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator Prep. for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. 1, Newington, Liverpool.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M. EXAMS., ETC.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, author of "TWELVE TEST PAPERS IN RUDIMENTS," &c., and joint author of "FORM AND TEACHING TEST PAPERS" (both published by Warren & Phillips), gives lessons in the above. Apply, 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

TO COMPOSERS.—Complete and systematic course, by correspondence, in Military Band Instrumentation. Write, Captain Charles Hoby, M.B.E., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Director of Music, Royal Marine Barracks, Chatham.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London.

SUCCESSES IN ORGAN PLAYING SINCE 1910:

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1910 | ... | 8 | 1919 | ... | 11 |
| 1911 | ... | 10 | 1920 | ... | 7 |
| 1912 | ... | 20 | 1921 | ... | 9 |
| 1913 | ... | 18 | 1922 | ... | 15 |
| 1914 | ... | 25 | 1023 | ... | 15 |
| 1915 | ... | 25 | 1924 | ... | 7 |
| 1916 | ... | 18 | 1925 | ... | 14 |
| 1917 | ... | 2 | 1926 | ... | 11 |
| 1918 | ... | 3 | 1927 | ... | 12 |

5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. W. HUNT, Mus. D. Durham (1926), F.R.C.O. Gives Lessons by Correspondence, for degrees and diplomas in music. Thorpe Road, Melton Mowbray.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1927, Mus. Doc., 3 Final Mus. Bac., and three 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Also in 1927—4 Mus. Doc. and 3 Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition. 200 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

REGINALD A. JEVONS, A.R.C.M., R.C.M. (Brussels). Correspondence Lessons, A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., &c. Personal Lessons. Terms, &c. Studio, 120, Cazenove Road, London, N.16.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto; F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning" prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Specialist in Pianoforte Playing, Touch, Technique, and Interpretation. Thirty years' experience in preparing for examinations. More than 1,000 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have gained Degrees and Diplomas. Address: Weekes' Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Musical Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
Preparation for all Exams. by Post and Personal Lessons.
Special Courses of Papers: Singing, Piano, Touch, Musical Appreciation, &c.
Nearly 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
Send for Prospectus,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture, Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

DR. A. E. TAYLOR. PUPIL GAINED STILLIE Bursary for Cpt.; Gold Medal for Cpt., Ass. Board; Gold Medal for Har., Ass. Board; C. C. Scholarship; A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., Mus. B. Compositions revised and accompaniments written. Portland Place, Lancaster.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.
319 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
189 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

| | |
|---|---|
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921. | 8 A.R.C.O. July, 1921. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. | 9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. | 8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. | 12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1927. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1927. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928 | 12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the July, 1928, F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work, which is often the result of training on wrong lines. Now in this system of tuition, pupils are taught to produce work which is above the standard required by the examiners.

F.R.C.O. pupils are trained to work on a definite plan in such tests as the String Quartet, Part-Song, Solo, so as to acquire speed, which is a most vital factor, especially in the afternoon, when so many candidates come to grief.

Hints on how to study the score selected for the July examination as well as a complete analysis (which will give answers to likely questions) will be sent to all pupils.

A.R.C.O. pupils receive special help with Free Counterpoint, Pianoforte Accompaniment, and Four-Part Harmony. Questions on Choir-Training, Musical History, and Musical Form are included in the lessons.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

SINGING ACCOMPANIST.—(Lady) efficient, and very experienced teacher, wishes to offer her services as Accompanist to Teacher of Singing. Write, stating full particulars, to "Box 8," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M. is free to accompany Cantatas or works during Lent. Anywhere in London district. Experienced and reliable accompanist. Write, "F.R.C.O.," 10, Hornsey Lane Gardens, N.6.

A.R.C.M., Teacher of Singing (gent.), educated at R.C.M., eight years pupil of, and later assistant to, Mr. Albert Visetti, desires appointment, school or musical institution, whole or part time. Capable of taking opera class. Box "A. H. K.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

GENTLEMAN, L.R.A.M., A.T.C.L., PIANOFORTE TEACHER, REQUIRES visiting (or residential) POST, School, &c. 25, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.19.

WANTED.—PRIVATE PIANO TEACHING CONNECTION. Or PURCHASE SMALL DAY SCHOOL (ages to 12). Capitation basis. Coast or near. "T. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANOFORTE TEACHING CONNECTION WANTED by Lady A.R.C.M. Also Violin, Viola, Organ. Within 20 miles Portsmouth. "Rota," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd. 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A.R.C.M. (Solo Pianoforte, lady) desires engagements, concerts, ensemble, and accompanying. "E. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.
CHORISTERSHIPS.
Board, lodging, education, and medical attendance free. Candidates must have a good voice and correct ear, and should be between 8 and 11 years of age. Education for the Public Schools.
Apply to the Rev. The Precentor, The College, Durham.

CHOIR BOYS.—Several WANTED for West-End Church. £8 per annum. Good voices, and some experience necessary. Beginners also required. Write, "Box 7," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SUPERIOR CHORAL SINGERS
WANTED FOR SPRING CONCERT TOUR
OF AMERICA.
Must be expert readers, with Cathedral experience. Refinement absolutely imperative; answer in detail, or no reply. Please consider silence a polite negative. State salary expected, which must be low. I pay transportation, but no hotel expenses. References exchanged.
SAYERS, 53, West 82nd Street, New York City.

TO MUSICAL SOCIETIES, ETC.—Contralto is willing to give services. Apply, "F. Y.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THERE IS ROOM FOR TWO AMATEUR SOPRANOS (ladies) in the Choir of The Annunciation, Bryanston St., W. R. A. Ebdon, 1, Denning Rd., Hampstead, N.W.3.

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL.
DUBLIN.
APPOINTMENT OF ALTO.
The VACANCY advertised in the September and December issues will not be filled for some time. Owing to the legacy of the late Earl of Iveagh it will be possible to increase the Salary. When this is fixed the post will be advertised again. Will applicants please note.

TENOR (Solo). — Good reader, Communicant, WANTED for St. Gabriel's, Warwick Square. Salary, £22. Apply (letter only), Organist, 39, Gauden Road, Clapham, S.W.4.

TENOR REQUIRED.—St. Luke's, Chelsea. £16 to £20. Apply, Mr. G. H. Eldridge, St. Luke's Vestry, Sydney Street, Chelsea, S.W.3.

TENOR REQUIRED for C. of E. CHURCH in Marylebone District. £10. Communicant. Address, "J.A.Y.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ST. ALBAN'S, Holborn.—Solo TENOR required. Fridays, 6.30; Sundays, 11 and 6.30; some Holy Days. £40. Apply, Owen Franklin, 23, Midhurst Avenue, N.10.

WANDSWORTH PARISH CHURCH.
WANTED, Good Chorus BASS (not Baritone); also Tenor. Good readers essential. £15 per annum. Apply, W. C. Barnes, Organist.

ARMAGH CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, BARITONE. For particulars as to salary and duties, apply, Dr. Chaundy, Armagh.

BARITONE AVAILABLE FOR ENGAGEMENT. Excellent testimonials. Expenses. "Lyric," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

QUEENS' COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.—Undergraduate Organ Scholarship (£70 per annum) will be vacant next October. Examination to elect scholar will be held on Friday, March 16, 1928. For particulars, write to The Dean.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST WANTED at Holy Trinity, Stroud Green, N. New 3-manual organ (electric blown). Preparation for R.C.O. examinations if desired. Write, "F.R.C.O.," 157, Archway Road, N.6.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER for Southernhay Congregational Church, Exeter. Apply, stating experience, salary, and qualifications, to The Secretary, 191, High Street, Exeter.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER (certified) WANTED for Dalry Parish Church. Salary, £80. Applications, with copies of testimonials and full particulars of qualifications and experience, to be lodged with Rod. W. Donald, Session Clerk, Dalry, Ayrshire, not later than 10th February, 1928.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED, Christ Church, Gipsy Hill. Congregational. Evangelical services. Spiritually-minded communicant essential. Disciplinarian. Stipend according to experience. Choral Society. Apply, in writing, to Vicar.

MELTON MOWBRAY PARISH CHURCH, WANTED.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER. Salary, £100, with collection annually. Apply, Vicar.

DEPUTY-ORGANIST desires Engagements. Write, Box 11, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

TO AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

FOR DISPOSAL, a quantity of bronze Music Stands in good condition. Apply, "Box No. 6," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

ORGAN.—Mason & Hamlin, 2-manual, WANTED. Send particulars and price to J. B. Cramer & Co., Ltd., 139, New Bond Street, London, W.1.

ORGAN.—TWO MANUALS AND PEDALS. Fine bold tone and new modern Stops. Imposing oak case. £360, with erection. "Organist," 10, Lancaster Rd., Forest Gate, E.

SMALL Two-Manual ORGAN. Condition as new. Best materials and workmanship throughout. 9 Stops, 5 Couplers, including Octave and Sub-Octave Couplers. £600. Box 9, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160 Wardour Street, W.1.

APOLLO ORGAN, two-manual pedal; practically new; electrical blower. Collingwood, 6, Ashford Rd., Maidstone.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS.—One, Two, and Three Manuals. Bargains. From £15. Best Makers. Stagg, 56, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.1.

CHURCH ORGANS.—Restorations, Enlargements, Re-voicing, Repairing, and Tuning. Attractive terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London, S.W.19. Established 1806.

RUMMEN'S MECHANICAL ORGAN PEDAL ATTACHMENT for piano. By Norman & Beard. £4 4s. Upstone, 181, Oxford Gardens, W.10.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1s. 4d. an hour (pupils, 9d.). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6.
ORGAN LESSONS at ST. STEPHEN'S WALBROOK, E.C.4.
GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O. Tel.: Putney 4208.

BABY GRAND FOR SALE.—Max Adolph, as new. Rosewood case. £95. C. Walton, 22A, Kemplay Road, N.W.3.

A LADY wishes to dispose of her HARP, in good condition. Erard, double-action. Low price. Box 10, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FRENCH 'CELLO IN PERFECT CONDITION. Fine, powerful tone. Suit cinema soloist. £11. "A. B.," Villette, Guibal Road, Lee, S.E.12.

I HAVE MADE SPECIAL APPARATUS to enable me to PHOTO ORGANS in any position. Charges nominal. G. Benham, "Bramerton," New Barnet.

MUSIC AT ONE THIRD COST. Excellent condition. Oratorios, Cantatas, Anthems, &c. List from Peacock, Northmoor Road, Oxford.

WANTED.—A FULL SCORE COPY of Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" (Op. 58). Write, stating price, &c., Mr. J. R. Evans, 3, Jestyn Street, Treeynon, Aberdare, Glam.

TO ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES, MUSICAL LIBRARIANS, AND OTHERS. For SALE, Excellent LIBRARY ORCHESTRAL MUSIC, comprising 4,000 odd numbers, including Symphonies, Symphonic Poems, Suites, Orch. Accomp., Operatic Arias, &c. Parts for large Orchestra. Can be seen by appointment. Box G63, c/o W. H. Smith & Son, Advertising Agents, Blackfriars, Manchester.

"SONG WRITING AS A PROFITABLE HOBBY OR CAREER."

24-Page Booklet on application. Free advice on Songs, Lyrics, Music. International Music Agency, Box M.T., 10, Kingsley House, Harp Lane, London, E.C.3.

FOR SALE.—Teaching Connection—Singing, Piano, Violin—with furnished house (nice open position), eight rooms and offices. Established ten years; N. London. Owner retiring; or would consider Lady Piano Partner, with capital. "M. E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

THE REVISION OF MSS. is UNDERTAKEN by musical critic and song composer. Lessons in piano, singing, theory. Herbert H. Nelson, 9, Grange Rd., Canonbury, N.1.

MUSIC COPYING, Transposition, Arrangements, Band Parts, &c., Smith, 40, Coniston Rd., Muswell Hill, N.10.

SONG LYRICS SET TO MUSIC.

Have your lyrics set to haunting melodies by an experienced Singer, not by a pianist who cannot understand the needs of the human voice. For melodic songs with dramatic accompaniment, apply to Charles Platt, 87, Foxbourne Rd., Balham, London, S.W.17.

MUSICAL BOOKS CATALOGUE (surplus Stock on account of expiration of lease) posted free on receipt of address. Allen & Co., 16, Grenville Street, Brunswick Square, London, W.C.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.

12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD.
2s. 6d. Post free; Abroad, 3s. Pre-eminent Technique.
It will thoroughly prepare you for the position of "Conductor."
M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London Address: 34, Spencer Hill, Wimbledon, S.W.19.
Please mention this paper when writing.

PIANO REPAIRS. "WIGMORE HALL FINISH"

denotes a standard not obtainable elsewhere.

THE MOST HIGHLY SKILLED WORKMANSHIP.
THE FINEST MATERIALS (regardless of cost).
PERFECT SATISFACTION.

WIGMORE HALL AND PIANO GALLERIES, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

New Numbers in the "YORK SERIES."

ALLELUIA HAIL WITH GLADNESS.
J. LAMONT GALBRAITH.
Cantata. Price 2s. net.

CROWN OF LIFE.
NOEL HANNENFORD.
Cantata. Price 2s. net.

THE SHEFFIELD CATHEDRAL DESCANTS.
(24 Settings of Popular Hymn Tunes.)
By T. W. HANFORTH.
Price 6d.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

VICTOR HELY-HUTCHINSON

"THREE NONSENSE SONGS"

1. The Owl and the Pussy-cat.
2. The Table and The Chair.
3. The Duck and the Kangaroo

Price 3/6 complete.

(Orchestral parts on hire.)

DR. E. MARKHAM LEE

BOOKS FOR BEGINNERS

A MODERN METHOD OF PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION

in

THREE GRADED BOOKS.

Price 2/6 each.

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.,

GLASGOW: 152, Buchanan St. LONDON: 95, Wimpole St.

NEW YORK: 35 West 32nd Street.

All smoking affects the throat

Pipe, Cigar or Cigarette—no matter which—the delicate membranes of the throat object to smoke, which eventually produces irritation either mild or severe. There are few smokers who have not experienced the uncomfortable effect of "one cigarette too many." To prevent this, take an "Allenburys" Glycerine and Black Currant Pastille occasionally between smokes and let it dissolve slowly in the mouth. Containing pure glycerine and the luscious fruit juice of ripe black currants, they are delightfully soothing. They effectually remove the smell of smoke from the breath.

YOUR CHEMIST STOCKS THEM.

Packed in distinctive tin boxes containing:

2 oz. - 8d.
4 oz. - 1/3
8 oz. - 2/3
1 lb. - 4/3

Allenburys Glycerine & Black Currant PASTILLES

NORTHERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal:

ALBERT JOWETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS:
Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Trinity College, &c.

Many notable Successes,
amongst which was the celebrated Composer and Pianist,
WILLIAM BAINES,
who was entirely trained by Mr. JOWETT.

PIANOFORTE PLAYING AND INTERPRETATION.
SINGING, VOICE-PRODUCTION AND INTERPRETATION.
PERSONAL LESSONS IN LEEDS AND NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.
Including all Modern Work: Italian, French, German, Spanish, &c.
COMPLETE COURSE IN COMPOSITION.

A simple and completely successful system of SIGHT READING
with harmonic basis, and giving complete and thoroughly practical success to young or old.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, ACCOMPANIMENTS WRITTEN TO SONGS.

State Exam. or Subject.

HEATHFIELD, MOORLAND DRIVE, HARROGATE ROAD, LEEDS.

CRAMER

MAGNIFICENT 1928
LATEST MODELS

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| BABY GRAND | ... | 120 Gns. |
| UPRIGHT GRAND | | 65 Gns. |
| UPRIGHT PLAYER | | 103 Gns. |

FULL SCALE
LATEST DEVICES

Write for our very generous Hire-Purchase Terms.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., Ltd.,
139 NEW BOND ST., W.1.
46 MOORGATE, E.C.2.
128/130 KENSINGTON HIGH STREET, W.8.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The FOLLOWING CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS held at the COLLEGE and at certain centres in January:

FELLOWS (F.T.C.L.).—Stanley H. Firth, Hubert H. Norsworthy.

LICENTIATES IN MUSIC.—Richard Farrimond, Clifford J. Phillips.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Mary Boyd, Nora Ellen Brown, Gwendoline Maud Chidlaw, Irene Margery Cutts, Walter Dobson, Gertrude Mary Edwards, Lucia Rose Eperson, Mary Rosalind Evans, Charles Hanmer, Frances Givens Harper, Ena Jessop, Mildred Elizabeth Jones, Ellen Jukes, Olga Kantrovitch, Renée Monica May Mellor, Ella Florinda Moody, Florence Marjorie Moseley, Gladys Morris, Mary Theresa O'Toole, R. Norman Parker, Eva Gladys Pitman, Nellie Pratten, Honor Price, Ada Sandwith, Mabel Florence Searle, Constance Muriel Shaw, Monica Sibeon, Winifred Strathern, Doris Ruth Thompson, Marjorie Tunstall, Maude Olive Webb.

VIOLIN.—Narda Hvaler

SINGING.—Gwendoline M. Brotherton, Amy M. Evans.

ORGAN.—John W. Brooke, Arthur R. Osborne, William H. Punter, F.R.C.O.

ELOCUTION.—Annie Blackburne, Robert Ernest Brazendale, Gertrude E. Brown, Ruby Cecil Guest, Kathleen Hayward, Constance Mary Johnson, Josephine Plunkett, John Allsop Taylor.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A. Mus. T.C.L.).—Wilfred Andrews, Arthur Sebastian Bowers, Brigid Mary Clarke, Cyril Roderick Criddle, Gladys May Crookall, Albert R. Cross, Arthur Thornhill Dawson, (Mrs.) Violet Overton Fuller, Andrew Gibson, Marjorie Gordon Gregg, Doris Augusta Gwinnall, Doris Evelyn Hall, Harry Hirst, David Anthony Nettleship John, Elsie Lilian Jupp, Nora Christina Leggatt, Alice Charlotte Searle, William Sheldon, Frederick William Skelton.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Irene Maud Jane Anderson, Jane Wilson Anderson, Hannah Myfanwy Armon-Jones, Alice Ann Aspin, Clement John Barber, Gertrude Barnes, Joyce Margaret Bellamy, William Blackburn, Mary Blain, Freda Mary Bloye, Hilda Booth, Dorothy Mary Bridgwood, Ethel Bury, William Calvert, Ethel Capewell, Joy Cheventon, Francis Herbert Christmas, (Mrs.) Mary Coates, Mary Alice Ignatius Corless, Mary Dormer Cowell, Mary Mackrell Craig, Abraham John Faraday Crossley, Ida Darlington, Nesta Davies, Freda Clough Dickinson, Sidney Alan Dickinson, George Eager, Constance Bessie Eames, John James Edmonds, Hilda Mary Ellett, Doris Emsley, Wilfred Holland Forrester, Dorothy Mary Foster, Fanny Elizabeth Dulcie Frakes, Daisy Winifred French, Joyce Vera French, Ada Ann Gibbs, Alice Constance Gibson, William Lancelot Gibson, John Charles George Gilbert, Ethel Gillibrand, Freda Ginn, Margaret Ogilvie Gray, Richard Gregson, Walter Griffiths, Christine Elizabeth Grossart, Gladys Haywood, Beryl Queenie Hemming, Winifred Hesbrook, Frederick Hedley Hetherington, William Leonard Hewett, Olive Teresa Hodson, Herbert Holmes, Norah Crofton Honey, Mary Vaudine Hoole, Harold John Horobin, Arnold Horsfield, Doris A. R. James, Winston Gwynne John, Eleanor Jones, Walter Ifor Jones, Agnes Emily Keen, Stella Kehoe, Norah Keogh, Lilian Jessie Annie Lamb, Alice Henrietta Jessie Lampon, Annie Leach, Jeffrey Bernard Lovegrove, Dorothy Luffman, Noel McCormack, Florence Eva Macfarlane, George Ernest Gordon McWhan, Evelyn Marsden, Edith May Marshall-Sowry, Annetta Glenholmes Mawhinney, Dorothy Needham, Edith Newton, Winifred Ena Rose Newton, Alice Lilian Pendlebury, Dorothy Peters, Donald Pitcher, Marion Hamilton Prentice, Muriel Irene Read, Ida Alice Mary Ross, Mary Rowe, Bertha Sanderson, Margaret Inez Shearn, Ena Joyce Shipton, Edith Agnes Simonds, B.A., Jeanie Dick Smith, (Mrs.) Elizabeth Charlotte Spooner, Betty Storey, Bertha Taylor, Nellie Gertrude Thompson, Marion Townley, Frank Owen Wade, Clarice Wadsworth, Clara Warhurst, Edith Waring, Florence Emily Westwood, Edith Wilkinson, Elsie Wilson, Marie Sylvia Wood, Louisa Young, John Younger, Jun.

VIOLIN.—Winifred Victoria Baldwin, Dora Gilson, Abraham Hope, Alice Victoria Pidduck.

SINGING.—Janet Walker Galloway, Hilda Theresa Losa, Henrietta Beatrice Luhman.

(Continued on page 112.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC—(contd.)

ORGAN.—Robert Bates, Enid Phyllis Bennett, William Jolly, Leonard Kirkham, Lawrence Nuttall, Harry Southworth, John Robert Watkinson.

ELOCUTION.—Bertha Hudson, Ida Marjorie Jennings, Annie Peet, Isabella Smith Rutherford, Irene Sisling.

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY AND PRACTICE OF COMPOSITION.—James A. Clarke, Irene E. Gass.

PIANOFORTE.—Esmé Phyllis Baldwin (Hons.), Ethel Ellen Bowles, Vera Ruth Buret, Margery Bushell, Annie Cadwallender, Phyllis May Cooper, Alice Evelyn Copeman, Ada Denney, Esmé Douglas, Marjorie Phyllis Downing, Vera Louisa Jacob Dowrick, Mabel Lucilla Dymer, (Mrs.) Olive Hopkin Dymond, William Arnold Eastwood, Winifred Elliff, Dorothy Winifred Fishlock, Marjorie Gillings, Vivien Hawkins, Joy Hughes (Hons.), May Huke, Catherine Hunter Hutton, Ida Johnson, Vera Mabel Kenyon, Eveline Violet Kinsley, Olive Kathleen Kirk (Hons.), Esther Annie Lewis, Ellen Douglas Madden, Ena Gertrude Malin, Alfred Thomas Frederick Noyce, Albert Ernest Robins, Anita Rees (Hons.), Nellie Smith, Lenora Nanette Sparkes-Burchill, Margaret Louise Stocker, Gladys Edith Sturt, Winifred Jean Symington, Irene Taylor (Hons.), Margery Cleaver Walters.

VIOLIN.—Christopher Beech.

SINGING.—Alice L. V. Norton.

ORGAN.—William Baxter.

EXAMINERS.—Professor Granville Bantock, M.A., Mus. D., John E. Borland, Mus. D., Professor J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., James Brown, Mus. B., R. A. Chamberlain, M.A., Mus. B., Avalon Collard, Sir Frederic Cowen, Mus. D., Edric Cundell, Edward d'Evry, Paul Edmonds, Dawson Freer, Fred J. Gostelow, H. A. Harding, Mus. D., E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Thomas Keighley, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, C. Egerton Lowe, Albert Mallinson, G. O'Connor Morris, G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., Louis Pecskai, Arthur W. Pollitt, Mus. D., E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Alec Rowley, Wilfrid Sanderson, Mus. B., Sir R. R. Terry, Mus. D., Anderson Tyrer, Miss Maud Agnes Winter.

Next Diploma Examinations will take place at the College in London only, in April next. Last day of entry, March 10th.

March 10th.—Last day of entry for the next open competition for two Violoncello and other Scholarships to be held at the College.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Organists who like music of reasonable modernism

SHOULD GET

"CATHEDRAL WINDOWS"

SIX PIECES ON GREGORIAN TUNES

BY

KARG-ELERT.

PRICE COMPLETE FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

Here will be found all the characteristics which organists have learnt to expect from this composer—the rich harmonic idiom, the charming atmospheric effects, the tumultuous brilliance.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

SEVEN SACRED SOLOS

OF THE

EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

COMPOSED BY

DR. MAURICE GREEN (1696-1755).

Edited, with marks of expression and phrasing, and a Pianoforte Accompaniment, by

E. STANLEY ROPER, B.A., Mus. Bac. (Cantab.).

CONTENTS.

1. PRAISE THE LORD, O MY SOUL.
2. O PRAISE THE LORD.
3. O THAT MY WAYS.
4. THE SUN SHALL BE NO MORE THY LIGHT.
5. THE LORD'S NAME IS PRAISED.
6. BLESSED ARE THEY THAT DWELL IN THY HOUSE.
7. I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE.

High Voice or Low Voice. Price 1s. 6d. net.

FREE.—Full Catalogue of Organ and Choral Works will be sent on request.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

First Performance in London by the Royal Philharmonic Society, on February 23rd.

EGDON HEATH

(HOMAGE TO THOMAS HARDY)

FOR ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST

(OP. 47)

FULL SCORE

Price, Ten Shillings and Sixpence

String Parts, 3s. 4d. Wind Parts, 7s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FEBRUARY 1 1928

(For List of Contents see Page 175.)

THE DESTINIES OF MUSICAL ROMANTICISM

By Leonid Sabaneev

'Down with romanticism' is a slogan of to-day. The most prominent composers have declared war on it in their works. Surfeited with the charms of the impressionism of the preceding period, music has turned from refinement and tonal magic to their opposites, and has lost no time in going to the other extreme. Musical creation takes place nowadays under the badge of 'brutality,' of harsh harmonies, of refrainment from that expressiveness which from time immemorial has been regarded not merely as the fundamental attribute of music, but as the sole justification for its existence.

This is not a local phenomenon, peculiar to one school, to one nation, but is developed on a world-wide scale. Even Russia, comparatively isolated for the last few years, is suffering from the deviation to the cult of a musical inventive faculty devoid of feeling—a cult which is equally characteristic of Europe and America. It is evident that there exist in the contemporary musical world certain causes and reasons for this universal outlook on music. The leaders of modernity, even though hostile to each other in their fundamental views, display a touching unanimity in their militant attitude towards the idea of musical beauty and feeling which formerly prevailed, and on which they have bestowed once for all the insulting epithet of 'sentimentality,' whilst the very existence of musical beauty has become for the majority of contemporary composers a matter of doubt.

Stravinsky, Schönberg, Hindemith, Casella, Milhaud, Varese—all in different countries—reflect to an equal degree this change in the universal musical sentiment, which is the more noteworthy in that it is confined almost exclusively to professional circles. Observation shows that the general public, the bulk of the people who listen to music, remains faithful to the old musical covenants, and that its interest in the group of innovators who have broken with the musical æsthetics of the past is mainly due to the unusualness, the sensation, and even the scandal of what is taking place; the public is not so much concerned with the æsthetic aspect. . . . The rupture between the musical sentiment of the professional composer and the public, perceptible, of course, in the impressionist era, is now becoming tragic; these two groups are already talking and thinking in different languages. As hitherto, the public demands that music shall have feeling, which is hated and scorned by the new æsthetics; as hitherto, the musical public is of a romantic temperament; as hitherto, it has preserved, though in an enfeebled form, the ideals of the old musical 'beauty.'

It is interesting to investigate the nature of this vast and strange phenomenon which is being developed before our eyes, and to penetrate the psychology of these new 'professionals' who are guilty of shattering the old æsthetics and of turning the musical art into the art of a tonal kaleidoscope. This art is purely formal, ornamental, without content or psychology, without the poetry with which music has always been in close contact.

There is no doubt that the decisive and violent aversion from this 'content' was due to the ordinary—in its essence purely 'rhythmical'—feeling of satiety caused by the excessive development of the element of 'content' in the music of the preceding period (the later romanticism of Wagner, the impressionism of the Russian and French schools). Musical history and the variability of styles are always construed on the basis of the principle of contrast. The style of every era is to a certain extent the antithesis of that of its predecessor, of the 'musical yesterday,' and for 'to-day' there is nothing more odious than 'yesterday.' This musical 'yesterday' was founded on the ascendency of tonal magic, on ample sufficiency of content, on the supremacy of literature in music, of thought and feeling in the musical tissue; in the tonal realm it was based on the cult of refinement, of complexity which reflected the complexity of its experiences, on the predominance of the harmonic element over the rhythmic.

The musical 'to-day' is the exact negative of that 'yesterday.' The professional is satiated more than the listener with the superfluity of the psychological and literary element in the previous period; he understands that the new is constructed on the principle of contrast with the old. Hence the gravitation to barbaric simplicity, to 'ugly' chords, to crude rhythms, to harsh harmonies: hence also the aspiration to banish psychology and the literary quality from music, and to reduce the musical art to the pure play of self-sufficient tonal forms, devoid of thought, essentially anti-poetic, purely constructive. In this constructive quality they recall the time when, in the process of similar theoretical seekings, the elements of the strict style were hammered out—the time of the Netherland masters, who created an art nearer perhaps to mathematics or the chess-board than to music in its poetic aspect.

But besides the ordinary historical causes, which operate on musical style in accordance with the principle of contrast, we observe other influences at work at the present day. We are spectators of the destruction of musical tradition and the death of musical mastery in the widest meaning of the term. This destruction of mastery and tradition began with the impressionist era, with the innovator's unrestrained passion for 'novelty.' It became unusually easy to work in a musical realm in which 'everything was permitted.' Nowadays in order to become a composer it is not necessary to possess the talents and qualifications which were formerly indispensable; even a tolerable ear is no longer essential. In our modern atmosphere of business and rush, when 'time is money,' such a simplification of 'mastery' and its problem proved, of course, to be exceedingly opportune. Most of the contemporary composers who are publishing and performing their works should, according to the old ideas, be still attending the most elementary course of the musical A B C. But when this is 'abolished,' when 'everything is permitted,' the period of tuition and probation is unusually curtailed, and the composer becomes a 'master' almost as soon as he takes the pen in his hand for the first time. In former days he was essentially a most highly qualified musician. Now it is not so: this sphere is infected with amateurism, so widespread in the favourable conditions of contemporary musical life, which does not fathom the essential nature of the now predominant phenomenon. The composer has ceased to value his work as such; he prizes only the musical fame and career resulting from it. I have personally observed composers who cannot discuss and do not know what they have written, do not 'hear' their own music; to them the writing of music is not an event in their tonal world—which perhaps does not exist—but a purely external fact of their musical cacoëthes scribendi. The appearance of a new breed of musical critics, composed of men entirely lacking in musicality and a musical probation, has made the position still worse. Music deprived of the sustaining elements of a musical ear and tradition rapidly degenerates into another sort of art, or into a mere 'phenomenon,' having nothing in common with that which we used to call music. This new 'art'—for which a new name should certainly be invented, in order not to profane music—is incomprehensible to the generality of people; they listen to it with curiosity but without pleasure or enthusiasm, and as a rule it does not even set up that psychological condition which distinguishes the reception of any art from the reception of a street scandal.

This soil produces abundantly the blooms of charlatanism and unscrupulousness, which sometimes take the form of a hoax. Contemporary composers aspire first of all to invent some trick, in order to astonish and to make themselves singular; their work is often prefaced by a 'theory' in justification of it, put together more or less amateurishly, and without a knowledge of the subject. I will not mention the names of the actors in this great musical profanation which may have a tragic influence on the destinies of the musical culture of the world; I will only say that a tragical and fatal thread of mutual interests (not musical, but practical) has entangled composer, performer, critic, and publisher, and has turned the musical field into something like a 'bourse' in which speculation with inflated values takes place. Until the inflation of their musical shares is made known, a majority of the men will manage to make their careers out of them, and satisfy their modest requirements of art, and their excessive demands on life, in view of the apathetic indifference of the public, who cannot understand the phenomenon all at once, and in general are not very interested in it.

Such are the causes—characteristic of the present day, and without precedent in the past history of music—which impress their special stamp on our times and explain much. Music has become a convenient field for the creation of inflated values of such a kind, and the professional musician is like the weaver in Andersen's famous tale, who assures every one that the king is robed, whereas he is naked. And a fatal fear restrains the few remaining musicians and the public from declaring the fact of this nakedness; a fear of seeming to be behind the times, to be dull of comprehension, since everything modern is presented in an aureole of new attainments, with prolix and boastful prefaces, and the public, quite unable to detect their unsoundness, accepts them as gospel. The pursuit of sensation peculiar to the present day completes the picture, and music is no longer received on the artistic plane, but on the plane of 'events.' The more brilliant, scandalous, and staggering the event, the more prominent it is. The fundamental musical distinctions disappear—the difference between consonance and dissonance, the differences of intervals and chords in general—harmony does not travel by the path of refinement of reception, as it did until (and including) the time of Debussy; it follows a line which leads to its coarsening and simplification. Harmonies become admissible, not because the ear learns to recognise more intricate combinations, but because it does not distinguish even the simplest, and they all become equally acceptable. In music the predominance of rhythm is setting in, the crudest and least specifically musical element—for rhythm can, of course, exist apart from sounds. Simultaneously there begins the now fashionable campaign against expressiveness, romanticism, and content. This is natural and intelligible: the new composer who—by reason of the inanity of his psychology and his lack of a fundamental feeling for music—has nothing to say, grasps at the theory of 'anti-romanticism' as something extremely advantageous to him. Snobbishness seizes the musical heights, and the absence of musical mastery proudly drapes itself in the toga of a certain 'new mastery'—but one needs to be a musician in order to establish the fact that this is the old story of the naked king again: that there is no mastery, but only discussions about it by persons interested in the legend.

Under these conditions musical creation in the most complex forms is made very easy and accessible to anyone. To write at random but with an air of profound thought is the recipe for this new creative work, whose starting-points are manifestly dictated by principles entirely different from those of the old music. There exist, of course, ways and means of verifying and exposing these new methods, but they are cumbersome and not always practicable. Nevertheless I cannot refrain from informing my readers that I have been able to arrange a series of experiments which establish as indisputable facts that very often the musical tissue is vague and even unknown to the composer himself; that musical criticism does not judge from the impression made by the music, but from the title and the ideas resulting from it; that the alteration and the intentional mutilation of a work are not recognised by its composer; that the substitution of one composition by another is not recognised by the critic; and so on and so forth. These experiments should be carried out on a wider scale, in the name of the restoration of musical culture and the exposure of the false gods of the new Olympus.

It is evident that the fundamental tendency and fundamental signification of the musical art nevertheless remain unshaken. Only the sources have been lost, and the hierarchy and organization of the general musical opinion which formerly existed have disappeared. The position now is that there is no court of arbitration, no authority which would be of real and absolute value—this on account of the overthrow of tradition on the professional heights. Thanks to the influx of amateurism into the musical creators' camp the appreciation of taste has been distorted. At the present time, strange though it seem, the general public proves to be more competent in its estimation of the value of a musical phenomenon than the professional critics and composers. The latter, moreover, rarely share nowadays in the appreciation of the compositions of others, and there is a general feeling that each enjoys his own work only and hates all the rest, and possibly in the depth of his heart he is not pleased with his own things. The public still preserves the directness of its feelings, and we see here that, so far as we have to do with the 'musical public,' appreciation invariably approximates to the old norms. Nevertheless the situation continues to be eminently tragic and alarming. It will remain so as long as the fundamental insincerity of the attitude to musical reception exists—the insincerity from which emanates the war on romanticism, an age-long element of music; on the equally immemorial expressiveness in music; and on the idea of musical beauty, which undoubtedly exists, though in a fluid state. In place of direct musical contemplation there now exists an intricate and rational complex of snobbishness, mutual relations, and a striving not to seem out of date and ridiculous, and this completely paralyses the normal attitude to music and its appreciation. I have made systematic inquiries of musicians and non-musicians, and find that the negative attitude to contemporary creative work is almost general. It is interesting to note that inquiries of a similar kind (under conditions of anonymity) show that amongst persons who usually profess to be worshippers of modernism there is no sincerity.

On the other hand there is no doubt that the tempo and rhythm of contemporary life seriously paralyse the romantic pre-requisites of creative work in the sphere of music, as they do not contribute to the establishment of prolonged and profound psychological conditions. There is a noticeable acceleration of the psychological tempo, and a diminution of the psychological form, and these are echoed in creative work. Some of our more gifted contemporary composers are brilliant illustrations of this: they are more at ease in an atmosphere of formal structures than in one saturated with psychology or, still more, with actuality. Men in the mass have lost the faculty of profound meditation on phenomena; the musician generally has ceased to be a philosopher, and is even proud of the fact, which he regards as an attainment. This makes us think seriously of the destiny of that great musical art, which in our eyes is alone precious. The forms are perhaps becoming monumental, but the creative impulse grows steadily less. But for this diminution we might hope that the modern formally cold and speculative tendency would soon be swept away by a new wave, calling for a fresh contrast, and hence for the revival of psychologism and romanticism. But on the other hand we see that music is essentially entangled with the material plane, with mercantile ties; that the very level of the average musician's psychology has altered and become materialised; that the type of the reflective musician, such as Wagner and Beethoven, is now very rare in its sincere form (we come across it in the order of snobbishness and pose)—and this compels us to think that the restoration of a genuine romanticism (not as a formal contrast to its predecessor, but as the echo in music of a really romantic state of the mind) will be long delayed, since the whole structure of modern civilisation, hurried and quantitative, contradicts and opposes it. Some change in the very profile of our civilisation must take place if the inevitable twilight and night of music are to be deferred.

Translated by S. W. Pring.

THE NATURE OF HARMONY

By Matthew Shirlaw

(Continued from January number, p. 19)

An old, and a good old name for the major triad is the 'harmonic triad.' The terms of the major triad, as $\underset{c\text{-}e\text{-}g}{4:5:6}$, or better, $\underset{c\text{-}e\text{-}g}{\frac{1}{4}:\frac{1}{5}:\frac{1}{6}}$ are in harmonic progression. The middle term $\frac{1}{5}$ is the harmonic mean of the first and third terms $\frac{1}{4}$, $\frac{1}{6}$. Has this harmonic mean any real harmonic significance, in a musical sense? It is remarkable that Hauptmann claimed for this middle term (e) that it represents the union of the sounds of the fifth, c-g. Seeing that Hauptmann discarded acoustical phenomena as the basis of his harmonic system, and preferred for it a metaphysical basis, it is still more remarkable that the actual union of the sounds of the fifth, c-e-g, should, unknown to Hauptmann, result in the summation tone e. The manner in which these summation tones arise is not, it is true, yet fully understood, and it would be unwise to deduce the nature of the major third from this single phenomenon. Happily it is unnecessary, for there are other means of demonstrating the relationship between third and fifth. At the same time, the fact cannot be overlooked that we may unite these sounds in another fashion, yet with a similar result. If on the monochord we determine the interval of the fifth thus: $\frac{2}{5}$ $\frac{3}{5}$ the union of the sections of the string $\frac{2}{5}$ and $\frac{3}{5}$ will be represented by the entire string, $\frac{5}{5}$, giving rise to the following relationships, $\frac{2}{5}:\frac{3}{5}:\frac{5}{5}$, which in musical notation may be expressed thus:

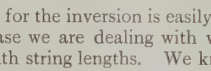
Ex. 5.

The result is the same as in the case of the summation tone, but in the opposite direction, inverted. Thus from the union of the two sounds of the fifth, a harmony arises in two directions—one upwards, the other downwards; one major, the other minor:

Ex. 6.

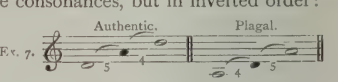


The reason for the inversion is easily understood. In the first case we are dealing with vibrations, in the second with string lengths. We know that the rate of vibration of a string is inversely proportional to its length. In both cases the result is a summation tone. Whatever differences of opinion may exist with regard to the higher summation tone, there can be none with regard to the lower, at least if we admit that the sum of 2 and 3 is 5. The views of Helmholtz in respect of the higher summation tone may be said to be confirmed by the existence of the lower. The apparent contradiction in the fact that the union of the sounds of the fifth a-e may be represented now by $c\sharp$ and now by $c\sharp'$, is only apparent, not real. It still remains true that the union of the sounds of the fifth is represented by the major third or tenth. Only, this major third, like the fifth itself, has two aspects—one ascending, the other descending. We may measure it either upwards or downwards.

These considerations, however, although they have a direct bearing on the question at issue, and further confirm the view that the minor harmony is just the major reversed, do not yet reveal to us the innermost nature of the minor harmony, nor the easy and natural way in which it arises out of the major. We must gird up our loins and journey still further into the unknown.

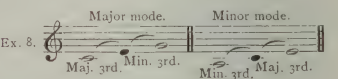
Although it would appear that every means has already been used, every path already explored in order to attain to the solution of this problem, there is at least one avenue of approach that has never been used, apparently not even noticed, viz., the close analogy that undoubtedly exists between our major and minor modes and the old modes of a former epoch. The ancient Authentic mode arose from the harmonic division of the octave, and from the consonances of the fifth and fourth. Its corresponding Plagal mode arose from the arithmetic division of the octave, and from the same consonances, but in inverted order:

Ex. 7.



In similar fashion, our major mode arises from the harmonic division of the fifth, and from the consonances major third, minor third. Its relative minor arises from the arithmetic division of the fifth, and from the same consonances in inverted order:

Ex. 8.



The old Authentic and Plagal modes were the major and minor modes of a former epoch, the Authentic corresponding to our major and the Plagal to our minor. If we can discover how the Plagal mode arose, we shall very probably discover how the minor harmony arises—for the arithmetic division of the fifth, we may imagine, will be brought about much in the same way as the arithmetic division of the octave.

The fifth, in dividing the octave harmonically, gives rise at the same time to the interval of the fourth. So the fact must be stated. It would be obviously incorrect to say that the fourth divides the octave harmonically, and gives rise to the interval of the fifth. In the harmonic division of the octave, therefore, the fourth appears as the octave complement of the fifth:

Ex. 9.

It is thus the fourth is understood, for although the eye may perceive the three intervals of the octave, fifth, and fourth, the ear distinguishes directly only the octave and fifth. And indeed, reckoned from the bass, upwards, only the octave and fifth are present. It is a different matter when the lower note of the fourth appears in the bass. What particular importance attaches to the bass? Because the bass, if not the fundamental note, at least occupies the place of the fundamental note. How then does it come about that in the fourth, g-c, which is everywhere understood as the inversion of the fifth, c-g, the lower note of the fourth finds itself below c, instead of its rightful place above c. Rameau, in his famous theory of the inversion of chords, whereby he so enormously simplified the theory and practice of harmony, does not explain this to us. In dealing with inversion, Rameau's methods of procedure are to a large extent empirical. He says in effect: 'If in the major harmony c-e-g we place c an octave higher, we obtain the first inversion of the harmony, i.e., a chord of the sixth, e-g-c.' Rameau does not tell us what natural principle permits him to place the lowest note of this, or any other chord, an octave higher. It may thus be objected that although Rameau inverts chords, Nature does not, and Rameau's writings may be searched in vain for an answer to this objection. The answer is that in the fifth, c-g, this g may be not only fifth of c but may itself assume the rôle of fundamental. A glance at the harmonic series will make this plain:

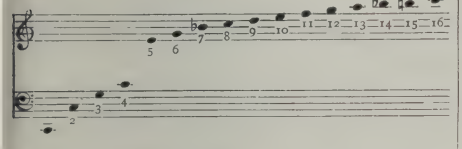
Ex. 10.



It is evident that each sound of this series may be understood in two ways, either as forming part of the resonance of the fundamental, or as itself a fundamental and giving rise to its own series of harmonics. Thus with 1 begins the order 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c.; with 2, the order 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, &c.; with 3, the order 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, and so on, such secondary orders being exactly similar to the primary order, and their terms reducible to the terms of the primary, for the proportions 3, 6, 9, 12, 15 = 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. In a musical sense this means that in the order 3, 6, 9, 12, 15 the first term 3 may be understood as the twelfth of 1, and as forming part of the resonance of 1. But the order 3, 6, 9, 12, 15 may also assume the form 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, whereby the term 3 now assumes the rôle of 1, and becomes itself a fundamental, or, as we might say, a Tonic. This is one of the most familiar facts in musical experience and practice. In the simple circumstance that a musical sound may be understood not only as forming part of the resonance of its fundamental, but as itself a fundamental, we discover the source of a whole series of harmonic phenomena, indeed of some of the most subtle and beautiful effects in music and harmony. It is this that makes modulation to other keys possible, in such a way that any note of a chord, or of a scale, may change its function and assume the position of fundamental, or new relationship to a new fundamental, of a new key. It is this that makes inversion possible, thus bringing about the strange fact that the inversion of harmony is the necessary consequence of its being generated upwards. And it is this that brought about the old order of Authentic and Plagal modes—for in the Authentic order the note a may assume the position of fundamental, and may develop itself as a fundamental up to the point at least of giving rise to its octave, thus bringing about the Plagal order which is the inversion of the Authentic:

Ex. 11.

Ex. 12.

We have already discovered that the fifth may be understood in either an ascending or descending direction, according to the position this fifth occupies within the octave:

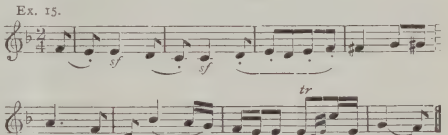
Ex. 13.

The octave is necessary; if not actually present, it will nevertheless make its influence felt. Similarly with the fourth. It also has two aspects according to the position it occupies within the octave, and may form part of either an Authentic (ascending) or Plagal (descending) order:

Ex. 14.

It is difficult for us, however, trained as our ears have been to appreciate the lower note of the fifth as the real fundamental note, to realise fully the downward, dependent effect of the descending order. For example, such a melody as this:

Ex. 15.

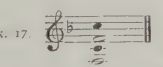


appears to be based on the descending order:

Ex. 16.

Of course it is not: it arises from the scale of F major, derived from the harmonic division of the octave:

Ex. 17.



and so we understand it. The descending order is better realised in the following old tune, beginning (and ending) thus:

Ex. 18.

evidently based on the order:

Ex. 19.

but most easily, perhaps, in our own major scale in its arithmetic division Tonic-Subdominant-Tonic:

Key C major.

Ex. 20.

and in the Plagal cadence derived from it.

The order *g-c-g*¹ may, then, occur in such a way that *g*¹ is understood as fifth of c, and the whole is thrown back into the Authentic order *c-g-c*¹ (*g*¹), where c is firmly established as fundamental. But again the order *g-c-g*¹ may have a real Plagal dependent form—here g, although not in reality the fundamental, at least fulfils the rôle of the fundamental up to a certain point, in giving rise to its octave, *g*¹, this *g*¹ being directly appreciated as an octave sound, rather than as fifth of c.

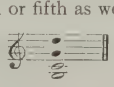
Both formations occur in the harmonic series:

Ex. 21.

for in the order $\overset{3\ 4\ 6}{g\text{-}c\text{-}g}$, this g may be regarded either as twelfth (fifth) of $\overset{2}{c}$, whereby $\overset{3\ 4\ 6}{g\text{-}c\text{-}g}$ is thrown back into the Authentic order $\overset{2\ 3\ 4\ 6}{c\text{-}g\text{-}c}$ ($\overset{6}{g}$); or g may be regarded as octave of $\overset{3}{g}$ and not directly as fifth of $\overset{2}{c}$. The difference is similar to the difference between $\frac{3}{4}$ and $\frac{6}{8}$ times, a grouping in twos and grouping in threes:

To sum up in a few words: the consonances of the fourth and fifth may each appear in two different aspects or orders, affecting the ear in two different ways. This difference of effect depends on the position these consonances occupy within the octave—as $\overset{5\ 4}{\frown}$ $\overset{4\ 5}{\frown}$ *c-g-c*¹ or *g-c-g*¹. The first order does not arise naturally, and the second artificially; the second is as natural as the first. The first arises from the harmony of the fifth; the second from the harmony of the fifth also, but through its inversion, the fourth. The fourth, however, is the necessary consequence of the fifth, and arises quite as naturally, for the fifth, in dividing the octave harmonically, brings about at one and the same time the interval of the fourth. In the fifth the lower note is the fundamental; in the fourth the lower note may assume the rôle of fundamental up to the point of giving rise to its octave, without thereby destroying the consonance of the fourth. Were the lower note of the fourth to establish itself more firmly as a fundamental, and generate its twelfth or fifth as well as its octave:

Ex. 22.



the fourth would lose its consonant character and become dissonant. This is the explanation of the old strife as to whether the fourth is a consonance or a dissonance. It was a good consonance in Hucbald's time, but had become also a dissonance considerably earlier than the 16th century, the reason being the gradual appreciation on the part of musicians of the significance of the fundamental. No musical reader will have difficulty in understanding what has just been said, and as for the non-musical reader, it matters little whether he understands it or not, so long as he grasps the following simple fact—one that is, for the question in hand, of paramount importance.

It is this: that in the order *g-c-g*¹, or other similar order, the highest sound may arise as the octave of the lowest, thereby bringing about a fifth of which c is not directly the fundamental. It is the reverse of the Authentic order c-g-c. Here the fourth is brought about by the fifth. In the order *g-c-g*¹, it is the fifth that, strangely enough, appears to be brought about by the fourth. As in c-g-c we cannot regard g as fundamental of the fourth g-c, so in *g-c-g*¹, if we hear, as we frequently do, *g*¹ as octave of g, then the fifth *c-g*¹ arises indirectly through the octave sound *g*¹, and it is thus we hear it.

It is a remarkable order floating, as it were, in the air, without foundation or real fundamental note.

(To be continued.)

THE MUSIC OF THE HALLS

By F. Bonavia

I am perfectly aware that music is not an indispensable part of a music-hall entertainment. A cinema without some sort of more or less descriptive musical accompaniment is unthinkable. But one can imagine an excellent music-hall performance from which all form of music is banished. Nevertheless, a visit to the music-hall from time to time is apt to broaden the horizon of the musician, especially if he happens to be interested in humanity as well as in artistic matters. If you believe that the proper study of mankind is man, there is no better place for an inquiry into men's virtues and foibles. The stout heart of man, for instance, never shows to greater advantage than when we consider the humble heroes of the music-hall orchestra. It is the custom of managers, founded on the belief that we cannot have too much of a good thing, to give their patrons ample measure, and give it often. Thus it frequently happens that no less than three performances are given daily. This is no hardship for the actor, whose turn, lasting about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, amounts to an hour's work per diem. It is another thing for the orchestra which, like the poor, is always with us, accompanying the comedian as well as the acrobat, the juggler, and the dancer.

Some weeks ago a mean little tune—called, I believe, 'Ruddy Bottom'—caught my attention on account of a clarinet passage which sounded so much like squeaking rats that many people looked anxiously about their feet. It was built on a very simple plan. First came the subject, played twice; then a slight variant in the relative minor; then da capo. The orchestra played it six times—with repeats, twelve. The same piece was served up later as accompaniment to a gymnastic display, and again, later on, to a company of dancers. By the end of the afternoon I reckoned that it must have been played thirty-six times; by the end of the day a hundred and eight times. By the end of the week that wretched, misshapen tune must have had six hundred and forty-six opportunities of thoroughly depressing every member of that orchestra. This may have been an exception, but when a tune is assumed to be popular, there is no curbing the generosity of the music-hall director. He will serve it again and again as sauce for the oddest 'turns.' How else could the fortunate composer of 'What'll I do' have amassed his wealth?

The modern music-hall tunes have one great and common merit. They leave nothing behind; they make no impression. For all the recent progress of publicity and of the enterprise of some Sunday publications, not one modern song has had the vogue of 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' or of 'After the ball is over.' Modern tunes come (chiefly from America) uninvited; they go (possibly back to America) unlamented. Music-hall patrons, large-hearted and unsophisticated, applaud everything and everybody, but remember only that which possesses real merit. They do not store up debased coin.

It is too often assumed that music-halls are responsible for the present vogue of syncopation. That jazz and syncopated music are encouraged in all music-halls cannot be denied. But who can say whether the audience laughs with or at the antics of the 'syncopated artiste'? At any rate the music-hall has put syncopation in its proper place by applauding most vigorously those exhibitions in which nothing is added to rhythm pure and simple. When a dancer wants a good climax he stops the orchestra and marks a rhythm of some complexity with his feet. This always brings the house down, which I take to mean that the audience feels relieved and thankful that all attempt at pretending that bare rhythm is music has been given up. A music-hall audience invariably applauds a good pianissimo or a good fortissimo. Stern intellectuals may see in this a confession of weakness and a want of discrimination. There are good pianissimos and bad pianissimos; good fortissimos and bad fortissimos. But in encouraging them all, the patron of the hall shows himself to be a man who can detect good intentions as well as good deeds, a man with insight into the working of other people's minds, and he also means, perhaps, to register thus his protest against colourless performances elsewhere. Of course, a music-hall audience is not infallible. Even in the halls sometimes merit goes unrewarded and atrocities escape punishment. But on the whole it may be said without fear of contradiction, that no other public is so thankful for small mercies or so loth to use the rod. No other public would stand for a moment the deadly monotony of endless repetitions on the inappropriately called 'variety' stage; no other public would have its keen appetite for music spoiled by tasteless, indigestible stuff without protest.

'A little while ago I saw a turn performed by two sisters which consisted mainly of the usual ingredients—a song with words so inane that they could not even raise a smile of pity, and a dance of the usual kind. With this they had fair success. But towards the end they dropped all pretence at giving the public what it is supposed to want. They came close to the footlights, and stood there side by side singing softly, sweetly, as if for their own pleasure, melodies which had the essentials of music in them. When they finished the house rose to a man and cheered them to the echo. That 'turn' found no imitators, just as there are no rivals to Ernest Butcher and Muriel George; for music—real music—is not encouraged by the directors. There is a great deal of musical talent amongst music-hall performers which is not allowed to appear. It matters little in the case of men like Grock or Noni, for their clowning is so good that any other attribute may be kept in the background without loss to their power of attracting and delighting us. But there are hundreds in the rank and file of the profession who may possibly gain some distinction, if instead of giving the public the sort of music they believe the people want, they were to give the best that is in them.

---

ON FAULTY SENSATIONS OF MUSICAL PITCH, WITH NOTES OF A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

By Edwin Smith

(M.D. Lond.; Coroner for N.E. London)

In the November Musical Times a correspondent made inquiry concerning a curious and troublesome condition of his hearing characterised by faulty perceptions of musical pitch. The hope may be expressed that the disturbance has proved transient in character, and that a normal state has been duly restored. Having had a personal experience of a similar kind, and believing these cases to have an interest for readers of a musical journal, I am enabled by the courtesy of the Editor to describe my sensations and to comment on this peculiar aberration of hearing.

Towards the end of May, 1927, the symptoms of an ordinary cold of some ten days' duration were followed by an extension of catarrh from the throat to the right ear, with the familiar sensations of fullness and partial deafness that result from obstruction of the Eustachian tube connecting throat and ear. The left ear remained apparently unaffected. A few days later—on June 5, to be exact—I noticed that the wireless transmission of an orchestral item, to which I was listening through the medium of a loud speaker of the disc-shaped variety, sounded extremely discordant. It seemed as if the majority of the orchestra, strings and wind alike, were playing abominably out of tune. The sensation was extremely unpleasant and at the same time very puzzling. It was also surprising to find that my condemnation of the performance did not seem to be shared by a member of my family, present at the time, who happens to have a particularly sensitive ear. I ought to have appreciated at this point what had happened; but it is difficult to reject the direct evidence of one's senses, and it seemed to me that somehow or other the musical fare provided for listeners that day was very seriously at fault. A larger faith in the capacity of the performers and the quality of their instruments might have enlightened me at once, but it was not until the next morning that a further experience led me to suspect that my hearing was to blame. I noticed that a chiming clock gave out an unpleasant jangle when striking, and found that the cause of this became apparent when the ears were closed alternately while listening, for it was then obvious that my ears were not in agreement as to the pitch of sounds reaching them. This took me to the pianoforte for an investigation, when I found there was a discrepancy amounting to a full semitone in respect of the higher notes of the keyboard. In the neighbourhood of middle C the difference was a little less than a semitone, and it gradually lessened in amount on further descending the scale. At the level of the violin E the difference appeared to be just a semitone; for example, when I struck $e''$ and listened with the right ear alone I received the same impression of pitch as when I listened to the adjacent F with the left ear. From my general sensations of aural discomfort it was evident that the right ear must be the one at fault; and it was easy to satisfy a bystander that this was so, for on singing various notes of the pianoforte as heard with that ear, one's vocal efforts were pronounced to be a semitone too high in pitch. Clearly the right ear was registering sensations of pitch at too high a level to the extent of about a semitone.

Had there been a necessity for hearing music at this stage the right ear could have been plugged with advantage. As it was, the partial deafness on that side gave welcome relief when listening to distant musical sounds, the faulty version from the right ear being then largely submerged in the louder message conveyed by the other side. At close quarters the sensation produced by two simultaneous performances of a Chopin Scherzo in keys a semitone apart may be imagined in some degree, but the performance must be heard for a full appreciation.

It was on the following day (June 7) that a further discovery provided a fresh interest. As I faced the loud speaker at a distance of some eighteen feet, the sound seemed to come from a position below and to the left (i.e., my left) of its actual place of origin. Using the right ear alone it was impossible to locate this new position within definite limits; but when listening with both ears, the spot seemed curiously well defined, and it was a simple matter to place a paper circle some eight or nine inches in diameter in a position where it covered the whole area of the apparent source of sound. With a paper circle so placed, measurement showed its centre to be about four feet to the left (my left) and downwards from the centre of the loud speaker (which is fifteen inches in diameter), this position being the resultant of a displacement of three and a half feet horizontally, and two feet vertically, corresponding with horizontal and vertical angular displacements of about twelve degrees and six degrees respectively. When using the left ear alone, no abnormal sense of direction was apparent. The displacement noted was that observed at the distance mentioned (eighteen feet); on approaching the loud speaker, the places of real and apparent sources of sound were found, as would obviously be expected, to approach, until at close quarters they became indistinguishable.

By June 12, the discrepancy in pitch at the level of the middle notes had become slightly smaller, being definitely less than a semitone, and with lower notes the divergence was still less noticeable. On the other hand I found that in the region of the highest two octaves of the keyboard, the departure from the normal had increased considerably, amounting in the highest octave to a full tone; so that the simple experiment of asking a bystander to strike, say, the note $d'''$ half a dozen times in succession, while I listened with left and right ears alternately, produced the pitch-sensations of D, E, D, E, D, E. This difference of a whole tone seems to have marked the maximum degree of disturbance experienced, and after persisting at this level for a further few days the discrepancy gradually subsided, the higher notes being the last to recover completely. By June 25 a normal state of hearing seemed to have been practically restored, though not entirely; for on this date a test with an ordinary A tuning-fork gave a perception not of raised but of slightly lowered pitch with the offending ear. The difference on the two sides was very slight; I guessed it to be in the neighbourhood of an eighth of a semitone. After a further day or two this remnant of the disturbance had disappeared. One can perhaps imagine that a faulty ear having become tired, as it were, through registering too highly, may go a little way in the opposite direction before final recovery. Together with the return to a normal appreciation of pitch there was a corresponding subsidence of the accompanying symptoms, including a lessening and final disappearance of the space-interval between the actual and apparent positions from which sounds were heard to come.

Having given this brief personal record, there remains a further duty to the reader. I may reasonably be expected to supplement the simple narration of observed facts by a contribution towards their explanation. Unfortunately there is little to offer in solution of the problems arising. In medical and scientific literature there seem to be surprisingly few references to the condition described, and these are scanty and show little unanimity or certainty of opinion. There is apparently some sort of agreement that affections of this class depend on changes in the labyrinth of the inner ear rather than on altered states of the drum; and it is not difficult to attribute the symptoms observed to some condition of catarrh or altered tension affecting the delicate and complex structures involved, without venturing upon theories as to the exact nature of the processes at work. This is as far as most authorities seem to have gone. At all events a somewhat detailed search has proved singularly unproductive. I should like, however, to take the precaution to apologise in advance to the author of the elaborate monograph upon the subject that possibly exists somewhere, though so far escaped from notice. The most definite reference observed occurs in an American text-book* in which the authors describe the maximum distortion of pitch likely to occur as amounting to 'one or two degrees.' It is not stated whether by a 'degree' of sound we are to understand a semitone or some other interval; possibly the expression may be used in America to indicate a definite fraction of the octave, but on this point I am uninformed. A condition of the auditory nerve or nerve endings (i.e., a disturbance in the inner ear or in the nerve leading thence to the brain) is given as the cause of the more marked degrees of the condition. Slight faults may be due, it is stated, to altered tension of the sound-conducting apparatus (i.e., the drum and adjacent small bones of the middle ear). The same work contains a brief reference to the occurrence of alteration in the apparent direction of sounds, these seeming to come from the side opposite to that of the affected ear. No suggestion, however, is offered in explanation of this curious symptom.

In the absence of desired enlightenment we must be content to 'look the difficulty in the face and pass on,' after merely referring to one point of interest that shows, incidentally, the ease with which erroneous conclusions may be formed in a complex field of inquiry. If we consider the structure within the ear known as the organ of Corti, with its multitude of graduated rods, an analogy with the keyboard of a musical instrument seems almost irresistible, and it has often been assumed quite naturally that there must be a correspondence between a particular rod and a sound of a certain pitch. But the biologist tells us that these rods are entirely absent in birds, whose appreciation of pitch is presumably not inferior to that of other animals. We know, it is true, something of the physical mechanism of the ear, but we know little as to the physiology and pathology of that organ, beyond that in these fields of inquiry there are many obscure problems awaiting solution.

* 'Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat,' by Ballenger and Wippern.

But it may not be unprofitable to ask if the matters before us have any practical bearing on purely musical questions. Can we, for example, trust the ear all the time to furnish sensations of pitch corresponding accurately with the vibration rates of notes reaching it? Clearly we cannot. And if the sense of pitch may suffer, the appreciation of tone-quality may also come under suspicion. What, then, as to the position of the musical critic? When, let us say, he charges a violinist with faults of intonation and tone-quality, can we be sure that the critic himself is not suffering from some catarrhal or other abnormal state of his auditory apparatus? He feels, perhaps, in good health; there is nothing seemingly to suggest that his sensations may be untrustworthy. But it is easy to imagine a disturbance arising primarily in the inner ear and unaccompanied by any relatively gross condition such as the deafness often associated with an ordinary cold. Aurists describe conditions of the inner ear characterised by little beyond an altered sensitiveness to sounds, a state that may be found in association with good general health. Again, if one ear may be affected, why not both? And what is there by which a normal standard of sensation can be fixed and, when fixed, recognised as present or absent in any specified individual? Is not the 'normal' just the average level of sensation as affecting mankind in general, a standard incapable of direct observation or measurement?

(To be continued.)

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

The beginning of the year saw the customary conferences and debates on the condition of music in this country, and, as usual, more or less gloomy prognostications were the rule. An article by Sir Henry Wood, in the Evening News of January 4, provided food for thought.

Sir Henry is, with good grounds, enthusiastic concerning the high standard reached in choral, orchestral, and operatic performances by the students of our chief training schools. He points out that for twenty years music has been given its chance in schools of all types, and that the general public has also had ample and generally well-directed help in increasing its knowledge of good music. The result of all this ought to be crowded concert halls, and a far more flourishing state of things than is the case. 'What [he asks] is the defective element in our musical life, since it is neither the training of the audiences nor the training of performers?'

He gives several answers. First, teachers can do marvels, but they cannot impart a love of beauty. The inference is that youngsters on leaving school do not develop the advantages they have received from the 'musical appreciation' and other classes. What of the adults? Sir Henry does not think the nation is lacking in æsthetic sense. 'We have our literature, the richest in the world, and our great schools of painting.' Nor does he agree with the Continental view that the English are innately unmusical:

> I am confident that there is in Great Britain a limited, but very considerable, demand for the best music. The extent to which it can be enlarged has yet to be shown. I believe it to be capable both of enlargement and of intensification. It is my deep conviction that it remains an ineffective demand because it is half-conscious and undirected, and that it was more effective a few years ago because a great directing personality was then still in the musical world.

Which brings him to his main conclusion—that 'the crying need of musical London is for a great manager.' Musicians have their hands full making music; they cannot be expected to organize as well:

> The manager is needed to bring musicians and their public into touch with each other. Let us pray this year for a manager with an enthusiastic love for musical art and with imagination, courage, steadfastness, and respect for detail. We want a successor to Robert Newman, who in the Promenade Concerts went counter to every preconceived opinion of the taste of the London man in the street, yet found our wonderful public in the streets of London. We want successors to Carl Rosa and Sir Augustus Harris.

Sir Henry thinks this is a more vital point than finance. Music must be financed, it is true. It is true, too, that 'there are still far too many people in Great Britain who love music very dearly, but do not realise that they must pay for it dearly.' Sir Henry, however, believes that the money can be got, either from a few rich enthusiasts or from a host of poor ones. 'But the manager is needed to make it active. Similarly the audiences exist, but again the manager is necessary to develop their consciousness of the need of good music,' and to supply that need in the best possible way. And Sir Henry ends by repeating the wish that 1928 may bring London a great concert manager.

But London is not England, and a heaven-sent manager at Queen's Hall will cut no ice in the provinces, where there are still a few people dragging out a kind of existence.

On the whole it strikes me that Sir Henry, like most of the coroners who have lately been holding inquests on the country's music, thinks too much in terms of the concert hall, and especially the London concert hall. But even looked at from this angle, are things so very bad? I do not recall a recent orchestral concert at Queen's Hall that has not been well attended. The Philharmonic Society, the L.S.O., and the B.B.C., alike have drawn full halls. This touches only a comparative handful of London's population, it is true; but so long as the activities of London's chief orchestras are confined to the Albert and Queen's Halls we need not be surprised that the denizens of, say, Ball's Pond or Hatcham stay away in large, enthusiastic crowds. Decentralization? Something of the sort was tried a few years ago, but with little apparent success. For one thing, the outlying suburbs are badly provided in the matter of suitable halls; and, for another, an occasional concert can hardly compete with such standing attractions as the cinema and variety theatre, where seats are not only far cheaper but also far more comfortable. Habit is everything, and it is not easy to live on the outskirts and acquire the concert habit unless one has a goodish margin of both time and money. Attendance at Queen's Hall for the Ball's Pondite who has done a day's work in London means either a double journey, or a long wait and a meal in town, and in either case a late and uncomfortable journey home. The local picture theatre and variety house are round the corner, or at most a pennorth of tram-ride away, with two houses a night or a continuous show that can be dropped in and out of easily and cheaply. No wonder we decide to stay and relax at Ball's Pond. And no doubt much the same conditions obtain at all large centres of population. The concert can never hope to hold its own until it is as get-at-able, as cheap, and as comfortable as its rival attractions.

---

This seems a hopeless outlook, but is it? Are not our musical coroners sitting on the wrong corpse? A few weeks ago we were pitched into because we had no subsidised opera. 'Look at Ruritania,' said our mentors. 'Even so small a state as Ruritania, not much bigger than Rutland, manages to run a national opera. Look at such cities as Pumpernickel-am-Spree, at Amsterdam, at Rotterdam, at Seidlitz, at—in short (the supply of names giving out), simply look! If Pumpernickel can run its opera all the year round, why cannot Cheadle? If Seidlitz, why not Epsom? The answer is that all these Continental people are musical, and we English are not. Opera is the acid test, and our indifference to it proves that we have no music in our souls, whatever else we may have there.' And in similar strain we are given to understand that concert-attendance is another acid test from which we emerge as mere barbarians.

---

But I deny the validity of both tests. There was abundance of musical life here and on the Continent long before there were concerts or opera houses. Otherwise, the musical history of England begins with the name of Thomas Britten, who seems to have been the first Robert Newman. But we know that we had quite a decent musical past to our credit long before Thomas combined a coal round and a box-office. And our musical life would not suddenly dry up if all our concerts rooms were promoted to cinemaship. Despite the Jeremiahs, there are still many hundreds of thousands of us to whom music is a part of life. We should continue to take in our daily supplies viâ the gramophone, the player-piano, and the wireless. Nor should we stop at that. We should still lift up our voices in choral societies (Sir Thomas Beecham, in an article written to prove that we were musically bankrupt, said that this country had four thousand choral societies. I give his total from memory, but I know it ran into thousands. Anyway, that one sentence proved that so far from being bankrupt we were by way of being a jolly sight more solvent than the opera-eating Ruritanians. A few thousand choral societies, in village, suburb, and city, working at the madrigalists, Bach, Elgar, and our fine modern English part-song composers, imbibe and spread more musical culture than any number of opera companies whose staple is early Verdi, Puccini, Massenet, &c., with an occasional Wagner cycle or dash of Mozart); we should still continue our amateur chamber music and orchestra activities; our hundreds of competition festivals would go on dealing with their many thousands of entrants; the parlours of a million homes would still resound with our assorted instrumental solos and duets; and the voice of the family vocalist would still be heard in the land—or, at all events, by the people next door. Run over in your mind all the musical folk among your circle of relatives and friends, and you will find that a good proportion of the keenest and most musical rarely or never go to either concerts or opera. I do not deny that they miss something by this abstention, but I deny also that they are a whit less musical than the average concert-goer.

---

So, as I said above, the inquest is on the wrong corpse. In fact, it isn't on a corpse at all, but on a couple of valetudinarians—the concert and opera—who happen to be just now a little more sickly and worried about themselves than usual. The country's music, so far from being dead, is very much alive in all sorts of ways, but some of the most important of these ways are new, and not easily assessible. The two valetudinarians will dodge the coroner for a long time yet if they will but sit up and adapt themselves to the new conditions. If, even then, they find they are not wanted, there need be no wringing of hands; for, I repeat, there will remain abundant means whereby we can make and take all the music we want.

---

It may well prove, however, that the B.B.C., so far from killing the public concert, will give it a new lease of life. Its concerts at Queen's Hall have clearly tapped a fresh public. At each concert I have found myself surrounded by refreshingly unsophisticated folk. Evidently they had heard orchestras at home, and had decided to go and see one—for they took in almost as much pleasure through the eye as through the ear. At first one thought these hearers were Promenaders who had stolen back to their old haunt, but clearly they were quite new hands. It is one of the curiosities of London's musical life, by the way, that many hundreds of people go to the 'Proms.,' and then proceed to hibernate. A few years ago a popular song asked 'Where do flies go in the winter?' I was never inquisitive on the point; it sufficed that they went somewhere and left the thin spot untickled. A really important question is, Where do the Promenaders go? Evidently they eschew orchestral concerts from October till August comes round again. Only a few of them creep back, pipeless, to Philharmonic and other exalted affairs. Could an extension of the 'Prom.' freedom and sociability to other orchestral concerts make this floating audience into regular patrons of Queen's Hall? There can be no doubt that the permission to smoke is an element in the success of the 'Proms.,' and the fact suggests that if the concert hall is to compete with the cinema and the variety theatre it must be prepared to take a leaf out of their books not only in regard to cheapness and comfort, but also in more direct ways. Both cinema and music-hall have borrowed a good deal from the concert room. I should like to see some enterprising concert-manager turn the tables by giving really good concerts with a few first-rate variety or picture items by way of relief. I know the arguments that will at once be brought forward against the idea. I shall be told that the atmosphere would be all wrong for a fine piece of music. But so far from admitting this, I honestly believe that the fifth Symphony would gain rather than lose by following twenty minutes of George Robey. The mere thought of such a juxtaposition gives one a shock at first, but the transition is no more violent than the changes from tragedy to low comedy that abound in Shakespeare. We already admit into our concerts a little mild light relief in the shape of Humoreskes and Scherzos; and singers give us comic songs from Rossini and Mozart which few understand. Why shouldn't they draw on Sullivan as well as on Rossini for a patter song, and give that Snowflake a rest? And as a change from humoreskes which never raise a ghost of a laugh, why not play one that will make us roar? Why should 'Lucy Long' be heard at Queen's Hall only in the second half of a 'Prom.'? If the lady is sufficiently respectable for that occasion, she might be given a run at ordinary concerts. Anyway, the point is that you or I have from time to time found pleasure in an unusually good musical item in the course of a show at the Coliseum. The fact of its having been sandwiched between a comedian and a juggler did not abate our pleasure. On the contrary, did we but know it, the music probably gained from the contrast. It is an odd thing that, although we all acknowledge variety to be the spice of life, we are mortally afraid of it in our musical doings. Variety of a sort is present, it is true. We mix up soft and loud, fast and slow, old and new; but how much really vivid contrast of mood and style is there? Whatever label it bears, the music is rarely light, and even more rarely—we might say never—humorous. I want to see Sir Henry Wood conducting a Scherzo so funny that we shall have a difficulty in suppressing our laughter. And my admiration for Mr. Kennedy Scott and his Oriana Choir will not be complete till they have found some part-songs as diverting as 'Jenks's Vegetable Compound'—though the music will be better, of course, because by that time our Baxes and Holsts and Vaughan Williamses will be giving mediæval pietists and mystics an occasional rest in favour of witty verses by the Milnes and Herberts.

To the severe reader who scoffs at these suggestions, I reply that to-day the public cannot be easily classified into musical and unmusical. The sale of gramophone records of good music shows the futility of using the concert as a gauge, for if all the gramophonists who buy first-rate records attended concerts the halls wouldn't hold them. I believe that the future will see the various types of entertainment—concert, theatre, cinema, and variety house—overlapping more and more, until you and I will have to think hard before deciding whether we shall go to the Coliseum for variety-cum-music, or to Queen's Hall for a bill of orchestral favourites with interludes by Mabel Constanduros and Meandering Monty. The great bulk of the public will go to both these types, and concerts will pay once more. For the more definitely musical leaven there will still be occasional performances of (say) the B minor Mass and other works that must obviously have a complete programme to themselves. Musicians will once more be busy, and everybody so contented that the musical coroners will be out of a job. If, however, they are really anxious for a corpse or two we can hand them the musical critics, who have been sat on so often that they have become hardened. In fact, they like it: it shows they are not forgotten, and it gives them something to write about.

THE SINGER AND BROADCASTING

By Corbett Sumsion

The singer normally woos success with an audience by two means, which have extensive interactions: the voice and the presence. My enjoyment of much good singing in the concert hall by women has been spoilt by an inability to be unaware of the bodily expanse, or by a dress which seemed to me outrageous: and contrarily the east wind of criticism has as often been tempered by the shingled or shorn beauty of a sheep that has gone sadly astray musically. The man too may, as a singer of songs, 'get away with it' merely by the magnetism of personality for long years after his voice has to all intents and purposes gone.

But at the microphone the singer is stripped of this valuable asset, and has to stand or fall by the voice alone. It is, perhaps, natural that the men should suffer least. True, we still have men who sing songs as if they were exercises in voice production: that is to say, we get the notes overburdened with 'tone,' and we hear the words: but the singer gives one the impression that he has no more notion what it is all about than if he were a Mongol who had with difficulty learned to speak English but did not yet know anything of the words' meaning. However, one has not to hear very much broadcast music before one learns to be grateful for these smaller things: notes that are not uncontrolled wobbles and words that one can hear. May one also suppose that, as the B.B.C. is run in the main by men, the critical standards as applied to men are higher—or, shall we not say, are less often lowered? Well, the fact remains that the great majority of male singers are effective, and by all reasonable standards efficient. The ballad-monger, the operatic singer, the Westminster Abbey choir, and the elementary school boys who perform prodigies of part-singing, are in the main grateful to hear and give us performances which are above all but what I may call hair-splitting criticism. One may, perhaps, add an appreciation of the occasional joy derived from Orpheus societies, and 'varsity glee-singers. More, I think men are well served by wireless transmission. We get a good body of tone, and a general impression of merry-making and enjoyment in appropriate instances—with one notable exception. I suppose the men who supply the words to performances of jazz music consider themselves to be singers. In any case it seems to me a happy chance that they perform, as they commonly do, behind the curtains of a cinema orchestra or entrenched behind the palm-groves of the larger hotels. Otherwise, they would probably be killed. Quite apart from the fact that not once a week does one hear the notes sung correctly (dotted notes are ignored, and nearly every interval is smeared); I, for one, never can hear a third of the words. One gets clues to some verses if one has the good fortune to find 'you' at the end of a line: 'canoe' is the only unusual word that has been forced into service as a rhyme, and even this has not relieved 'bleew,' 'terrew,' and the others from their monumental labours: but one has to remember that even Symonds experienced some difficulty here. I am, however, still in doubt as to the purport of many of these effusions; indeed, although I have heard 'Dreaming of brown eyes' many times and from many different places, I can still hear nothing more sensible than 'Brown eyes of blue,' which seems too nonsensical even for jazz. Perhaps, on second thoughts, the singers are foreigners.

When we turn to the women, it must be admitted that things are in a much poorer way. Ignoring the interpretation, which after all is a strictly personal matter, it is undeniable that more often than not no words whatever come through, and one may take one's choice from a wide selection of alternative notes if one wishes to arrive at an approximate estimate of the composer's vocal line. This is an easy matter with ballads, but in modern music it is nearly impossible. If only one's eyes were dazzled by the brilliance of these women's apparel and the glamour of their ingratiating smiles, it may be that one's ears would be adequately distracted. As things are, the loud speaker knows no such mercy. I was recently astonished to find that even at Sheffield chorus-masters cannot produce clearly defined and recognisable notes from a body of sopranos and contraltos. Whatever attractions (and they must be legion) this truly feminine inconstancy may have for the singer, to the listener it appears as a plague. And the words—where are they? Does anyone else hear them, and am I the only deaf listener? Do women use words when they sing, or dauntlessly sacrifice them to tone production? However this may be, the result is uncomplimentary; for, luckily, one can always stop the sounds. Similarly, at the Proms., one used to find the appearance of a woman-singer the signal for the exit of a large section of the audience, who seized the chance to take refreshment, a stroll, or a seat on the hot-water pipes; and although some inkling of the terrible things going on in the hall reached one still, the effect was mitigated by the fact that one could smoke a cigarette, or, in the last event, openly mimic the most blatant of the acrobatics.

Lastly, can anyone say why women singers of this generation cannot sing a note and stick to it?

ANNIVERSARIES

By Charles F. Waters

The energetic celebration of anniversaries is an outstanding feature of these post-war days, and the world of music in this respect is no different from any other. Besides the widespread commemorations of the tercentenaries of Byrd and Gibbons in 1923 and 1925 respectively, there have been numerous anniversary celebrations of varying importance; even the birthdays of living composers are being honoured by performances of their works. The cynic may decry the growing habit of according exaggerated honours to, maybe, a lesser light in musical history, and the performance of works which might still have rested on the shelves to which years of neglect have banished them. Yet it is good to have the opportunity of judging afresh forgotten works by the acid-test of hearing and of revising or confirming opinions on their authors' merits. Even with its dangers the anniversary celebration has much to commend it. After all, it conforms to that instinct which in our private lives compels us to pause, look backward, then forward. In his Preface to the 'Oxford Book of English Prose,' Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch confessed that 'while no more superstitious than ordinary men,' he took 'a pleasure in observing birthdays and other private anniversaries as well as those of the Church,' and that it was his fancy to choose for the issue of this book the twenty-fifth anniversary of the day when the 'Oxford Book of English Verse' 'saw the light and started to creep into public recognition,' deeming such to be an 'omen of continuance in some public favour.' And just because it responds to this instinct, the anniversary celebration is calculated to engage the attention of that rapidly increasing body-musical. In the initial stages of music appreciation, no less than in other spheres, the excitement of interest is the all-important factor. Is not this the first objective of the orator, journalist, and advertiser?

Of necessity, the very fact of an anniversary establishes in the mind the period of a composer and his work, and it is this impression which is so valuable to the student, the performer, and the listener alike, for a full appreciation of music, or indeed any art, is dependent upon a true historical conception. One cannot judge aright any piece of art without reference to its period. It is not irrelevant in this connection to note the cognate tendency of presenting music on the basis of periods which has provoked one critic to observe that > . . . we live in days when people cultivate 'periods' with great assiduity. We have period dances, period plays, period costumes, period furniture—revived, restored, or faked—and there is apparently no ending to classical and romantic revivals in music.

Anniversaries constitute landmarks in the panorama of musical history which, though faintly discerned at first, must be visualised by all who would appreciate aright the evolution of musical composition.

In the matter of music-making it will often be found that an anniversary provides the stimulus required. Choirs and bands of instrumentalists frequently plough lonely furrows year after year without ever enjoying the experience which concerted work on a large scale can alone afford. With the advent of some notable anniversary barriers are broken down and difficulties removed, while shyness and suspicion give place to enthusiastic co-operation, with enduring results to the benefit of all concerned. Hidden glories are revealed at anniversary celebrations with a resultant enlargement of répertoires. Such enlargement, however, is not confined to the particular composer's work, but extends to that of his contemporaries. The Byrd and Gibbons tercentenaries, for example, gave a new impetus to the study and practice of the whole range of Elizabethan music. Moreover, interest in one period generally leads to inquiry into its predecessor, with the result that, to quote Mr. H. C. Colles's foreword to his 'Growth of Music':

> . . . the more modern composers are constantly repaying the debt which they owed to their predecessors at first by securing fuller appreciation for them afterwards.

Were the value of the anniversary celebration confined to the initiation and development of the historical sense, the stimulation of music-making, and the enlargement of répertoires, there would be ample justification for its encouragement. But its value does not rest there; the anniversary celebration has a wider significance. The esteem with which the art of music was held in this country in Elizabethan times is not solely for pride, nor are the high ideals of a Bach or a Franck and the energy of a Mozart or a Beethoven for admiration alone. Composers and performers, teachers and students, and the growing company of listeners—albeit intelligent and sympathetic listeners—all have their part to play, and the challenge of the past may determine by the measure of its acceptance the course of the future.

THE EXTERNAL STIMULUS IN MUSIC

By Robert H. Hull

The question as to whether true subjectivity can ever be attained in music has been discussed too thoroughly in recent years to make desirable a re-opening of the argument in the present context. Following the view more generally held, I am assuming that for practical purposes a certain degree of objectivity is inevitable, and my principal concern here is with some of the broader questions to which the problems of external stimulus give rise.

The reactions of individuals towards any given object are, fortunately, so varied in ultimate expression that in music plagiarism, although a constant difficulty, is not the most serious menace that conscious thought has to encounter. Multiple illustrations of this truth are to be found in, for instance, settings of Elizabethan lyrics. Shakespeare's and Ben Jonson's words have been handled, musically, by men of their own generation and by others in our time. But it is not merely to change of fashion that the contrast is due. A critical examination of half-a-dozen 20th-century settings of 'O mistress mine' will show that between each and every one, unless the selection is exceptionally unfortunate, there is a difference of reaction scarcely less marked than those which exist between the musical conceptions of some three centuries ago and their counterparts of the present day.

To that extent, therefore, objectivity settles its own problems. It is with the difficulties attendant upon economy and intensity of reaction to external stimuli that the question of considered expression becomes more acute. The matter is not to be decided according to arbitrary standards, nor can rigid formulæ resolve the issue. Each and every case must be assessed from a point of view of merit and expediency, even though this may necessitate a consequent shifting of perspective to obtain clearness of aspect.

With regard to economy of statement, in so far as the composer is concerned with the physical representation of a mental image, music is as liable to suffer from too concise an utterance as from an unmeasured verbosity. It is chiefly a question of proportion. In imitative passages, quite apart from appropriateness of context, one requires the utmost economy compatible with intelligibility. It is the unrestrained use of descriptive material which makes intolerable to the sensitive musician Beethoven's 'Battle' Symphony or the '1812' Overture of Tchaikovsky. Granted that it is impossible to escape entirely from pictorial representation in music, it is at least desirable that the means employed should be severely restrained. A bigger noise does not necessarily imply a better battle. So far the 20th century does not appear to have succeeded where its predecessors failed, if Holst's 'Mars' or Honegger's Prelude, 'The Tempest,' may be regarded as any criterion. Such music can, and often does, stimulate temporarily, but the method is too apt to blunt the critical perceptions to make worth while its unquestioned endorsement.

The poet is not so handicapped in this respect. To vitalise his message it is almost essential for him to concentrate upon those very qualities in which it is most dangerous for the musician to indulge. He has an almost unlimited licence of colour, the application of which must often be daringly vivid. Nevertheless, the existence of such resources in no way justifies prodigality, and this discipline equally concerns the musician. Artificiality of expression must at all costs be avoided, but individual reaction should be studied attentively in its relation to calculated effect.

From another angle it may be well to emphasise that the culpability of extravagances for which an external stimulus is partly responsible is not to be measured in terms of dynamics. It does not follow that the most violent utterances are the most pernicious, except that they obtrude themselves upon our notice with a persistence which is difficult entirely to ignore. But the rhapsody can be as ill-calculated as the battle poem; the principal difference is that the rhapsodic method is the more subtle of the two. Delius is one of the very few who can write an idyll which is perfectly balanced. The most rigid purist could scarcely object to the composer's literal interpretation of the cuckoo's note, so sparing is its introduction. On the other hand, it does not require a very active imagination to appreciate how deadly would be this method in the hands of one less discreet. There is a definite limit to the extent to which detail can be underlined and yet remain music.

To pursue further this particular argument would result in a discussion of 'programme' music which, although important from some points of view, can be little more that a pendant to the present subject. So far the interest has centred round those reactions which have as their medium of expression some orchestral combination, but the field of choral music presents for discussion an aspect which has equal claims upon our attention. Our view of vocal writing in this connection is necessarily affected to some extent by the claims of the poet as against those of the musician.

Amongst people whose interest inclines primarily to poetry rather than to music, there exists an opinion to the effect that a poem is so far a complete and self-sufficient creation that to combine it with music is to establish an affinity both unnecessary and artificial. The point is important because it illustrates yet another instance of that false logic which is so constantly to be encountered in any discussion of artistic co-relationship. It is true that there are certain poems and prose passages which by their very nature render musical setting an impertinence. Such works are in themselves music, and composers with any perception, in appreciation of the fact, do not attempt to tamper with them. But what is true of the part is certainly not true of the whole. In almost every period of literature there are to be found lyrics and sonnets whose beauty is enhanced by musical association. In their works, Campion, George Herbert, Herrick, and a host of others provide abundant evidence in support of this view. Tradition is not always an adequate justification for a long-continued method, but in this case it appears that the musician, at least, is not at fault.

That occasional miscalculations should occur is inevitable. In an attempted alliance between one art and another, reaction to stimulus has to be measured very carefully. A choral setting of 'Omar Khayyám,' for instance, must, from the nature of the poem, be a risky undertaking. It is no reflection on Bantock's musicianship that his treatment of the work is, on the whole, unsuccessful. In his attempt to illustrate detail his music is constantly lagging behind the words. The trouble is that the poet changes his colour-scheme so often and so rapidly that even the most experienced composer could hardly keep pace with him. The same is partly true of Parry's setting of Milton's 'L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso,' and the reader will find no difficulty in supplying further examples from his experience.

One has to be prepared for the contention that the spirit of composition, which is essentially free, is not intended to be subjected to categorical analysis. But undisciplined genius is of very little value in any art, and it must be a feeble structure which cannot survive a detailed examination. If music is to be entirely free it cannot expect to enjoy the more formal advantages. That a certain compromise is possible has been shown by Bach and others of his generation, but this lesson is too often forgotten. The tendency of to-day is to revolt against restraint, and although a temporary release from formality can assist developments which cannot be brought about by other means, yet pursuit of freedom is apt to result in restrictions more binding than those from which relief was originally sought.

In matters relating to objectivity the composer must decide for himself. I have tried to show, from different angles, that too great a freedom of reaction cannot be otherwise than detrimental to self-expression. The more powerful the stimulus, the greater must be the care taken to avoid musical extravagance. The composer may cultivate restraint with the knowledge that his errors are at least in the right direction. In this he will be adopting the attitude which so clearly marks the best classical music. If justification for the method is required, it should be sufficient to point to history itself. The finest music of our predecessors bears ample testimony to the efficiency of a system which, in every essential, epitomises the highest principles of artistic creation.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XXXI.—John Bull

Many interesting details have come down in regard to the biography of Dr. John Bull, but there are several gaps that still remain to be filled. The date of his birth is variously given as 1562 and 1563, but there is good reason to believe that he was born in the winter of 1561. As a boy he was brought up in the Chapel Royal, where he studied under William Blitheman, between the years 1572 and 1578. Some of his early vocal compositions may be dated as c. 1579-85, but he soon abandoned that form, and devoted himself to instrumental work, becoming a virtuoso on the virginals and organ.

On December 24, 1582, Bull was appointed organist of Hereford Cathedral, retaining that post until January, 1585, when he was admitted a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. Not long afterwards, on July 9, 1586, he graduated Mus. Bac. at Oxford, 'having practised in that faculty fourteen years,' and in 1590 took out the Mus. Doc. of Cambridge University, being subsequently (July 7, 1592) incorporated Mus. Doc. of Oxford.

In 1588 he was deputy-organist of the Chapel Royal, and in the same year was granted a lease in reversion of twenty-one years of some lands in the Forest of Radnor. However, on February 7, 158$\frac{8}{9}$, he was granted a Royal Warrant for a lease of lands 'to the value of £10 or £12 a year,' in place of the former lease in reversion (Calendar of Hatfield MSS., vol. 3, p. 393). In this MS. he is called 'Organist of Her Majesty's Chapel,' a fact which points to his having acted as joint organist with Blitheman before the latter's death.* He was in high favour at Court, as in 1592 he was given the lucrative sinecure of Keepership of Enfield Chase; but in September, 1593, he sold his grant, with the permission of Sir Robert Cecil (Hatfield MSS., vol. 4, pp. 349, 362, 374).

In 1596 (November 30) Dr. Bull was appointed first Gresham Lecturer in Music, and in compliment to his outstanding abilities as an organist and virginalist was dispensed with the required knowledge of Latin, obtaining permission to deliver the lectures 'altogether in English.' His first lecture was given on October 6, 1597, of which only the title-page (printed by Thos. Easte) has survived. Three years later he took a Continental tour, paying a visit to St. Omer. In 1602 his salary as a Doctor of Music to the Court was £40 a year, and King James I. retained him in the Chapel Royal, although he was known to be a Roman Catholic. On December 18, 1606, he was admitted a freeman of the Merchant Taylors' Company, and on December 31 of the same year he was one of those to whom the King ordered 'gold chains, plates, and medals.' His performance at the Merchant Taylors' feast, on July 16, 1607, was much admired, though there is very little ground for the oft-repeated story that he composed for that occasion the present National Anthem, a tune that with greater probability has been claimed as an Irish folk melody.

Owing to his marriage, at Christmas, 1607, Bull had to resign his Gresham Professorship (tenable only by unmarried men), but he entered the service of Prince Henry, in 1610, still retaining his appointment in the Chapel Royal. He received the livery of mourning for the funeral of Prince Henry, in November, 1612, and he wrote an anthem, 'God the Father, God the Son,' for the marriage of Princess Elizabeth to the Prince Palatine, on February 14, 1613.

In August, 1613, Bull left England, and entered the Archduke's service at Brussels, where his fame was already well known. Four years later, in 1617, he was appointed organist of Antwerp Cathedral, in succession to Rumold Waelrent, and retained that post till his death, on March 13, 1628. Two days later he was buried with full honours on the south side of Notre Dame Cathedral, Antwerp.

An exhaustive account of Bull's compositions for the virginal will be found in Dr. Van den Borren's 'The Sources of Keyboard Music in England' (1915). Seven of his virginal pieces were included in 'Parthenia,' published in 1611, while the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and numerous MSS. in the British Museum, and at Vienna, Berlin, New York, &c., testify to his powers as a composer of instrumental music, including the organ, virginal, and viols. It must not be forgotten, however, that he also composed many pieces, including some charming contributions to Sir William Leighton's 'Teares and Lamentations of a Sorrowful Soule,' in 1614, including two settings of 'Attend unto my Tears' and 'In the departure of the Lord,' which is well described by the late Sir Frederick Bridge as being 'full of beautiful harmony and expressive modulation.' And of course, as a Roman Catholic, he did not neglect Latin Motets, one of which, 'Deus omnipotens,' was copied by John Baldwin, and was adapted as the 'Star' anthem, 'Almighty God,' printed by Boyce as 'O Lord, my God.' Two other anthems by him are included in Barnard's 'Church Music,' 1641.

His fame, as early as 1589, may be sufficiently attested by reason of his portrait, now in the Music Collection at Oxford, dated 'año aetatis suae 27, 1589,' probably the gift of Bull himself, or from Gresham College. It is a panel portrait, and has the following lines round the four sides of the frame:

The bull by force
In field doth raigne;
But Bull by skill
Good will doth gayne.

* In the new edition of Grove (vol. i., p. 493) the late W. Barclay Squire noted only the references in the Hatfield Papers, in 1581; but the above reference from the 1588 volume shows that Bull was at that date called Organist of H.M. Chapel.

Purcell's 'King Arthur' will be performed at the New Theatre, Cambridge, on February 14-18, at 8.30 (and at 2.30 on the 16th and 18th), by members of the University and friends, under the direction of Dr. Cyril Rootham and Mr. Dennis Arundell. Anyone desirous of becoming a guarantor (receiving not more than four tickets) should write to Mr. F. Mc.D. C. Turner, Magdalene College, Cambridge. Ordinary booking opens at the box office on February 6.

Mr. Douglas Hopkins, assistant-organist at St. Paul's Cathedral, has been appointed conductor of the Handel Society.

Music in the Foreign Press

DATES IN DEBUSSY'S BIOGRAPHY

In the November Musique, Léon Vallas—nowadays by far the greatest authority on the history of Debussy—gives particulars as to the dates borne by Debussy's autograph manuscripts preserved in the Library of the Paris Conservatoire, and other curious points :

> Debussy did not always inform his biographers, Laloy and Aubry, quite accurately in point of dates. For instance, the 'Deux Romances,' alleged to have been written in 1880, were actually written in June, 1891. The 'Cinq Poèmes de Baudelaire' were written during 1887-89. In the first draft of the score of 'L'Enfant Prodigue' (1884), Debussy had given the cor anglais thirds and fifths. 'It is a pity,' he wrote in 1907, 'that a cor anglais capable of giving out two notes simultaneously should not have been invented.' His spelling is not always above reproach ; e.g., he writes 'trombonnes,' 'timballes,' 'cymballes.' His early attempts at scoring are singularly clumsy and uninspired—often quite childish.

THE PIANOFORTE MUSIC OF PAUL DUKAS

In the November Revue Musicale, Alfred Cortot examines very thoroughly, and praises highly, the Pianoforte Sonata and the 'Variations, Interlude et Finale sur un thème de J. Ph. Rameau,' which are the only two big works written for pianoforte by Paul Dukas.

A BELGIAN FRIEND OF BEETHOVEN

In the same issue, Ernest Closson devotes an essay to Victor Coremans (1802-72), a Belgian writer who lived at Vienna from 1815 to 1821, when he was expelled for political reasons :

> He saw a good deal of Beethoven during those six years, but did not publish his recollections of the Master until 1872. They appeared in a literary periodical published at Bruges, and were reprinted in pamphlet form. There is no way of ascertaining the truth of his narrative, but proofs might be checked, at least in a measure, by consulting the police reports and other archives at Vienna. In the main, what Coremans tells us of Beethoven agrees with what we already know. The principal points covered are Beethoven's relations with Steiner and Haslinger, the publishers ; his talks on Rossini, on his projected journey to England, on his readings ; and the part which Beethoven is alleged to have played when Coremans got into trouble with the Vienna authorities.

CAMBERT IN LONDON

In the December Revue Musicale André Tessier gives a wealth of interesting particulars on the London career of Robert Cambert, Lully's most formidable rival. His essay covers a practically unknown period of this composer's life.

A CATALONIAN COMPOSER OF THE 17TH CENTURY

In the October Revista Musical Catalana, Francese Pujol reviews the works of Joan Pujol (1573?-1626), published by the Biblioteca de Cataluña, the editor being Higini Anglès (hymns, canticles, a Magnificat, and a Missa pro defunctis). He describes them as beautiful, and calls attention to the special interest of the polyphonic style.

THE BEGINNINGS OF THE PIANOFORTE CONCERTO

In the December Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft Hans Uldall writes :

> The concerto for a keyboard instrument and orchestra was born late (c. 1725-30). It cropped up in various places simultaneously and independently. J. S. Bach, in point of fact, wrote the first example known so far ; but it is not under his influence that the first concertos were composed in Austria, France, and England. Early examples of concertos are : one (not preserved) by Leffloth (ob. 1733) ; one by Graun (Berlin, 1737) ; six by an anonymous French composer, styling himself 'Ami du Clavier' (engraved 1738). Handel's concertos show no trace of having been written under the influence of Bach's examples. It is after 1770 (i.e., at the time when the pianoforte appeared and the influence of the Viennese school began to assert itself) that pianoforte concertos cropped up all over the musical world.

PROBLEMS OF EAST-SLAV MUSIC

In the same issue, Peter Panoff writes :

> Despite all the excellent work done so far, East-Slav (i.e., chiefly Russian and Bulgarian) music remains in many respects a problem. Its structural principles, its modalities and tonalities, call for careful investigation. Its rhythms especially have not yet been adequately studied. Bulgarian music has many interesting metric features. Early Christian music has exercised considerable influence over Slav music ; and it should be remembered that the cradle of Eastern Church music was not Byzantium, as was often alleged, but Syria and Mesopotamia. Add Turkish, Arabic, Mongolian, Tartar, and Indian influences, and you begin to realise how complex the problem of origin is, and how various the elements of Slav music are.

CARL NIELSEN

In the December Melos, Jörgen Bentzon devotes an essay to this Danish composer :

> From his Op. 1 (1881) to the present day, Nielsen has remained himself, while accomplishing a very remarkable evolution. From the outset he reacted against the methods of romanticism, and aimed at objectivity. His misfortune is that he was born too soon : the older generation considered him too dry and simple, devoid of 'profundity' ; the younger generation considers him as not modern enough. He deserves far more attention than he has received so far.

BARTÓK

A brief article by Kurt Westphal on Bartók (Die Musik, December) makes the following points :

> Bartók's debut showed him strongly influenced by Western tradition, and more especially by Brahms and Reger. Had he continued as he began, he would have remained a mere unit among imitators. But he went boldly to his native folk-music, and learnt its lesson. If he succeeded in solving the problem of interpreting harmonically, and incorporating into an harmonic scheme, a type of music so essentially homophonic and peculiar in its modes and tonal balance as Hungarian folk-music is, it is partly because of Debussy's previous onslaughts on traditional harmony, which had rudely shaken old conventions. Hence the substitution of a new principle—connections between chords (akkordliche Konsequenz)—for the old one of harmonic logic.

THE STOESSEL LUTES

In Cæcilia en Het Muzickcollege (November 16) an unsigned article is devoted to the lutes built by Georg Stoessel, which during the past twelve years or so have become very popular in Holland, as well as among players for educational purposes. Their chief advantage is that intricate chords are made easy. A special instrument suitable for the hands of children is available.

THE MUSIC OF THE ITALIAN COLONIES IN AFRICA

The November Musica d'Oggi contains the first instalment of a survey, by Balilla Pratella, of Arab music as practised in Benghazi. The tunes examined or quoted were collected by Dr. P. Gorini.

OTTO SIEGL

In the December Il Pianoforte (which from January 1 became the far more important monthly Rassegna Musicale), Ettore Desderi considers Otto Siegl's output, selecting for special praise the Divertimento (Op. 44), the Missa Mysterium Magnum (Op. 48), and a few of the chamber works.

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

Points from Lectures

Few carol lectures appear to have been given this season. Fashions change and return. For parochial use carols are indispensable either with or without lectures. After all, the music's the thing.

Discussion as to the advantages of wireless for educational purposes in schools was the purpose of a meeting organized by the B.B.C. Mr. J. C. Stobart readily admitted that wireless could not replace the living teacher. Its full advantage was attained in conjunction with the class-teacher. Great advances in the technique of wireless teaching had been made after observers had visited schools to notice the effect of lectures and to study the ways of speakers. Did children retain in their memory what they heard over the wireless? Ten stories were told at intervals, and then the children were asked to write one of the stories. Only thirteen per cent. selected the last story told, and others were chosen in about equal proportions. The age at which children began to listen readily was about nine years.

Besides giving concerts, the Alexandra Choral Society now has two lectures during the season. Mr. Allen Gill is both conductor and lecturer. His historical sketch at the first lecture turned upon voices and instruments, and mainly the development of the string quartet. The viol was the instrument of the cultured classes, and the fiddle was only associated with itinerant musicians, pot-houses, and 'low common fiddlers.' Purcell detested it, but others saw its possibilities, and the great Corelli may be said to be the father of violin music. The lecture was sufficiently well attended to justify the Society in its new venture.

Examiners for Trinity College of Music in recent years have been getting together the local teachers, discussing with them their problems and giving an address, sometimes illustrated by pieces selected from the College syllabus. An example of this useful feature was Mr. C. Egerton Lowe's talk at Belfast on interpretation. He quoted three axioms given him years ago at Leipsic by his teacher Reinecke: (1) Every piece of music has its thought and its counter-thought, and the student must aim at a proper contrast of mood therefor; (2) when a phrase is repeated, either actually at the same pitch or in sequence, the repetition must differ from the first statement in mood and intensity; (3) a careful differentiation of tone, both in quantity and timbre, must be secured between melody and accompaniment.

Another examiner-lecturer who travels far and wide for the T.C.M. is Dr. John E. Borland. He has just returned from a tour of South America and the West Indies. He lectured on fundamental matters in and around what is truly a great city, Buenos Aires, and afterwards at Montevideo, Demerara, Trinidad, and Barbados. A single point from a Trinidad report may be quoted. Dr. Borland asked why adult candidates should be unable to name four or five notes sounded after a keynote has been given, while many a child of six or seven years can answer the question glibly, and much more difficult questions also? The answer is simple: the adult has tried to learn music through the pianoforte, and has only learnt the pianoforte keyboard as a machine, while the child who learns Tonic Sol-fa is learning real music by the ear and brain, and can apply this knowledge later to any instrument. The pianoforte is the least suitable of instruments for learning music because the musical ear has a minimum of exercise in ordinary pianoforte instruction.

Concluding his series of lectures at the Royal Institution, London, Mr. Gustav Holst chose for his subject the madrigals and part-songs of Robert Lucas Pearsall. A most interesting account was given of this 'extremely talented amateur' and his entirely successful efforts to keep alive the style and manner of the Elizabethan composers. The refined performance by the Harold Brooke Choir of 'Who shall win my lady fair?' 'Take heed, ye shepherd swains,' and 'In dulci jubilo' was to many of those present a surprising revelation of the composer's talent.

'The Jew in Music' was the attractive subject of a lecture delivered at the Jewish Institute, East London, by Mr. Alfred Kalisch. Composers and their works of Jewish origin were discussed. Mr. Kalisch said that he tried to find out whether in secular music there was a Jewish element. He came to the conclusion that there was no Jewish element in the music of the world, notwithstanding the fact that Jews were the musical part of any nation. When Richard Strauss was accused of anti-Semitism, he replied that the accusation was ridiculous; if it were not for Jewish support the opera-houses would be half empty. Many of the world's greatest composers were of Jewish origin—an origin which for professional reasons they failed to acknowledge. In all Jewish music the outstanding characteristics were a keen love of beauty, sorrow and resignation, revolt against oppression, great mastery of effect. Did not Zangwill say that all intelligent Jews and unintelligent Christians were anti-Semites?

Mr. Hubert Hunt, addressing Bath organists on English music, said he had recently heard three speakers declare that seventy per cent. of the leading composers of our generation belong to the part of England bordering on the valley of the Severn, and each of the speakers stretched the years in a backward direction so as to include Pearsall. Among the illustrations to the lecture, particularly interesting was the violin solo, Pearsall's Minuet in D minor. Mr. Hunt had copied it from the only existing MS. in Switzerland, where Pearsall spent the latter part of his life. The Minuet is, therefore, unpublished.

Dvorák was the subject of the closing lecture of a series given by Dr. Markham Lee at Preston. Dvorák reminded the lecturer of Schubert, inasmuch as he wrote because he could not help it, and was lacking in self-criticism. His output was big and his works often contained redundances, and were overlong for their subject-matter. His position in music was not too assured, but more assured now than it was twenty years ago. There was a healthy, out-of-door atmosphere about him.

Madame Maria Levinskaya returned to Guernsey, where she is very popular, to give one of her lecture-recitals in her vivacious manner. 'Imagery in Music' was her subject. She was not one of the school who hold that music in itself is descriptive enough; she felt that it was often inspired by some literature or poem or painting. Descriptive titles may be delusive. The 'Moonlight Sonata' was not intended to have that title, and Cyril Scott once said that the music 'had as much moonlight in it as there was sunlight in Sunlight soap.'

At Truro Dr. Ralph Dunstan gave a lecture at the Royal Institution of Cornwall on 'Ancient Celtic Music' The earliest authentic Celtic music dated from the 5th century. Evidently the music of the old harpists and other minstrels was handed down by tradition, a process which involved constant modification of melodic outline. Ireland long maintained its characteristic musical traditions, and its psalmody and hymnody were distinctly Celtic as late as the first half of the 7th century. Early specimens of Cornish, Welsh, and Irish music formed a long list of illustrations performed.

Mr. Arthur Hirst, at Heaton Chapel, discussed points that helped in the appreciation of great music If the music was objective, the listener ought to know the actual nature of the association; if subjective, it was definitely helpful to know something of the life and character of the man who was expressing himself. Dealing with the appeal of abstract music, he said that Bach's Prelude in C major expressed beauty of colour change. Handel's Prelude in B flat spoke of majestic beauty—deep reds and purples—and for beauty of delicate line or tune and bright rhythm, he instanced the Scarlatti Capriccio. Gracious rhythmic beauty was in Mozart's Minuet and Trio in E flat, and later developments of rhythmic beauty were to be found in Brahms's two Waltzes. In similar style Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy, and Palmgren illustrations were treated. J. G.

New Music

SONGS

Martin Shaw is said to be a 'best seller' in the English market, and if this be true, the public is to be congratulated on its discernment. It is easy to understand, for his songs are not too difficult, are grateful to the voice, and with the picturesque words the composer chooses, are easy to 'get over.' From the musician's point of view the songs' chief assets are their clean lines, their frank tunes, and a generally straight and business-like air. But Mr. Shaw goes deeper than that. He can catch an atmosphere, and 'A Lament' here is a happy example of this: striking use is made of the dramatic contrasts of the music. 'The Accursed Wood,' again atmospheric, is a study not in contrasts but in the setting out of one sinister fact. This note sounds at the opening of the song, and every subsequent bar adds intensity. 'Over the Sea with the Soldier' is very different in style. Here we have a lilting and gay little tune, whose interest is kept up through several verses by an ingenious accompaniment. 'The Bells of Christmas' does not rely too much on its bell effects, which are cleverly used, and all the more telling because they contrast well with the quiet and carol-like central tune. Lastly, Mr. Shaw has made a careful and well-balanced edition of Purcell's 'Evening Hymn' (Cramer).

Blake's lines, 'To see a world in a grain of sand,' face a composer with a difficult problem, that of weaving those disconnected proverbs into the texture of a song without giving the whole thing a disjointed effect. Geoffrey Shaw has well solved this difficulty, and his song has distinct character and effect. In two works by Sidney Harrison there are similar clean and workmanlike lines, but not perhaps the same distinction of outlook. The composer seems to have seen his words less penetratingly. 'I hear an Army,' with its many good points, never quite 'gets there' with James Joyce's words; but 'Fairy Tales,' attempting less, is a very graceful and daintily-written little work. Frederic Keel's 'The Ship of Rio' is a jovial and amusing treatment of de la Mare's words, and will make a first-rate encore song for baritones; whilst contraltos might do much worse than David Kemp's 'Border Cradle Song.' This work has a very ready appeal, but there are a few unusual touches to give it character. It needs a very rhythmical performance (Cramer).

Eric Thiman's setting of 'In the Bleak Midwinter' has the graceful touch and picturesque outlook that the composer brings to all his work, but is not one of the best examples of his talent. He seems to have been on less good terms than usual with his poem; there is not the usual freshness, and some phrases, with a touch of the common-place in them, have also a touch of mannerism (Novello).

Of Dennis Arundell's 'Four Old French Songs' two are original whilst two are settings of folk-songs noted by Miss Eileen Power. The last two are the most convincing, for the others, in spite of charming and entertaining touches, are curiously unsatisfactory. The composer seems uncertain whether he is imitating, parodying, or creating: the songs sound affected, and their lack of impulse is keenly felt when they are compared with the more genuine tunes. The last song is a fascinating thing—a Rondo about a young person who very wisely preferred a lover to a convent, and wanted a year's exemption from the latter to obtain the former. Percy Turnbull provides a setting of Masefield's 'Cavalier,' which is rhythmical and full of vitality. The tune has its climax, and noticeable everywhere is a very alert and competent hand. The same is true of Gordon Slater's amusing and very singable 'A Minion Wife.' 'Pillicock Hill,' by Alec Rowley, is a setting of eight songs for children by Herbert Asquith, issued in one very attractive cover. Like all the composer's work, these songs are neat and well-managed, and at their best, as in 'A Ship Sails,' 'Miracles,' and 'If I could go anywhere,' they show real distinction of phrase and outlook. Some of the smaller, more facetious, numbers are less successful (Oxford University Press).

The most important issue, by far—also from this house—is that of John Ireland's Five Poems by Thomas Hardy. These are big songs, and must be reserved until space is available for a full discussion.

'Three Sailor Songs,' by Alec Rowley, show their composer in good form, writing good tunes and ready to drop upon any opportunity for a sprightly rhythm. It is these qualities that go to the making of 'Molly-O.' 'The Bonny Sailor' is a straight and flowing melody of excellent growth and balance, rather in the mood of 'Polly Oliver'; with Mr. Rowley's well-planned accompaniment it makes a good song. 'A Pleasant Song of a Sailor' is the most boisterous of the three. With 'The First Mercy,' by Peter Warlock, we touch a high level. Mr. Warlock 'berith the bell away' every time, and it is most noticeable that he does everything so much better than his imitators. There are four verses here set to a simple tune with varied harmonies; the music does not try to be un-Delius-y; it does not try to be anything; it is just charming and refreshing. Everything seems right and in proportion and place, and the song is a joy (Winthrop Rogers).

Five songs by Valentine Hemery are commonplace examples of the old conventional shop-ballad. They are well designed for their purpose, but not of any real interest (Joseph Williams). T. A.

UNISON SONGS

'Robin-a-Thrush' is a Suffolk song (one of the 'English County Songs'). It lollops up and down in a compass of an octave, briskly and lightly. New numbers are Martin Shaw's setting of Eleanor Farjeon's pleasantly hortatory 'Gather up your litter,' with its dotted-quaver-semiquaver rhythm, and Graham Peel's music to the inconsequent ballad of 'Nick Spence'—a rattling tune that requires a pianist able to 'jump to it' and grasp the leaping chords. 'The Magic Shoes,' by Doris and Alec Rowley, is a little play for eight people, with unison songs (three); easy, pretty matter for quite small people to tackle (Cramer).

George Rathbone's 'The Early Morning,' though not strikingly fresh in idea or treatment, gives appropriate expression to the inspiriting words of Margaret Rhodes. With this song, in the one copy, is Alec Rowley's 'The Little Clock,' a song for young children, and Dr. Sweeting's round to the words of 'Old King Cole.' This is good value for the early classes (Novello).

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

H. A. Chambers has arranged 'Mine eyes have seen' (the American hymn) as a two-part song, the second part being in canon. This could of course be sung as a unison piece if desired. Geoffrey Shaw's descant to 'Oft in the stilly night' is, as always, graceful and purposeful. The words make this, one of Moore's most deeply-felt pieces, suitable for older singers (Novello).

The touch of the tar-brush in 'The Dusky Cherub,' by Harry Vibbard, will please choirs (S.S.A.) that have still a fondness for negro sentimentalities. The lower part divides near the end (H. W. Gray; Novello).

In the library edited by Martin Shaw are issued that composer's 'Song of December' (S.S.). Christina Rossetti's verses are suavely and lightly set. An alternative accompaniment is provided in case the original key is found too high. In this, the compass is from C to G; that should not be too high for singers who can use their voices easily. Harry Farjeon's 'Blue-Bell Time' (S.S.) moves with 'gentle, swaying rhythm,' in an agreeable, distinctive, musicianly fashion, without presenting any difficult problems. Herbert Popple's 'Stars' is a smooth bit of work, needing a fair resource of tone and well-balanced phrasing (Cramer).

H. F. Ellingford's 'Sea Lullaby' has some phrases in unison, but more in two parts (the lower down to B). It modestly carries out its aim, without any feature of special note (Banks).

Leslie Woodgate has arranged 'Steal away,' one of the admired negro songs, for S.S.A.A. The work is judiciously done, and the piece may be commended to choirs able to enter into the spirit, half longing and half exultant, of this kind of heartfelt expression of religion (Paxton).

MALE-VOICE

Several American pieces come to hand. Harry Converse's 'Kill the Cook!' is a lively seamen's song, in which now and again one of the parts (T.T.BAR.B.) takes up the tune as a solo. Four songs by Cecil Forsyth, all for T.T.B.B, are unpretentious, tuneful settings of Poe ('To Helen'), Byron ('The Isles of Greece'), Cory ('Heraclitus'), and Tennyson (two poems mingled, under the title of 'All is well'). The music to Cory's perfect expression of the fragrance that lies in the memory of a friend naturally makes us think of Stanford's setting, with which this cannot compete, though it achieves a certain broad simplicity that is effective in its way. (It may be useful, since choirmasters not infrequently ask the question, to say that the pronunciation of the philosopher's name is 'Hear-a-cly-tus,' with a stress on 'cly,' which is to rhyme with 'die') (H. W. Gray; Novello).

MIXED-VOICE

Heathcote Statham has arranged the 'Lament for Maclean of Ardgour,' an ancient air that is found in 'Songs of the North,' for S.A.T.B., with a fair amount of division in the women's parts, and a few bars of T.T. and B.B. also. The work is very efficiently done; enrichment of the air shows wisdom and a capital sense of choral effect. There is no fussy complication (Cramer).

Pianists know Grainger's setting of the 'Londonderry Air.' Here is the counterpart, for voices ('Women, highs and lows; Men, highs, first middles, second middles, and lows'). There are no words, the music being sung on 'Ah,' or hummed. Here is a piece upon which expert singers can lavish all their skill, and which choirmasters will delight in bringing to a pitch of polished perfection (Schirmer).

Another 'spiritual' arranged by Leslie Woodgate (for S.A.T.B.) is 'I got a robe,' one of the best of its kind. This is simply treated, so that singers of no great experience can take it up (Paxton).

W. R. A.

FLUTE

Poets have shown in all times a distinct partiality for the flute. Modern composers, on the other hand, do not appear to have shared this bias for the gentlest of wood instruments, and it is not without interest to note that an enterprising firm of publishers—Messrs. Zimmermann, of Leipsic—are making a determined effort to remedy this state of things. Their 'novelties' include compositions for one, two, three, and four flutes; sonatas, trios, and quintets in which the flute has a prominent part. The very latest publications of Messrs. Zimmermann suggest a combined attack on both flanks. A Suite by Hermann Lilge represents the advance of the extreme left wing, for Lilge is distinctly modern in his method, and full of surprise; the Sonata of Antonio Lotti may be said to stand for those steady principles which are the bed-rock of all art. Thus the advanced party and the reactionary party are appealed to. There is no escape: the flute and its composers must come into their own. Our own sympathies incline towards Lotti's Sonata. It may not equal those two or three songs in which the composer is at his best; but it has a clearness and directness we often find charmingly unsophisticated. The Suite has its good points, and one might go so far as to say that it has all the domestic virtues, such as patient workmanship and thoughtful care. Here and there, however, it suggests the midnight oil, and becomes laborious. F. B.

CHURCH MUSIC

Simple settings of the Communion Service are much in request nowadays. Two which may be recommended are George Oldroyd's 'Missa Parochialis' (Faith Press) and 'Missa Brevis,' by C. W. Pearce (Curwen). The first of these is very simple, and at most calls for occasional two-part singing. It may, however, be sung as a unison setting by either trebles or men. Dr. Pearce's work gives opportunities for a full choir. It is devotionally written, and would interest choirs capable of simple four-part singing. It can also be sung by a unison choir. Those who use Henry G. Ley's Communion Service in E minor should note that a setting of the Creed, to complete this fine work, is now issued separately by the Faith Press. A fairly easy setting for unaccompanied singing is the 'Missa Sancti Johannis,' by R. Langford-James (S.P.C.K.). There is some simple contrapuntal writing, and occasional passages in two-part harmony afford relief. In the last bar but one of the Benedictus the tenor B should be D. C. H. Kitson's Communion Service, a cappella (in the 16th-century style), is described by the composer as a study in 16th-century technique (S.P.C.K.). It is a complete setting, including the Creed and both forms of the Kyrie. This is a skilfully-written work which should prove interesting to the singers, and also sound impressive if adequately performed. It is not difficult, much of the writing being of the note-against-note order—e.g., the Creed and most of the Gloria and Agnus Dei. If desired, the organ may be used throughout.

Some new issues of works by Charles Wood (Faith Press) will be examined with interest by the many admirers of this composer. A Communion Service in F, 'Missa Portae Honoris,' for four voices and organ, is fairly elaborate, and contains more verbal repetition than in some other settings from the same hand. There are no serious difficulties, however, and the music is well within the powers of the average church choir. The setting provides admirable scope for widely varied treatment. Two settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis are off the beaten track. In one the Magnificat is founded on the melody 'Bene quondam dociles,' and the Nunc dimittis on the melody 'Quando Christus ascenderat,' both from 'Piæ Cantiones.' In the other, the movements are founded on the melodies for Psalm 104 and Psalm 132 respectively, from the Genevan Psalter. In both cases the voice-parts are straightforwardly set, and are effectively supported by the organ. Lastly, are two settings under one cover of the Nunc dimittis in B flat and C. They are for unaccompanied singing (S.S.A.T.B.B.), and are fine examples of this composer's work. The text is in English and Latin.

A Motet by J. A. Sowerbutts, 'Lord, let me know mine end,' is a musicianly little work for four voices unaccompanied (Stainer & Bell). It calls for delicate and expressive treatment, and should appeal to good choirs. A hymn-anthem setting of 'Fight the good fight,' by Harold Rhodes, may be recommended (Oxford University Press). A good, bold tune is treated simply and effectively, and there is a good organ part. It is also published as a unison hymn. In 'A Pilgrim Song' John Connell has written a stately tune to John Bunyan's words commencing 'He who would valiant be' (Bayley & Ferguson). The tune is sung by men, then by boys in the relative major key, and lastly by men in the tonic major with a descant added by the boys. Martin Shaw's short full anthem, 'A Blessing' ('Go forth into the world in peace'), was composed for Liverpool Cathedral Consecration week, July, 1927. It is an impressive little work, and quite easy to sing (Curwen). The same publishers send also a quartet and chorus — 'Love most gentle' — from 'The Fulfilment,' by H. Davan Wetton, words by Claude Aveling; and 'Easter Hymn,' words by W. H. Draper, and tune 'Lasst Uns Erfreuen' (1623), arranged by Gerrard Williams.

An anthem by George Rathbone, 'God sends the night,' is a well-written and straightforward setting of some words by Shapcott Wensley, which could be sung effectively by choirs of moderate powers (Novello). For Sunday School Anniversary Services and other purposes Novello's ninth set of Hymns and Tunes provides suitable and attractive fare. There are tunes by H. Elliot Button, Charles Burney (with descant), Myles B. Foster, H. A. Chambers, George Rathbone, Alec Rowley, Robert McLeod, Edgar Moy, and C. J. May, those by the last six writters being new. The music appears in both notations and the words are also issued separately. The same firm sends W. H. Grattan Flood's tuneful setting of the hymn 'Praised be Jesus Christ our King,' words by the Rev. Patrick Brennan, and two fairly elaborate and effectively-written anthems by Edward Watson—'Lift up your heads, O ye gates' (in the form of a Festival Introit, and founded upon the Eighth Gregorian Tone) and the third edition of a Festival Anthem, 'Sing we merrily unto God our Strength.' Orchestral parts for both of these may be hired from the composer. Through the same firm may also be obtained a number of works published by the H. W. Gray Co. (New York). Hugh Blair's anthem for general thanksgiving, 'Sing to the Lord a joyful song,' words by the Rev. J. S. B. Monsell, contains some vigorous, straightforward writing for four-part chorus and tenor (or soprano) solo, well supported by a freely-treated organ part. E. Harold Geer has arranged Vittoria's 'Jesu, Dulcis Memoria' ('Jesus, the very thought of Thee') for women's voices (S.S.A.A.) unaccompanied. With the Latin text appears an English translation by Edward Caswell. In his setting of 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord God' ('Benedictus es, Domine'), from the Song of the Three Children in the Apocrypha, Carleton H. Bullis obtains some broad effects by very simple means, and uses the organ judiciously. A shortened setting of 'Benedicite Omnia Opera Domini,' by Harvey Gaul is an ingenious arrangement by means of overlapping phrases and rising key sequences. The voices are mainly in unison, and the organ part is massively written. It is quite easy.

From Messrs. Banks come some numbers from the 'York Series' of anthems. Two anthems for Passion-tide or general use—'Surely He hath borne our griefs' and 'Behold and see if there be any sorrow'—are adaptations by Herbert G. Smith of English words to music by Palestrina; the works drawn upon are 'Missa Brevis' and 'Missa Ave Regina Cœlorum' respectively. The anthem 'Blessing and Honour' is similarly an arrangement from 'Missa Brevis,' and the Introit or short anthem,

'O Lord, bow down Thine ear,' from the Kyrie of 'Missa Æterna Christi Munera.' All these are for unaccompanied singing. The same house publishes 'The Sheffield Cathedral Descants.' This is a useful collection of twenty-four settings of popular hymn-tunes by the organist of Sheffield Cathedral, T. W. Hanforth. The varied harmonizations of these tunes will be found useful by young organists for the free accompaniment of occasional unison verses without the use of the sung descant. G. G.

Songs specially suitable for use at organ recitals—apart from the stock oratorio airs—are comparatively scarce. An admirable example has recently been published by Novello—'How shall I sing that Majesty?' by John Pointer. The words are a fine hymn by John Mason (1646-94). Mr. Pointer's setting has warmth and vigour; the accompaniment is easily adaptable to the organ; and an optional S.A.T.B. chorus adds an effective climax to the last verse. (The chorus part is to be had separately, 1½*d*.) The song is published in two keys, C and D, the compass in the first key being from C to G. (The latter appears only at the close, and a lower alternative may easily be adopted.) The song would best suit a robust baritone.

In last month's reviews of choral music Alec Rowley's 'The Policeman' was erroneously included among a set of unison songs issued by Winthrop Rogers. It is a two-part song for children's voices, and is published by Novello.

Three more of Walter Rummel's Adaptations from Bach have been received (Chester). The Overture to Cantata No. 146 is the original form of the first movement of the well-known D minor Concerto. Mr. Rummel says in his Preface that this early version is better than the second for arranging purposes, because of its greater fullness. (It is scored for full string orchestra with organ obbligato.) So far as possible the orchestral part is included in this transcription, and the result is a fine sonorous bit of pianoforte music. (By the way, on p. 16, bar 1, the clef of the middle stave should be treble, not bass.) Adaptation No. 2 is of a vocal number in a secular Cantata written for Duke Leopold's birthday. Mr. Rummel's laying-out of it suggests Brahms, and certainly sounds well. The Cantata was written in Bach's youth, and it is interesting to remember that, in the economical way early composers had with their pièces d'occasion, he used the music some years later for a Whitsuntide Cantata! This extract—very fresh and engaging music—calls for a good player, though it is far less difficult than the piece noticed above. No. 3 is somewhat of a curiosity. It is merely the cembalo obbligato of one of the numbers in the secular bass solo Cantata, 'Amore Traditore.' Mr. Rummel says that in playing over the Cantata he was struck by the brilliance and vivacity of this particular accompaniment. As it is a complete musical entity he extracted it, with no more alteration than the addition of a few notes at two or three points where the voice-part monopolised the interest. The result is a rattling solo (and incidentally a capital finger study) that suggests a first-hand composition rather than a mere accompaniment.

The International Music Company has issued Nine Favourite Tunes from the popular cycle, 'When we were very young,' arranged as pianoforte solos by the composer, H. Fraser Simson.

We have received from Messrs. Hawkes two Russian pianoforte albums, one containing sixteen pieces by Liadov, the other twelve pieces by various composers, being vol. 1 of 'Russian Piano Classics.'

Messrs. Hawkes are agents also for the 'Analytic Symphony Series,' edited by Percy Goetschius, and published by Oliver Ditson. This consists of well-known symphonies arranged for pianoforte solo, with detailed analysis printed in the score. The four numbers so far issued are Haydn's 'Surprise,' Mozart's G minor, Beethoven's C minor, and the 'Unfinished.' The arrangements are well done. They are far from easy, but a good average player could attack them with success. As a means of teaching analysis of classical form they should be valuable. Each number contains a portrait of the composer, a brief biography, a critical note, and an explanatory preface.

Mozart's Double Concerto in E flat has been well arranged for four hands, two pianofortes, by Louis Victor Saar (Schirmer).

Much good counsel and many excellent finger exercises are provided in 'A Few Secrets of Pianoforte Technique,' by Ernest Vavin, a pupil of Pugno at the Paris Conservatoire (International Music Co.).

Book 4 of 'The Hundred Best Short Classics' contains sixteen short pieces of moderate difficulty, ranging from Corelli and Handel (the 'Blacksmith') to Chopin (three of the Preludes). Helpful notes on performance are provided (Paterson's Publications).

A miniature score of Vaughan Williams's 'The Lark Ascending' has been issued by the Oxford University Press.

Messrs. Schott send for notice the vocal score of Schubert's Singspiel, 'Der treue Soldat,' the text after Korner and Lauckner, the music edited by Fritz Busch and Donald F. Tovey (15*s*.). This is one of a pair of dramatic pieces which do not appear in the list of works, even in the new 'Grove'; presumably they are recent discoveries. (The copyright date is 1922.) There is a full-sized Overture and a Prelude to the second Act. The music has the usual facility and tunefulness, but apparently not much else. Six soloists are needed, and a chorus of soldiers and peasants. Had an English text been provided there might have been a chance of a performance in this country during the Centenary. The lively, melodious Overture, however, should be heard.

A Suite for strings, with additional parts for wind and drums ad lib., has been drawn from Purcell's incidental music to 'The Married Beau,' and edited by Gustav Holst (Novello). The Suite consists of an Overture, Hornpipe, Slow air, Trumpet air, Jig, Hornpipe 2, March, and a Hornpipe on a Ground. The optional wind parts are for one bassoon, and two each of flutes, oboes, clarinets, horns, and trumpets, any or all of which may be used as occasion serves, the string parts being complete. There is material in this attractive work for ensemble players of all kinds, from school bands to full orchestras.

All who are learned in the law of the shanty are agreed as to the authoritative character of Capt. W. B. Whall's 'Sea Songs and Shanties.' The collection first appeared in 1910, and a sixth edition (enlarged) has now been issued (Brown, Son, & Ferguson, Glasgow, 5*s.*). Whall was doubly qualified to make such a book, being both a fine sailor and a competent musician (he was a pupil of Stainer, at Oxford). The harmonizations were done by his brother, R H. Whall, and Ernest Reeves. Bating a few chromaticisms of the diminished seventh and augmented sixth kind, the pianoforte part is of the right simple style. The book has other than musical claims The numerous pictures of sailing ships are a delight, and the Captain's Preface has a gusto that makes the reader feel disposed to give a sailor-like hitch to his trousers. Get 'Sea Songs and Shanties,' and you get the real article.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Wolfgang Amade Mozart.' By Dyneley Hussey. [Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

'A Study of Mozart's last three Symphonies.' By A. E. F. Dickinson.

[Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*]

Although Holmes's 'Life of Mozart' still retains much of its value, there was need for a new work on the composer. Mr. Hussey has assimilated a great amount of information, mixed it with much original thought, and set down the result with a fluency that keeps us reading to the end of his three hundred odd pages. The plan is that in which the narrative runs side by side with a discussion of the music—a good method in the case of Mozart, whose life and work were so intimately correlated, though for purposes of reference it is less handy than that which clears the biography out of the way, and then discusses the music. Mr. Hussey is a live narrator, able to keep his end up and score readily and steadily without the aid of the many threadbare and mainly apocryphal anecdotes that have grown up round Mozart the prodigy. His discussion of the music is frank, and genuinely critical. On the operas he is specially illuminating, and incidentally says many useful things about the form and its problems. Characterisation in music is, as he admits, 'a very difficult question to write about.' He endeavours to explain by what means certain musical phrases 'give us an insight into the psychology of the character to whom they are attached.' But he seems to overlook one point. Does not the hearer subconsciously supply a part of this elusive quality? Thus in a certain 'Figaro' duet, Susanna and Figaro sing practically the same music, 'yet Susanna's nimbleness of mind is distinctly contrasted with Figaro's obtuseness.' Mr. Hussey suggests that this results partly from differences in tonality, and in the vocal and orchestral timbres. But the audience, being aware of the nimbleness and obtuseness, surely read something of these characteristics into the music? Again, 'could the sly and fawning nature of Basilio be more aptly summed up than in the sleek tune which is his first musical utterance?' Probably not; yet would the tune appear sleek to a hearer who knew nothing of the character with which it is associated? It is the old question of the power of the label. Czerny, like some others of his day, thought the 'Eroïca' was suggested by the death of General Abercrombie, and as he was under the impression that the General was a naval officer, he was struck by 'the naval character of the theme and the entire first movement'! And we may be sure that had he known the General was a soldier, he would have been similarly impressed by its military style. Yet, unlabelled, the symphony would be neither Napoleonic, naval, nor military.

Mr. Hussey goes fully into the authenticity of the 'Requiem,' and his findings will be generally approved, though not all of us will agree with his high estimate of Mozart's undoubted share. (By the way, it is hardly accurate to describe the 'Te decet hymnus' theme as a chorale melody; it is merely the plain-song Tonus peregrinus, which has for centuries been used in the Introit of the Mass for the Dead.)

Speaking of the 'Jupiter,' Mr. Hussey describes it as 'the finest example we possess of pure thinking in sound, with the possible exception of Beethoven's later quartets.' Aren't the 'Forty-eight' and certain of Bach's organ fugues other possible exceptions?

Mr. Hussey's book is a thoroughly enjoyable affair, and it probably owes much of its value to his courageously personal and intimate style. The days are happily gone when writers of critical biography were expected to confine themselves to the pontifical 'we' or the hedging 'one.' Given a writer competent to deal with his chosen subject, we want him to tell us what he thinks, not to pass on the thoughts of his predecessors, however eminent.

The parasitic method was easy for the writer, but dull for the reader. First-hand writing is provocative, and perhaps does us most good when it butts into our convictions and makes us look at them afresh. This excellent book leaves us knowing a great deal about Mozart, not a little about Mr. Hussey, and rather more than we did before concerning our own attitude towards its subject.

Mr. Dickinson deals exhaustively with the three Symphonies. He is perhaps a little over-detailed for some of us, but we know there are many musicians to whom intensive analysis is as food and drink. They will be well filled here, and can hardly fail to catch some of the author's enthusiasm. His use of the term 'first subject' to cover what is usually regarded as a group of subsidiary themes may confuse readers, but there is much to be said for it. Is the Minuet of the G minor simply 'a jolly excursus on the opening theme'? Surely there is passion rather than jollity; though short and duly minuettish, it anticipates the note of anger that was to be sounded in the most typical Beethoven scherzos. In his Glossary, Mr. Dickinson worries himself (and us) unnecessarily over 'cadence and close,' and adds to the confusion by summing up a page of discussion with the statement that 'a full close will therefore mean simply "a good, big stop" on any chord.' Nevertheless, most of us will continue to hold that a full close means simply a good, big stop, not on any old chord, but on the tonic. A footnote on p. 12 puts up a hopeless defence for a now generally discredited and annoying convention:

> There is now a tendency, led by certain conductors and supported by a certain type of listener, to minimise the break between the movements [of a symphony]. Psychologically this is quite unsound. If music means anything, a whole movement is going to 'bank up' a quantity of emotion in the average listener; which emotion clamours for immediate expression. Clapping is the established outlet of such expression, and I have no objection to it.

He does object, however, to being asked to stifle all this banked up emotion in order not to miss the start of the next movement. But we bank up emotion a score of times every day, without feeling called upon to clap our hands. The objection to applause is not that it hinders us from hearing the start of the movement that is to come, but that it shatters the mental and emotional state evoked by the movement just ended. To those who feel that their banked-up emotion must be promptly and noisily released one can only repeat Johnson's advice to a young ass who announced himself as being full of something or other: 'Are you?' said the Doctor; 'Then cork it up!'

H. G.

---

'Gioacchino Rossini: Vita Documentata Opere ed Influenza su l'Arte.' By Giuseppe Radiciotti. Vol. 1.

[Tivoli: Arti Grafiche Majella di Aldo Chicca.]

Posterity has not dealt fairly with Rossini. His wit, his skill in all departments of music, his success, his retirement at the height of his fame have encouraged the collector and the improver of anecdote and reminiscence until his features have lost all human cast. Probably, if we were to inquire, it would be found that the average musician thinks of him as a somewhat unscrupulous composer, cunning rather than clever, who exploited the weakness of his contemporaries for a good crescendo and retired, like any wise trader, while the business was flourishing and his wealth assured. It is because this popular but imaginary picture falls far short of the reality that one welcomes the publication of the biographical and critical study of Signor Giuseppe Radiciotti, which bids fair to become the standard work on the subject. So far, only the first volume has appeared, which takes us to the end of Rossini's career in Italy. The second volume will deal with the years 1823-68; the man and the artist will be considered in the last.

It is already possible, thanks to the evidence of this volume, to correct some false impressions. For instance, this 'miser' was in the habit, when a boy, of handing over his earnings to his family. He took to composition, not because he hoped to reap vast profits, but followed it, convinced that in so doing he was sacrificing easily earned wealth as a singer. When still a young boy, his voice was such that he was expected to become the best Italian singer of his time. He studied music assiduously, spurred by the ambition to excel other singers in knowledge. Then, his first attempts at composition being successful, he continued to work, 'although I saw from the first,' he writes, 'that singers receive higher emoluments than composers.'

Signor Radiciotti gives us the full record of Rossini's studies at Bologna, and it is worth noting that this composer (who is popularly supposed to have been deficient in counterpoint) put in three and a half years as a student of counterpoint at the Liceo of Bologna. Nor should it be forgotten that before entering the school of P. Mattei, Rossini had mastered the horn well enough to play duets with his father, and that he probably knew already a good deal about the pianoforte and the 'cello—the two instruments he studied assiduously at the Liceo. Not a bad record for one who was said to have learnt theory by copying out Haydn's Quartets! We have Rossini's word for the fact that he did learn much by copying out quartets and fragments of symphonies. But when he undertook this he was already a musician of very unusual accomplishment, who insisted on playing the quartets he had copied, taking usually the viola. It may be said that Mozart and Haydn were to Rossini what Beethoven was to Wagner. Both Rossini and Wagner, masters of the orchestra, found stimulus in the subtler balance and proportion of the masters of the string quartet. And since Rossini has been sometimes described as an opponent of the German schools, it is not without interest to note that Hiller heard him play by heart—and 'marvellously'—Haydn and Beethoven, and that the son of Weber found in Rossini's library all the works of Bach.

As for the early works quoted liberally in this volume, they seem to offer a very fair field for devout Rossinians. There are some charming ideas even in the little known opera 'Armida,' which, could one find singers competent to interpret it, might stand a better chance of a revival than 'Otello.' It is not so much that the Verdian work stands in the way of Rossini's opera, but the intolerable conventionalities against which he did not make a stand. What can one say for audiences which insisted on a happy ending to the tragedy of Othello, or for librettists who, well knowing the taste of the time, did not scruple to make a travesty of Shakespeare to win popular applause?

More important for us is the history of 'The Barber of Seville'—the opera which refuses to grow old. Signor Radiciotti's examination of words and music includes numbers which are often omitted with no better excuse than the desire to make things easy for the singer. Such are the aria of Don Bartolo, 'A un Dottor,' and the 'Aria Della Lezione' of Rosina, both infinitely finer than anything that has ever been put in their place. The author protests against this licence, and his protest will be supported by all who resent being offered an inferior article when they are entitled to a better one.

Signor Radiciotti's style is straightforward and commendable. Sometimes he is apt to take too much for granted. The average reader cannot be expected to know what Dumas said of 'Otello.' But the work has been clearly done con amore. A pity it is that this magnificent volume of five hundred large pages is not bound—as all books should be: frivolous books because they need it, serious books because they deserve it.

F. B.

---

'Beethoven: His Spiritual Development.' By J. W. N. Sullivan.

[Jonathan Cape, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

It is a pity this book was published at the close of the Beethoven Centenary year instead of at the beginning. No more thoughtful work on the composer has appeared for a very long time. Attempts to correlate closely a composer's personality and his music inevitably lead a writer to see significance where it probably does not exist, and the danger is the greater in the case of Beethoven because we know that there was an unusually large amount of connection between the music and its author's spiritual growth and vicissitudes. A further snare lies in the fact that Beethoven almost always had several works on the tapis at the same time, and that the composition of many of them was spread over a long period of many months—sometimes years. Only the vaguest generalisations, then, are as a rule safe, and Mr. Sullivan seems over-ready to connect given works with certain crises in the composer's life. Not all his critical statements can go unchallenged—e.g., 'Bach, who may be likened to Beethoven for the seriousness and maturity of his mind, lost himself at the end in the arid labyrinths of pure technique.' This reads oddly at the very time when musicians are at last beginning to see 'The Art of Fugue' for the marvel it is—not on arid technical grounds. And does Mr. Sullivan know the last of the Chorale Preludes, including the lovely one dictated on Bach's death-bed?

Mr. Sullivan defends Beethoven's crooked finance on no better ground, apparently, than that the crookedness was not recognised by Beethoven himself!—a plea that would set at large ninety per cent. of those held in duress for larceny. 'His morality, as is the case with most artists, was not identical with that professed by business men.' We hope that most artists' morality (at all events in money matters) is higher than that of the average business men. But no amount of special pleading can justify the transactions concerning the Mass in D. The part of Mr. Sullivan's book that deals with this aspect of the composer is the weakest. The strongest is concerned with the discussion of philosophical and psychological questions in their relation to art.

The ordinary musical writer easily gets out of his depth here. But Mr. Sullivan is a scientist first, whose books hitherto have been concerned with atoms, electrons, relativity, and mathematics. As a result he is clear where most of us would be obscure, or barely articulate. His book is remarkable, too, as one of the very few in which a scientist shows himself able to write with knowledge and genuine insight on the æsthetic side of music. Whether one agrees with his conclusions concerning Beethoven matters little; the point is that the musician is for once able to sit at the feet of the man of science and learn much about some aspects of the art that are usually treated (if treated at all) in a cloudy speculative manner. The book is not one to be raced through; but the reader who bends his mind to it will find profit and pleasure in the effort. H. G.

---

'The Gentle Art of Singing.' By Henry J. Wood. Vol. I.

[Oxford University Press, 21*s.*]

Sir Henry Wood tells us that he is no singer himself, but there can be no living person who has heard more singers than he, and he knows all that can be known of the art without actually practising it.

Sir Henry must have suffered much from singers in his time. The remarks he passes on them as a class are severe. Why he calls the art a 'gentle' one he does not explain. It may be a facetious or an ironic usage. Sir Henry's sufferings will not have been in vain if students heed his searching remarks and valuable advice.

While a good deal of what he writes is not strictly in place in a Vocal Tutor, everything is interesting. The style is frank and pointed, and his experience and influence make his least obiter dictum of importance. A Vocal Tutor is just what this singular work of his does not profess to be. The letterpress is in large part devoted to indicating the fearful obstacles in the way of a successful singing career. Such discouragement of the fainthearted serves a useful purpose, but those who seek out a Tutor have presumably made up their minds.

We gather that Sir Henry has no belief in the possibility of learning to sing from a book. This first volume of his, at least, is mute on the questions of the foundations of vocal technics. The copious exercises which take up most of its pages appear to assume a well-established method of production. 'Voice production' is, by the way, a term which Sir Henry dislikes, and at which he is pleased to aim his sarcasms. It is, however, possible that it has its uses when the general 'teaching of singing' is so often the equivalent of teaching running to those unable to walk.

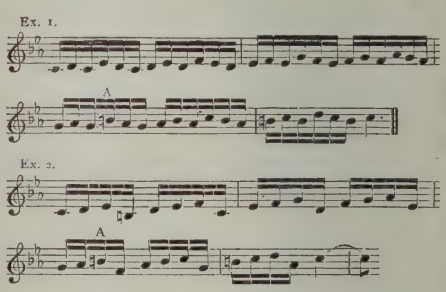
If Sir Henry's maxims are taken to heart they will do good in discouraging recruits to the hordes of amateurish professionals. In paragraph after paragraph he makes clear his opinion that most English singers are extremely poor ones, and that those who aspire to join their ranks had better be dissuaded unless they are prepared to work a great deal harder and longer than most singers even dream of doing. He predicts success for no one, however gifted, who will not devote at least five years to study. And here is a pill for the full-fledged singer:

'When we try to cast a few of the great choral works . . . for a musical festival it is impossible to find a set of four singers who will give all-round satisfaction. . . . Touring opera-companies are in similar plight.'

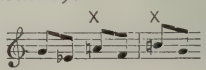
Sir Henry suggests in Appendix II. a time-table that will startle the average dilly-dallying student. He adds caustically, 'Your musical studies will fatigue you quite enough without the fatigue of frivolous amusements.' Appendix I., by the way, is all that is allowed to the humble subject of Voice Production—otherwise rudiments.

What can be said of the formidable accumulation of exercises? Many of them could certainly have been dispensed with. What Bach did in 'The Art of Fugue,' that Sir Henry seems to have attempted in The Art of Sequence-Writing. His ingenuity and facility have led him to devise sequences far in excess of the needs of the case.

Sequences have their use in vocal practice. The pattern once established, the mind is free to concentrate on tone and flexibility. But why drag in the harmonic minor scale? The augmented interval makes a difficulty, and what is more an ugly difficulty, in the course of the sequences, by suddenly distorting the pattern, as at 'A'



This sort of thing occurs again and again, and there is a similar difficulty in negotiating the two tritones in Exercise 19:



Such trials are unnecessary. A composer will of course use any interval within the compass of the voice, according to the needs of the moment. But in a musical composition the 'ugly' intervals will be found to have their special raison d'être and the difficulty they present can be dealt with as occasion arises. Sir Henry's misjudgment here lies in engaging his pupil's mind too much with means requiring a finer technique than that demanded for the accomplishment of the immediate end.

Many of the later exercises, involving messa di voce, subtle phrasing and rhythms, and the use of all sorts of time-signatures, are as well designed as any of the sort we know. H. J. K.

'Viaggio Musicale in Italia.' By Adriano Lualdi. [Milan: The 'Alpes' Firm.]

Musicians are a race of travellers—either by choice or necessity. Some of them, like Burney and Berlioz, have left records which are still read with pleasure and profit by the student. Their experiences, however, were generally of foreign lands. They could only describe their impressions; and their judgment, however fair and balanced, might have been influenced by unconscious bias or by inadequate knowledge of local conditions. One wonders what Burney would have written of conditions obtaining in England and Scotland in his day. Unfortunately, the Englishman, the Frenchman, the Italian, have taken it for granted that their countrymen know all about the conditions of music in their own country, and thus the foreign student is left entirely at sea. Dictionaries, of course, supply some information. But we are not really much the wiser for the facts we can learn from a dictionary. One misses the personal touch—call it what you will, atmosphere, observation, information derived from casual sources, intimacy. These alone can make something alive out of data and statistics, and these constitute the chief merits of Signor Adriano Lualdi's book.

The author—who is also the composer of an opera successfully performed at La Scala a little while ago—does not set out to give a complete record of all that happens in Italy, but he does give us a bird's-eye view of the situation, in which every detail stands out clear and distinct. He passes in review the activities of Italian cities, some of them large and famous like Rome and Milan, some of them small, but deserving notice on special grounds. He who seeks information will find all he needs in the chapters dealing with the great centres. Those who look to straws to see the direction of the wind will find them in plenty in the description of Fiume in the days of d'Annunzio, in the conversations with casual acquaintances, in the sketches of musicians and distinguished men at work and at play. There are also two chapters on Verdi's home at Busseto which must appeal to all.

The introduction deserves attention, not only because it summarises the present position of music in Italy, but also because of the comparison made with other countries. Incidentally, we learn that in Germany sixteen towns—Berlin excluded—subsidise music to the extent of nearly half a million sterling a year, Dresden alone contributing over £80,000. The Italian writer naturally expects his Government to go and do likewise. Our only hope, however, is that these figures may act as a guide for some future and happier generation. F. B.

'The Heritage of Music.' Twelve essays by various authors, collected and edited by Hubert J. Foss. [Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

The faults of this very readable book are inherent in its form. The writers evidently approached their task with different aims, so there is a lack of unity in the result. Ten of the essays are of the great composers, but the term 'study' is variously understood by the authors. Some deal with one or more aspects of the composer's work, some attempt to cover practically all of it, and others endeavour to combine the biographical and critical. There is similar divergence in bulk. A mere half-dozen pages suffice Mr. Holst for Purcell (unexpectedly and disappointingly short measure), whereas Prof. Tovey fills forty about Schubert, and leaves one with the impression that he could fill many forties with no loss of cogency. A discussion of the essays in turn is impracticable—even unnecessary, the authors' names being warrant for quality. The bill of fare suffices in such cases—e.g., 'Palestrina,' by R. R. Terry (who naturally cannot get through his first page without a fling at the Victorian era; red rags to bulls and bees in bonnets! Are only Elizabethans and neo-Georgians of any account?); 'Bach,' by W. G. Whittaker; 'Purcell,' by Gustav Holst; 'Haydn,' by Thomas F. Dunhill; 'Mozart,' by W. J. Turner (a first-rate piece of writing); 'Schubert,' by Donald F. Tovey (a fine critical study that should be read by all who purpose lecturing or writing on the composer during the Centenary); 'Beethoven,' by Herbert Thompson; 'Schumann,' by J. A. Fuller-Maitland; 'Brahms,' by Cecil Gray (lively and provocative, as was to be expected); 'Glinka and the Russian School,' by M.-D. Calvocoressi; 'Wagner,' by Richard Capell (a thoughtful and suggestive paper, that increases expectation of a tip-top book from this source sooner or later); and 'From Franck to Ravel,' by M.-D. Calvocoressi. Mr. Foss adds a neatly-turned Foreword; somebody else should have added an Index. H. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'The Kuklos Papers.' By Fitzwater Wray. Pp. 192. J. M. Dent, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institution, 1926.' Pp. 551. Washington, U.S.A.: Government Printing Office.

'Beethoven-Zentenarfeier: Festbericht' and 'Internationaler Musikhistorischer Kongress.' Pp. 404 and 83. Wien: Universal-Edition A.G.

'La Main et la Pensée Musicale.' By Marie Jaëll. Pp. 62. Paris: Les Presses Universitaires de France.

'The Journal of the English Folk-Song Society, 1927.' Pp. 56. Oxford University Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' Edited by H. C. Colles. Vol. 4, P. to Sonatina. Pp. 840. Macmillan, 30*s.*

'Internationale Moderne Klaviermusik.' Ein Wegweiser und Berater. Von Robert Telchmüller und Kurt Herrmann. Pp 200. Birmingham: Edward William Organ, 8*s.*

'Melodies Populaires Serbes.' Recueillies par Vlad. R. Georgevitch. Introduction par Ernest Closson. Pp. 154. Skoplje.

'Invertible Counterpoint and Canon.' By C. H. Kitson. Pp. 96. Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'The Happy Pianist.' By Enid Grundy. Pp. 76. Oxford University Press, 2s. 6d.

'Music Trades Diary, Directory, and Year Book, 1928.' G. D. Ernest, 2s. 6d., cloth cover; 2s., paper cover.

'Tales of Organists (Long and Short).' Assembled by John Warriner. Pp. 121. Office of Musical Opinion, 6s.

'The Oxford Song Book,' Vol. 2. Collected and Arranged by Thomas Wood. Pp. 136. Oxford University Press, complete, 7s. 6d.; words only, 2s.

'Guide to Song Writing.' By G. Hubi-Newcombe. Pp. 16. Arthur H. Stockwell, 1s.

'The Musical Directory, 1928.' Rudall, Carte, 6s.

'La Décoration Artistique des Buffets d'Orgues.' By Georges Sevières. Pp. 228. Paris and Brussels: Les Editions G. van Oest.

Occasional Notes

We mentioned last month the Schubert Centenary Committee's wise decision to drop the idea of finishing the 'Unfinished,' and to allow those entering the Schubert Contest a free hand. The detailed particulars of the scheme have now been issued, and we summarise them mainly for purposes of record.

Competitors may write 'works as an apotheosis of the genius of Schubert, or they may write variations on Schubert themes. Any composition submitted may use the Schubert sketches for the third movement of the "Unfinished."' The only restriction is that the works must be for orchestra.

The prize money, £4,000 (which is probably more money than Schubert ever set eyes on in his life—certainly at one glance), has been deposited with Messrs. J. P. Morgan. The first prize is £2,000, the remainder being split up into cash prizes for the best efforts submitted from the ten areas concerned. The jury for the area comprising Great Britain and the Dominions consists of Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Thomas Beecham, Sir Walford Davies, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Prof. Tovey. The representatives of the contest in this country are the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and manuscripts from the British Empire should reach the Society's Office (19, Berners Street, W.1) by March 31. Copies of the form giving detailed particulars are to be had from the Office of the Centenary Committee, 102, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.1. This form contains Schubert's sketches for the Scherzo of the 'Unfinished'; the use of this material as a basis for composition is left to the option of competitors. In its revised form, the Schubert Contest is a munificent and well-devised scheme that will almost certainly lead to the production of some worthy tributes to Schubert. Certainly it will stimulate creative activity in the direction of music of a type that will be a welcome change from the cynical and bizarre novelties of which the world has had an overdose since the war.

In a recent issue of the Musical Courier appear some comments of Mr. Leigh Henry on musical conditions in England. (Mr. Henry has gone to the U.S.A. to take up work in connection with the Curtis Institute and Musical America.) He told his interviewers that 'there is little or no serious musical criticism in the British daily press—little, indeed, of any critical thought of any kind.' Now that Mr. Henry has left the old country in the lurch there will be none at all, presumably. We note with satisfaction that in his general pooh-poohing of British musical journals Mr. Henry describes the Musical Times as 'sound, but reactionary.' Substitute 'and' for 'but,' and we bow our acknowledgments. The aim of a journal such as this is to represent the normal musically-educated section of the public. Just now that section is in a state of reaction against the elaborate futilities and eccentricities which Mr. Henry has championed so polysyllabically before giving up this country as a bad job and going to one where music is really Progressive. By the way, Mr. Sabaneev's article at the beginning of this number puts the case for reaction about as well as it can be put. We believe that most of the troubles in the musical world to-day are due to the fact that the composers who have been given the greatest publicity during the last decade have proved to be almost entirely out of touch with the main body of the musical public. There is now an unprecedented—we might say literally a golden—opportunity for a group of young composers who will not be ashamed of beauty and emotion. Normal folk are tired of cynicism and cacophony, except in small doses.

The wrath concerning the verbal indiscretions of Sir Thomas Beecham strikes us as being mistaken. We have long since ceased to take Sir Thomas seriously in the rôle of orator. As a conductor he is a genius—though a fitful one whose flashes are sometimes paid for by lapses. Beecham the non-conductor, so to speak, is perilously near being a mountebank who is only occasionally funny—a very inferior kind of Shaw, in fact. So when he tells America that 'the English are the laziest nation in the world,' and that 'the whole British Empire is founded on a platform of comedy and farce,' there is no need for indignation meetings and resolutions of protest. 'Tis only pretty Fanny's little way. And it is flattering him to answer such foolish gibes as 'The London Philharmonic Society is the most permanent institution in the world; it hardly ever functions . . . English musical composition is one gigantic promissory note . . .'

It is true that, in reply to expressions of indignation that reached him from this side, Sir Thomas protested that he had been inadequately reported. 'The interview lasted one hour, but only a few remarks were printed. Most of these were out of their context.' This dodges the issue. If he made the remarks quoted above, no amount of context can explain them away; if he didn't make them, why not say so plainly?

However, the British Empire—except the agitated I.S.M.—and the Philharmonic Society remain calm, and nobody is likely to be a penny the worse; although Sir Thomas's opera scheme may lose a good many of the tuppences of prospective subscribers who, annoyed, will now think better of it.

The daily press has always been so indulgent to Sir Thomas that its comments on his latest performance will probably give him an unpleasant shock. The Daily Telegraph said that, when all allowance has been made for the American pressman's power of suggestion, 'something remains in the reported speech which can only be described as wanton mischief.' And it thinks, as we do, that 'if this foolish indictment of Britain has any result at all, it can only be adverse to the scheme of opera which Sir Thomas is believed to have at heart.' An admonitory leading article is rounded off (apropos of a comparison of the musical achievements of various countries), 'The most musical nation in the world could not have applauded Sir Thomas more heartily than we did whenever, instead of making speeches, he attended to his own true business of conducting the orchestra.' The Daily Express heads its rebuke with a caption on which it is to be congratulated—'Beecham Spills.' The Morning Post article is quite unkind:

> The British public is described by Sir Thomas Beecham as lazy and almost comatose. Fortunately for the critic, it is also extremely good-humoured. Instead of being put out by such abuse, the British public will think itself sufficiently avenged when it reads the American reporter's summing-up of Sir Thomas Beecham—'a chubby little man with a goatee, who wears cloth-topped boots.' A great musician might have hoped to leave not quite that impression.

See what comes of improvising variations for an hour on the theme 'Stinking Fish' instead of attending to one's job!

---

The daily and weekly papers have devoted so many columns to the League of Opera that a monthly journal is called on to do no more than wish it luck and report progress. Everybody reads the dailies; only a small proportion of the public reads the musical press. That is why the advocacy of a monthly musical journal is much more usefully employed on behalf of projects that, for various reasons, are passed over by the daily press. We mention this rather obvious point because a correspondent scolds us at great length for not giving space to the League. He considers our attitude to be 'deserving of the severe censure of every musician.' So far from donning a white sheet, we take this opportunity of protesting against some of the propaganda of the more enthusiastic apostles of the League. There has been far too much nagging of the public, and—even worse—a harping on the entirely mistaken notion that opera is a test of a nation's musical standing. Judged by this standard, Italy would be easily in the van instead of in that obscure position which has been hers since the days of her great polyphonic composers. Save in the sphere of opera she has not a single modern composer of importance to her credit, and she owes her barrenness in real music to her operatic obsession. Even in the matter of singing she now lags behind. And the worst period in France's musical history preceded the renaissance that began with Franck—a period when Parisians flocked to opera of a type so superficial that (as Bruneau said) it threatened to deal the death blow to music. England is musical, but not operatic. Opera is an attractive blend of arts, but, used as a gauge of a nation's musical achievements, it leads to some queer findings. Mr. Newman, in the Sunday Times, has lately broken a lance on its behalf, but not very convincingly. For he would be the last to be 'taken in' by a form that leaves so little to the spectator's imagination, and that carries such a deadweight of pretence and bad music. He marshals the usual array of big names—Beethoven, Mozart, Wagner, Debussy, Verdi, Strauss, &c.; but in an ordinary opera season how much do we hear of Beethoven, Mozart, Debussy, or Strauss? How much, even, of the finest examples of Verdi? An opera season is mainly devoted to the work of composers who have done—and indeed could do—little or nothing in any department of pure music. At its best opera is an enjoyable type of entertainment with two great merits: it provides employment for a large number of musicians, and it may in time act as a counter-attraction to that even less imaginative type of entertainment, the cinema. For these reasons we wish Sir Thomas's League all success. But it is high time to drop foolish talk about opera being the highest of musical forms, and a test of musical culture. Manchester bothers itself very little about opera, yet is there a more musical city in England? Are there on the Continent many more musical? The musician who is not an opera 'fan' will continue to drop in at the opera-house, either in an indulgent mood or because of his interest in the hitherto insoluble problems of the form. But when he wants its two prime elements—drama and music—at their best he will go to the theatre and concert-hall, and take them both neat.

---

The indignant correspondent alluded to above also accuses us of failing to appreciate the genius of Sir Thomas Beecham. But if the word 'appreciate' means what we think it does, the culprits are those who, like our correspondent, are blind worshippers of Sir Thomas. To hear their pæans one would imagine that this country had no other conductors. True, it has no other of his brilliant and erratic type; nor is there another with his knack of being in the limelight, though Albert Coates runs him close at times. But when a long job of work has to be done a steady flame is worth a good many fireworks, though far less brilliant and exciting. Hence our firm and no doubt unpopular conviction that the musical life of the country owes more to the persistent all-round work of such men as Wood, Harty, and Ronald than to the spectacular Beecham.

---

We learn that the statue of Vincent Wallace is ready for erection at his birthplace, Waterford. The date of the ceremony is (provisionally) March 11. The cost of transport and erection are considerable, however, and the committee therefore ask for the help of any of Wallace's still numerous admirers who have not yet subscribed. Donations should be sent to the organizing secretary, Mr. John M. Houben, The William Vincent Wallace Memorial Committee, 27, High Street, New Oxford Street, W.C.2.

---

Dr. Vaughan Williams having expressed a desire to retire from the conductorship of the Bach Choir at the end of the current season, the Bach Choir has done the right and natural thing in offering the post to Mr. Gustav Holst, who has accepted it. There could be no better guarantee for the continuance and development of the fine work done by Dr. Vaughan Williams during his reign.

---

The many distinctions held by Sir Edward Elgar received an addition at the New Year, when the order of K.C.V.O. was conferred on him. We offer sincere congratulations, in which we are sure our readers join. The only other musical honour was a knighthood for Mr. Edward German—as popular an award as can be imagined. Last year, in an Occasional Note, we said the honour was long overdue—an opinion in which we were supported by a letter from Mr. William Boosey. Very few composers have gained the ear of both musical and general publics in a greater degree than Edward German. The new knight has the hearty congratulations of countless admirers. Several other distinguished musicians are still overlooked, however. When will Delius receive some kind of titular recognition?

Messrs. Constable send us an announcement that is of importance to Bachites. Prof. Sanford Terry's monumental work, 'Bach's Cantata Texts,' was published at three guineas. Only five hundred copies were printed, and the type has been distributed. The book was so costly to produce that even if all the copies were sold, the author would still be the loser. Prof. Terry's main concern, however, is the study of Bach in this country, and he has therefore decided to make a further sacrifice by placing the remaining copies—about two hundred—within the reach of those to whom the original price was prohibitive. The book will now be sold for 31*s.* 6*d.* net. No reference library of any important musical institution can afford to miss this chance of adding to its shelves one of the most notable pieces of scholarship issued for many years.

Something of an In memoriam character will attach to the performance of Holst's new orchestral work, 'Egdon Heath,' at the Philharmonic concert on February 23. It bears the inscription, 'Homage to Thomas Hardy,' and on the title-page is the following passage from 'The Return of the Native':

> A place perfectly accordant with man's nature—neither ghastly, hateful, nor ugly; neither commonplace, unmeaning, nor tame; but, like man, slighted and enduring; and, withal, singularly colossal and mysterious in its swarthy monotony.

'Egdon Heath' was composed for the New York Symphony Orchestra, which was announced to give the first performance on February 10. The full score and parts are published by Messrs. Novello.

We have received the first annual Report of the Worcestershire Association of Musical Societies. It is a striking record of musical activity, and shows how much may be accomplished when the musical life of a district is organized. We suggest that readers interested should write to the hon. secretary, Mr. S. S. Moore, for the Report, and for the printed outline of the scheme. His address is Claines Vicarage, Worcester.

A reader kindly sends us for reproduction the professional card of a Huddersfield 'character' well known about thirty years ago. We understand that the card was used quite seriously, and not as a joke. North was organ-blower at one of the principal local churches, hence the cryptic 'P. O. B.'='Professional Organ-Blower':

MR. FRED NORTH, P.O.B.,
Comic and Sentimental Vocalist,
DRUMMER AND TRIANGLEIST,
ALSO BOSS WAITER AND CARVER, AT THE PRINCIPAL HOTELS AND FLAG BEARER.

Mr. North sings Songs, Duettes, or Trios with or without accompaniments.
Mr. North attends Luncheons, Dinners, or Teas, when he guarantees to do justice—which will be considered an instalment on his terms.

Town Address: No. 56, KIRKGATE, in care of Mrs. Blackburn, where all letters and telegrams relating to engagements must be addressed.
Cheques payable at the Almondbury or Kilner Banks: P.O.O. at the Old Post Office, Kirkgate, Huddersfield.

The reference to singing duets and trios appears to be a jest, but is more probably intended to signify Fred's ability to sing any spare part that might be needed. Evidently his voice was as accommodating as the rest of him.

A correspondent sends us cuttings from the Scots Observer, wherein are some adverse criticisms of the Revised Edition of the 'Church Hymnary.' As examples of literal-mindedness the grumbles would be hard to beat. We give a sample. 'H. S.' objects to the inclusion of Blake's 'Jerusalem,' which he calls 'the ravings of a mad poet.' The mad poet's chief offence is that 'when he purposes to build a new Jerusalem he calls for his "bow of burning gold," "his arrows of desire," his "spear," and his "chariot of fire," instead of calling for stones, mortar, a trowel, and a plumb-line.' In another letter the question is raised, 'Of what use would a golden bow be? It would have no spring, and therefore could not propel an arrow!' How true! These mad poets need revision. Take, for example, the lines of another demented singer, 'Sermons in stones, books in the running brooks.' Can there be any doubt that a level-headed poet (if there be such a prodigy) would have written, 'Sermons in books, stones in the running brooks'?

From the Musical Courier:

> 'Four walls do not a prison make.' Correct.

Not according to our edition of Lovelace.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

H.M.V.

The performance of the Prelude to 'Tristan' by the Berlin State Orchestra, under Klemperer, strikes me as being rather tame. The pulse is weak and fitful, and the temperature a trifle below normal. A vexatious detail is that the piece is on two 10-in. records—four bites where two could surely have been arranged for (E476-77).

A much better sample of playing and recording is that of a couple of Holst movements—'The Dance of the Spirits of the Earth,' from 'The Perfect Fool,' and 'Mercury,' from 'The Planets,' conducted by Albert Coates. Especially good is 'The Perfect Fool' extract—one of the best bits of ballet music written for a good many years. It makes one wish for a chance to renew acquaintance with the opera itself. The 'book' has obvious defects, but the music is good enough to make the balance well on the right side. 'The Perfect Fool' is better worth hearing than many a stock old favourite (D1308).

The Mendelssohn revival takes one more step forward by means of a record of two 'Songs without Words'—the quiet little one in F and the jolly Hunting Song in A, capitally played by Moiseiwitsch (E478).

The Philharmonic Choir, conducted by Kennedy Scott, is recorded in Holst's 'Psalm 148' (in which the well-known Coln melody is used so finely) and Balfour Gardiner's 'Evening Hymn.' There are some outstanding merits here—for example, the quiet passage at the beginning of the Psalm, where the voices sing Alleluia in short chiming phrases against the hymn melody played by a soft solo stop. (Both pieces are with organ accompaniment.) The delicate nuances here are delightful, and the whole passage is a model of vital soft singing. The final section, in which the melody is delivered slowly by the basses, suffers from a lack of brilliance in the top parts. Apparently too much importance was attached to the bringing out of the theme in the bass. It stands out splendidly, but the exultant mood of the music is reduced by the toning down of the accompanying parts, especially the sopranos. Still, this is a fine performance, well reproduced. Even better, because more level in excellence, is the Balfour Gardiner piece. Here we have the power and brilliance that we miss at times in the Holst. It is good to find this splendid choir making so good a show per gramophone (D1304).

There are two unusually good operatic solo records—Florence Austral in 'Ritorna vincitor,' from 'Aïda' (E474); and Dusolina Giannini in 'Vissi d'arte,' from 'Tosca,' and 'Voi lo sapete,' from 'Cavalleria Rusticana' (DA892).

A newcomer is Lawrence Tibbett. His fine baritone voice records unusually well, and he makes a most auspicious debut with Lucrezia Bori in a couple of duets—the Barcarolle from 'Tales of Hoffmann' and Goetze's 'Calm as the Night' (DA912).

The records of the Hereford Festival are confined to the choral side because it was found that the microphone absorbing the Franck Symphony had also picked up part of a conversation between two ladies in the audience: 'Do tell me where you buy your stockings!' It sounds like our old and unrespected friend, Ben Trovato, but the organ of the Company gives it as the reason for the absence of orchestral records of the Festival. Yet why suppress the disc? Most of us would think it was worth an extra shilling. And we should enjoy the Symphony no less than at Queen's Hall, where fragments of conversation often reach us during a performance.

The Hereford records are of four extracts from 'Gerontius': 'So pray for me' and 'O Jesu, help' (Tudor Davies) (D1350); 'Take me away' (Margaret Balfour and Tudor Davies) and 'Jesu! by that shuddering dread' (Horace Stevens) (D1348); and three from 'The Music-Makers': 'We are the music-makers,' 'A breath of our inspiration' (D1349), and 'For we, afar in the dim ages,' with Brewer's 'Nunc dimittis' (D1347). It would be idle to pretend that the choral portions of these records are clear. Rather are they a series of vivid patches. There are some thrilling bursts in the 'Music-Makers' records; but the best choral effects are in No. D1350. All the records show the fine quality of the Festival Chorus in the matter of tone and vitality.

Special interest attaches to the record of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra after its recent visit. The players are heard in Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain,' conducted by Leo Blech (D1365). The result is very brilliant and powerful, but no orchestra can disguise the halting of Berlioz's muse in the slow first half.

A fine record is that of Casals playing an Intermezzo ('Goyescas') of Granados and what the label calls an Adagio from a Toccata in G by Bach. It happens, however, to be the middle (A minor) movement from the Organ Toccata in C. It is very effective thus transcribed (DB1067).

Chaliapin has probably never been heard in a more moving record than that of an extract from Massenet's 'Don Quixote,' in which occurs the death of the Don. The realism is almost painful. The soprano, Olive Kline, is admirable as Dulcinea (DB1096).

Guy Weitz is recorded in an excellent performance of Franck's Choral No. 3, on the Westminster Cathedral organ. The result is less clear, however, than in his recent records of the Liszt B A C H Fantasia and Fugue. For example, the accompaniment of the lovely Cantabile section is rather cloudy. It is good to find Mr. Weitz playing this melody without the wretched rubato that so often spoils it. The fourth side in the two records is given to the Andante Cantabile from Widor's fourth Symphony, also well played, and well reproduced (C1378-79).

Another good organ record is of Dr. Charlton Palmer, playing at Canterbury Cathedral Guilmant's Melody in A flat and Handel's 'Scipio' March. It is good to renew acquaintance with this favourite old Handel piece (B2542).

Dr. Palmer also conducts the Cathedral Choir in Goss's 'O Saviour of the World' and a couple of hymns — 'O worship the King' and 'Disposer Supreme,' to the 'Old 104th' and 'Hanover,' with organ accompaniment by W. T. Harvey. The choir comes through well, with excellent tone; the unison verses of the hymns with free organ part are stirring (B2543).

Finally comes a choral record specially interesting to old Wykehamists—the Winchester College Choir of three hundred and fifty voices in 'Domum,' and the College Glee Club, a hundred strong, in Dr. Dyson's arrangement of 'The Poacher.' The tone in 'Domum' is mainly that of broken and unsettled voices. In 'The Poacher' there is good part-singing. The lower voices are, of course, mainly adolescent, and so the tone is raw and lacking in sonority. But this unavoidable defect is easily forgiven on account of the spirit and gusto (B2610).

---

COLUMBIA

Wagner's 'Kaiser' and 'Homage' Marches are far from being on a level in quality. The former is deservedly neglected, whereas the latter is always sure of a welcome. Happily, of the records made by the Symphony Orchestra under Sir Dan Godfrey, that of the 'Homage' March (L2002) is by far the better—good, sonorous effects with clear polyphony; which last word reminds one of the comparative feebleness of this department in the 'Kaiser' March (L2003). 'Ein' feste Burg' has been better treated by scores of fifth-rate German organist-composers. Wagner wrote this March at least ten years too soon.

The Grenadier Guards Band, conducted by Capt. George Miller, is heard in Foulds's 'Keltic Suite' and Mancinelli's Triumphal March, 'Cleopatra,' the latter being on the fourth side of the two records. The Pipers of the 1st Batt. Scots Guards take part in the Lament with good effect (9249-50).

There is such a wealth of short attractive movements for string quartet that the Catterall Quartet's choice of an arrangement of Bach's 'My heart ever faithful' would be justified only by unusual effectiveness. This justification is lacking, however. The pace is far too slow, and the mood chastened—almost sad. The players are far better employed in Boccherini's unescapable Minuet (9250).

There are some excellent records of string solos. All the following may be recommended: W. H. Squire in two pieces by Debussy—Romance and 'Les Cloches' (D1589); Arthur Catterall in Wieniawski's Légende (L1950); Lionel Tertis in arrangements of Guiraud's 'Melodrame' and one of the best known of Dvorák's Slavonic Dances (curiously described on the label as 'Slavonic Dance Theme') (L2004); and the Arensky-Elman Serenade and the Capriciette from a Mendelssohn Quartet, arranged by Burmester, capitally played by William Primrose (4633).

The pianoforte tone is not good in the record of the Schubert-Tausig 'Marche Militaire' played by William Murdoch (9273).

As this is to be a Schubert year, let us hope that more respect will be shown to the composer than is present in a distortion of the well-known 'Moment Musical' (or, as the label prefers it, 'musicale') recorded on D1596. The harmony is altered throughout, very much for the worse, the simplicity of the original being absolutely destroyed; new contrapuntal and other features are added; and at times the rhythm of the performer is similarly fantastic. Musicians rightly object to the jazz-mongers' outrages on classical works. Is this sort of thing more defensible? It is open to any qualified musician to make a free paraphrase of a work, or to take a classical composer's theme as basis of a new work, e.g., a set of variations. But this is announced definitely as being by Schubert, whereas it is so only in part—the part that is worth having. If Pouishnov, who plays it, prefers this vandalistic version he should be compelled to keep it for private consumption. I hope all my reviewing colleagues will lift up their voices in a chorus of protest; otherwise, we shall find other familiar classics mauled in the same way. The companion piece is a Tango by Albeniz (D1596).

Dora Labette is to be praised for her choice of song—one of Bach's loveliest airs (though not yet one of his best known)—'Comfort sweet, my Jesus comes.' She sings it so beautifully in regard to tone and mood that one almost forgets there is a slight loss of pitch at times—usually on the long held D's. The elaborate flute obbligato is worthily played by Robert Murchie. His shading-off of the final phrase is so delightful that I had to encore it several times. This record would have been even better had the string background been more clearly defined. The label says, 'with orchestra'; probably a string quartet would have been more effective. Bach's accompaniments are so much more than a mere harmonic background that each strand of tone calls for no less clearness than that of the voice. But when all is said this record gives us a tasteful and musicianly performance of a work whose beauty grows on one with repeated hearings. The hearer who comes to it fresh may feel at first that the flute obbligato is over-busy; later he will delight in following it, noting the way it steals in and twines itself round the voice part (L2005).

Other vocal records are of Rex Palmer in Vaughan Williams's 'The Roadside Fire' and a poor song by Geehl (4502); William Heseltine in a couple of airs from Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet' —a fine, manly, well-coloured performance (9276); and a boy, John Bonner, singing 'In Native Worth' (9277). Probably we are in for a run of boy trebles —a very good thing in many ways, provided the chosen youths show this type of voice at its best. Many a famous adult singer might envy a first-rate boy treble his purity of tone and easy management of high notes. Young Bonner has a voice good enough for anything, but before he produces a first-rate record he must learn to make much less of a business of breathing. At present he lets the operation make big holes in the phrasing. The pace is decidedly on the slow side, and this adds to his difficulty, as well as taking off some of the effect of the music. I suggest, too, that the air might have been cut, or a shorter one chosen. Two 12-in. sides are too much for a type of performance necessarily lacking somewhat in colour and variety. I hope to hear John again, in a better choice, at a better pace, and after he has profited by the aphorism that a good singer never breathes—apparently. This record, by the way, is made in Manchester Cathedral, and is with organ accompaniment (9277).

NATIONAL GRAMOPHONIC SOCIETY

The Society has done nothing better, I think, than its latest recording—Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor. Above all, I mention the admirable range of power—a virtue without which due variety is impossible. The performance is generally well-balanced and full of life and colour. The pianoforte tone—a vital factor in a work of this kind—is unusually good. The players are the Spencer Dyke Quartet, with Olive Bloom. These four records should delight old Brahmsians and make many new ones.

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—The most interesting of this batch is the Finale of Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony, which completes an extraordinarily successful set. Rudolph Ganz's playing all through is very fine (530).

The opening of Balfour Gardiner's 'Noel' is treated in so unnecessarily dignified a manner by William F. G. Steele that the sudden accelerando of the carol makes too big a contrast (3153).

Moszkowsky's slight and attractive 'Romance,' Op. 42, No. 1, is played with feeling by Harold Bauer (7162).

John Duke gives a good performance of MacDowell's 'Marionettes'—'The Witch' and 'The Clown' being particularly good (6983).

'Forest Elves,' Op. 70, by Schytte, is well worth a hearing, chiefly for the sparkling delicacy of Josef Hofmann's playing (7163).

Hand-played.—The best by far of a not very impressive collection is Scharwenka's first 'Polish Dance' (the one in E flat minor that had such a vogue some years ago), played by the composer, who makes a brilliant thing of it (A1029*e*).

The time distortion in Clarence Fuhrman's performance of Rachmaninov's 'Polichinelle' is amazing, and the playing altogether is poor and disappointing (A1031*a*).

Cervantes's 'Cuban Dances' (Nos. 6, 7, and 11) are good, and are well played by Adela Verne (A1033*f*).

There is a long—too long—roll of Johann Strauss's 'Artist's Life' Waltz. Erno Rapee is the pianist, and his rhythm is at times very uncertain (A1027*e*).

There is much sympathy in Renée F. Florigny's playing of Grieg's charming 'Berceuse,' though her accelerandos are too violent to be in keeping (A1087*d*).

Herbert Fryer gives a very good performance of Chopin's 'Barcarolle' in F sharp (A1035*e*).

There are also 'Romance' by Sibelius, played by Rudolph Ganz (A1025*e*), and Chaminade's 'Élevation,' played by Clarence Adler (A1039*d*).

Metrostyle.—Two rolls well worth attention are Sapellnikov's 'Valse Caprice,' Op. 5, No. 1, well cut and edited, and giving brilliant effect for very little trouble (T30353*c*), and a successful arrangement of Handel's 'Worthy is the Lamb' (T30343*b*).

Beethoven's 'Thirty-three Variations on a Waltz of Diabelli' call for careful management. On the two rolls received are Nos. 1-5 (T30346*c*) and 6-13 (L30347*c*). This set of Variations—one of the finest ever written, despite some numbers where the interest flags—is so rarely heard that the player-pianist will welcome this means of becoming fully acquainted with them. The rolls are well cut, the only fault being an over-use of the pedal, especially in passages where shakes and other ornaments occur. The player will be well advised to reduce the pedalling to the minimum.

BLÜTHNER

Outstanding is a Concerto (Op. 12) by Gabrielle Pierné, played by the composer. It is, on the whole, an attractive work, but the need of orchestral variety of tone-colour is felt, and the pianoforte alone sounds rather thin—notably in the Finale. The somewhat Mendelssohnian Allegro is good, and has plenty of interest. There is a delightful opening to the Scherzando which brings to mind Debussy's 'Mandolin,' and there is also an odd hint of the Cornish Helston Furry Dance. The composer-performer takes full advantage of the opportunity for brilliant display in the Finale (57098-100).

There is a new edition of Grieg's delightful 'Nocturne,' Op. 54. It is well cut, and Bertrand Roth's performance is all one could desire (55984).

For those to whom operatic transcriptions are interesting there is a good arrangement of a liberal selection from 'La Bohême' (59440-443), exceptionally well played by Alf. Szendrei. He also plays a 'Mignon' selection (59633-634), and will be heard in the proposed new editions of the operas already in the catalogue. It would be interesting to know who is responsible for these transcriptions, which as a rule are capital.

Ordinary.—Of the ordinary salon type is Delibes's 'Naila—Pas des Fleurs.' It seems over long for the material it contains, but is very easy to manage (55399). So, also, is 'The Dance of the Apes,' from the 'Circe' Ballet by Künneke—though anything less ape-like would be difficult to imagine (52839).

D. G.

Wireless Notes

By 'Ariel'

The 'grouser' is on the war-path again, though less strong numerically than he was a year ago. The main grievance now seems to be on the score of the Talks: it is said there are too many. Probably the real trouble is in the quality rather than in the quantity. A lot of the topics are of a type that, one imagines, would appeal to a small minority; and frequently we find an attractive subject spoilt by the poor voice and manner of the talker. And why not more talks of a light and humorous character? Surely there is room for the oral equivalent of the short, amusing articles and essays of which the press somehow manages to find a good supply. We ought to be able to switch on at least once a day in confident expectation of hearing something that will be as enjoyable as (say) the delightful gossip of 'Londoner' of the Evening News—more enjoyable, in fact, for such material would gain from being well delivered orally. Given the right kind of Talk and Talker there would be few complaints from the Talkee; the feature ought to be as entertaining as anything in the programmes.

The word 'entertaining' serves as a reminder that the weakest spot in the programmes is the variety department. The supply of humour capable of being put across the ether has always been short; lately it seems to be in danger of petering out. The pair of comedians who recently complained in the daily press that their engagements had been reduced would have been better advised had they made no song about it. For the plain fact was that after the novelty of their turn had worn off, there was nothing beneath. There are still some turns in the programmes that are desolating in their feebleness. No doubt the perpetrators could make something of their material with the aid of facial expression, an old hat, a baggy pair of trousers, or any other of the accessories that carry many a music-hall turn to triumphant success. But no amount of funniosity in manner can blind us for long to feebleness in matter. For once in a way 'tis words we want, not deeds; without genuine verbal humour no entertainer is worth his place in a wireless programme. I daresay the B.B.C. realises this, but one has doubts at times.

---

We seem to have been poorly served lately in the way of good public speeches. I believe that a great body of listeners enjoy this kind of turn, so much so that the time is ripe for letting us hear an occasional oration from the House of Commons. What about the Budget speech?—or at least that juicy part in which Mr. Churchill will announce a shilling off the Income Tax and a return to the penny post. Seriously, I am sure that once or twice in a session the final hour-and-a-half of a debate on some crucial topic would be welcomed by the majority of listeners.

---

This raises the question of the broadcasting of controversial matter. It is hard to see on what ground this restriction has been maintained for so long. Controversy is the quickest, surest, and by far the most interesting way of getting at the truth. Let us have more debates on vital social and political matters. Real hammer-and-tongs debates, too—not placid lecture duets. After all, when controversial matter is admitted (as it must be sooner or later) it will be no novelty, for every week we hear announcers and talkers make statements that are very debatable indeed. Recently, for example, an announcer prefaced some Delius performances by speaking of that composer as England's greatest. I don't say he isn't, but I also maintain that nobody can say he is. Delius has written much exquisite music, but were I a controversialist I might submit that Elgar is greater, because he has touched music successfully at more points than Delius.

If I could summon up enough courage I should go on to argue that the appeal of Delius was restricted in comparison with that of Elgar. And if my opponent scoffed at this, I should reply (warming into something like boldness) that the test is one through which all the greatest composers of the past have come with flying colours. Having then given a list of works that show Elgar's appeal to such widely different publics as those reached by (say) the Violoncello Concerto and the 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches, and having challenged the other side to produce a similar list of works by Delius, I should shrink once more into my shell.

I was glad to see Mr. Hamilton Fyfe's Radio Times article on the suitability of Shakespeare's plays for transmission. In these pages about two years ago I maintained that, given first-rate speakers, the plays gained greatly by being heard without distractions of any kind. As Mr. Fyfe says, the imagination can supply infinitely better scenery and figures than any theatrical producer can give us; and the poetry can make its full appeal. There is a further point. At present the picture papers and the cinema are destroying the mental vision of hundreds of thousands: there can be no better counter-stroke than beautifully-spoken wireless drama. It is high time that a public whose intelligence is being atrophied by taking both its news and its amusements in picture form (like children) should have at least an occasional opportunity of giving its mind's eye a job for a change.

---

The B.B.C. hit on an excellent idea when it decided to invite a gathering of critics and other musicians to certain of its performances of contemporary music. It is essential that critics should hear this music in as advantageous circumstances as possible; perfect transmission cannot be guaranteed in the case of music so complex and so dependent on niceties of tone-colour and balance. I had the privilege of being present during the chamber music concert on January 6, when Schönberg, Schuloff, Milhaud, and Stravinsky had a run. I gather from listening friends that the transmission was good, especially in Stravinsky's Octet for wind instruments. This was to be expected, for the dry tone of the wood-wind is usually successful in broadcasting, as in gramophone recording. Personally, I found the Octet about the best work of the evening. The Schönberg was too continuously complex. It had some beautiful stuff in it—beautiful in the normal musical way, I mean, for the work was written over twenty years ago, before the composer took the wrong turning. In fact, it was almost cloying at times, but there could be no question as to the effectiveness of most of it. The Stravinsky work was fiendishly clever: Igor leaves all his imitators standing, so far as technique is concerned. A colleague whispered that the Octet was good to hear—once. But the end found me differing from him; I wanted to hear it again—though not just then.

---

The Radio Times need never be short of comic relief so long as its correspondence columns contain letters from the stout conservatives who in answer to the question, 'Is Bartók mad—or are we?' are quite sure that the dottiness is all on the side of the composer. How many of them really listen to his ravings? Probably most of them switch off, as I do when whispering baritones, voiceless basses, and silent tenors are announced. I am not yet a Bartókian, but I feel that the B.B.C. is doing a fine bit of public work in giving us a chance of getting on terms with such composers. No other organization can do it—at all events so effectively and consistently. Without some such agency, contemporary composers would have so poor a chance that an undoubted genius might be allowed to languish in obscurity. We need not complain of having to sit through a good many noisy futilities if occasionally there comes to performance a fine work that in the ordinary way would have had no hearing. Like most listeners, I am at times peeved by the B.B.C., but I raise my hat when I remember that, thanks to its adventurous policy in this matter, I can sample for myself stacks of new works that otherwise would be unknown to me, even by name. 'Lover of True Beauty,' 'Mendelssohnian,' 'Anti-Savage,' and other protestants, are barking up the wrong tree. Bartók is not mad; nor are they. But they are in almost as bad a plight, for they are in a rut, with a hermetically-sealed mind, instead of being on the high road with an open one. They are not to blame for disliking Bartók; their fault is that they object to the rest of us being given opportunities which they themselves are too lazy to use.

---

P.S.—That question of humour: Since writing the above I have sampled 'Charlot's Hour'—the second, on January 19 (I missed the first). It bore out my contention that success on the stage is not always — or indeed often — transferable to the Studio. Thus, Elsie Randolph and Jack Buchanan are highly entertaining in the theatre (largely owing to their dancing), but they didn't put much of their talent over the radio. The whole troupe together raised scarcely a smile at my end, and even the special audience in the Studio seemed to laugh (as the performers joked) wi' deeficulty. The pæans that hailed the start of this new venture led me to expect a good deal; I got very little. Mr. Charlot must do better than this; and as a first step, he should endeavour to tear himself away from the microphone for more than a few minutes at a time. He must not take the term 'Charlot's Hour' too literally: his job is to find some really funny people and give them fifty-five of the sixty minutes.

---

THE BOOSTER IN ORGAN BUILDING

By Reginald Whitworth

Some time ago in the Musical Times the question was asked, 'What is a Booster?' and as opinions seemed rather to differ on the matter, the writer feels that the following remarks might prove helpful.

The term 'booster' seems to come from America, and is in common use in the electrical world to describe an apparatus for adding to (and in some cases for taking from) an already existing electro-motive force.

The strictly correct application of the term would therefore appear to apply only when an already existing force (e.g., wind-pressure) is bolstered up, or increased.

It will be seen from the above that when an organ possesses a separate blower for the heavy wind it is not really a 'booster,' but merely a blower, raising the atmospheric pressure to 15, 20, 30, or more inches wind-gauge pressure.

Father Willis's extraordinarily clever device for starting and stopping the blowing machinery in the Dome of St. Paul's Cathedral was not in any sense a booster. The four high-pressure hydraulic engines raised ordinary atmosphere to 25-in. wind by means of feeder bellows. True, the four hydraulic valves were opened by a small bellows controlled by the stop 'hydraulic engines,' which admitted wind to this small bellows from the main bellows in the crypt, but no existing wind-pressure was raised thereby. Admittedly this was a very ingenious idea, and it may be interesting to note that one of the H.P. bellows (in rising) also automatically switched on the generator for the action-current of the Dome organ.

(Continued on page 151)

The Musical Times. EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. February 1, 1928.

No. 1409 NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK Price (2*d.*).
(SECOND SERIES)

FAIR ARE THOSE EYES

No. 3 OF "6 AYRES TO 4 VOYCES"

BY

MICHAEL CAVENDISH (1598)

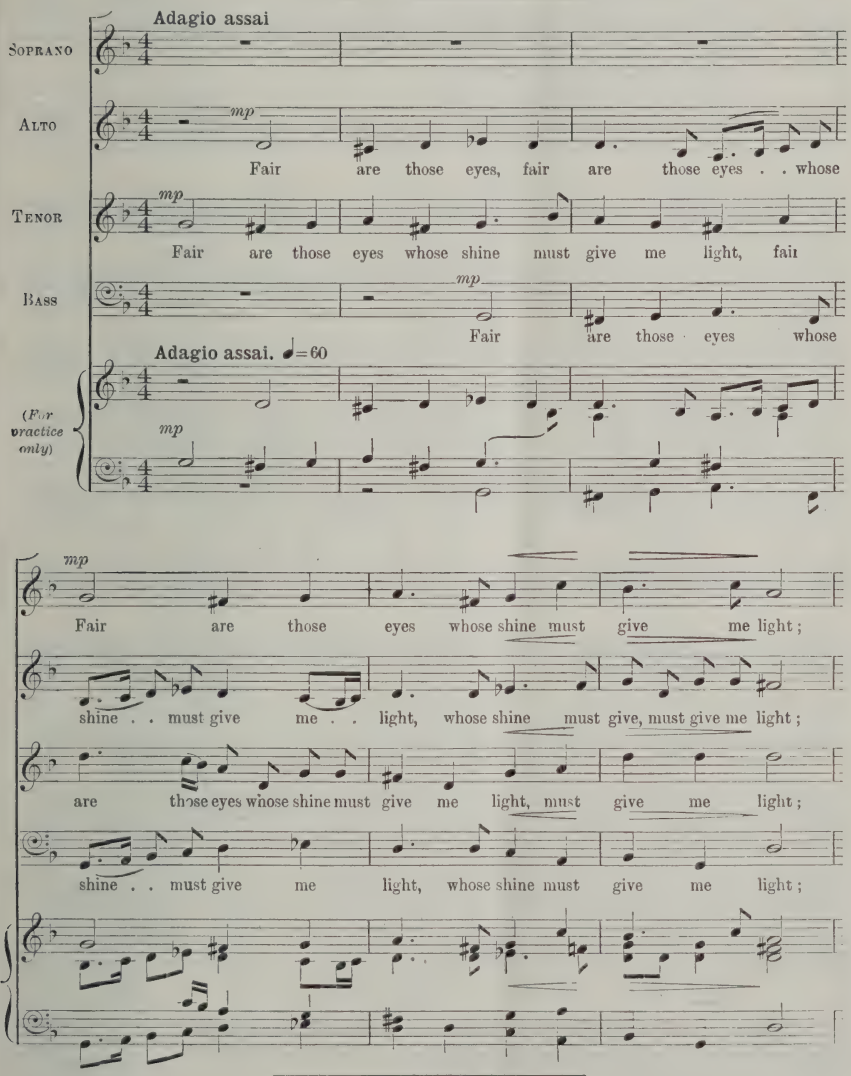
TRANSCRIBED FROM THE ORIGINAL EDITION BY PETER WARLOCK & PHILIP WILSON

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Adagio assai
Soprano
Alto
mp
Fair are those eyes, fair are those eyes . . whose Tenor
mp
Fair are those eyes whose shine must give me light, fair
Bass
mp
Fair are those eyes whose
Adagio assai. ♩=60
(For practice only)
mp
mp
Fair are those eyes whose shine must give me light; shine . . must give me . . light, whose shine must give, must give me light;
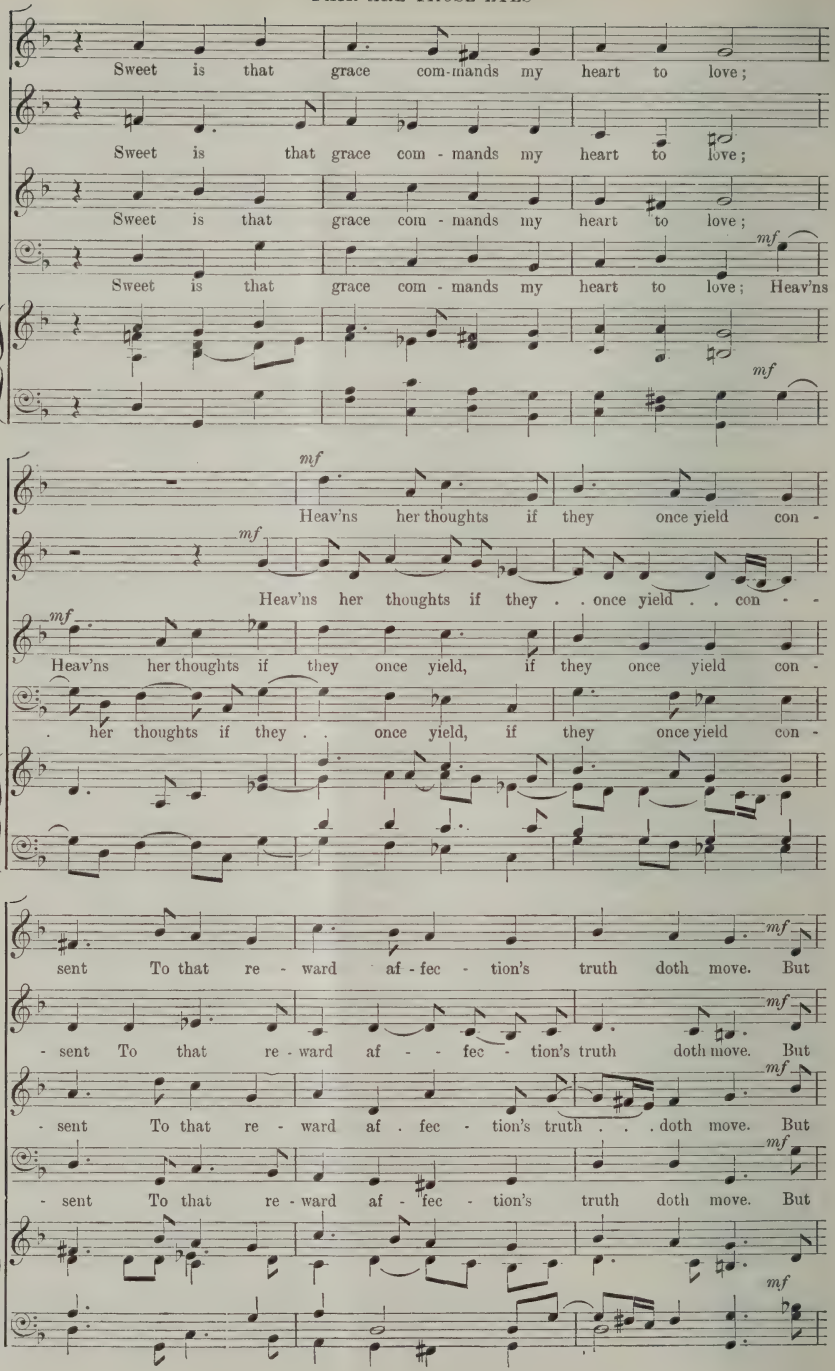
are those eyes whose shine must give me light, must give me light;
shine . . must give me light, whose shine must give me light;

N.B.—There are no indications of tempo or expression in the original edition. Those suggested here may be varied at the discretion of the conductor.

MADE IN ENGLAND



Sweet is that grace com-mands my heart to love;
Sweet is that grace com - mands my heart to love;
Sweet is that grace com - mands my heart to love;
Sweet is that grace com - mands my heart to love; Heav'ns
Heav'ns her thoughts if they once yield con -
Heav'ns her thoughts if they . . once yield . . con - -
Heav'ns her thoughts if they once yield, if they once yield con -
. her thoughts if they . . once yield, if they once yield con - sent To that re - ward af - fec - tion's truth doth move. But
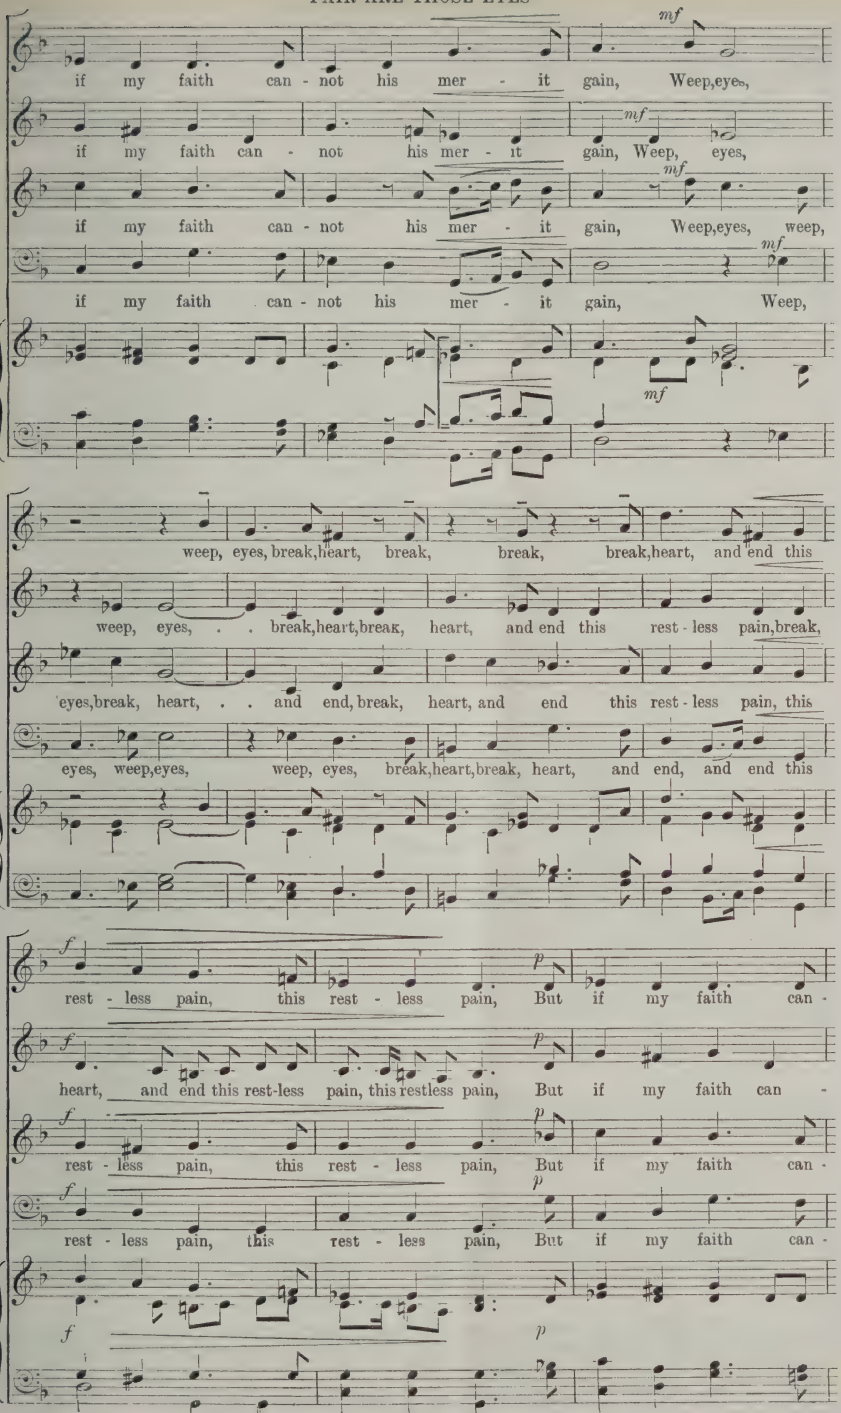
- sent To that re - ward af - - fec - tion's truth doth move. But
- sent To that re - ward af . fec - tion's truth . . . doth move. But
- sent To that re - ward af - fec - tion's truth doth move. But



mf
if my faith can - not his mer - it gain, Weep,eyes,
if my faith can - not his mer - it gain, Weep, eyes,
if my faith can - not his mer - it gain, Weep,eyes, weep,
if my faith can - not his mer - it gain, Weep, weep, eyes, break,heart, break, break, break,heart, and end this weep, eyes, . . break,heart,break, heart, and end this rest - less pain,break, eyes,break, heart, . . and end, break, heart, and end this rest - less pain, this eyes, weep,eyes, weep, eyes, break,heart,break, heart, and end, and end this
f
p rest - less pain, this rest - less pain, But if my faith can - heart, and end this rest-less pain, this restless pain, But if my faith can - rest - less pain, this rest - less pain, But if my faith can - rest - less pain, this rest - less pain, But if my faith can -

mf
- not his mer - it gain, Weep, eyes, weep, eyes, break, heart, break,
mf
- not his mer - it gain, Weep, eyes, weep, eyes, . . break, heart, break,
mf
- not his mer - it gain, Weep, eyes, weep, eyes, break, heart, . . and end, break,
mf
- not his mer - it gain, Weep, eyes, weep, eyes, weep, eyes, break, mf
f
rit.
pp
break, break, heart, and end this rest - less pain, this rest - less pain.
f
rit.
pp
heart, and end this rest - less pain, break, heart, and end this restless pain, this restless pain.
f
rit.
pp
heart, and end this rest - less pain, this rest - less pain, this rest - less pain.
f
rit.
pp
heart, break, heart, and end, and end this rest - less pain, this rest - less pain.
f
rit.
pp

No. 1148. BENEDICITE, OMNIA OPERA (shortened form).—C. H. Lloyd. Price (2*d.*).

NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK.

Te Deum Laudamus.

(For Chant, Unison, and Gregorian Settings, see separate sections.)

1054. Adlam, F., in D .. .. .. 4d.
288. Adlam, F., in E flat .. .. .. 6d.
1048. Adlam, F., in F (easy) .. .. 4d.
1119. Alcock, W. G., in A .. .. .. 8d.
652. §Alcock, W. G., in B flat .. .. 6d.
5. Allen, G., in D .. .. .. 4d.
14. Armes, P., in G .. .. .. 4d.
980. Armes, P., in G .. .. .. 8d.
16. Arnold, G. B., in C .. .. 4d.
877. Arnott, A. D., in F .. .. 1s.
411. Attwater, J. P., in B flat .. 6d.
163. Baker, A. S., in C .. .. .. 6d.
1040.*Baker, H., in F .. .. .. 4d.
35. Barrett, E. R., in E flat .. .. 4d.
743. Bennett, G. J., in E flat .. 6d.
997. Bennett, G. J., in B flat .. 6d.
18. Best, W. T., in C (easy) .. .. 4d.
546. §Blair, H., in D (Festival) .. 8d.
786. Blair, H., in E flat .. .. .. 4d.
724. Booth, J., in D .. .. .. 6d.
346. §Brewer, A. H., in B flat .. .. 4d.
588. §Brewer, A. H., in E flat .. .. 6d.
145. Brown, A. H., in A .. .. .. 4d.
842. Bullivant, G., in E flat (Festival) 6d.
1078. Bunnett, E., in A .. .. .. 4d.
1084. Bunnett, E., in E .. .. .. 4d.
1098. Bunnett, E., in G .. .. .. 4d.
754. Button, H. E., in E flat .. .. 4d.
9. Calkin, J. B., in D (easy) .. .. 4d.
1132. Calkin, J. B., in D .. .. .. 4d.
798. Cambridge, F., in B flat .. .. 4d.
12. Clarke, J. H., in F .. .. .. 2d.
730. Cobb, G. F., in G .. .. .. 4d.
416. Coleridge-Taylor, S., in F .. 6d.
860. Couldrey, H. R., in D .. .. 4d.
751. Cummings, W. H., in D .. .. 4d.
679. Dawre, R., in F (Festal form) .. 6d.
1058. Duncan, E., in G .. .. .. 6d.
26. *Dykes, J. B., in F .. .. .. 2d.
31. Elliott, J. W., in F .. .. 4d.
49. Elliott, J. W., in D .. .. 4d.
672. Farrant, R., in G minor .. .. 6d.
40. Fisher, A. E., in D .. .. .. 4d.
63. Fisher, A. E., in A .. .. .. 6d.
472. Ford, E., in F .. .. .. 4d.
392. Foster, M. B., in C .. .. .. 6d.
36. Gadsby, H., in E flat .. .. 4d.
207. Gale, C. R., in F .. .. .. 6d.

6. *Garrett, G. M., in F (easy) .. 4d.
439. German, J. E., in F .. .. .. 8d.
274. *Goss, John, in A .. .. .. 4d.
340. §Goss, John, in D (Thanksgiving) 8d.
248. *Goss, John, in F .. .. .. 4d.
729. Gray, A., in G .. .. .. 6d.
10. Haking, R., in C .. .. .. 2d.
993. Hall, K., in B flat .. .. .. 6d.
504. Hall, E. V., in D (easy) .. .. 4d.
693. Do., in G (Congregational) (easy) 4d.
693B. Do. Melody only .. .. 1½d.
572. Hopkins, E. J., in A .. .. 8d.
15. *Hopkins, J. L., in G .. .. 4d.
963. Howell, H., in E .. .. .. 4d.
378. Huntley, G. F., in E flat .. .. 6d.
44. Hutchinson, T., in E flat.. .. 2d.
750. Ireland, John, in F .. .. 4d.
29. Irons, H. S., in G .. .. .. 4d.
726. Keeton, H., in B flat .. .. 4d.
647. Kempton, T., in B flat .. .. 6d.
680. King, C., in C .. .. .. 6d.
552. King, O. A. (with Jubilate), in D .. 8d.
131. Lane, E. B., in F .. .. .. 4d.
684. Lee, E. M., in C .. .. .. 4d.
447. Lemare, E. H., in F .. .. 6d.
449. §Lemare, E. H., in E flat .. .. 8d.
27. Littleton, A. H., in E flat (easy) 2d.
151. Lutkin, P. C., in C .. .. .. 6d.
17. Macfarren, W., in C (easy) .. 4d.
988. Macfarren, W., in A .. .. 6d.
249. Macfarren, C., in F .. .. 6d.
758. Macpherson, C., in E flat .. 6d.
153. Macpherson, S., in E flat .. 6d.
83. *Marchant, A. W., in E flat .. 4d.
362.§*Martin, G. C., in A .. .. .. 8d.
659. Martin, G. C., in C .. .. .. 1s.
578 Matthews, T. R., in G .. .. 2d.
579. Matthews, T. R., in E .. .. 2d.
39. Miller, C. E., in D .. .. .. 4d.
262. Monk, M. J., in G .. .. .. 6d
13. Monk, W. H., in A .. .. .. 4d.
34. Morley, T., in F .. .. .. 4d.
807. Mosenthal, J. (with Jubilate), in E 8d.
614. Naylor, E. W., in A .. .. 6d.
25. Nunn, J. H., in F .. .. .. 2d.
11. Ouseley, F., in F .. .. .. 4d.

119. *Ouseley, F., in D .. .. .. 4d
1128.*Parry, C. H. H., in D .. .. 4d.
728. Pointer, J., in B flat .. .. 4d.
778. Pullein, J., in B flat .. .. 4d.
722. Read, F. J., in D .. .. .. 4d.
33. Reay, S., in F.. .. .. .. 4d.
882. Ridsdale, C. J. (Festal) .. .. 8d.
1010. Roberts, J. V., in D .. .. 4d.
1013. Roberts, J. V., in E .. .. 6d.
1016. Roberts, J. V., in F .. .. 6d.
1019. Roberts, J. V., in G .. .. 6d.
834. Ross, W. G., in A .. .. .. 4d.
627. Selby, B. L., in G .. .. .. 6d.
906. Selby, B. L., in G minor .. .. 4d.
409. Shaw, J., in G (easy) .. .. 4d.
32.§*Smart, H., in F .. .. .. 4d.
375. Smith, B., in E flat .. .. .. 6d.
955. Smith, B. (with Jubilate), in D .. 4d.
856. Smith, B., in G (No. 5) .. .. 4d.
388. Somervell, A., in F .. .. 4d.
19. *Stainer, J., in C (easy) .. .. 4d.
136. Stainer, J., in G (Congregational) 4d.
273. Steane, E., in F .. .. .. 4d.
1. Steggall, C., in A (easy) .. .. 4d.
696. Steggall, C., in F (Congregational) 3d.
24. Stephens, C. E., in C .. .. 4d.
21. Stewart, R. P., in G .. .. 4d.
2. *Sullivan, A. S., in D .. .. 2d.
474. Thorne, E. H. (with Jubilate), in G 8d.
983. Thorne, E. H., in E flat .. .. 6d.
23. Tilleard, J., in F .. .. .. 2d.
73. Tilleard, J., in G (Festival) .. 2d.
66. Toop, A., in C .. .. .. 6d.
144. Tozer, F., in D (easy) .. .. 4d.
617. Tozer, F., in F (easy) .. .. 3d.
805. Tozer, F., in E flat .. .. 4d.
41. Trimnell, T. T., in D (Festival) 4d.
109. Walmisley, T. F., in C .. .. 4d.
708. Wareing, H. W., in G .. .. 6d.
589. Warren, R. H., in E flat .. .. 6d.
1047. Watkins, D., in B flat .. .. 4d.
45. §Westbury, G. H., in A .. .. 4d.
43. West, John E., in B flat (easy) .. 4d.
912. West, John E., in F .. .. 6d.
70.§*West, John E., in G .. .. 4d.
558. Williams, C. Lee, in A .. .. 8d.
780. Wolstenholme, W., in A flat .. 4d.
37. *Woodward, H. H., in E flat .. 4d.

Te Deum Laudamus (Chant Settings).

523. Barnby, J. (in B flat) (with other Canticles) .. .. .. .. 6d.
443. Bartholomew, M. (nine Chants) 2d.
1032. Best, W. T., in G .. .. .. 4d.
1085. Bunnett, E., in E .. .. .. 4d.
1093. Bunnett, E., in F .. .. .. 4d.
644. Button, H. E. .. .. .. .. 2d.
38. Carnall, A., in C (easy) .. .. 4d.
1004. Chambers, H. A., in A .. .. 4d.
308. Chipp, E. T., in D .. .. .. 4d.
311. Chipp, E. T., in E flat .. .. 4d.
312. Chipp, E. T., in C .. .. .. 4d.
976. Couldrey, H. R. (No. 2, in D) .. 3d.
973. Couldrey, H. R., in B flat .. 4d.
880. Deane, J. H., in E .. .. .. 3d.
881. Deane, J. H., in G .. .. .. 3d.
371. Eyre, A. J., in D (Quadruple) .. 3d.
408. Field, J. T., in A .. .. .. 6d.
516. Gauntlett, H. J., in G .. .. 4d.
246. *Goss, John, in C .. .. .. 3d.

249. Goss, John, in D .. .. .. 4d.
10. Haking, R., in C .. .. .. 2d.
693. Hall, E. V., in G (Congregational) (easy) .. .. .. .. 4d.
693B. Do. Melody only .. .. 1½d.
147. Hamilton-Gell, A. W., in G .. 2d.
144. Harris, C. (Congregational) .. 4d.
22. Herbert, E., in D .. .. .. 4d.
158. Hopkins, E. J., in F.. .. .. 4d.
29. Irons, H. S., in G .. .. .. 4d.
456. Littleton, A. H., in D .. .. 4d.
17. Macfarren, W., in C .. .. 4d.
164. Macpherson, G., in E flat.. .. 2d.
964. *Oakeley, H. S. (Quadruple), in F 2d.
11. Ouseley, F., in F .. .. .. 4d.
119. *Ouseley, F., in D .. .. .. 4d.
231. Pettman, E., No. 1 .. .. 2d.
238. Pettman, E., No. 2 .. .. 2d.
42. Pratten, W., in E .. .. .. 4d.
819. Roberts, J. V., in A .. .. 2d.

820. Roberts, J. V., in B flat .. .. 2d.
106. Roberts, J. V., in C .. .. 2d.
105. Roberts, J. V., in D .. .. 2d.
822. Roberts, J. V., in E .. .. 2d.
821. Roberts, J. V., in E flat .. .. 2d.
104. Roberts, J. V., in F .. .. 2d.
107. Roberts, J. V., in G .. .. 2d.
88. *Smith, B., in F. .. .. .. 2d.
954. Smith, B. (No. 3, with Jubilate), in G 4d.
188. Smith, B., in E flat .. .. 4d.
413. Stainer, J., in A flat .. .. 4d.
86. Sumner, H. J. H., in F♭ (Soprano voices) .. .. .. .. 4d.
20. Thorne, E. H., in C .. .. 4d.
1008. Tomblin, R. G., in A flat .. .. 4d.
294. Turle, J., in E flat .. .. .. 2d.
51. Vincent, C., in D .. .. .. 4d.
1126. Wesley, S. S., in F (Short Score) (with Jubilate, etc.) .. .. 6d.
914. West, John E., in G .. .. 2d

Te Deum Laudamus (Unison Settings).

5. Allen, G., in D .. .. .. 4d.
14 Armes, P., in G .. .. .. 4d.
3. *Barnby, J., in D .. .. .. 4d.
4. *Barnby, J., in B flat .. .. 4d.
1137. Bennett, G. J., in D .. .. 4d.
346. Brewer, A. H., in B flat (partly) 4d.
9. Calkin, J. B., in D .. .. .. 4d.
30. Chipp, E. T., in D .. .. .. 4d.
63. Fisher, A. E., in A (partly) .. 6d.

267. Goss, John, in A .. .. .. 3d.
10. Haking, R., in C .. .. .. 2d.
147. Hamilton-Gell, A. W., in G .. 2d.
765. Hopkins, E. J., in B flat .. .. 4d.
8. Macfarren, G. A., in G .. .. 4d.
579. Matthews, T. R., in E .. .. 2d.
7. *Monk, E. G., in A .. .. .. 4d.
437. Naylor, E. W., in E flat .. .. 4d.
119. *Ouseley, F., in D .. .. .. 4d.

11. Ouseley, F., in F .. .. .. 4d.
28. Redhead, R., in D (Congregational) 4d.
497. Selby, B. L., in D .. .. .. 4d.
136. Stainer, J., in G (Congregational) 4d.
1. Steggall, C., in A .. .. .. 4d.
696. Steggall, C., in F (Congregational) 3d.
24. Stephens, C. E., in C .. .. 4d.
20. Thorne, E. H., in C .. .. 4d.

Te Deum Laudamus (Gregorian Tones).

230. Ambrosian Melody .. .. 4d.
893. Ambrosian Melody .. .. 4d.
805. Do. (Ed. by J. F. Bridge) 4d.

380. Jordan, W. (5th Tone) .. .. 2d.
953. Smith, B., in B flat (Plain Song) 2d.
237. Stainer, J. (1st Series) .. .. 3d.

300. Stainer, J. (2nd Series) .. .. 4d
282. Stainer, J. (3rd Series) .. .. 4d
255. Stainer, J. (4th Series) .. .. 4d.

§ Orchestral Parts may be had. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MADE IN ENGLAND

Benedicite

| | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1. O all ye Works of the Lord, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 2. O ye Angels of the | Lord, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 4. O ye Waters that be above the Firmament, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 5. O all ye Powers of the | Lord, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 7. O ye Stars of Heaven, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 8. O ye Showers and | Dew, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 10. O ye Fire and Heat, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 11. O ye Winter and | Sum-mer, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 13. O ye Frost and Cold, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 14. O ye Ice and | Snow, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 16. O ye Light and Darkness, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 17. O ye Lightnings and | Clouds, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 19. O ye Mountains and Hills, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 20. O all ye Green Things upon the | Earth, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 22. O ye Seas and Floods, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 23. O ye Whales, and all that move in the | Wa-ters, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 25. O all ye Beasts and Cattle, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 26. O ye Children of | Men, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| 28. O ye Priests of the Lord, | bless | ye the | Lord : | 29. O ye Servants of the | Lord, | bless | ye the | Lor |
| | | | | 31. O ye holy and humble Men of | heart, | bless | ye the | Lor |

nnia Opera

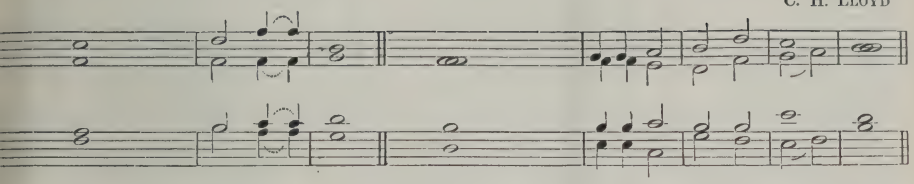
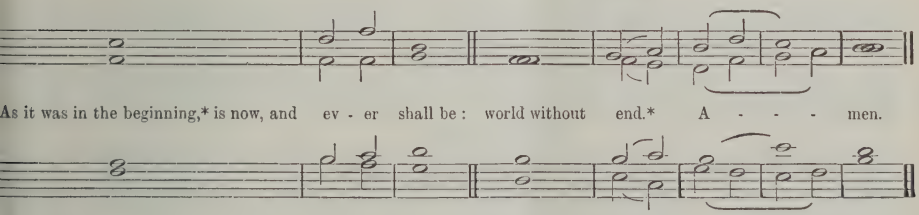
C. H. Lloyd



| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 3. O ye Heavens, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 5. O ye Sun and Moon, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 0. O ye Winds of God, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 2. O ye Dews and Frosts, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 5. O ye Nights and Days, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 8. O let the Earth | bless the | Lord : | yea, let it praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 1. O ye Wells, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 4. O all ye Fowls of the Air, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 7. O let Israel | bless the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 0. O ye Spirits and Souls of the Righteous, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |
| 2. O Ananias, Azarias, and Misael, | bless ye the | Lord : | praise Him, and | mag-ni-fy | Him for | ev - | - er. |



As it was in the beginning,* is now, and ev - er shall be : world without end.* A - - - men.

NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK.

Jubilate Deo.

(For Chant and Unison Settings, see separate sections.)

981. Armes, Philip, in G .. .. 4d.
441. Arnold, G. B., in C .. .. 2d.
879. Arnott, A. D., in F .. .. 6d.
1041.*Baker, Henry, in F .. .. 2d.
745. Bennett, George J., in E flat .. 4d.
999. Bennett, G. J., in B flat .. 4d.
347. Brewer, A. H., in B flat .. .. 2d.
602. Brewer, A. H., in E flat .. .. 4d.
1087. Bunnett, E., in E (with Benedictus) .. .. .. .. 4d.
1094. Bunnett, E., in F (with Benedictus .. .. .. .. 6d.
1080. Bunnett, E., in A .. .. 4d.
755. Button, H. Elliot, in E flat .. 3d.
1133. Calkin, J. B., in D .. .. 2d.
731. Cobb, G. F., in G .. .. .. 3d.
418. Coleridge-Taylor, S., in F .. 4d.
752. Cummings, W. H., in D .. .. 2d.
678. Dawre, R., in F (Festal form) .. 4d.
1059. Duncan, E., in G .. .. .. 4d.
50. Elliott, J. W., in D .. .. 4d.
472a. Ford, E., in F .. .. .. 2d.
393. Foster, Myles B., in C .. .. 4d.
208. Gale, C. R., in F .. .. .. 4d.
275. *Goss, John, in A .. .. .. 2d.
994. Hall, King, in B flat .. .. 4d.
75. Hamilton-Gell, A. W., in E flat 2d.
573. Hopkins, E. J., in A .. .. 4d.
911. Ireland, John, in F .. .. 4d.
727. Keeton, Haydn, in B flat .. 2d.
648. Kempton, Thomas, in B flat .. 4d.
681. King, Charles, in C .. .. 3d.
552. King, Oliver, in D (with Te Deum) 8d.
643. Lutkin, P. C., in C .. .. .. 4d.
990. Macfarren, W., in A (with Kyrie) 6d.
229. Macpherson, C., in F .. .. 4d.
444. Matthews, T. R., in C .. .. 2d.
807. Mosenthal, J. (with Te Deum), in E 8d.
615. Naylor, E. W., in A .. .. 4d.
779. Pullein, John, in B flat .. .. 3d.
723. Read, F. J., in D .. .. .. 3d.
1029. Reay, S., in F .. .. .. 4d.
1011. Roberts, J. V., in D .. .. 3d.
628. Selby, B. L., in G .. .. .. 4d.
410. Shaw, J., in G .. .. .. 2d.
955. Smith, B., in D (with Te Deum) 4d.
389. *Somervell, A., in F .. .. 4d.
303. Steane, Bruce, in F .. .. 4d.
698. Steggall, C., in F (Congregational) 3d.
1026. Stewart, R. P., in G .. .. 2d.
69. *Sullivan, A., in D (with Kyrie).. 4d.
474. Thorne, E. H., in G (with Te Deum) 8d.
985. Thorne, E. H., in E flat .. .. 4d.
460. Tilleard, J., in F (with Kyrie) .. 2d
621. Tozer, Ferris, in F .. .. 3d.
120. Walmisley, T. F., in C .. .. 4d.
709. Wareing, Herbert W., in G .. 4d.
558. Williams, in A (with Te Deum) .. 8d.
781. Wolstenholme, W., in A flat .. 4d.

Jubilate Deo (Chant Settings).

523. Barnby, J. (with other Canticles) 6d.
1033. Best, W. T., in A .. .. .. 2d.
1088. Bunnett, E., in E (with Benedictus) .. .. .. .. 4d.
310. Chipp, E. T., in E flat .. .. 3d.
313. Chipp, E. T., in C .. .. .. 3d.
148. Hamilton-Gell, A. W., in G .. 2d.
509. Macfarren, W., in C (with Kyrie) 2d.
954. Smith, B. (with Te Deum No. 3, in G) .. .. .. .. 4d.
295. Turle, J. (with Kyrie), in E flat .. .. .. .. 2d.
1126. Wesley, S. S., in F (Short Score) (with Te Deum, etc.) .. .. 6d.

Jubilate Deo (Unison Settings).

441. Arnold, G. B., in C (Partly) .. 2d.
1139. Bennett, G. J., in D .. .. 3d.
347. Brewer, A. H., in B flat (Partly) 2d.
755. Button, H. Elliot, in E flat (Ptly.) 3d.
245. Goss, John, in A .. .. .. 3d.
148. Hamilton-Gell, A. W., in G .. 2d.
766. Hopkins, E. J., in B flat .. .. 2d.
1005. Macfarren, G. A., in G .. .. 2d.
444. Matthews, T. R., in C .. .. 2d.
1023. Monk, E. G., in A .. .. .. 2d.
410. Shaw, J., in G (Partly) .. .. 2d.
698. Steggall, C., in F (Partly) (Congregational) .. .. .. 3d.

Benedictus.

(For Chant, Unison, and Gregorian Settings, see separate sections.)

288. Adlam, F., in E flat (with Te Deum) 6d.
1049. Adlam, Frank, in F (easy) .. 4d.
653. Alcock, W. G., in B flat .. .. 6d.
878. Arnott, A. D., in F .. .. 8d.
744. Bennett, George J., in E flat .. 4d.
998. Bennett, G. J., in B flat .. .. 4d.
787. Blair, Hugh, in E flat .. .. 4d.
146. Brown, A. H., in A .. .. 4d.
1079. Bunnett, E., in A .. .. 4d.
1087. Bunnett, E., in E (with Jubilate) 4d.
1094. Bunnett, E., in F (with Jubilate) 6d.
1134. Calkin, J. B., in D .. .. 4d.
417. Coleridge-Taylor, S., in F .. 6d.
56. Elliott, J. W., in D .. .. 4d.
673. Farrant, R., in G minor .. .. 4d.
254. Goss, John, in A .. .. .. 4d.
317. Goss, John, in D .. .. .. 4d.
774. Gray, Alan, in G .. .. .. 4d.
996. Hall, King, in B flat .. .. 6d.
48. Hutchinson, Thomas, in E flat 4d.
883. Ireland, John, in F .. .. 4d.
804. Lee, E. Markham, in C .. .. 4d.
432. Lemare, E. H., in F .. .. 6d.
989. Macfarren, W., in A .. .. 4d.
700. Macpherson, Charles, in F .. 6d.
759. Macpherson, Charles, in E flat 4d.
154. Macpherson, S., in E flat .. 6d.
84. Marchant, Arthur W., in E flat 4d.
373. Martin, George C., in A.. .. 6d.
659. Martin, George C., in C.. .. 1s.
580. Matthews, T. R., in E flat .. 3d.
609. Monk, M. J., in G .. .. .. 4d.
1129. Parry, C. H. H., in D .. .. 4d.
121. Read, F. J., in D .. .. .. 2d.
1014. Roberts, J. V., in E .. .. 4d.
1017. Roberts, J. V., in F .. .. 4d.
1020. Roberts, J. V., in G .. .. 4d.
629. Selby, B. L., in G .. .. .. 4d.
297. Steane, Bruce, in F .. .. 4d.
697. Steggall, C., in F (Congregational) 3d.
984. Thorne, E. H., in E flat .. .. 4d.
619. Tozer, Ferris, in F .. .. 4d.
718. Wareing, Herbert W., in G .. 6d.
920. Wesley, S. S., in E .. .. 6d.
913. West, John E., in F .. .. 4d.
528. West, John E., in G .. .. 6d.
468. Westbury, G. H., in A .. .. 4d.

Benedictus (Chant Settings).

523. Barnby, J. (with other Canticles) 6d.
1088. Bunnett, E., in E (with Jubilate) 4d.
309. Chipp, E. T., in D .. .. .. 3d.
733. Cobb, G. F., in G .. .. .. 3d
848. Dykes, J. B., in F .. .. .. 2d.
408. Field, J. T., in D .. .. .. 6d.
247. *Goss, John, in C .. .. .. 3d.
694. Hall, E. Vine, in D .. .. 2d.
442. Herbert, E., in D .. .. .. 2d.
759. Holden, G., in A .. .. .. 2d.
517. Jacobs, W., in A .. .. .. 2d.
456. Littleton, A. H., in D .. .. 4d.
122. Roberts, J. V., in F .. .. 2d.
123. Roberts, J. V., in D .. .. 2d.
124. Roberts, J. V., in C .. .. 2d
125. Roberts, J. V., in G .. .. 2d.
188. Smith, B., in E flat .. .. 4d.
1002. Thorne, E. H., in G .. .. 4d.
322. Turle, James, in D .. .. .. 2d.

Benedictus (Unison Settings).

733. Cobb, G. F., in G (Partly).. .. 3d.
828. Dykes, J. B., in F (Partly) .. 2d.
1138. Bennett, G. J., in D .. .. 4d.
244. Goss, John, in A .. .. .. 3d.
84. Marchant, A. W., in E flat (Partly) 4d.
580. Matthews, T. R., in E flat .. 3d.
697. Steggall, C., in F (Partly) (Congregational) .. .. .. 3d.

Benedictus (Gregorian Tones).

645. Button (1st Tone, 2nd ending) .. 2d.
382. Jordan, W. (8th Tone) .. .. 2d.
216. Stainer, J. (1st Series) .. .. 3d.
219. Stainer, J. (2nd Series) .. .. 3d.
307. Stainer, J. (3rd Series) .. .. 3d.
337. Stainer, J. (4th Series) .. .. 3d.
894. Tallis, Thomas (7th Tone) .. 3d.

Apostles' Creed.

197. Bridge, J. F., in G .. .. .. 2d.
527 Bridge, J. F., in F .. .. .. 2d.
320. Cornell, J. H. (monotone G) .. 2d.
348. Cruse, E. (monotone G) .. .. 2d.
111. Elliott, J. W. (on F, monotone) 2d.
321. Monk, E. G., in G .. .. .. 2d.
167. Roberts, in G (reciting note, G) .. 2d.
Ditto, in F (reciting note, F) .. 2d.
76. Staton, W., in F .. .. .. 2d.

Nicene Creed.

198. Bridge, J. F. (reciting note, G) .. 2d.
Ditto, in B flat (reciting note, F) 2d.
349. Crowe, R. W. (monotone) .. .. 4d.
831. *Dykes, J. B., in F .. .. .. 2d.
204. Elliott, J. W., in D .. .. 4d.
674. Farrant, R., in G minor .. .. 4d.
402. Foster, M. B., in C .. .. .. 6d.
350. Gladstone, F. E., in A (Unison) .. 2d.
291. Goss, J., in D (Unison) .. .. 2d.
(Voice Part, 1½d.)
682. King, C., in C (with Kyrie) .. 6d.
505. Macpherson, S. in B flat .. .. 6d.
655. Martin, G. C. (reciting note, G) .. 2d.
95. Merbecke, in F. (Arr. by J. Barnby) 2d.
268. Merbecke, in F (Arr. by J. Stainer) 1½d.
(Folio, 8d.)
706. Percival, S. (chiefly unison) .. 4d.
168. Roberts, J. V. (reciting note, G) .. 2d.
Roberts, J. V. (reciting note, F) .. 2d.
251. Stainer, J., in G (Easy form) .. 3d.
(Folio, 8d.)
597. Steane, B., in F (Four voices) .. 4d
203. Tours, B. (from Service in F) .. 4d.
137. Trimnell, T. T., in F .. .. 4d.
266. Ditto, in C (with Kyrie and Sanctus) 4d.
156. Wesley, S. S., in E .. .. .. 4d.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Four Hymn Tunes

ARRANGED WITH DESCANT BY

H. A. CHAMBERS

SET 1

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

CHURCH TRIUMPHANT

L.M.

J. W. Elliott

COVENANT

6.6.8.4.6.6.8.4.

J. Stainer

LAUDATE DOMINUM

5.5.5.5.6.5.6.5. (10.10.11.11.)

C. H. H. Parry

Copyright, 1915, by Novello and Company, Limited

OMBERSLEY

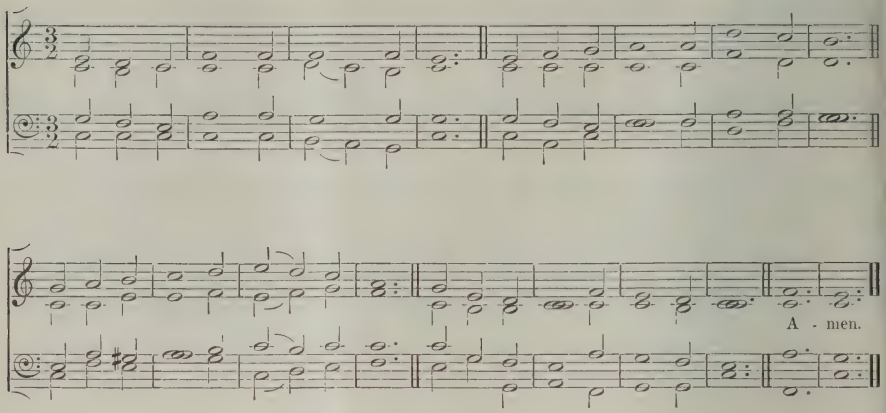
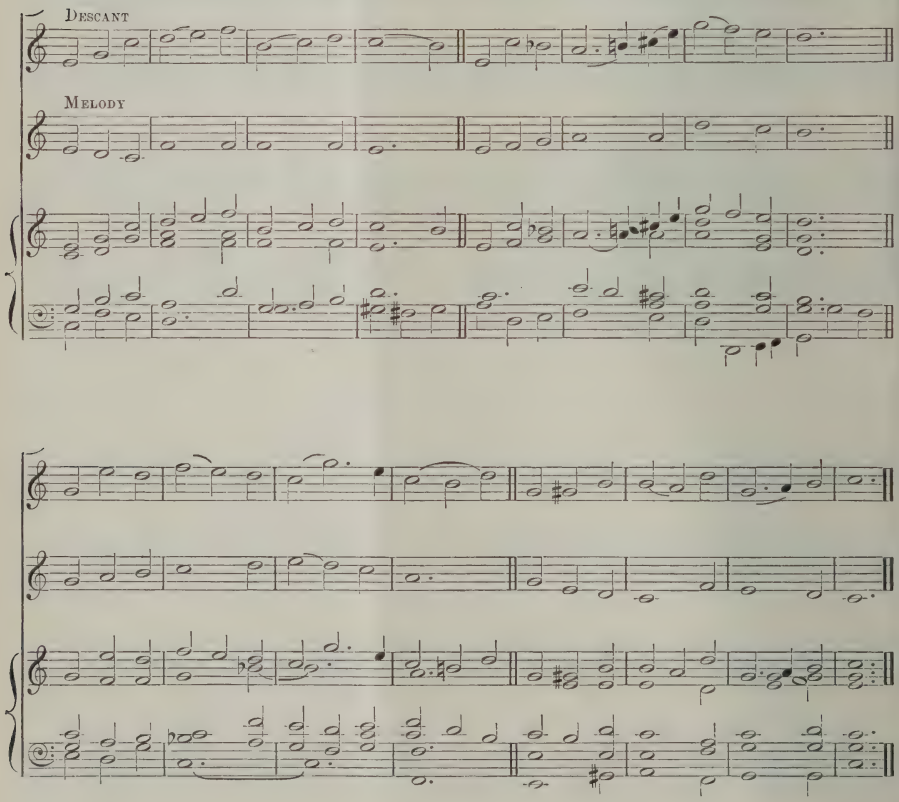
L.M.

W. H. Gladstone





(Continued from page 144.)

One of the first real 'boosters' used for blowing an organ in England was that supplied for the Hope-Jones organ in Worcester Cathedral. This consisted of two large 'Kinetic' multiple-fan blowers. The first one raised the atmosphere to about 20-in. wind-gauge. The second 'Kinetic' blower took in some of this already existing 20-in. pressure wind, and raised it to 30-in. wind-gauge pressure. This principle of blowing has been widely used since; in fact, the multiple fan itself is simply a series of booster fans on one axle. The first, taking in atmosphere and raising it to pressure wind, the second taking that pressure wind and raising it to a higher pressure, and so on, each successive fan raising the already existing pressure.

For the wonderful organ in Liverpool Cathedral the Rockingham Engineering Company has supplied electrically driven rotary blowers delivering wind at 10-in. w.g. and 30-in. w.g., each with boosters taking some of this 10-in. or 30-in. wind and raising it to 20-in. or 50-in. wind-pressure respectively.

At Winchester Cathedral there is, I believe, a set of booster feeders to supply additional wind when the demand is large. These are driven by a gas engine in the Triforium, and when a sudden demand is made by the player, the main bellows in collapsing draws a belt over from a loose to a fixed pulley which operates these additional feeders. This booster set is really to maintain the already existing wind-pressure when it would otherwise be lowered.

One of the cleverest booster blowers known to the writer is that used by Mr. Compton in his organ at Shepherd's Bush Pavilion to raise the 16-in. wind to 32-in. pressure for the Tuba. This booster bellows is actually worked by wind-pressure, a large area bellows at 16-in. w.g. compressing a small area bellows and raising the 16-in. wind therein to 32-in. pressure. It is brought into operation by depressing a stop-key labelled 'Tuba Wind.'

Apart from blowing apparatus, the term 'booster' may be applied to certain parts of organ action in a somewhat less strict sense, where a decreasing pressure is bolstered up. Thus, when in tubular pneumatic action the distance between keys and pallets is great, valves are inserted between to increase the pneumatic impetus in the tube, thereby materially improving the promptness of the action. A good example of this may be cited at Exeter Cathedral, where the 32-ft. pedal pipes are in the south transept and the pedal keys on the screen. These notes would of necessity be late in speech, but the pneumo-motive force is 'boosted' half way across the distance. These booster-chests are popularly known as intermediate boxes, or relays. Often in pressure pneumatic action octave coupler-chests are made to act also as action boosters.

Again, 'booster-pallets' are sometimes used to give an additional supply of wind, where in reconstruction larger pipes are placed on an old sound-board, or to cure that dreadful fault, 'robbing' (when the sound-board bars are too narrow or the pallets are too small), thus causing a decrease in pressure when several stops are in use, with consequent flattening of pitch.

In electric action some builders use 'relays,' but these are not boosters to increase a diminishing current (as used in some forms of telegraphic apparatus), their purpose being generally to make several contacts simultaneously for coupler or transmission action.

I.S.M. CONFERENCE

The turn of London came this year in the round of annual conferences of the Incorporated Society of Musicians. The proceedings in the first week of the year were of a dignified character worthy of the place of music. Beginning with a reception by the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House, the daily events included a concert by the Spencer Dyke Quartet, a banquet, the annual business meeting, and social functions which it suffices merely to mention here. Probably few of the rank and file of the profession when they come to London aspire to a home in the Hotel Metropole, but rightly enough the leaders were housed there, and ample space was provided for meetings. For the public, the interest centred on the daily lectures, and the presidential address at the Mansion House struck a note which resounded through the press of the country. Next day, Dr. E. Markham Lee, finding himself 'notorious,' explained away some of the startling headlines which gave the impression that the Society opposed all mechanised music.

Gramophone and wireless thrived, but Dr. Markham Lee in his opening review observed that the past year was one of more or less universal depression in music. Many musicians in or around middle life found it difficult to meet the altered circumstances. There was only one remedy: to reduce the number of entrants to the profession. The gate of entry to the musical profession should demand not merely a test of musical ability, but one of ordinary general education. With a view to induce diploma-granting bodies to demand such an educational test, the Society had formed an advisory committee of leading musicians. In the discussion, Mr. Rawlinson Wood asked what was the good of having men or women to teach music who could not speak King's English. Sir Henry Coward was not despondent; the wireless undoubtedly injured choral and orchestral societies, but people were being educated who sooner or later would want to hear the real thing. Other speakers also took a cheerful view. Dr. Markham Lee, from the chair, added that he did not deplore wireless or the gramophone any more than he deplored cigarettes; he indulged in all three.

At the annual banquet, Sir Landon Ronald was the chief speaker. He recalled his warning that music was in for a very bad time. Though attacked, his prophesy was fulfilled. As to the gramophone, he would like to see one in every class-room in our schools of music. A greater and more useful power was wireless. An unattractive person with a beautiful voice could be heard over the wireless without the singer being seen. What was wanted was a genius of a manager who could make concerts really attractive. The critics, whom he called a naughty, pampered, spoilt lot of young fellows, had got to show patience. We all wanted concerts to be a success. Music was the only art which was attacked by the critics.

Seeing that their annual meetings synchronized, the I.S.M. invited the Music Masters' Association to have a meeting in common at Whitehall Rooms. Dr. Percy C. Buck gave the lecture. 'Dates' gave a clue, leaving this original thinker to follow his bent. Everything at some period was modern. Were it not so there could be no history. If you wanted to understand the work of any man you must stand in his shoes. Sir Henry Coward asked if we were to admire much of what passed for music to-day—he did not mean jazz; that was not worth troubling about—because 'modern music' expressed the feelings of the times? Dr. Buck did not think that after a certain age any man, however young he may have kept himself, could give a really impartial verdict on anything that had come after 'his time.' But even now he (Dr. Buck) could hear some ripping noises in Stravinsky.

In place of Mr. H. C. Colles, Mr. Frank Howes spoke on musical appreciation. The teaching of this, he said, should be non-technical, not a cut-and-dried system. Interest in it could be increased by study. Music became a drug to continual loud-speaker listeners. The analytical programme produced the same kind of feeling as waiting for an omnibus and seeing it run past one, full up. Simplification in analysis meant falsification. Historical and biographical listening were important. Dr. Markham Lee thought the value of biography in teaching appreciation was to arouse the pupil's interest in the composer. Dangers arose. One could not very well enter into the details of Wagner's private life with a class of schoolgirls. Mr. Macdonald Smith wished to see step-by-step progression in teaching appreciation. The B.B.C., by giving such a small proportion of tuneful music, omitted several rungs of the ladder from low-brow to high-brow. The difficulty of pleasing everybody was pointed out.

All the hard things about jazz which Sir Henry Coward has so frequently spoken and written were piled up in his address at the Hotel Metropole. Jazz should be denounced and made taboo among the white races. He trusted that musicians would do their best to ban it and banish it. Mr. Arthur Bliss found that the difference between the original negro music from which jazz quite obviously came, and the sort of music to which people danced, was as great as the difference between full dress and a loin cloth. The restlessness of the post-war generation would have had to invent jazz if jazz had not been there. Another announced speaker was Mr. Reginald Batten, leader of the Savoy Havana Band. In a letter he defended jazz. Many people damned jazz music who had never heard any of the best jazz bands.

An unrehearsed incident was a reply to Sir Thomas Beecham's attack on lazy England. In Sir Thomas's view, its musical composition was 'one gigantic promissory note.' Dr. Markham Lee prepared a resolution, which was adopted, dissociating the meeting from the reported comments, and declaring that musicians and music-lovers of the British Isles were neither lazy nor comatose, but looked forward to the future with feelings that were absolutely undismayed.

'Originality in Music' was the set subject for the closing day. Mr. Norman O'Neill was announced to speak on, and illustrate, the subject. The lack of original ideas in jazz led him to wonder if some of our modern jazz merchants and composers realised that, in spite of saxophones, sarrusophones, and xylophones their tunes might be as old as ancient Rome, and that their syncopations and harmonies did not make them new at all. Looking into the future he thought he saw signs of a more subtle construction of musical periods with melody less defined and not diffused. Some of the latest imported noises might be the forerunners of some notable developments. If the advanced school of to-day was not doing much to keep the fountain of melody flowing, at least the lesser lights, even our jazzing friends, were endeavouring to pour out some sort of tune. J. G.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

A lecture on Schubert's Quintet in C, Op. 163, will be given by Sir Hugh P. Allen, on Saturday, February 11, 1928, at 3 p.m., at the Royal College of Organists. (The work is selected for analysis at the Fellowship Examination, in July, 1928.) The Quintet will be played by the following students of the Royal College of Music, by permission of Sir Hugh Allen (Principal): violins, Mr. Ernest Sealey and Miss Helen Stewart; viola, Miss Mary Gladden; 'cellos, Miss Helen Just and Miss Audrey Piggott. Admission free; no tickets required.

The Choir-Training Examinations will be held at the College in May next. Application for entry forms and all particulars to be made to the Registrar.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

Dr. T. Keighley will give a lecture at the Cathedral Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Saturday, February 25, at 3 p.m., entitled, 'Choir-Training and the R.C.O. Examination Requirements.' Chair to be taken by Mr. William Ellis. Admission free; no tickets required.

H. A. Harding (Hon. Secretary).

PASSED FELLOWSHIP EXAMINATION—JANUARY, 1928

Anderson, W., Edinburgh.
Bancroft, H. H., Cleethorpes.
Bennett, J. R., Barry Docks, Glam.
Dawes, T. G., Brighton.
Emery, W. J., Wakefield.
Frayling, N. W. N., Farnborough.
Leeds, G. N., Windsor.
Parsons, F. A., Bangor, co. Down.
Paul, L. D., Bangor, N. Wales.
Saunders, J. A., Brighton.
Stevens, W. A., Peterborough.
Tower, Miss K. F., High Wycombe.
Williams, D. S., London (Lafontaine Prize).

[N.B.—No award was made of the Turpin Prize.]

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP—JANUARY, 1928

Anderson, T. P.—Cambuslang, Glasgow.
Atkinson, Miss J. E., Shenstone, Staffs (Sawyer Prize).
Bailey, F. E., Southport.
Barker, L., Wolverton, Bucks.
Batchelor, H. E., Teddington.
Batts, A. T., Belvedere, Kent.
Chalk, D. H., London.
Cutting, N. A., Sheringham.
Foster, A. J. W., Bristol.
Glover, W. E., Motherwell.
Harris, C. H., Bath.
Hemery, S. G., London.
Hill, N. C., Pontnewynydd, Mon.
Lee, Miss A., Bolton, Lancs.
Moore, R. H., Bushey, Herts.
Orrey, L. G., Hawnby, Yorks.
Pearson, Mrs. D., Armley, Leeds.
Pickard, C. G., West Bridgford (Lafontaine Prize).
Richardson, E. G., Chilton, co. Durham.
Spencer, J., Horsforth, Leeds.
Stubington, H., Wotton-under-Edge.
Warner, L. H., Harrow-on-the-Hill.
Wood, D., South Elmsall, Yorks.

Alan W. Shindler (Registrar).

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION

On Saturday, January 21, the President, Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., presented diplomas to the recently-elected Fellows and Associates. There was a very large attendance of members and friends. The Hon. Secretary (Dr. Harding) made the following announcements: Fellowship Examination Lafontaine Prize, D. S. Williams; the Turpin Prize was not awarded. Number of candidates examined, fifty; passed, thirteen. Associateship Examination Lafontaine Prize, C. G. Pickard; Sawyer Prize, Janet E. Atkinson. Number of candidates examined, a hundred and forty-nine; passed, twenty-three.

The President then addressed the meeting as follows:

THE ANALOGY BETWEEN ORGAN AND ORCHESTRA

The subject of my address to-day is one of no little importance to all of us here. If my hearers were divided into groups, I imagine that among them we should find some who would limit the organ and its music to the period ending, say, in the early 'nineties, and those whose aspirations are bound only by the ingenuity of the organ-builder in discovering new methods of controlling what has become an exceedingly complex machine. In the former case, organ music pure and simple, with the well-known arrangements of Best and others, served well enough. Then came such improved methods of control and so great a variety of tone-colour, that there seems no limit to what can be done. I hope it may prove interesting and profitable if we briefly examine these contrasted views. Let us first think of the organ in its earliest form, with its row of diapason pipes, to which were added gradually others of different pitch—the 8ve, 12th, 15th, and so on. The invention of the stopped pipe gave a new quality, and later came the reeds. We are all familiar with the illustrations which have come down to us from early times, showing the development of the idea. The later invention of the pedal-board, and then of the independent Pedal-organ, and the swell-box, not only extended the horizon of the player, but encouraged the composition of organ-music as an art in itself, standing on its own merits independently of its imitative powers. I think most of us agree that Bach's organ-music is the native language of the instrument. One proof of its strength is that it 'comes off' on small instruments—I will not say with the same effect as on large, but in a manner showing that Bach thought in terms of the organ, much as Chopin spoke through the medium of the pianoforte. Another good test of organ-music generally is to be found by playing it on a pianoforte with pedal attachment. If its musical structure survive that, we shall realise that elaborate stop-changing is not always necessary. In his admirable article 'Some thoughts on registration,' which appeared in The Organ for April, 1922, Mr. Harvey Grace says: 'In a sense, the best school in which to learn registration is that of poverty.' I understand that organists' salaries are not here referred to! Mr. Grace resumes: 'The man who can make his playing alive and interesting on a small two-manual is able to do so because his limited resources have taught him to choose music so good that it depends very little on the organ-builder, while it makes him realise fully the very considerable amount of variety that may be obtained from a few stops skilfully managed.' It is when we come to the transcription that we should pause and take stock of our position, for we seem to be in some danger of leaving well-worn (though surely not quite worn-out) paths, in the feverish quest for something new. We live in an age of stunts, and in striving to make an impression on his hearers, the organist may possibly allow his skill to overshadow his good taste. He is aided and abetted by the light (often too light) key, pedal, and drawstop action, and an array of rapidly-acting pistons. The impatience for change is found in the organist as in most other people, and with rows of gadgets at hand he is tempted to use them unnecessarily and too frequently. It was, of course, inevitable that tone other than that of flue-pipes should be discovered, and included in the organ's tonal scheme, but though to-day the list of imitative stops is a long one, it is remarkable how few of them (comparatively) are essential in pure organ music. Let us keep them, however, if they sound beautiful, for it would be difficult to draw a hard and fast line as to what stops are admissible or not. And who can say what developments in the employment of new tone qualities in pure organ music await us? I am not speaking now of the cinema machine, for which a name has yet to be invented. I have been to many cinemas, and can only say I have seldom heard stops or combinations which appealed to me. And let me hasten to add that in no case was this the fault of the player, whose skill in doing wicked things cleverly was generally amazing. I may mention here that the tone of these curious instruments is transmitted so successfully by the wireless and the gramophone, apart from the skill of the player, almost entirely because their stops consist so largely of the confectionery varieties, avoiding the true organ, especially diapason tone, which so far has not been very successfully recorded. This difficulty will, however, no doubt be overcome. But I consider these instruments do not come within the range of our consideration to-day, as their build-up and general purpose are diametrically opposed to the convictions held by most of us. Now what should be the real purpose of any artist, be he singer or player? Surely, to convey to his hearers the thoughts of the composer! If an organist play organ music worthy of the name, will he not employ tone-colour which is either directed by the composer or implied by the music? Years ago I heard an organist playing the Mendelssohn G major Fugue, starting away with diapasons and 12th. He seemed quite unconscious, and went gaily on. Such things are hardly likely to happen now, for the general principles of registering in pure organ music are well understood. In considering the use of the organ for transcriptions we have to remember one important point, which is that whereas the tone of orchestral instruments is practically the same wherever we hear it, the imitative stops on the organ vary so widely that we seldom find, for example, two clarinets alike. Then, again, the methods of stop control, the size of the organ, its position, and the building itself, all contribute to the difficulty of deciding on what music is most suitable. But however carefully we choose and play our transcription, there is one thing we can never imitate—I mean that elasticity of the orchestra which is the sum total of the individuality of each of the players forming it. At the same time, even with these limitations, the transcription, well chosen, is and should be a part of the organist's répertoire. Indeed, there are some pieces which, to me at least, are more effective on the organ than through their original medium. On the other hand, some works are so distorted by transcription that they serve merely to illustrate the cunning of the player rather than the mind of the composer. And there is no doubt that in many cases the arranger has scored so fully that except by a very accomplished player, and on very few organs, the pieces are unplayable. An arrangement is included in the Fellowship organ work. It is a very valuable test in many ways, as it shows whether the candidate be only an organist, or not an organist only. One of the chief difficulties in playing an arrangement is in keeping time. With rapid stop and manual change there is a danger of rhythmic weakness, to which many give way. The man who can keep going, even at the expense of a few details which may be really unimportant, will give a far better idea of the music than one who gets in everything while allowing the rhythm to suffer. It will be noted that the tone of the wind instruments can be very fairly imitated by the organ-builder. The tone of the clarinet, for example, can be reproduced with great fidelity, although, as I pointed out, even this varies considerably on different organs. One meets, too, with very close approximation to the sound of the hautboy (I purposely use the English pronunciation while referring to the orchestral instrument), the trumpet, &c., while that French horn at Liverpool is quite remarkable in its likeness to the original. The most difficult timbre to reproduce is that of the strings, and so far not even an approximate imitation has been achieved. It has been argued by Mr. Bonavia-Hunt that the reason for this is that the stringed instruments possess soundboards, which ensure ample fundamental tone, upon which the harmonic structure essential to the timbre is built up. The same authority also points out that when the pipe-voicer encourages the harmonic series of the string in his organ-pipe, he does so at the expense of the fundamental, without an adequate representation of which no fidelity of reproduction is possible. To this I would add that the infinite variety of tone produced by a proper use of the bow by the human-hand is beyond the range of any mechanical device whatsoever. The names given to organ stops in which string quality has been attempted—violone, viola, viol d'orchestre, muted viol, and the like—are attractive, and the tone is often quite lovely, in fact a welcome addition to the tonal scheme, but do those stops sound like orchestral strings? As I said on a former occasion, they soon tire the ear, as the orchestral strings never do. The reason for this may lie in the argument I quoted just now, and the whole question is most interesting and well worth study. The organ is often severely criticised by musicians, I think largely because they view it only as an imitative medium. It must be remembered, too, that musicians who do not play the organ are by no means so clearly aware of what is going on as the organist himself. The acoustics of the instrument and of the building in which it is heard have their own charm, but they prevent the clearness provided by other mediums. It is for this reason that a high degree of precision, definiteness, and especially of rhythm, are demanded from the true organ-player. A very illuminating remark was recently made to me by a prominent musician, when he criticised the fact that whereas the orchestral trumpet (for example) has a limited compass, the organ stop of that name extends through the keyboard. I pointed out that its fellows in the brass section of the orchestra carried the tone downwards, whereupon he rejoined that the idea of carrying the tone to the top of the keyboard was altogether wrong. He did not say, however, to which note it should be carried! He also held it as absurd that the Swell double-reed should occupy such a place of honour in the full Swell, comparing it (to its disadvantage) with the contra-fagotto in the orchestra. But it is just here that we organists come into our own. We need not apologise for our instrument, for is it not eminently a worthy exponent of lofty thought and suggestion? In most ways we give the orchestra best, but what orchestra can imitate the diapasons or the full Swell of such organs as those at St. Paul's, York, or, may I not add, Salisbury? And how incomplete is a Swell, without a double-reed! After all, the orchestra is a combination of instruments arrived at by selection and elimination, and may we not consider the stops of a complete organ in that light? Our instrument may be capable of much in the way of imitation, but it can be severely independent, speaking with its own voice and playing upon our deepest emotions. The marvel is that so much variety of tone and power can be brought under the control of one performer, though these very attributes tend to dazzle so many organists, and blind them to that real character and dignity to which I have before referred. The analogy between organ and orchestra is in reality slight, and if pursued too far would land us in real difficulty. Such things as the constant use of the 16-ft. pedal, the employment of unsuitable stops, and so on, have their parallel in orchestral writing, where the incessant use of the double-basses, or a cor Anglais in place of a clarinet, would in the same way be inappropriate. Terms used in organ music—strings, brass, wood-wind—are perhaps convenient, but can we not find something more suitable? I should like to see the faces of the violinists of an orchestra on finding their parts marked 'diapason treble,' or the double-basses if their parts were dubbed diapason 16-ft. or double diapason! Surely it is just as unreasonable in either case. May we not then be content with an instrument which, without destructive alteration of its essential character, can fulfil two separate functions, both of high artistic import? We can convey the message of Bach, Mendelssohn, Brahms, Rheinberger, and those of our own day of whom we think with gratitude, whose music, be it austere, serene, statuesque, but always compelling and appropriate, has the inevitability of a mountain, a tree, or any other natural object, and we may also step into the sphere ruled by groups of other musicians, reproducing as nearly and sincerely as we can the essence of their combined art, keeping I hope within the rules which must govern any art, such as form, contrast, and truthful presentation, ideals which the R.C.O. has done and is doing so much to foster.

---

The following organ pieces, selected for the July Examination, 1928, were played by Mr. W. Wolstenholme:

FELLOWSHIP

Toccata in D minor ('Dorian') ... ... ... Bach

ASSOCIATESHIP

Prelude, 'Rhosymedre' ... ... Vaughan Williams
Pensée d'Automne ... ... ... ...Jongen

FELLOWSHIP

Prelude (in form of a Chaconne) ... Stanford
Romanza, 'La Reine de France' ... ...Haydn
Extemporization on a Theme supplied by Dr. Harding.

Hearty votes of thanks were accorded to the President for his interesting and thoughtful address (proposed by Dr. E. T. Sweeting, seconded by Dr. H. W. Richards), and to Mr. W. Wolstenholme for his masterly recital and clever improvisation (proposed by Mr. Cart de Lafontaine, seconded by Dr. F. G. Shinn). Before the close of the meeting Dr. Harding made an earnest appeal on behalf of the Organists' Benevolent League, of which he is the hon. treasurer.

The Conversazione was as usual a great success, and was attended by a large number of members and friends.

---

EXAMINERS' REPORTS

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

It may be convenient to give our impressions of the performance of the different pieces in detail. Bach, Sonata in G (first movement). The repeated notes of the first subject were often insufficiently separated, and the general rhythm defective. The registration was sometimes excellent, but there were some marked exceptions, such as the employment of the Great open and the Swell Trumpet throughout. Healey Willan, Prelude and Fugue in C minor: Many candidates gave an unrhythmical delivery of the subject. The graduation of tone in the Prelude and the climax of the Fugue were often disappointing or absent altogether. Mendelssohn, Andante of Symphony No. 4: The playing of this piece was very disappointing, and with many players was the worst of their three efforts. There was great lack of continuity, and the choice of stops was generally unsatisfactory. The general character of the piece was very inadequately recognised.

The Vocal Score, although not a difficult test, was accountable for many failures.

The Harmonization of the Bass was also poor. Candidates should remember that it is not advisable to have a separate chord for every note, and that there are such things as passing-notes.

The Bass lent itself to a certain amount of sequential treatment, but no one took advantage of it.

In the Melody, an obvious possible modulation was in most cases neglected, the result being an overworked tonic chord.

In the Sight-Reading test the second of two Ped. slurred quavers in the third bar was often given full crotchet value, and in the penultimate bar the Ped. notes were almost always played out of time.

The simple Extemporisation themes were often inaccurately played in dubious time. Candidates should really pay more attention to the signatures.

Two ancient faults were not so common as they used to be, but they have not quite disappeared, viz., misuse of the Swell pedal, especially in extemporisation, and the indiscriminate employment of the 16-ft. pedal stops uncoupled.

Alan Gray (Chairman).
Henry G. Ley.
Stanley G. Marchant.

---

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

The addition of three vocal parts 'in the style of Bach' was in some cases inadequate on account of a total absence of imitative or other independent movement. Of the three candidates who attempted the alternative question only one displayed any acquaintance with the style of 16th-century music.

In writing the Fugal Exposition it was necessary to add at least one bar before each entry of the subject. Only a few succeeded in warding off a perfect cadence by means of an interrupted cadence, or even by inverting the tonic chord.

The general questions were answered very well, except that some candidates in speaking of German opera quoted Italian composers.

The Orchestration was, on the whole, surprisingly well done, but some candidates, in planning out a Tutti, showed ignorance of the best means of obtaining fullness and sonority.

There were some good answers to the String Quartet question, but it was curious how many candidates seemed to consider that the B flat in the violin melody necessitated a modulation to the key of D minor.

Some of the settings for Unaccompanied Chorus failed on account of being throughout too much in the nature of a note-against-note hymn-tune.

A mild protest is entered against the careless and almost illegible writing of some of the candidates: the omission of rests necessary to complete the bar, the turning of stems of notes in the wrong direction, and the disregard of the necessity, when writing in open score, of placing the notes in the various parts exactly underneath one another.

G. J. Bennett (Chairman).
C. H. Kitson.
F. G. Shinn.

Associateship Paper-Work

The work on the whole has been very unequal. We tabulate the chief faults:

1. Strict Counterpoint. a, Use of diminished triad in root position; b, monotonous melodic outline; c, want of rhythmic variety (particularly in the bass); d, use of second inversions; e, confusion between major and minor seventh of scale; f, many of those who introduced modulation made a clumsy return to the original key; g, absence of suspensions, especially in the bass.

2. Free Counterpoint. With few exceptions there was little attempt at keeping up the imitation, and the selection of chords was too often crude; for example, the E natural in bar 3 was occasionally badly followed by E flat in another part.

3. Pianoforte Accompaniment. In this test there was an improvement, but these faults should be avoided: a, A dull four-part accompaniment; b, overloading the figure of accompaniment; c, a commonplace 'vamping' formula showing want of a proper figure.

4. Melody and Bass. a, Aimless wandering of the added parts and want of feeling for the melodic curve; b, weakness of bowing in added 'cello part.

5. Unfigured Bass. This test shows signs of improvement, but, a, the part-writing was often stilted; b, the final cadence was seldom managed well, sometimes very badly.

A general fault was the want of appreciation of implied modulation. Candidates often waited for the appearance of an accidental before attempting to modulate at all, the result being an abrupt and unmusical transition. Carelessness was frequently shown by the omission of necessary accidentals.

7. Ear-Tests. Some were weak in the melody, others in the chord test, and too many in both.

H. Davan Wetton (Chairman).
E. T. Sweeting.
Thomas Keighley.

Associateship Organ-Work

In the associateship playing examination, the chief failing was a serious lack of musicianship. Candidates did not seem to be alive to the essential factors of good organ playing—a sure and strong rhythm, some idea of organ management, common-sense, and musical feeling.

The standard generally was insufficiently mature. The phrasing-marks were often observed in a perfunctory way, or were omitted altogether. In other words, phrasing was not regarded as being an ingredient of logical musical expression. The Schumann Sketch suffered badly from being over-phrased, crotchets often being reduced literally to the length of semiquavers.

Many candidates failed to grasp the style of the piece presented, with the result that the time was often either too quick and trivial, or slow and laboured. This was particularly marked in Group 2.

There was a commendable endeavour to introduce colour into the pieces by varying the registration, although this generally provided difficulties for the candidates and unrest in the general interpretation. One was led to believe that candidates did not listen with sufficient alertness to their playing. It was a common occurrence to use only the 16-ft. pedal tone uncoupled to a manual, and indeed one candidate played a piece through without a sound from the Pedals, with the result that the harmony was never complete owing to the entire absence of the bass part.

The tests were very disappointing. The vocal score was usually played Largo instead of Moderato as marked, and was far from accurate, particularly in the inner part.

The transposition was better both in pace and accuracy, although there were few really fluent performances, such as one would expect to hear in public.

The accompaniment was by far the least good of the tests. Except in a few cases, little or no attention was paid to the style of playing suggested by the words. Rhythm was almost non-existent. Accompaniment is pre-eminently a test of musicianship and alertness, and these were lacking.

E. S. Roper (Chairman).
G. D. Cunningham.
G. Thalben Ball.

Southwark Cathedral

At the musical service on February 11 (at 3 o'clock) the programme will include Verdi's 'Stabat Mater,' Walford Davies's 'Four Sayings of Jesus,' Vaughan Williams's 'O Vos Omnes,' Bainton's 'Hymn to God the Father,' and Elgar's second Symphony. The orchestra will be the London Symphony.

We have received a copy of 'The Choral Service: the Liturgical Music for Morning and Evening Prayer, the Litany, and the Holy Communion, according to the use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America' (H. W. Gray Co.: Novello). This volume is 'set forth by the Joint Commission on Church Music under authority of General Convention,' and has therefore official status. Although designed for use in American Churches, it calls for a word here on account of its excellence, and also because practically all of it would be of use to English organists. With the exception of Tallis's Litany and Responses, which are in an Appendix, the whole of the music is plainchant, in its proper notation, set forth first without accompaniment. Organ harmony is provided for use if required, but unaccompanied performance is advised. The harmonization is admirably done. For the Communion Office the traditional Creed is given. The plainsong notation is lucidly explained, and there is much sound guidance in other ways. The general adoption of this fine and austere 'use' will, we believe, have a profound influence on Church music in America, as the increased adoption of plainsong has had on the music of the Anglican Church. The book is strongly bound and well produced; the price in England is 10*s*.

Bach's Magnificat and Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas Oratorio' were sung by an augmented choir at St. Cuthbert's Church, Carlisle, on December 16. Miss Margaret Balfour and Mr. John Adams were the principal soloists. Mr. C. F. Eastwood (organist and choirmaster of the church) conducted, Mr. William Crozier was leader of the orchestra, and the Rev. F. J. Buckle, Precentor of the Cathedral, was at the organ.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung at St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town, on December 7, under the direction of the choirmaster and organist, Mr. Albert Hamer. The baritone solos were sung by Mr. W. K. Horne, and the soprano solos by the boys of the choir. The press spoke highly of the performance.

A new organ, built by Messrs. Whiteley, of Chester, has been installed in Bethel Welsh Congregational Church, Mold—a two-manual of twelve stops. Dr. Caradog Roberts gave the opening recital, his programme including a Fugue in G minor by Bach, Gigout's Toccata, a Wagner selection, &c.

Mr. Walter Hoyle has resigned the post of organist and choirmaster of Coventry Cathedral, which he had held for thirty years. The congregation has presented him with a cheque, and a handsomely bound edition of 'Grove.' His successor is Mr. Herbert W. Sumsion.

'Israel in Egypt' will be sung at the City Temple on February 18, at 3 p.m.

Elgar's 'Light of Life,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion,' were sung by the Chesham Choral Society (about a hundred strong) at Hinton Baptist Church, on January 12. Mr. R. B. Green conducted.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' will be sung at St. Alban's, Holborn, on February 9, at 8 p.m. A collection will be made on behalf of a fund for the provision of a new console.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was performed at Exeter Cathedral on December 14, by the augmented choir. Dr. Ernest Bullock conducted, and Mr. Gandy Bradford was at the organ.

An organ recital for children will be given by Mr. W. R. Simmons at St. Luke's, Penn Road, Holloway, on February 25, at 6.30 p.m.

Mr. Robert Parker recently entered on his fiftieth year as organist of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Sydney, N.S.W.

RECITALS

Dr. Bernard Jackson, Boston Parish Church—Prelude on 'Croft's 104th,' Parry; Suite Gothique, Boëllmann; First movement, Sonata No. 17, Rheinberger.

Mr. Ralph Downes, Keble College—Sonata in F minor, Martini; Sonata No. 9, Rheinberger; Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt.

Mr. Fred Gostelow, Union Chapel, Castle Street, Luton—Concerto No. 2, Handel; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Choral in A minor, Franck; 'Elfes,' Bonnet.

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Saviour's, Eastbourne—Prelude on a Theme of Tallis, Darke; Three Canons, Philip Miles; Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue in E flat minor, Willan.

Mr. W. Robson, St. Luke's, Thornaby—Prayer and Cradle Song, Guilmant; First movement, Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Evening Song, Bairstow; Fuga alla Giga, Bach.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Boston Parish Church—Postlude in D, Smart; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Prelude in C minor, Bach.

Rev. L. G. Bark, Christ Church, Penrith—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Postlude on 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace; Rhapsody in C, Statham.

Mr. Arthur E. Watts, St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe, E.C.—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Chorale Prelude on 'Croft's 136th,' Parry; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Mr. Arthur Fountain, Richmond (Yorks) Parish Church—Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Finale, Vierne.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Concert Variations in E minor, Bonnet; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Introduction and Passacaglia, Reger; and a Faulkes programme.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Andrew's, Whitehall Park—Concerto in B flat, Handel; Introduction and Toccata, Walond; Fugue (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge.

Mr. George Metzler, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Allegro Maestoso from Sonata, Elgar; Prelude and Fugue in G, Steggall; Theme and Variations for violin and organ, Rheinberger. (Violin, Miss Violet Pusey.)

Mr. Alfred Wilson, Pollokshields West U.F. Church—Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, Bach; Noël, with Variations, d'Aquin; Choral No. 2, Franck; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. Allan Fortune, Ingrow Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Allegretto, Schumann; Evening Song, Bairstow; First movement, Sonata No. 2, Rheinberger.

Mr. Lionel Ladbrooke, All Saints', Southampton—Postlude, Alcock; First movement, Sonatine, Ravel; Chorale Preludes—'From Heaven above' and 'All glory, laud, and honour,' Reger; Toccata, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Alfred Allen, St. Asaph Cathedral—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Three Chorale Preludes, Brahms; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Stanley Lucas, S. Croydon Congregational Church—Grand Chœur in C and Concert Rondo, Hollins; Cradle Song and Plaint, Harvey Grace; Arabesque, Vierne; Romanza, Wolstenholme; Meditation, de la Tombelle.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Wallasey Town Hall—'The East Wind' and 'The North Wind,' Rowley; Symphony No. 5, Widor; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. Arthur Meale, Central Hall, Westminster—Marche Funèbre and Chant Séraphique, Guilmant; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Scenes in Northumberland,' Frederic H. Wood.

Dr. Alfred Hollins, Bromley Congregational Church—Concert Overture No. 2, Hollins; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Improvisation.

Dr. M. P. Conway, St. Saviour's, Eastbourne—Sonata No. 13, Rheinberger; Rhapsody, Howells; Prayer, Jongen; Dorian Fugue, Bach.

Mr. Allan Brown, Russell School, Ballards, Addington, Surrey—Suite Gothique, Boëllmann; Fantasia on 'Hanover,' Lemare; Sonata No. 6, Guilmant; Fugue in E flat, Bach.

Dr. Gordon Slater, Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas, Newcastle-upon-Tyne—'Ronde Française,' Boëllmann; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Scherzetto, Vierne; Marche Triomphale, Karg-Elert.

Mr. J. Gray, Adam Smith Hall, Kirkcaldy—Fantasia in F minor, and Concerto in D, Mozart; Fugue in A flat minor, Brahms. (Violin, Mr. David McCallum.)

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. William C. Anscombe, organist, Clapham Congregational Church, Grafton Square, S.W.

Mr. R. MacTaggart Brodie, choirmaster and organist, Scotstown Parish Church, Sunderland.

Mr. Sidney S. Campbell, choirmaster and organist, St. Margaret's, Leytonstone.

Mr. Arthur Dickeson, choirmaster and organist, The Grange Congregational Church, Sunderland.

Mr. Teasdale Griffiths, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Claughton, Birkenhead.

Mr. Sidney J. Loasby, organist, Parish Church, Kettering.

Mr. Herbert Strudwick, choirmaster and organist, All Saints' Parish Church, Hereford.

Letters to the Editor

THE ETHICS OF 'BORROWING'

Sir,—I fear I must take a little more of your space for a further consideration of this subject, so interesting to all authors and readers.

Dr. Eaglefield Hull, in accounting for the parallelism between the passage from his 'Music: Classical, Romantic, and Modern' and the passage from Frank Rutter's 'Evolution in Modern Art,' tells us, 'I do not remember Mr. Rutter's book.' I am quite willing of course to accept this statement, but whether Dr. Hull now remembers the book or not, he must surely have read it, for he always shows the greatest interest in modern painting, and this book, which appeared in 1925, is recognised everywhere as one of the most important contributions to the subject.

One cannot remember everything, but I am a little surprised that Dr. Hull, in referring to his correspondence with Sir Michael Sadler on the Kandinsky picture Sir Michael possesses, which is the subject of the passage I quoted, should say, 'It is also discussed and reproduced in Sir Michael Sadler's "Spiritual Harmony" (1914),' since the author of 'Spiritual Harmony' (the foundational book for the study of expressionism in painting) is, of course, not Sir Michael Sadler but the expressionist painter Kandinsky himself—the translator being not Sir Michael (the Master of University College, Oxford), but his son (the well-known author of 'Trollope,' 'The Noblest Frailty,' &c.). 'What,' says Dr. Hull, 'is the matter with Mr. Scholes, who usually has a fairly clear mind?'

I love parallel columns. Will you, Sir, indulge my whim a little further?

DR. HULL'S 'MUSIC: CLASSICAL, ROMANTIC, AND MODERN'

SABANIEF'S 'SCRIABIN'

(p. 296)
Scriabin appears as a sort of second incarnation of Chopin, even to the point of clothing his thoughts in the Chopinesque forms—preludes, studies, mazurkas, nocturnes.

Scriabin appeared to be in some sort a second incarnation of Chopin. . . . S. even liked to clothe his thoughts in Chopinesque forms: we have nocturnes, studies, preludes, mazurkas.

(p. 297)
A greater refinement than Chopin's, a certain 'poisonousness' in the general mood, a tinge of tender eroticism, an occasional nervous vehemence and convulsive quality.

A certain 'poisonousness' in the general mood; a refinement greater than Chopin's, with tinges of tender eroticism foreign to the lyrics of Chopin; vehemence and nervousness; sometimes even a convulsive quality.

(p. 297)
. . . run through all his most searching and mystical outbursts and survived almost to his last days.

They run as a sort of miracle through all his searchings and mystical outbursts, and surviving to his very last days . . .

(p. 297)
Art became for him a religious concept.

Art becomes for S. a religious concept.

(p. 297)
The characteristic thirst for the 'grandiose,' another feature unknown in Chopin.

The characteristic thirst for the grandiose, which had no affinity with Chopin.

(p. 297)
One of the manifestations of that persistent duality revealed in his sudden transitions from a cosmic perspective to salon elegance, from the image of the grandiose to a superficial daintiness, from a magnificent gesture as a revealer of new worlds to a dust of fantastic sparks from Satanic fire, and a sudden vanishing like some astral apparition.

And in this contrast I see one of the germs and manifestations of that duality which was persistent in S., which showed itself in his sudden transitions from cosmic perspectives to the elegance of the salon; which in a whimsical fashion associated in him the image of the grandiose with external daintiness; which often compelled him after a magnificent gesture of a creator of worlds suddenly to scatter fantastic sparks of Satanic fires and vanish like an astral, now ominous, now exquisite, apparition.

(p. 298)
In its tragical and pathetic character, the impetuosity of its rhythms, its erotic and caressing hues, the magnificent pianoforte style, altogether perfect in its power, beauty, and refinement.

Affected tragicalness; pathos; impetuous rhythm . . . the erotic, caressing hues; the pianoforte style, magnificent, altogether perfect in its absolute power and beauty, delicate and refined.

(p. 298)
He becomes infected with a certain specific harmony—his 'mystic chord'—a brilliant and resplendent consonance, which from this moment supplants the common chord, and gives a special tinge to the whole of his work.

Its 'infection' with a certain specific harmony—a brilliant and resplendent consonance, which from this time gives to the whole of S.'s . . . music a special tinge.

(p. 298)
Into his psychical constitution there steals an element of eroticism, a desire to make the grandiose gesture, to express the aspiring will; and also a subtle tinge of Satanism, the intoxicating caress of sentiment; and as these elements grow stronger, his lyricism decreases and his sound-perception diminishes.

There is an evident inclination for pose, gesture, grandiosity, the expression of the aspiring will, extreme impetuosity, triumphant splendour. Into his lyric, which steadily decreases, there creeps a subtle tinge of eroticism, Satanism, the intoxicating caress of sentiment, diminished keenness of sound-perception.

(p. 298)
A suggestion of those sounds which are later to fill Scriabin's musical dreams with fluttering forms.

A suggestion of those sounds which later flooded the world of Skryabin's musical dreams with fluttering forms.

(p. 299)
He creates in a single year many of his best works.

In the course of a single year he creates a series of his finest pianoforte productions.

(p. 299)
It then plunges into the intoxicating element of sensual enjoyment.

The spirit plunges into the intoxicating element of sensual enjoyment.

(p. 299)
He there creates 'capricious and enticing forms, which, after a gesture of erotic enchantment, scatter sparks of elemental fire and diabolical laughter.'

He creates capricious and enticing forms, which, after a gesture of erotic enchantment, scatter sparks of elemental fire and diabolical laughter.

(p. 299)
In the third symphony . . . S. grasped the greatest diapason.

In it S. grasped the greatest diapason.

Dr. Hull admits in a foot-note in his book, 'I have drawn largely from the splendid study of "Scriabin" by Leonid Sabanief.' That is true: he has drawn largely, indeed, practically all his matter, but upon whose translation from Sabanief's Russian has he drawn?

I happen to be able to suggest an answer to that question. The translation given in the right-hand column above is that of Mr. S. W. Pring, of Glasgow, whose name, so far as I can find, never appears in Dr. Hull's book. Mr. Pring has, unfortunately, not yet been able to find a publisher for his excellent translation of a very important work, though he has sent it at various times to various publishers, who presumably have submitted it to their advisers.

Perhaps I may be allowed to explain how I have knowledge of Mr. Pring's translation. For many years I have had a friendly business arrangement with Mr. Pring, whereby he should give me the benefit of his abundant and scholarly translations from the Russian. Amongst a mass of other valuable matter of Mr. Pring's on my files I have a typescript of the work in question. That accounts for my knowledge. Perhaps Dr. Hull will tell us how he, on his part, happens to be acquainted with Mr. Pring's translation—for I think we may assume from a glance at the above parallel columns that he is so acquainted.

And if he has taken matter from Mr. Pring's translation, has he the translator's permission? And if he has his permission, why does he never mention his name? These are mysteries which Dr. Hull should certainly clear up.

All of us who admire the never-resting activity of Dr. Hull as author, translator, and editor, must wish that activity to be directed in the best possible way. And so I think I have raised a subject of considerable public interest.

—Yours, &c.,

PERCY A. SCHOLES.

[We submitted Mr. Scholes's letter to Dr. Eaglefield Hull, whose reply we print below.—Editor.]

'Splendid! I also have had, for many years, "a friendly business arrangement with Mr. Pring, whereby he should give me the benefit of his abundant and scholarly translations from the Russian," and I have also two other translators. (No, Mr. Scholes, I am not giving you these names.) Unlike Mr. Scholes, who apparently "holds up" a copy of the MS. in his private library, I have already approached six publishers on Messrs. Sabanief's and Pring's behalf. Of course (as anyone except Mr. Scholes would have known), I told Mr. Pring that I was quoting from Sabanief's work on Scriabin, in the hope of drawing more attention to it, and my two acknowledgments, both in the text and in the foot-note, explain this fully. Mr. Scholes does not even quote me correctly, and he must know quite well that this is not "a matter of public interest," but of private business. Is it the surprising success of my book that has aroused Mr. Scholes's ire? The sales went up perceptibly after last month's letter in the Musical Times. So I hope he will keep the ball rolling for me.

'P.S.—In my reply last month, my confusion of the Sadlers (father and son, despite the pen-name change) was a 'pen-slip' due to haste. The father possesses the picture and the son wrote the long and brilliant preface for the English translation of Kandinsky's book.'

---

Sir,—My attention has only just been called to Dr. Eaglefield Hull's unacknowledged quotation from my 'Evolution in Modern Art.' Dr. Hull denies that I have 'any specific right' to the words he quotes, but I must ask your permission to prove to him that he is entirely in the wrong. The painting in question was shown to me by Sir Michael Sadler in his house at Leeds, in February or March, 1914, and afterwards, at my request, lent by Sir Michael to an exhibition I organized at the Leeds Arts Club.

At that time (months before the war) I was the first to point out that though Kandinsky's painting was nominally 'abstract,' in fact the design was based on concrete things, 'an artillery gun, puffs of smoke, houses falling to pieces.' Those words are my words, not Sir Michael Sadler's, and I am certain he would be the first to acknowledge my claim to them.

After the event it is easy to be wise, and, now that the war has come and gone, it may be true, as Dr. Hull contends, that 'it is not difficult to discover' on what Kandinsky's design was based. The fact remains that in the spring of 1914 people did find it difficult, and I was the first to discover its basis and state it in private and public. I am anxious to believe that Dr. Hull has erred unwittingly, and since he offers to credit me with my own—if I desire it—I say plainly now that I do want it. I am greatly indebted to Mr. Percy A. Scholes for his chivalrous championship of my work, and his patient explanation that when I write 'I analysed . . . I discovered'—I mean, that I did it myself.—Yours, &c.,

Frank Rutter.

Savile Club.

---

THE PURCELL FANTASIAS

Sir,—I expected Mr. Heseltine to hit back hard, and am glad that he has done so. His letter, however, has made no difference to my views. In working on the organ arrangement of these Fantasias I am finding even more wrong notes. Messrs. Curwen promised to publish an errata sheet provided Mr. Heseltine and I could agree. We seem to be much further from agreement than we were at our personal interview on the matter. I think the next best step is for me to publish a list of what I consider to be the wrong notes, with my reasons in every case, and I shall be willing to submit this list for a final decision to the finest musical manuscript scholars—say Dr. E. H. Fellowes and Prof. Edward Dent—and am willing to abide by their decisions in every case.—Yours, &c.,

19, Berners Street, W.1. A. Eaglefield Hull.

SULLIVAN AND POTBOILING

Sir,—I should like to thank your reviewer for his interesting, logical, and well-balanced review of the latest Sullivan book. The book has done much to help many of us to understand the Sullivan problem, and I am glad to see your review goes to the root of the matter, and stresses so much the psychological side. I have always held and preached the doctrine that the more we know of the psychological conditions of a composer's life the better we shall understand his music, its virtues and its defects. I have only one point to cavil at in the review, and this may be due to lack of understanding on my part. Your reviewer says, '. . . by far the greater part of Sullivan's work, both the best and the worst, was pot-boiling.' I can quite imagine that such a crushing and sweeping statement may be strongly resented by the many admirers that Sullivan has even amongst musicians, and the value of the statement and its truth depend upon what your reviewer had in his mind when he wrote it. Of course criticism is no criticism unless the opinion is supported by evidence and convincing and deductive reasoning, and to some extent your reviewer proceeds to justify such a damnatory opinion. 'Pot-boiling,' as applied to artistic work, may mean either (1) the tempo at which the pot boils; (2) the quality of the stew it produces. There are of course in musical history plenty of instances of the finest work being turned out at 'white heat,' just as there are plenty of instances of the 'blood and tears' method. Your reviewer classifies all the Savoy works as 'pot boilers' because they were turned out quickly. Is it quite fair to label work which has lasted, and will last, and has the charm of genuine spontaneity, in this fashion—even though its method of composition was a rapid one? Surely it is the quality that matters in a work, not its rate of composition. Your reviewer may have a different conception of the term 'pot-boiler' from myself, but in the ordinary acceptance of the term, I think few would agree that the Savoy operas are pot-boilers, and I really don't think your reviewer intended his readers quite to construe his meaning thus.

Sullivan's music has always presented problems to me, and doubtless many other readers have experienced the same. I think much is explained away, now we know more of his life, as it will be in the case of other composers who still puzzle us. Sullivan was largely the victim of circumstances that were too strong for him, or which he allowed to become too strong for him. His facility became his snare, and he took the line of least resistance. He took the short cut to fame, if not to wealth. His music, like his life, is a paradox—'a most ingenious paradox.' He gave us heaps of 'sticky' pedal-basses (vocal and instrumental), and yet no man could write more grateful, real contrapuntal parts when he liked. He almost 'standardised' his orchestration in his comic operas—never troubled to give us any surprises in the nature of colour combinations, &c., or showed any development in orchestral invention from beginning to end of the series, and yet we have to admit the charm and aptness of his scoring whenever we hear it. He seems all the while to have played for 'safety first,' and to have used only well-tried tricks and methods. Although he wrote delightfully for wood-wind (especially the bassoon), yet his brass-writing was perfunctory, and his horn-writing particularly ungrateful. Yet, in spite of these defects, he had a kind of uncanny instinct to know how to turn his standardised methods to the best use, and to do the right thing at the right time. We can imagine a modern composer scoring these works far more skilfully, and yet somehow it is difficult to imagine the result to be so inevitable and so satisfying. Sullivan had the knack of making virtues out of defects—and there is genius in this. If the supreme test of composition is its inevitability, then we must allow this to the Savoy operas—the right thing is in the right place every time; and therein lies their success and popular appeal. In spite of his defects and rather narrow-sphered genius, Sullivan can still teach the younger generation of composers many lessons—viz., how to write an orchestral accompaniment to a simple song, how to write gratefully for the voice, and how to approach a cadence with a spice of originality; and last, but not least, how to write melodies that are worthy of the name.—Yours, &c.,

Harold E. Watts.

THE EARLIEST USE OF LEITMOTIF

Sir,—Mr. M.-D. Calvocoressi (whose contributions to the Musical Times are always of the greatest interest) in his article in the January number on 'The Opening Motive in "Boris Godunof"' (1868), states that the Leitmotif was then a novelty 'illustrated only in Wagner's works'! Spohr employed it extensively in his oratorios, 'Die Letzen Dinge' ('The Last Things,' incorrectly translated 'The Last Judgment'), composed in 1825; also in 'Calvary' (1833) and 'The Fall of Babylon' (1842). Wagner's early operas 'Die Feen,' 'Liebesverbot,' 'The Flying Dutchman,' and 'Rienzi' were all composed between 1833-41. Any material use of 'Leitmotif' did not appear in his works till later on. Parry tells us (in 'Grove,' first edition) that probably the first recognition of the principle occurs in the 'Symphonie Fantastique' of Berlioz (b. 1803), written before 1830. Berlioz was a student at the Paris Conservatoire when he wrote this work (the exact date of which I am not able to give), and employed the term Idée Fixe for the representative and recurring themes.

So the earliest claim to the use of the Leitmotif appears to belong to Berlioz or (certainly in its extensive use) to Spohr. The idea in a tonal form may perhaps be considered installed as far back as Bach, who, in the recitatives of the 'St. Matthew' Passion,' accompanied the solo voice with the string quartet whenever Christ's words appeared, in contrast to the usual recitativo secco. The use of trombones in the Commendatore's music in 'Don Giovanni' forms an analogous case. Possibly, or probably, other instances of Leitmotif existed before Wagner's time.
—Yours, &c.,

Munro Davison.

Sir,—I feel sure that others besides myself would be grateful if you would give us a pronouncement ex cathedra on the spelling of 'Leitmotiv.' My attention was drawn to the question by Mr. Calvocoressi's article, 'The Opening Motive in "Boris Godunof,"' in your January issue. Mr. Calvocoressi writes 'Leitmotive,' and uses the plural 'Leitmotives.' I question whether 'Leitmotive' should exist as an English word. Mr. Fowler in his 'Dictionary of Modern English Usage' gives 'Leit-motiv,–f. The right (German) spelling is with v. Pronounced lītmōtē'f.' Now I notice in a review of Mr. Fowler's work in the Musical Times for October, 1926, p. 911, the words: 'Other recommendations do not agree with the usage of the Musical Times.' May I ask if this is one of those recommendations, if, in fact, it is the usage of the Musical Times to write 'Leitmotive,' or is it that Mr. Calvocoressi personally prefers that form? (See for example an article by him in the Musical Times for August, 1925, p. 695, entitled 'Debussy and the Leitmotive.') 'Grove' (3rd ed., vol. iii., p. 134) gives 'Leit-Motiv (Leit-motif) (Ger. plur., Leitmotive).' The latest edition of 'Larousse' gives 'Leitmotiv, pl. Leitmotive.' The French and English spellings should therefore be the same as the German. 'Leitmotif' is perhaps defensible on the ground that it shows the pronunciation (cf. Mr. Fowler's defence of 'morale'). But there can be no conceivable reason for writing 'Leitmotive,' which is no word at all. Nor is there any need for the word 'motive.' If we want to use English words, why not 'theme' and 'leading theme'? If, on the other hand, we prefer the German terms, let us have 'Motiv' and 'Leitmotiv' with their proper plural forms.—Yours, &c.,

J. A. Westrup.

[We sent Mr. Westrup's letter to Mr. Calvocoressi, whose reply we print below.—Editor.]

Sir,—I think that, quite obviously, the word 'Leitmotif' is becoming anglicised. For another instance, let it be noted that the plural 'rucksacks' is freely used nowadays, although the word has no advantage over the previously anglicised 'knapsack.' To show the process of anglicisation, cf. 'Grove,' second edition (1906), article 'Leitmotif.' In the article (which is by Parry) we find the plural 'Leitmotive'; in the additions by the Editor (p. 671, col. 2), we find 'Leitmotives.'

It is in the very nature of things that certain people should tend to speed the process, and others to retard it. I am all in favour of speeding it. The word has one definite meaning, and one only: it means a motive whose recurrence and other functions are always governed by an association of some kind, and which generally conveys the association to listeners. There is no other word serving exactly the same purpose. 'Leading theme,' as it happens, may mean something quite different. I, too, shall be grateful for your pronouncement.—Yours, &c.,

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

[We wish we felt able to make one. But when doctors disagree . . .—Editor.]

MAHLER, REGER, AND ALKAN

Sir,—If I remember rightly it was Mr. Norman Demuth whom I had pleasure in seconding in a plea for the Mahler Symphonies in the Telegraph some years ago. I hasten to add my voice to his. For years I have been hammering at the same matter, but only, I fear, bombinans in vacuo! All that Mr. Demuth says about those great works, among the greatest things in modern music, I endorse most heartily. I share his astonishment that the Philharmonic Choir has not taken up the eighth and the second Symphonies. I suggested these works to the Choir some two years since, and also Reger's splendid 100th Psalm. What, too, of the remarkable third, sixth, and ninth Symphonies of Mahler, and the wonderful 'Lied von der Erde,' with its world-weary disillusioned mock-epicureanism, containing some of the most poignant and piercingly beautiful music in existence, that reaches in the last movement—the 'Abschied'—a heart-breaking intensity, a resigned quiet sadness and regret, that are indescribably moving? The work was performed under Sir Henry Wood in the great days (i.e., pre-bellum) of what was then the Queen's Hall Orchestra. The seventh Symphony was also done by the same organization about the same time, i.e., a year or two before 1914. To the multitudinous ignorant ones who sniff when Reger and Mahler, and that earlier and very great genius Alkan, are mentioned (no, Sirs; 'Le Vent' is not the only composition he wrote—it may be and probably is the only one of which you have heard, which is a different matter) one must point out that to affect and disregard two composers who are generally recognised as being big figures in music in lands like Holland, Germany, and Austria, is rather silly. As I am having occasion to point out elsewhere, a knowledge and study of practically the entire works of these two masters, extending over years, makes it impossible for one at least to deny that they are rightly estimated in the countries I have named. The attitude towards them that one so often meets with here is a specimen of that 'levity' which that great poet and translator of genius, John Payne, pilloried in one of his superb sentences—'a levity which would be amusing were it not lamentable as a typical instance of the modern passion for pronouncing upon matters of which one is entirely ignorant.'—Yours, &c.,

Kaikhosru Sorabji.

IT LOOKED LIKE RAVEL!

Sir,—In my letter that you kindly printed in the January issue, you mention amongst the composers for whose works I put in a plea the name of Ravel. I fear my writing must be at fault, for the musician I mentioned was Roussel. I do not think admirers of Ravel have anything to complain about!—Yours, &c.,

Elfin Grove, Bognor. Norman H. Demuth.

SOLO-SINGING AT COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVALS

Sir,—As hon. secretary of the Lytham-St. Anne's Musical Festival, I was most interested in, and certainly entertained by, Mr. E. R. Scovell's suggestions on the question of competitive solo-singing.

That the interest of the audience should be maintained is undeniable, but I doubt whether the competitors being allowed their own choice of songs solves it. I have just examined the programmes of some festivals where there are two tests—one set, the other being the competitor's own choice. A striking fact emerges. A great many of the competitors offer the same song, and one that was a test at another festival. There is not the variety one would expect.

Again, the novice is handicapped under such a scheme. He has not the répertoire of the experienced entrant. In such competitions, also, marks are allotted for choice of songs. Where one judge would give eight out of ten, another would give only five. This adds to the responsibility of the judge, and the handicap of the novice is increased.

I personally believe that the 'knock-out' scheme would militate against the aims and ideals of the Festival movement. Those competitors lower in the list should receive as much criticism as the best, for they need greater help. The finalists certainly get the added criticism of the evening's performance, but in actual practice this is not much extra. After all, the main faults of the morning in vocalisation, &c., cannot be remedied by night.

Again, the loser in the sixteenth pair may be infinitely superior to every winner of the first fifteen pairs, and it must be remembered that to maintain the interest of competitors is also necessary. Most competitors enter a festival at a great personal sacrifice, and I do not think they would enter in such numbers for fifty per cent. of them to be knocked out in the first round, especially after preparing five songs. They cannot afford to be the victims of the luck or otherwise of the draw. A competitor enters to learn his faults, and to know his true position in his particular class.

In most festivals there are various competitions going on at the same time, and the audience frequently changes from one hall to another. Everyone pleases himself as to the length of his stay. The finals are a different matter, and are always interesting. In practice, therefore, members of the audience may avoid boredom.

Does not Mr. Scovell's scheme tend to increase that boredom which he desires eliminated? Taking his sixty-four entrants, before this class would be completed we should have heard a hundred and twenty-six soloists. Imagine a hundred and twenty-six contraltos singing a hundred and twenty-six lachrymose pieces, or a hundred and twenty-six tenors singing. . . . But here I draw the veil, especially when it could have stopped at sixty-seven, including the three finalists.

The question of time is important, and I personally try to work out the very minute a class should end, in order to fit in other classes, &c. To run the Lytham-St. Anne's Musical Festival in three and a half days, the thirty-six classes must end at definite times, thus giving the judges a chance to rest before the evening sessions, which are most exacting. I dare not attempt to calculate how many halls, days, and judges would have to be employed if this knock-out scheme were introduced into each of the solo classes.

I apologise for not being the 'soul of wit,' but while I am indebted to Mr. Scovell for his suggestions, I am keenly desirous of pointing out how I think they would work out in practice.—Yours, &c.,

'Dale Garth,' Lytham. Ivor Coombes.

---

Sir,—If Mr. Scovell's idea of eliminating rounds on cup-tie principles were feasible, it would have been adopted by festival committees long ago.

Here are a few objections: The convenient number, sixty-four in a class, represents sixty-four performances, plus a few extra for final test. 'Pairing' would result in a startling total of a hundred and twenty-six at least, viz., first round, sixty-four; second round, thirty-two; third round, sixteen; fourth round, eight; semi-final, four; final, two.

The proposal is for 'each candidate to select one of five songs from own répertoire' (vide daily Press). 'There was tremendous cheering when it was announced that the finalists, respectively, would sing "When I am dead" and "O that it were so!" Scenes of wild excitement followed the judge's decision in favour of the second singer. The verdict was most unpopular, as the dramatic execution of number one strongly appealed to the excited audience, who demanded a re-hearing, which was refused. An ugly rush ensued, and during the confusion the referee escaped by a side exit. There were several arrests, after which harmony was restored for the next bout.'

It is assumed that the proposal would apply equally to all classes and subjects, thus doubling the entry list. Presumably only one fee would be paid by the finalists for six appearances. The careworn adjudicator, after hearing a hundred and twenty-six songs of varying degree, would expect his fee to be doubled, while the festival I represent would have to pay for one month's hiring charges for use of the hall, instead of a fortnight.

So much for the material side. Artistic results would be still more unsatisfactory—in fact, disastrous.

Whereas the weaker candidates might conceivably be drawn together for several rounds, the potential first- and second-prize winners might meet in the first round, and one 'would be handed the mark sheet and could go home.'

Does the best club in the country ever win the football challenge cup? Are the best two ever in the final?

'The audience would listen to a varied concert steadily increasing in quality and excitement.' This will remind secretaries that the Excise officer is ever on the alert to discriminate between concerts and competitions, and to trap the unwary offender. Any deviation from time-honoured principles would inevitably result in cancellation of the exemption certificate which is granted to musical festivals aiming at education first, and 'entertainment' an altogether subsidiary consideration.—Yours, &c.,

130, Belgrave Road,
Wanstead, E.11. T. Lester Jones
(Hon. Secretary. London Musical Competition Festival).

---

Sir,—The only persons to benefit by Mr. Scovell's proposed scheme would be the audience, who would thereby hear more singing for their money.

To take his instance of sixty-four competitors in a certain class, its logical conclusion would mean that the adjudicator, instead of hearing sixty-four persons sing once, would have to hear a hundred and twenty-six songs.

Firstly, the whole, one against another, then the thirty-two winners, the sixteen winners, the eight winners, the four winners, and the two winners. How anyone concerned would gain by this, I fail to see.

Programmes would become so difficult to keep to schedule that organizers might very well give up all idea of carrying their festivals through at all. All entrants (vocal) might sing from memory.—Yours, &c., J. Spencer.

143, Portland Street, Southport.

P.S.—One way in which the Musical Times could help competitors (and secretaries) is by publishing monthly a list of all festivals to be held for which entries close during the current month of issue. Just the name of the festival, secretary's name and address, and closing date, would be all that is required. J. S.

[If secretaries will help us by sending the information not later than the 15th of the month preceding that in which the entries close, we will gladly do this.—Editor.]

---

Sir,—The scheme put forward by your correspondent, Mr. Scovell, is certainly very attractive. The drawback is the time to be allotted to each class, as in his (supposititious) class the time taken may be anything from six to twelve hours, and entirely dependent on the test-pieces chosen by the competitors. The latter figure (twelve hours) is surely a very long time, but this allows only six minutes per competitor per round.—Yours, &c., H. Corbitt.

10, Clarence Road,
Chorlton-cum-Hardy, Manchester.

---

Sir,—Having read Mr. Scovell's idea of adjudication, I fail to see how it would help the judges in their task; in fact, I should think it would complicate matters if every competitor sang a different song, and also—looking from a competitor's standpoint—making it tiring for those rendering five songs, when some of us (as I know from experience) are worked up to concert pitch with nerves or excitement. I do not think that Mr. Scovell need worry over the competitor being bored, as any person entering a contest for the love of art does not tire of repetitions. I entered a musical festival last year—my second attempt at festival work. I tied fourth, at the final, out of about seventy entries (with eighty-five marks). I did not tire of hearing the test-piece sung, and I was the last to sing, at 5.30 p.m., after waiting my call from early morning. I think one or two test-pieces quite sufficient, as some of us have to labour under great difficulties to get there at all. I will just state how I was situated last year, and I intend to enter again this year, although I have still some of the old handicaps.

My first problem: a very old pianoforte, past repairing; down considerably in tone. (2.) Being a working woman, and trade bad, I could afford only one quarter's singing lessons before the festival. (3.) I developed a bad cold the week of the festival, and was unable to sing three days before the final. (4.) Still undismayed, I worked until late on the Friday night and rose at 5 a.m. on the morning of the festival, caught the 6.30 a.m. train, and was travelling until 11 a.m., having to change three times. Then I had missed my number being called, and it was 5.30 when I sang. Now I ask Mr. Scovell, or any person interested, Don't you think that is enough to break any competitor's courage, without five test-pieces, especially where there is financial difficulty? Being poor does not kill the love or craving for music, although it is a serious handicap, and I am sure there are others placed in the same predicament as I.—Yours, &c.,

A MUSIC LOVER.

Bolton, Lancs.

THE LATE DR. EATON FANING

SIR,—By way of supplementing Dr. Ivimey's letter in your January issue, I add that not only did Eaton Faning—like his Eton contemporary, Charles Harford Lloyd—submit to the ordinary Mus. D. examination ordeal at his Alma Mater, but he expended much time and trouble in preparing for it. I know this was so, from the fact that he came to me for 'coaching' lessons. Well do I remember his difficulty at first in getting tests worked in the time allowed for them by the University regulations. He remarked at the end of one lesson that he did not think it possible to write a complete five-part fugue in three hours, to which I replied that it could be done in one hour. 'Could you do it in that time?' he asked. I said I thought I could. 'Very well then,' said he, 'I have another hour to spare, let me see you do it.' He proceeded to write a subject, and stood over me—watch in hand—whilst I scribbled away, explaining every step of the way as I went along. My fugue was finished in fifty-eight minutes. He was soon able not only to do likewise, but better. Amongst my treasures is a copy of the Philharmonic Beethoven bust, which he sent me after 'getting through' at Cambridge, twenty-eight years ago. How time flies! The trouble is that it takes with it so many old friends, of whom E. F. was certainly one of the best.—Yours, &c.,

C. W. PEARCE.

Crossways, Sandbanks,
Bournemouth.

THE MINOR CHORD: AND SCALE FINGERING

SIR,—In his article Dr. Shirlaw states that Zarlino regarded the minor chord as the major chord taken in the opposite direction—e.g., 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1, instead of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. But how can a chord be changed by a different reading, the sounds remaining the same? $c$–$c^1$–$g^1$–$c^2$–$e^2$–$g^2$ is the same as $g^2$–$e^2$–$c^2$–$g^1$–$c^1$–$c$. I have no first-hand knowledge of Zarlino's works; but Hugo Riemann stated that the 16th-century theorist was 'conscious of the opposition of the major and minor consonant chords, in that the one is referred to the harmonic, the other to the arithmetical division of the string'—a very different matter. This, of course, was Riemann's own theory of the origin of the minor consonance. I was unaware that he had abandoned it until I read Dr. Shirlaw's article; and I am glad to know that he did so, for I have always thought the theory unsound and fanciful, for more reasons than one.

In Mr. Dickinson's article on the fingering of scales, I am astonished that he condemns the harmonic minor—'the beautiful form,' as Stainer calls it in his 'Treatise on Harmony.' In a fairly long career of teaching, I have never dreamt of giving pianoforte pupils any other, except for examination purposes; and then only for a month before the exam., to be dropped directly it was over. It is a great mistake to multiply exercises unnecessarily.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

5, Richmond Mansions,
Denton Road, Twickenham.

DIPLOMAS

SIR,—The discussion on the necessity of stating the subjects in which L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. are gained, and the wide-spreading use of worthless diplomas, shows that serious steps need to be taken to enlighten the general public on the value of musical diplomas. Genuine diplomas are becoming harder to get year by year, owing to the rising standards of examination; at the same time, their value is being depreciated in the eyes of the public by misuse and unfair competition, so that they tend to be of little use in helping the holders to obtain good positions. As an example, I know of an experienced musician who is F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M. (organ), A.R.C.M. (teaching singing and teaching pianoforte), CHM. (choir-training diploma of the R.C.O.), and also holds the R.A.M. (honours) certificate for voice-culture and class-singing for children, besides being a registered teacher. He has applied recently for over a dozen posts as organist-choirmaster, the salaries offered varying from £80 to £120 per annum. To about half he received no reply, and in only one case was he selected for a personal interview and trial, although he has excellent testimonials as well as diplomas.

If cases like this continue, musicians will soon be faced with the question, 'Are diplomas worth while?'—Yours, &c.,

'SANS DIPLOME.'

'BRIGHTENING' HANDEL

SIR,—As a listener at the performance of 'The Messiah' at the Albert Hall, under the baton of Sir Thomas Beecham, on December 18 last (Sunday), I would like to make a few remarks. Right away I would say that from a musical and choral standpoint the performance was full of disappointments.

When a conductor adopts such tempi in choruses as were adopted then, it is impossible for choristers (however well trained they may have been previously) to make good, clean attacks and releases, and one naturally expects such an elementary point as that to be beyond criticism on an important occasion, as this was supposed to be. The choristers must not be blamed, as (being a keen choral singer myself and thoroughly used to working under a baton) I do say emphatically that it was practically impossible to follow the beat, which was most erratic and inconsistent.

Whether or no a performance of this kind can be called brilliant is a very debatable point, but my musical intelligence tells me that a performance raced through as 'The Messiah' was in nearly every item, with practically no light and shade, can be neither brilliant nor rhythmical. One paper states that 'Sir Thomas Beecham's dynamic energy sometimes seemed restless during the quieter moments.' I might add that for a conductor of such musical fame the manner of conducting was most irriatting and the gestures often unnecessary.

I will conclude by saying that if Sir Thomas Beecham is 'putting "The Messiah" right,' as he is reputed to have said, the sooner he adopts other methods the better for all concerned, as this specific performance was devoid of dramatic feeling, and lacked that wonderful religious awe with which it would have been imbued had the words and music been allowed to deliver their message.—Yours, &c.,

'MUSICAL.'

Stamford Brook, W.12.

DROWNING THE SOLOIST

SIR,—When so many of the 'big 'uns' are explaining to us what a musical nation we are without being aware of the fact, for a mere layman to voice an opinion is to invite a squashing. However, as I am indebted to music for many hours of enjoyment, some of them exquisite, I should like to know whether others have thought as I do, or if my ear is wrong.

My chief enjoyment has come from small choirs, orchestras, string quartets, and instrumental and vocal recitals. When I attend the big orchestral concerts, I find myself wondering if the composers whose music is being interpreted wrote for such a large number of instruments; or have we created artist-conductors who, imbued with the modern ideas of trusts and combinations, look to a millennium when choirs of ten thousand or twenty thousand and orchestras in proportion shall answer the movements of their batons? The same question applies to choral societies. I know the bigger the choir the bigger the fee, and men must live; but is it music?

This is all the more apparent when a concerto is performed. Soloists cannot increase their tone according to the size of the orchestra, and more often than not they are swamped and heard only occasionally, until one cannot help thinking of a whale coming up to spout, preparatory to another long spell underneath.

I have heard oratorios—Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' for example—where the solo voice sings with the choir and orchestra, and one cannot help being sorry for the poor soloist, who is apparently working so hard and trying to interpret, but no coherent utterance is audible. With regard to opera: The first time I heard 'La Bohême' the orchestra prevented me from understanding the plot. This, however, was not the case with 'Così fan tutte,' where only a very small orchestra was employed. The music was, in my opinion, all the more enjoyable because of this. Conductors may gibe at singers, but the volume of the voice is limited, whereas the orchestra knows no such limitations.—Yours, &c.,

W. T. G. W.

North Finchley, N.12.

EAR TROUBLE

SIR,—I read with great interest the letter to which you refer in the current Musical Times, and it may be of interest to others who, as well as myself, will welcome the appearance of the promised article, if I state what are my own defects other than the common impairment of the hearing faculty in many people of the mature age of 'over seventy.' To me all acute tones sound flat, and the grave tones sharp, discovered for the first time five years ago. On my way south, in September, as is my custom I spent the week-end in town, and to my surprise, at the 'Prom.' concert found the flutes were persistently flat and basses sharp. At Bournemouth they were doing the same thing, and as no improvement had taken place by the next season, I had an hour's searching diagnosis by a Wimpole Street specialist. Result, 'I am afraid nothing can be done for you.' The other day I was handed a case of four C forks, and immediately laid them out in correct order of pitch, from lowest to the Old Phil. 540. I am left with four octaves on the pianoforte from which I can get really pleasurable music; and from a good wireless set which in the main is enjoyable, there comes in with the flutes, in the higher notes (as well as with the pianoforte), an almost unbearable scream a full semitone flat. A similar 'delight' comes with highest strings and reeds.

I should like to add a word of appreciation of your valuable journal, which has for fifty years kept my interest in music quite unimpaired and my enthusiasm for things unabated.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES PALMER.

The Drive, Kettering.

---

We have received the draft programme of the 1928 Three Choirs Festival (Gloucester, September 2-7). New works will be composed for the occasion by Ireland, Harwood, Holst, Bantock, Honegger, and the conductor-in-chief, Sir Herbert Brewer. The programme will include also 'The Dream of Gerontius' and 'The Kingdom,' Ethel Smyth's Mass in D, Honegger's 'King David,' Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus,' and Verdi's 'Requiem.'

In connection with the Education Authority, Mr. Gerald R. Hayes is giving a course of five weekly lecture-recitals at the Streatham and Tooting Literary Institute (Bec School, Beechcroft Road, Tuesdays, at 7.30) on 'Music of the 16th and 17th centuries.' The two remaining lectures are on February 7 and 14, and will treat of wind and keyboard instruments respectively.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Lady pianist (advanced) wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice. One evening weekly.—G. M., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist and accompanist (lady) wishes to meet singer or instrumentalist; or to act as accompanist for string band.—E. M. G., 185, Byron Avenue, Manor Park, E.12.

Wanted, good flautist, clarinettist, and violinist for practice of advanced orchestral music. N.W. district.—H. B. P., c/o Musical Times.

Mezzo-soprano wishes to meet advanced accompanist for mutual practice.—WALTON, 22*a*, Kemplay Road, N.W.3.

Bass singer wishes to meet good accompanist who is also a solo pianist, for mutual practice. Croydon or S.E. districts.—C. B., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet instrumentalist or singer for mutual practice. Evenings preferred. London.—R. U. S., c/o Musical Times.

String players wanted to strengthen an orchestra attached to a young people's club in S.E. London. For particulars apply to Miss BACCHUS, 19, Peckham Road, S.E.5.

Two tenors required for party of madrigal singers, consisting of six voices. Must be good readers. Practices every other week at Baker Street.—MADRIGALS, 34, Crediton Road, N.W.10.

Two violinists wanted to complete a quintet. Players in or near London preferred.—ROBERT H. CHAMPION, 1, Pearman Street, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E.1.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Lent term opened on January 9 with an extremely satisfactory entry of students.

On Thursday, January 12, the remarkable adventure of presenting Haydn's String Quartets, eighty-three in all, was continued in Duke's Hall. The four young ladies from Mr. Lionel Tertis's class played Op. 9, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, and their performance was worthy of high praise. The ensemble was excellent, the tone true, and I am sure they enjoyed themselves quite as much as their audience. These Thursday afternoons deserve the attention of the greater musical public, quite apart from the immediate entourage of the Academy, for they are both entertaining and educational. In addition to these concerts the usual weekly and students' chamber concerts will take place.

Recognition of the genius of Edward German came at the New Year, when he received the honour of knighthood. He entered the Academy in 1880, taking the organ as his chief study, and a year later took up the violin under Weist Hill and Alfred Burnett. It is of interest to record the fact that one of Sir Edward German's fellow students was Sir Henry Wood.

It is with great regret that I announce the death of Daniel Wood, who was Professor of flute playing at the Academy since 1905.

F.

The following awards have been made: Gowland Harrison Scholarship (violin) to Sydney A. Griller (London), Jack O'Brien and John Hamilton being very highly commended; Emma Levy Scholarship (pianoforte and theory) to Sadie E. Silverman (London), Zelda C. Bock and Sarah R. Stein being commended; John Stokes Scholarship (baritone) to Francis Geoffrey Davies (Liverpool); Charles Oldham Scholarship (violin) to Sylvia M. Paulin (Bexley); Baume (Manx) Scholarship (any branch of music) to Mabel J. Kelly (singing) (Southampton); Liszt Scholarship (pianoforte) to Josephine Harrison (London), Mary J. Townshend being highly commended.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Of actual doings at the College during the first two or three weeks of the term there is not a great deal to record, but a long list of fixtures has been planned, including five or six orchestral concerts, four chamber concerts, a like number each of informal concerts, evening recitals, and mid-day recitals; also three Patron's Fund rehearsals, and at least two operatic performances. The Operatic Class has a busy term mapped out, and is already well advanced with preparation of what may be called 'répertoire' works, such as 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Rigoletto,' and 'Madame Butterfly.' During the latter half of the term no less than three works by British composers will be produced, two one-Act operas and a ballet, two of these three works being given under the auspices of the Ernest Palmer Opera Study Fund.

As was observed a short time since, during the festivities connected with its twenty-first birthday, the Royal College of Music Union forms an invaluable social link between past and present members of the College. Its popularity was well demonstrated at the annual meeting on January 19, when the President of the Union, Sir Hugh Allen, took the chair at a large gathering of past and present students of the College from all parts of the country. He reported the continued prosperity of the Union at the formal meeting, and afterwards joined with the members in the merriment of feasting and entertainment.

The following awards of exhibitions and prizes are announced:

CHRISTMAS TERM, 1927

Council Exhibitions—Ethel Pearce, Isobel Cooke, Lois Meads, Elizabeth Campbell, Lilian Harris, Josef Zacharawitch, Betty Baldry, Leila Andrews, Leslie Ellis, Isaac Franklin, Remo Lauricella, Dorothy Ivimey, Florence Fox, Rose Greenway, Haydn Morgan, Iris Austin, Dudley Beaven, Margaret Davis, Elizabeth McIntyre, Leslie Orrey, Kathleen Collins. London Musical Society's Prize—Gladys Knight. Grove Exhibition—Divided between: Sylvia Pearce, Ernest Barnes, Ursula Boase. Raymond ffennell Awards—Josephine Teear, Joyce McG. Clarke, Christine Godwin, Mary Whittaker, Eileen Stebbing, Kathleen Harman, Hilda Stokes-Rees, Phyllis Gibbon, Janet Waller, Emily Ramsden, Stella Marsh, Olwen Phillips, Monica Dugmore, Ella Hulme, Mary Kelly.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Lent term opened auspiciously with the number of students well up to average.

The inaugural ceremony held as usual on the first Wednesday of the term was made interesting by the presence of Mrs. Mary Davies, who, after giving a short address, distributed the prizes and medals awarded to students on their work of last year.

As the result of the competition held recently, the following have been awarded scholarships for two terms on probation, with possible renewal: Leonard Atherton, George Alfred Jupp, Eric Clifford Coles, Thelma Lena Nurick, Mary Beatrice Churchouse, Mollie Grace O'Halloran, Frederick Hugh Danger, Mary Jocelyn Ross, Muriel Florence Forshaw, Luke Monro Spooner, Sydney Goldstein, Keith E. Stutely, Walter Douglas Grose, and Edna W. Eaire.

The following exhibitions have just been awarded in connection with the Local Practical Examinations held at 'home' centres during last year: Senior Division (value nine guineas)—Elsie M. Naylor (Nottingham), Muriel G. Haste (London), Rosie Teacher (Hastings), Cissie Hedley (Bristol), Charles Hamilton (Glasgow), Mary Coles (Dover), Dorothy Landon (Newcastle), Irene D. Richards (London). Intermediate Division (value six guineas)—Lucy C. Bell (Norwich), Mollie V. Halls (London), Alec Farrar (Halifax), Eunice E. Thomas (Merthyr Tydfil), Emily Stansfield (Bradford), Edgar Lindley (Manchester), Barbara E. Farrow (Croydon), Alice C. Sandry (St. Austell). Junior Division (value six guineas)—Gerald Agnew (Guildford), Emanuel Yourovsky (London), Joan B. Low (Southampton), Yvonne C. Fisher (Bristol), Maureen Hanrahan (Limerick), Gertrude Cameron (Dundee), Kenneth J. Goddard (Nottingham), Charles F. Jones (Stoke-on-Trent), Madeline Oldham (Manchester). Elocution (Senior: value nine guineas)—Una B. Ritchie (Sunderland); Intermediate (value six guineas)—Margaret F. Goodfellow (Dover); Junior (value six guineas)—Doreen Harrison (Sheffield) and Dorothy Ackroyd (Blackpool).

ASSOCIATED BOARD: AWARD OF MEDALS

The following candidates gained the gold and silver medals offered by the Board for the highest and second highest honours marks, respectively, in the final, advanced, and intermediate grades of the Local Centre Examinations in November-December last, the competition being open to all candidates in the British Isles: Final Grade Gold Medal, Dorothy S. Pike, Salisbury centre (pianoforte); Final Grade Silver Medal, Violetta Yuill, Brighton centre (pianoforte); Advanced Grade Gold Medal, Eileen M. Robertson, Leeds centre (pianoforte); Advanced Grade Silver Medal, Margaret I. Hartland, Croydon centre (pianoforte), and Evelyn M. Stannard, Kings Lynn centre (pianoforte) (these two candidates gained an equal number of marks); Intermediate Grade Gold Medal, Rosalind Collins, Portsmouth centre (violoncello); Intermediate Grade Silver Medal, Marjorie E. Helyer, Bournemouth centre (pianoforte).

MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Bedford (Modern).—The programme of a recital for two pianofortes included Glazounov's 'The Forest,' for eight hands, Moscheles's 'Hommage à Handel,' and Scharwenka's 'Danse Polonaise.' At a Mendelssohn recital given in St. Paul's Church, 'Come, let us sing' (Psalm 95) was sung by the School choir under Mr. H. J. Colson. At the Christmas concert, Percy Fletcher's 'The Deacon's Masterpiece' was the chief choral item, the entire second part of the programme being devoted to carols.

Berkhamsted.—Dr. E. T. Sweeting judged the annual House Competitions, which were marked by an increase in the number of performers on instruments other than the pianoforte. A concert was given during the term by the Intime Trio (Mlle. de Livet, Messrs. Cecil Bonvalot and Cedric Sharpe). The principal choral works at the School concert were Walford Davies's 'Hervé Riel,' the Faery Chorus from 'The Immortal Hour,' and the 'Song of the Volga Boatmen,' arranged by A. Forbes Milne. Mendelssohn's 'Son and Stranger' Overture, the Allegretto from Beethoven's eighth Symphony, and Dvorák's 'Slavonic Dance' in G minor, were the orchestral items. A carol service was held on December 18.

Bruton (King's School).—At programmes given in Bruton Parish Church, under Mr. N. W. Newell, Bach's 'Jesu, Joy and Treasure' and excerpts from 'The Messiah' were sung, the Rev. A. H. Peppin acting as organist for the latter. The second part of the Christmas concert consisted of an orchestral selection from Gilbert and Sullivan and Act 2 of 'Ruddigore.'

Canford.—Concerts have been given on Sunday evenings, the programmes of which have included music for violin, violoncello, pianoforte, and string quartet. The House Competitions were judged by Mrs. Farnell Watson, Principal of the Bournemouth School of Music. Sir Dan Godfrey conducted community singing on December 15, and a carol service was held on the last Sunday of the term.

Cheltenham.—At the summer concert, Parry's 'Ode to Music' and the Pilgrims' Chorus from 'Tannhäuser' were sung; the orchestra played the 'Coriolanus' Overture, Cyril Scott's 'Cherry Ripe,' and Debussy's Petite Suite. The programme also included movements from Mozart's Trio for clarinet, viola, and pianoforte, unaccompanied part-songs, and the 'Agincourt Song' sung by the whole school. During the Christmas term Sir Herbert Brewer gave one of a series of organ recitals, and a service of carols was held. At the final concert choral selections from 'The Mastersingers' and 'Faust,' Gerrard Williams's arrangement of the 'Volga Boatmen,' and that by Geoffrey Toye of 'The Keeper' (for chorus and brass) were sung, the orchestral items including the 'Figaro' Overture and the 'Rosamunde' Ballet Music. Mr. P. J. Taylor conducted.

Chigwell.—The programme of the Christmas concert included Parry's 'Pied Piper,' Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah,' part of the Mozart Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, the Purcell Suite in C, Quilter's Three English Dances, and the Haydn 'Toy Symphony.' Mr. H. S. Denton conducted.

Christ's Hospital.—Brahms's 'How lovely are Thy dwellings fair,' Elgar's 'The Wraith of Odin,' and works by Morley and C. S. Lang, were among the choral items of the December concert; the instrumental programme included solos for flute, violin, and pianoforte (the Chopin Ballade in A flat), and orchestral pieces.

Cranleigh.—At concerts during the term pianoforte trios by Brahms and Schubert, the Ravel Quartet, and works for string quartet by Frank Bridge and Percy Grainger, have been played; and a recital of vocal duets was given by Misses Ita Cope and Jean Duncan. The choral works at the School concert, conducted by Mr. S. M. Allen, were three choruses from Elgar's 'King Olaf' and the Choral Dances from Borodin's 'Prince Igor.' The orchestra played a Suite from 'Carmen,' and a Pageant Suite by Mr. R. W. Bowyer (assistant music master), written for the recent Pageant at Eccleshall, Staffs.

Denstone.—At the end of the Easter term a concert of community singing and miscellaneous items was given, Schubert's Marche Militaire being played by the orchestra.

Eton.—The chief events of the term have been (1) a pianoforte recital by Mr. Harold Bauer; (2) a concert by the Entente String Quartet, with Mr. Charles Draper in the Clarinet Quintets of Mozart and Brahms, and with Dr. Ley in the Schumann Pianoforte Quintet; (3) Vocal and Instrumental Competitions, judged by Dr. W. H. Harris, Mr. Harvey Grace, and Mr. D. G. A. Fox; (4) four organ recitals by Dr. Ley; (5) two performances of carols and Christmas music; and (6) the School concert. In the programme of this were the Masque from Purcell's 'Dioclesian,' part-songs by Wood, Dyson, and Sullivan, the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, 'Finlandia,' Holst's 'Marching Song,' and the Scherzo from a 'Midsummer Night's Dream.' Mozart's E flat Trio for violin, viola, and pianoforte, and the solo flute and violin parts in the second 'Brandenburg' Concerto, which were also included, were played by boys in the school.

Fettes.—Sunday concerts have been given as follows: (1) a pianoforte recital by Mr. George Reeves; (2) a violin and pianoforte recital by Mrs. Rowland Waterhouse and Mrs. David Clapperton; (3) the Brahms Requiem by the School Choir and Reid Symphony Orchestra (assisted by members of the School orchestra), conducted by Mr. H. M. Havergal; (4) a concert by the Edinburgh Wind Quintet; (5) a pianoforte recital by Mr. Aubyn Raymar. The Inter-House Competition was judged by Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt (St. Giles's Cathedral).

Giggleswick.—A chamber concert programme, given by Messrs. Bentley, Dunford, and T. A. Davies, included the 'Dumky' Trio of Dvorák and the Elgar Violin Sonata. At the Christmas concert 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Elgar's 'Fringes of the Fleet' were sung under Mr. T. A. Davies. A carol service took place on the last Sunday of the term.

The Leys.—The annual Bach programme, given in the School Chapel, was planned by Dr. E. H. Ezard. The works performed were the Cantatas, 'How many and how mighty, Lord' (No. 153) and 'The heart is defiant and afraid' (No. 176); an Eastertide Sequence and Hymn; and Chorale Preludes for organ. Mr. T. F. Bye conducted.

Malvern.—The following performances have been given: (1) a violin and pianoforte recital by Miss Orrea Pernel and Madame Lily Henkel; (2) community singing with instrumental items played by boys; (3) a concert-performance of 'Hansel and Gretel' (with pianoforte accompaniment); (4) Christmas music in Chapel. The principal judge of the House Competition was Dr. Percy Hull (Hereford Cathedral). At the Christmas concert, Hamish MacCunn's 'Lord Ullin's Daughter' and Fletcher's Fantasia on 'The Mastersingers' were sung, and the Saint-Saëns Concerto in G minor, for pianoforte and orchestra, was played with a different soloist for each of its three movements.

Oundle.—The Mass in B minor was performed for the fourth time under Mr. C. M. Spurling, on December 18, the whole school, as usual, taking part. The choir numbered three hundred, the additional unison chorus two hundred and thirty, and the orchestra fifty. The unison chorus took part in eleven of the twelve choruses sung, and only three numbers (Nos. 15, 19, and 21) of the entire work were omitted. The soloists and six members of the orchestra came from London; but the three Bach trumpeters and the solo flautist were boys in school.

Rugby.—Two of Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' and Grieg's 'Landerkennung' were the principal choral works at the December concert; the orchestra played movements by Bach, Beethoven, Grainger, and Walford Davies, and the Chopin Berceuse was among the solos. Mr. K. A. Stubbs conducted. The 'Band Concert' programme, conducted by Mr. H. W. Pearce, contained, besides works by Holst, Schubert, Grieg, and Sullivan, chamber music items for wind instruments and pianoforte by Loeillet, Hurlstone, and Mozart.

St. Paul's.—The following concerts were given during the term: an organ recital by Dr. H. Hickox, interspersed with songs and pianoforte solos by Old Paulines; a pianoforte recital by Mr. Harry Isaacs, with Mr. A. N. G. Richards as singer; a miscellaneous concert given almost entirely by present members of the school, at which the pianoforte solos were part of the Grieg Sonata in E minor and a Chopin group, including the Studies Op. 25, No. 9, and Op. 10, No. 12. The first part of the Musical Society's concert was miscellaneous, most of the items being contributed by O.P.'s. The second consisted of 'Hiawatha's Departure,' conducted by Mr. H. E. Wilson.

St. Peter's Court (Broadstairs, Preparatory).—At the School concert, unison songs by Holst and Dunhill, and solo songs by Quilter, Austin, and Alec Rowley, were sung; the March in 'Scipio,' arranged as a string trio, and pianoforte solos by MacDowell and Alec Rowley, were played; and songs were also contributed by Mr. Hubert Eisdell.

Wellington.—Recitals or concerts have been given during the term by Miss Jelly d'Aranyi, with Mr. W. K. Stanton at the pianoforte; Miss Joan Sheppard (song recital); the Band of the 2nd Battalion the 60th Rifles (K.R.R.C.); Mr. Bartlett and Mr. Stanton (violin and organ recital); Miss Kathleen Thomson (pianoforte recital); the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Stanton; Miroslav (two violin recitals); and Mr. R. Timberley (organ recital). Mr. R. Jacques (Queen's College, Oxford), adjudicated the Glee-Singing Competition; and on the last Sunday of the term Christmas music, including three choruses from 'The Messiah,' was sung at evensong.

Westminster.—Concerts of music for bassoon and French horn, preceded by short lectures, have been given by Mr. R. Newton and Mr. Aubrey Brain respectively, with Mr. C. Thornton Lofthouse at the pianoforte. The programme of an 'informal' concert contained solos for violin, violoncello, clarinet, trumpet, and pianoforte, besides pianoforte duets and songs; and, in December, Parts 1 and 2 of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' were sung under Mr. Lofthouse, the whole school taking part in certain numbers.

Winchester.—The most important events of 1927 have been performances of 'Samson,' selections from 'The Mastersingers,' S. Wesley's 'Exultate Deo,' part of the Brahms 'Requiem,' and the 'Choral' Symphony (preceded by lectures). There have also been three recitals of chamber music with wind instruments, three historical song-recitals, and instrumental and choral competitions.

F. H. S.

---

At the final session of the Cleveland and Durham Eisteddfod, held at Middlesbrough on January 2 and 3, a good competition took place between five male-voice choirs all from local iron and steel works. L.N.E.R. Works Institute (Mr. G. Woodhead) was first, Chester-le-Street Co-operative (Mr. J. Hughes) second, and the others were Pease & Partners, Furness Athletic Club, and Erimus Club. In the chief male-voice competition the winners were Cleveland Harmonic.

London Concerts

WILLIAM WALTON'S 'SINFONIA CONCERTANTE'

M. Ansermet opened his Philharmonic concert on January 5 with the first 'Leonora' Overture and the 'Unfinished' Symphony, which he treated with calm reverence. Here, it appears, was matter for special comment. M. Ansermet should have done violence to Schubert, or handled him without competence. Disappointing to find him so sympathetic, sane, and well-regulated a musician—almost dull, in fact.

M. Ansermet then crossed to his own ground, where he conducted William Walton's new 'Sinfonia Concertante' for orchestra and pianoforte, and Ravel's 'Daphnis and Chloe,' the latter more completely performed than ever before in England. Walton's gossiping music and Ravel's delicately-powerful orchestration gave him something which he could hold up in the limelight. Both works looked well.

Mr. Walton has lately been regarded as one of our prospects. How would he open up? Would he become cleverer and ever cleverer, or wilder and ever wilder; or would he become a composer? The 'Sinfonia Concertante' points to the composer. It has many contacts with the composed kind of music. By contacts we do not mean reminiscences, though these were to be spotted in plenty. Mr. Walton has had only twenty years or so for learning what his fellows have done. The search for originality is like a pilgrimage out of London—so many miles have to be trudged before you are alone. The 'Sinfonia Concertante' has contacts of the reminiscent kind, some of which may be fairly put down as echoes of the world's music, and some of which may not—a few rhythms, rhythmic oddities and reiterations, for instance, which tempt the word 'Russian' from the pen of the too-ready writer. Henceforth may no composer say the same thing six times running without being written down a pro-Muscovite? Mr. Walton's larger contacts were with the kind of music that argues from one page to the next and shows a sense of responsibility to its texts. Not that Mr. Walton could be accused of epic continuities, but his music spoke as if it had them in mind, which was something. There was no special idiom or attitude or manner or licence consciously adopted for better or for worse, but a generality of style that could clothe any idea that demanded expression. A good deal of the music was in the notes of a scale, with just a few intrusive notes that help to give a plangency to the diatonic writing. Diatonic and undiatonic were interspersed in the way that long and short sentences are interspersed in good writing. Humour, in plenty, was there, and it had the adjustment that is the best part of humour. The slow movement—the middle of three—moved with classic breadth and dignity, or tried to. Out of it all emerged a young personality that had more in its manner than grimacing and flourishing. These are casual approvals that came to mind during the performance, all apt to the belief, expressed above, that Mr. Walton would develop as a composer.

The actual music did not amount to a great deal. It was the product of a live brain that could think vivaciously; but the things thought of had little substance. The music, all in all, was more akin to good dinner-table conversation than to a lecture or the play. This, except to the old-fashioned, is high praise. The pianoforte obbligato could be compared to the pleasant accompaniment of plates and dishes, knives and forks, glasses and decanters, that makes the conversation go. Mr. York Bowen was an expert pianist—we forbear to call him butler—who appeared to take joy in his task. As to the title of the work, Sinfonia is right, and Concertante is right; if it be wrong to use Italian words, let the objector supply the English.

The 'Daphnis and Chloe' that followed was not the complete stage work, but a concert version, authorized by the composer, that contained ten sections arranged in three movements, and was being performed for the first time in England. This is said to be Ravel's best work. Judge music by its polish, and it is one of the best of anybody's works. Everything is chosen, arranged, and coloured with a kind of glossy assurance. Beautiful taste, beautiful orchestration, beautiful everything, but little said and done. The work was long, and we could not for ever admire the aristocratic hauteur which forswore the drastic word, the blurted utterance. In a way, Mr. Walton's anxiety to please was preferable. This translated ballet-music appeared to belong to neither of its worlds, the theatre or the concert-room. See the ballet, and you want to hear the music separately to savour its beauties through the ear alone; hear the music, and you feel the want of movement and poses and events of the stage to give it emphasis. Among its colours was that of the wordless voice. A choir from the Royal Academy of Music made a brave show amid difficulties which were sometimes excessive. When, after an unaccompanied bout with chromatics, the voices were no more than relatively joined by the instruments, the fault was M. Ravel's, and not that of the singers, who, like singers the world over, have the untempered scale of their throats.

M.

L.S.O.

On January 9, the L.S.O. offered its patrons a Wagner programme conducted by Albert Coates. There was a full house and much enthusiasm. Apart from 'Siegfried's Journey to the Rhine,' all the items were concerned with some aspect or other of Wagnerian eroticism. The Venusberg music portrayed the love of a Goddess; the duet of Tristan, the love of woman; the Parsiful duet, the love of the enchantress; the Valkyrie scene, the love of primitive man, for Siegmund and Sieglinde are the Adam and Eve of German mythology. Yet so far from surfeiting the appetite, this love music appeared to stimulate it. The concert was certainly not short. The concluding item—the duet from Tristan—began after the canonical hour of ten. But the audience was even more demonstrative and enthusiastic at the end than it was at the beginning.

As for the performance, it was just what one would have expected from Albert Coates and Madame Ljungberg. Coates has the whole Wagnerian répertoire at his finger tips. He may miss here and there a subtle point, but he can be relied upon to miss nothing that is really essential, and, what is even more important, to reveal all the intense, passionate ardour of this music. Madame Ljungberg's performance was the exact replica of her performances at Covent Garden last spring. She is an excellent artist—within well-defined limits. So is Mr. Widdop. But there are indications that he knows what these limitations are, and that he is doing something to conquer them. His future excites lively hopes, and will be watched with keen interest.

F. B.

B.B.C. NATIONAL CONCERT

After the Berlin Philharmonic, the Hallé Orchestra. Inevitable comparisons showed the scales wavering, with an ultimate descent on the Hallé side, mainly because of the absence of the overpointing—not to put it crudely as 'stunting'—that just cheapened the performance of the Berliners. Sir Hamilton Harty gave us beautiful playing in Mozart's G minor (though his pace and some other matters might be questioned), and an outstanding performance of Beethoven's fifth, rounding off a highly successful evening with some first-rate Wagner, in which Mr. Harold Williams sang up to the form of the orchestra. The crowded audience was largely made up of listeners who seemed to have followed the B.B.C. from their fireside to Langham Place. They demonstrated whenever possible—above all (and rightly) at the end of the Beethoven. An ovation was earned, for the Symphony was made wonderfully fresh and vivid. This writer has never been so struck by the Scherzo (although the bridge into the Finale was not well graded). In shopping terms, it was worth the money to hear the ten double-basses set about their fugato entries. If (as the Jeremiahs affirm) an occasional visit by a crack orchestra is necessary in order that London may not forget what high-grade playing is like, there is no need to send to the Continent. Manchester is good enough.

H. G.

STRAUSS WALTZES

The Viennese waltz dynasty of Strausses has a brilliant history, which post-bellum misfortunes and the vogue of negroid dances will not, it is to be hoped, check.

The present Johann Strauss III., who is now touring England with the family waltzes, a concert of which was given at the Albert Hall on January 15, is grandson of Johann I., and son of the 'great' Johann. Their waltzes are part of the history of charming, reckless, luckless Vienna. Herr Strauss is an artist, and he conducts the celebrated pieces, which include also galops and marches, with fire, and with a kind of sad pride in his demeanour. And, indeed, the sensitive listener could not be oblivious of a sense of change and decay at this concert, which (but then, a Sunday afternoon at the Albert Hall! . . .) somehow missed the spirit of perfectly care-free gaiety. The waltzes flagged just a little in the new atmosphere—so far from the brilliance of a Hofburg ball in the 1870's!

Madame Vilma Delmar sang (in costume) with a remarkable technique among the leger-lines, but her uneasy bearing—she could not keep still—over-advertised the difficulties and made the listener uncomfortable. C.

THE INSURANCE SOCIETY ORCHESTRA

The orchestra of the Insurance Society gave a fair account of itself at Queen's Hall on January 11. But it would have done much better if the programme had been shorter. A long programme is always a mistake for amateurs. It has no chance of bringing out the very best that is in them; it closes the door on the joys of a really good performance; it means greater risks and responsibilities than a union of Insurance Societies should take. We can understand the anxiety to go deeply into the orchestral repertory, which contains so many gems. But there is no danger that burglars should ever steal them. These gems can always be found when wanted. Unless purely technical problems are solved in a satisfactory manner, the composer, the performer, and the 'third party' (the audience) suffer alike. This does not mean that the evening was uninteresting. But it does mean that the orchestra can play much better than it did on January 11. F. B.

GERALD COOPER CONCERT

Mr. Gerald Cooper's programmes never fail to reveal some piece or other either unjustly neglected or unknown to the city—if not to the world. The concert given on January 10 was no exception in this respect. Few of us could have heard either the lovely Mozart Quartet for pianoforte and wind, or the Sonata for pianoforte by Philipp Jarnach, which Miss Kathleen Long played with so much sympathy and charm. But, alas! its end was thoroughly unworthy of its noble beginning. There is at least one British composer who believes that his works are shelved only because public and performers have a pitiful faith in 'names.' The performance in question can only have been undertaken because Gounod has 'a name.' His 'little Symphony' for wood and horns is in fact so little that it cannot be distinguished from the thousand and one attempts of the kind made by amateurs in all ages. I have the deepest admiration for the composer of 'Faust,' but with 'Faust' my admiration begins and ends. The British composer to whom I have referred has a composition of his own for wood instruments which knocks the Gounod Symphony into a cocked hat. The playing was admirable on the part of the pianist—a little less admirable on the part of wood-wind and horns. F. B.

SCHUBERT AND JOHN COATES

It was felt by everyone to be a special privilege to hear Mr. John Coates sing 'Die Schöne Müllerin' at the second of the Gerald Cooper concerts at Æolian Hall. He is the most distinguished English vocal artist of his generation, and the performance was a worthy celebration of the Schubert Centenary. Mr. Gerald Moore's pianoforte playing was really sympathetic and expressive.

The fact that few of the Müllerlieder are ever heard separately is a proof of Schubert's art in the composing of the cycle. The work is a whole; and though Schubert may have taken a hint from Beethoven's song-cycle, the thing is a piece of wonderful originality. No one separate song is quite equal to Schubert's very best, perhaps, but the whole is indisputably one of his masterpieces. At this concert we were charmed the whole way. Only, perhaps, in the courting period, before 'Mein!' did one or two of the simple strophic songs seem a trifle slow.

Mr. Coates knows German and knows Schubert. There was never a touch of excessive dramatisation. The whole was kept quiet and discreet. Points were made with the utmost sensitiveness and delicacy. 'Wohin?' completely satisfied us. The pace was moderate, and the tone extremely refined, with a hint of wistfulness. And the singer positively improved as the evening went on. No doubt a warmer and more powerful tone might have been desired in the 'Mein!' and in one or two other places, but the only real flaw in the evening was at the end of 'Pause.' The pianist's rhythm and tone made 'Ungeduld' an entrancing piece of music. In some of the pathetic songs towards the end the singer excelled. The very justness of his words made his tone beautiful. It was a classic performance. The audience showed deplorable taste in breaking in with applause after every song. C.

CAROLS AND MR. FAGGE

On New Year's Day a small audience gathered at the Albert Hall to listen to carols sung by half-a-dozen choirs, conducted by Mr. Arthur Fagge. This was rather unfortunate, for Mr. Fagge had taken special pains to choose carols which he thought would most delight the audience. He applied this criterion ruthlessly and remorselessly, and on the whole successfully, for the audience encored the worst carol of the lot. The chief subject consisted of a chromatic progression and regression—three notes each way—for the tenors, which had just as much poetry and imagination as the simple arithmetical statement that one and one make two, and that two less one makes one. There was another piece by Gounod with a solo part (sung by Robert Radford), which no words will ever make into a carol. If there is anything in form and spirit this is not a carol, but a heavy German waltz.

The programme was, then, surprising but not interesting. The performance, however, made some amends, for Mr. Fagge had been obviously anxious to secure variety of colour, and the choirs responded well to his indications.

F. B.

ELGAR'S 'CARACTACUS' AS OPERA

The Liverpool Repertory Opera Company made the interesting experiment of producing Elgar's cantata 'Caractacus' as a stage-work, at the David Lewis Theatre, Liverpool, on January 13. The work is laid out in six scenes which inevitably suggest the stage, and it is not difficult to guess that it was the picturesque quality of the libretto and the largely dramatic nature of the music which induced Mr. John Tobin to seek Sir Edward's permission to produce the cantata in this new form. But I fancy that Mr. Tobin was deceived by the apparent conflict between the Britons and the Romans into supposing that this in itself was sufficient to constitute drama. In point of fact, as the event proved, there is all too little real conflict in 'Caractacus.' It is, in fact, nothing more than a series of tableaux, and in no single scene is there any development of a dramatic situation. This is unfortunate, for the music itself has plenty of movement, more indeed than the text, and generally the atmosphere of the music is sufficiently operatic to make it congenial to the stage.

In the circumstances the interest of the production lay primarily in the singing, which, while it could not claim quite the precision and co-ordination of a platform performance, had plenty of energy; and secondly, in the set scenes. These latter, which owed a good deal to the use of curtains and back-cloths as developed in some of the B.N.O.C. productions, were often ingenious, and the woodland scene, played behind a drop curtain cut so as to represent trees, if not absolutely novel was theatrically very effective. The choral epilogue, sung on a darkened stage, was followed by a final tableau of which the purport should have been, apparently, the apotheosis of British freedom. It was a pleasantly decorative group of young women clad in white—but, as a symbol, it suggested nothing in particular. Too many of the gestures throughout seemed to have been borrowed from Greek rather than Roman or ancient British sources, and were not always quite relevant to the situation. In all, however, the production showed praiseworthy enterprise, even if it has not succeeded in adding anything to the operatic répertoire. A. K. H.

ERNEST BRYSON'S SECOND SYMPHONY

[FROM OUR MANCHESTER CORRESPONDENT]

At the eleventh Hallé concert, on January 12, there were heard for the first time in this country Ernest Bryson's second Symphony (still in MS.) and Respighi's Violin Concerto 'Gregoriano,' published in 1921. Until quite recently Bryson mixed the claims of a Liverpool cotton merchant's business with a devotion to music as his chief delight, and was ever in the vanguard of musical progress in that city, especially in the days of the now defunct Liverpool Orchestral Society, then conducted by another merchant-prince, Alfred Rodewald. Bryson took to serious orchestral composition about twenty years ago, and whatever views may be held as to the æsthetic value of this Symphony, it promptly proclaims him an ardent disciple of the school of César Franck—Bryson's earlier musical experiences as an organist possibly quickening this Franckian influence. No very distinctive individuality is to be traced in his thematic material, nor could be detected any notable rhythmical vitality; of episodical matter there was an undoubted excess. But whatever value may be placed upon the matter of his Symphony, most impartial verdicts would find the manner of its orchestral expression merely that of a cultured amateur and not of a practised craftsman; little, if any, genius for the expression of ideas in terms of orchestral tone. If this matter had been cast in prose form, written with a comparable verbal crudity, it may be doubted whether it would have found acceptance by any editor of judgment. He was preceded in the programme by Dvorák and followed by Respighi, both possessed of an uncanny certainty of instinct for just orchestral values; that instinct was obviously not possessed by Bryson, nor that sense for compact form in expression of thought or idea. A fifty-minute Symphony these days calls for much more than musical discursiveness, and why could not the composer build his climax without smothering it with an overwhelming organ? The conductor was powerless to mitigate the effect of this miscalculation, and whilst holding the view that the Hallé concerts are hardly the ideal place for enabling a very distinguished amateur (in the pure sense of the word) to hear how his efforts sound, no praise can be too high for the painstaking thoroughness, care, and energy with which Harty presented this new work to a very large audience.

The Gregorian influence in the Respighi Concerto is so slight as to be almost negligible. Its structure is that of fantasia rather than of strictly formal concerto, its main claim to distinction the clarity and beauty of its orchestral expression. There is no strong emotional content, but its lay-out is such as to stimulate all that is finest in a violinist's technique, and Mr. Arthur Catterall's playing afforded so constant a ravishment of the senses that one concluded that its technical appeal was responsible for this temporary withdrawal of attention from a constant adherence to the greatest classical examples in this art-form. Some of his Manchester admirers are longing to hear him in the Elgar Concerto.

Music in the Provinces

BIRMINGHAM.—The City Orchestra opened the year with a Wagner concert under Mr. Joseph Lewis, and on the following Sunday gave a popular programme on the level of Grieg's Concerto and the Handel-Harty 'Water Music.'——Mr. Paul Beard conducted the City Orchestra on January 15 in a mixed programme that included Tchaikovsky's first Pianoforte Concerto, played by Mr. Leslie England.——On January 9, the Dorian Trio from Bangor (Miss Kathleen Washbourne, Miss Pauline Taylor, and Miss Enid Lewis) played three Trios at the Society of Artists' Gallery.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Mr. Edgar Bainton took a prominent part in the Symphony concert on January 5. He conducted his 'Eclogue,' which was performed for the first time at Bournemouth, and he was pianist in his Concerto Fantasia, which Sir Dan Godfrey conducted. The Symphony was Brahms's third.——The programme for January 12 included the first performance in England of a Symphony in D, by de Sutter, and Vaughan Williams's 'The Lark Ascending,' to be played by Miss Murray Lambert.

BRADFORD. — The Hallé Orchestra played at the Subscription concert on January 6, under the direction of Sir Hamilton Harty, whose setting of Keats's 'Ode to a Nightingale' was sung by Miss Bella Baillie. The 'New World' Symphony and Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn were in the programme.——Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, two Bach Chorales, Bach's A minor Prelude and Fugue for organ, and chamber music were given at one of Mr. Charles Stott's Bach concerts in All Saints' Church, Horton Green.

BRISTOL.—For its Christmas concert the Philharmonic Society chose Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio,' excerpts from Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ' (in which Mr. Steuart Wilson was the Narrator), and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols. Mr. Arnold Barter conducted.——A very successful Ladies' Night concert was held by the Madrigal Society, under Mr. Hubert Hunt, on January 12, the programme being long and varied and well carried out.

CHELTENHAM.—Following the recent concerts given in honour of Mr. Holst, a series of three special concerts was arranged at which the Birmingham City Orchestra would be conducted by well-known musicians. The first of these was conducted, in the absence of Dr. Adrian Boult, by Dr. Malcolm Sargent. The programme included Beethoven's fourth Symphony, Vaughan Williams's Overture to 'The Wasps,' and 'The Lark Ascending,' played by Miss Marie Hall. It was announced that at one of the later concerts a new work by Mr. Holst would be conducted by the composer.

EASTBOURNE.—The type of programme that Capt. Amers offers to his patrons is exemplified by the following, which was played on January 6: 'Prometheus' Ballet Music, Glazounov's sixth Symphony, Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' and 'Les Djinns' (with Miss Edna Willoughby as pianist), and 'L'Après-midi d'un faune.'

FELIXSTOWE.—On December 28, Mr. Maurice Vinden and the twenty-one singers of the Felixstowe Madrigal Society gave an interesting programme of Christmas music. It included Dale's 'Rosa Mystica,' Heath Gracie's 'I sing of a maiden,' Dering's 'Quem videstes pastores,' and Kitson's 'Whence those symphonious sounds' (in eight parts).

GLOUCESTER.—The Choral Society, under Sir Herbert Brewer, opened its sixty-seventh year on January 5, with Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas Oratorio,' Marenzio's 'Lady, see on every side,' and the march-chorus from 'Tannhäuser.'

GUERNSEY.—An audience of seven hundred listened on January 10 to the Spencer Dyke Quartet in Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 6, the Debussy Quartet, Frank Bridge's Two Idylls, and a Haydn Quartet in D, Op. 64, No. 5.

HULL.—On January 6, Mr. J. W. Rossington conducted the Hull Æolian Mixed-Voice Choir in an excellent miscellaneous programme. The chief numbers were Parry's 'My soul, there is a country,' Stanford's 'The Valley,' E. T. Davies's 'The Snowflake,' Weelkes's 'On the plains' (for female voices), Colin Taylor's 'Slumber Songs of the Madonna,' Elsie Horne's 'Nocturne,' Julius Harrison's 'Come away, death' (for male voices), Bantock's 'Thro' Eastern gates,' and Elgar's 'The Herald.'

LIVERPOOL.—At the Philharmonic Society's last concert of the year, Delius's 'Paris' and Strauss's 'Don Quixote' were conducted by Mr. Paul von Klenau, who was more successful in this modern music than in Beethoven's fifth Symphony. The January concert was conducted by Mr. Oskar Fried, who made a good impression in Brahms's first Symphony and Alto Rhapsody (with Miss Astra Desmond as soloist) and Mozart's 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik.' ——A notice of the operatic performance of 'Caractacus' will be found on p. 166.

Manchester.—Bolton Choral Union came to Free Trade Hall on January 2, and played an excellent part in a concert performance of 'Aïda,' under the direction of Sir Hamilton Harty. A fortnight later, at another of the municipal choral concerts, Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride' was well performed.——The Hallé concert on January 12, at which Ernest Bryson's second Symphony was performed, is given a special notice on p. 167.——The chief events in chamber music since Christmas have been a Schubert concert (the 'Death and the Maiden' Quartet and the 'Trout' Quintet), given by Miss Edith Robinson, and the Catterall Quartet's playing of Turina (D minor), Elgar, and Franck.

Newcastle.—At the Christmas concert of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union and Newcastle Symphony Orchestra, Mr. George Dodds made his first appearance as conductor, and achieved a notable success with a performance, good in all respects, of 'Israel in Egypt.'

Norwich.—On January 9, at the Maddermarket Theatre, the Norwich Players produced 'Mr. Pepys,' the ballad opera by Clifford Bax and Martin Shaw.

Southend.—The Clarinet Quintets of Mozart and Brahms were played by Mr. Haydn Draper and the Westminster Quartet at a meeting of the Southend Chamber Music Society on January 10.

Tonbridge.—The Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. George J. Kimmins, performed Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' in the Big School, on December 21. The chorus and orchestra numbered a hundred and thirty performers.

Music in Scotland

Aberdeen.—Aberdeen Oratorio Choir, conducted by Mr. Willan Swainson, a musician of high ideals and dauntless courage, gave a performance of Beethoven's Mass in D, preceded by two movements of the 'Eroica' Symphony, played by the Scottish Orchestra under Mr. Swainson's direction.——Chamber concerts were given by the Rossetti Trio, and by a new string quartet, the Wilhelmj Players.

Edinburgh.—At the first meeting this season of the Edinburgh Bach Society, the programme comprised three Church Cantatas (No. 122, 'Des neugebo'rne Kindelein,' No. 51 (for soprano solo), 'Jauchzet Gott in allen Landen,' and No. 10, 'Meine Seele erhelet den Herren'), Palestrina's 'Magnificat Tertii Toni,' and a five-part Magnificat by Byrd. Mr. Douglas Dickson conducted the Society's choir and orchestra.——The Edinburgh Choral Union (Mr. Greenhouse Allt) sang 'The Messiah' on New-Year's Day, and gave a popular Scottish concert the same evening.——Mr. Moonie's Choir (Mr. W. B. Moonie) gave a Sunday evening performance of 'The Creation' and 'The Last Supper' scene from 'Parsifal,' and a Christmas evening performance of 'The Messiah.'——Mr. Godfrey's Choir (Mr. Gavin Godfrey) also sang 'The Messiah.'——Misses Marjorie and Patuffa Kennedy Fraser and Margaret Kennedy gave one of their all-too-infrequent recitals of 'Songs of the Hebrides.' —— At Prof. Tovey's Sunday concerts Miss Catherine Mentiplay, contralto, and Mr. Frank Moyes, organ, were associated in a programme of songs by Schubert and Dvorák, and organ works by Bach, &c.—— The Edinburgh Opera Company gave excerpts from favourite operas.

Glasgow.—The thirteen weeks' season of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union concerts (Scottish Orchestra) is being shared by three visiting conductors—Vladimir Golschmann, Hermann Abendroth, and Albert Coates. The first four weeks were taken by Golschmann, and the programmes of the nine concerts (five Saturday and four Tuesday) included: Symphonies, the César Franck, Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique,' the 'Unfinished,' Beethoven's No. 7, the 'New World'; Overtures, 'Oberon,' 'Freischütz,' 'Egmont,' 'Carnaval Romain' (Berlioz), 'Carneval' (Dvorák), 'Tannhäuser,' 'Mastersingers,' 'Barber of Seville,' and 'Russlan' (Glinka); other works, Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' 'Finlandia,' Stravinsky's 'L'oiseau de feu' (selection), Prokofiev's 'Love of the three oranges' (selection), Scriabin's 'Poème de l'extase,' Bax's 'Garden of Fand,' the Satie-Debussy 'Deux gymnopédies,' the fourth Brandenburg Concerto, the 'Enigma' Variations, Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome,' &c. The soloists included Nicolas Orloff in Rachmaninov's Pianoforte Concerto No. 3, in D minor, Mischa Elman in the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, and Solomon in the Beethoven 'Emperor' Concerto. Golschmann, thirty-four years of age, of Russian parentage but born and educated in Paris, came with a recommendation from Kussewitzky. He had on the whole a good press, and was given a warm send-off at the close of his four weeks' stay. But his work seemed to us amateurish on the technical side, and on the æsthetic we thought it quite lacking in any real significance or sensitiveness. Latterly, we found ourselves going with reluctance to St. Andrew's Hall on Tuesdays and Saturdays. The advent of Hermann Abendroth to direct the next four weeks' series changed the whole face of things. For a month past many of us had been asking desperately whether the Scottish Orchestra had really become so dull as we were finding it. Abendroth supplied the answer—in the negative. For the first time this season we had plasticity and shapeliness of line and phrase, appreciation of texture, architectural balance and proportion, subtlety and significance. Abendroth's programmes (four Saturday, five Tuesday, and one New-Year's Day 'Popular' concert) included: Symphonies—Tchaikovsky's No. 5, Beethoven's 'Pastoral,' Haydn's No. 14, in D, and (two notable performances) Elgar's second Symphony and Brahms's No. 2, in D; Overtures—'Euryanthe,' 'Egmont,' 'Solonelle,' 'Academic,' 'Hansel and Gretel,' 'Leonora' No. 3 (a great performance), 'Hebrides,' 'Rienzi,' 'Merry Wives,' 'Seraglio,' 'Mignon,' 'Bartered Bride,' 'Rosamunde,' 'Benvenuto Cellini,' 'Fledermaus,' and (the only novelty) Pfitzner's 'Katchen von Heilbronn,' which failed to make any impression; other works, 'Heldenleben,' 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik,' and a complete Wagner programme, the most satisfying feature of which was a beautifully wrought performance of the 'Siegfried Idyll.' The soloists were Mr. Frederick Lamond, who played the Tchaikovsky Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor and some of his favourite, not to say hackneyed, Beethoven and Liszt pieces; Miss Riele Queling, a young German violinist, who made a brilliant first appearance, playing the Brahms Concerto with genuine distinction; Mr. Loris Blofield, the popular leader of the orchestra, who was not well advised to choose the very tame Dvorák Violin Concerto, Madame Tatiana Makushina, an attractively temperamental singer, Mr. Norman Allin (on New-Year's evening), and Mr. Matthew Dickie, a young tenor, formerly a Glasgow taxi-driver, who was 'discovered' a couple of years ago by some local enthusiasts and sent off to Italy for training, and was now making his debut as a finished artist. Mr. Dickie displayed (the right word here) a voice of fine quality, but typically Italian in its openness and hard nasality when expanded on the upper notes. His singing disclosed a regrettable lack of subtlety and indeed of musicianship. The third and final month of the Scottish Orchestra season falls to Mr. Albert Coates, who has not hitherto appeared at these concerts.—— The Glasgow Choral Union and the Scottish Orchestra presented Beethoven's Mass in D for the first time at Glasgow for a period of at least thirty-five years. It was a gallant effort, but the pace at which most of the work was taken, and the general atmosphere of 'drive,' in an endeavour to steer the singers safely through the difficulties, deprived it of much of its significance, and the weakness of the tenor section in particular told heavily. The quartet of soloists, Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Catherine Mentiplay, Mr. Parry Jones, and Mr. Harold Williams, never established anything like an understanding. The bass did well, but the contralto was unsafe, and the soprano too often sang under pitch.

Mr. Wilfrid Senior conducted with grip and resource, and incidentally gave a good performance of Beethoven's fourth Symphony. The Choral Union made a happier appearance in its annual New-Year's Day performance of 'The Messiah.' Mr. Senior, since his appointment to the conductorship of the Choral Union some years ago, has been steadily lifting the Choral Union out of its old square vociferousness of approach to 'The Messiah,' and this year the emancipation was more than maintained.——The Glasgow Bach Society gave its annual December recital in Glasgow Cathedral. The Society's choir (conductor, Mr. David T. Yacamini) sang the Church Cantatas, 'God so loved the world' and 'A Stronghold Sure,' and the 121st Psalm (arranged by J. Michael Diack and Ivor Atkins). The Society's chamber orchestra, in addition to providing the accompaniments, played a Purcell Suite and instrumental movements from two of Bach's Church Cantatas, Mr. F. H. Bisset conducting these.——At the fifth and sixth of his Cramb Music Lectures at Glasgow University on 'Music in Social History,' Dr. George Dyson discussed 'Music allied to public spectacle and drama; mystery and passion plays, opera, and oratorio'; the Glasgow Bach Choir sang illustrative excerpts from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion.——The programme of a violin and pianoforte recital given by the well-known Glasgow violinist, Mr. Camillo Ritter, and his sister, Madame Friedemann Ritter, comprised the Bach Chaconne, the 'Kreutzer' Sonata, Schumann's Sonata, Op. 105, the Goldmark Suite, Op. 11, and some Chopin solos for pianoforte.——Mr. A. M. Henderson was the organist at the last of the monthly series of organ recitals given in Bute Hall at Glasgow University. The combined choirs of the University Chapel and Westbourne Church sang a number of a cappella pieces.——The recently formed Rutherglen Choral Union (Mr. Robert A. Reid) made its first public appearance in a performance of 'The Messiah.'

Perth.—The Perth Madrigal Society (Mr. David T. Yacamini) made a first-rate appearance in an extensive and widely varied selection of madrigals and part-songs. Outstanding numbers were Weelkes's 'Like two proud armies,' Max Bruch's 'Morning Song of Praise,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Sea-drift.'

Stirling.—The Stirling Arion Junior Choir, conducted by Mrs. May Carruthers Greig, at its second annual concert gave an attractive programme of unison and two-part songs.

Sebastian.

Music in Wales

Aberystwyth.—The weekly College concerts were resumed on January 12, when Haydn's String Quartet in G (Op. 76, No. 1), Schubert's Quartet in D minor, and a Chaconne by Purcell were performed.

Bangor.—The first weekly concert of the present term was given at University College, on February 12, when the College Trio (Miss Kathleen Washbourne, Miss Pauline Taylor, and Miss Enid Lewis) played Brahms's Trio in C minor, and a novelty was provided in Donald F. Tovey's Variations for flute and string quartet on a Theme by Gluck. During the evening Mr. E. T. Davies lectured on Brahms, with special reference to his chamber music.

Barry.—A brilliant concert was given by the Barry County School Orchestra on December 16, the programme including two movements of the C minor Symphony, the 'Unfinished,' Tchaikovsky's 'Nut-cracker Suite,' and Sir Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody.'

Cardiff.—Much music-making has taken place during the past few weeks. The Cardiff Amateur Operatic Society gave performances of 'Carmen,' 'Faust,' and 'Il Trovatore' during the week ending December 17.——On the last-named date Mr. Herbert Ware's string orchestra gave a concert of chamber music, which included Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite, Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings, and Elgar's Suite in E minor.——On December 19, Mrs. Clara Novello Davies's Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir gave a programme which included Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd,' Lassen's 'Spanish Gipsy,' and Fletcher's 'Ring out, wild bells,' and a number of carols.——On December 29, the Cardiff Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. J. F. Whitaker, gave a concert.——In addition there have been the usual numerous performances of 'The Messiah' and the 'Christmas Oratorio.'

Hawarden.—On December 16 the County School Choir and Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Arthur Lyon, gave a programme which included among other things Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, two movements of the seventh Symphony, Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and 'Jerusalem,' and Elgar's 'The Snow.' There was a large and appreciative audience.

Porth.—Elgar's 'King Olaf' was given under the direction of Mr. Rhys Evans on December 26.

General.—The Christmas Festival has produced a large number of oratorio concerts in different parts, the usual plethora of 'Messiah' performances being increasingly interspersed with portions of the 'Christmas Oratorio,' while 'Elijah,' St. Paul,' and the 'Hymn of Praise' have had frequent performance.——At Cwmamman, Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' was given for the first time, on December 26.——'Samson' was also given for the first time at Ammanford, on December 28.

Music in Ireland

Belfast.—At a B.B.C. concert, conducted by Mr. E. Godfrey Brown, the programme included two movements of Franck's Symphony and the Finale of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A, played by Mr. Robert Baulks.

Waterford.—Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony was among the works performed by the Waterford Instrumental Society, and broadcast from 2RN on January 12. Prof. W. Henry Murray conducted.

Musical Notes from Abroad

HOLLAND

Willem Pijper's Pianoforte Concerto, a work new to the public, though, I am informed, one that he wrote some time ago and has lately revised, was recently produced with considerable success at the Amsterdam Concertgebouw with the composer as soloist and Monteux conducting. The Concerto is short, in a single movement divided into seven subdivisions—a form that is a favourite one with Pijper, as with many other modern composers. Like his third Symphony, which is growing in popularity, this work contains nothing that is in any way surprising, and although not free from modern clichés, evidently aims at the expression of beauty rather than of the less desirable characteristics which mark some of his earlier music. The harmony alone is much simpler and more harmonious in the older sense of the term, and while there is still a good deal of hard brilliance, the work as a whole is richer and more supple. Most of it is in a comparatively slow tempo, which gives a feeling of restfulness not very often found in Pijper's works, while its freedom from any mere experiment suggests a deeper inspiration. A first hearing gives the impression that Pijper's musical personality is now developing much more rapidly than hitherto. A novelty to Holland was Carl Nielson's fifth Symphony, but its somewhat conservative manner and sombre mood failed to make the impression that could have been wished. It is a work of real individuality and no little beauty, but its length is against its ready acceptance. The amateur orchestra, 'Musica,' directed by F. E. A. Koeberg, has played a Symphony by Gounod, a pleasant revival which, however, did not give rise to any great desire to hear more. The style is characteristic of the composer of 'Faust' rather than of 'Mors et Vita' or the 'Messe Solennelle,' which fact placed it outside the general scope of symphonic music. An equally typical French work is Ravel's Sonata in G major for violin and pianoforte, which Sam Swaap and Paul Frenkel have played a number of times. Less individual than some of the composer's works—the first movement reminds one of Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre'—it is unquestionably clever and sometimes quite musical. It has even passages of broad melody, and is as attractive, though not so serious, as the 'Tzigane.' The International String Quartet did excellent propaganda work for British music at its two concerts at The Hague, the one given under the auspices of the Netherland-England Society, consisting entirely of British works. Unfortunately, by a misunderstanding, the programme had been made too long, so that the fine Vaughan Williams Quartet had to be omitted. We heard, however, no less than seven of the Purcell String Fantasias, and Quartets by E. J. Moeran, Eugène Goossens, and J. B. McEwen, all of which made a most favourable impression. At the players' own recital, in which they were joined by Elly Ney in the Brahms Quintet, they aroused very mixed opinions, one critic describing the event as 'unquestionably the best chamber concert of the season,' while another found the playing unsatisfactory, and, apart from the Brahms, the only item of any interest the Two Sketches of Goossens. On the whole, however, the verdict was favourable to both music and players, the Purcell works being a great surprise to musicians here. Dutch opera is moving slowly, but the standard of performance of the 'Ring' was surprisingly high. The de Hondt Italian Opera Company, an international troupe under Dutch business management, is doing so well that it intends to extend its activities and, amongst other things, to pay a visit to London and, possibly, the English provinces. At present there is little to say on the subject, as I understand that at the time this issue of the Musical Times will be going to press the directors will be in London discussing matters with those with whom they hope to co-operate.

Herbert Antcliffe.

MILAN

THE OPERAS AT LA SCALA

Interest centring about the re-opening of the Opera this year was very keen on account of rumours current concerning the 'unfortunate' 'Otello,' with which it had been proposed to inaugurate the season. But 'Otello' not being ready at the appointed time, the next opera, Boïto's 'Mefistofele,' took its place on November 16. As protagonist, the choice of the bass Pasero was scarcely happy. His is a style admirably suited to noble bel canto parts, but it proved beyond him to convey to a big public all the sinister intentions of the Mefisto music. Similarly the Margherita of Corbelli did not approach perfection, as she, on the contrary, infused too much temperament into a part more or less lyric. Pertile as Faust gave us another of his delightful performances, and wholly commendable was the Elena of Signorina Rasa. A few days later, 'Fidelio' repeated the success of last spring, the occasion of the opera's debut in this theatre. It was due to the impression then made that we were able to hear it again this year. Perhaps the Philistines will permit us to enter this on the credit side of the Centenary ledger! To the capable hands of Madame Ohms Pasetti fell the title-rôle, and to her is our gratitude due for the artistic treatment of Beethoven's music. Ferraris as Marcellina, Merli as Florestano, Bettoni as Rocco, and Rossi-Morelli as Pezarro, completed a cast of very acceptable singers. After the 'Leonora' Overture there were four ovations to Toscanini, who directed.

Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut,' the next opera to be presented, scored a success to be expected (in Italy) of any of this composer's works. Signorina Pampanini was the Manon, but in comparison with the polished singing and masterly acting of Pertile as the lover, she seemed to have little beyond a beautiful voice and a warm temperament. The smaller parts were sung by Badini and Baccaloni.

Finally came the much discussed 'Otello,' and the reason for the delay became apparent. Contrary to the general belief that Verdi wrote this opera especially for Tamagno or for Maurel, he, in his own words, wrote it to please himself and had never been satisfied with its performances. Written fourteen years later than 'Aïda'—fourteen years of study and meditation—it plainly shows the influence of the music-drama about that time beginning to invade Italy. 'Otello' may be said to have raised the bulwarks of Italian opera; but since its first production, in 1887, the traditions of Tamagno and Maurel have hung over the opera, and it was to reinstate the work in public favour that Toscanini spent so much time in its preparation. The tenor chosen to sing the rôle was the young Frenchman, Trantoul, who in performance achieved a standard said to excel even that of Tamagno. His voice is of ample power and great dramatic intensity, with a well-mastered mezza-voce. Unfortunately the Iago of Stabile was not of adequate strength. His artistry and dramatic sense are possibly not excelled by any living baritone, but the voice is light, and, like the Mefistofele of Pasero, was lacking in sinister force. However, it must be accounted to him for righteousness that with the limited means at his disposal his performance approached as nearly as possible perfection. Scacciati sang well, if somewhat coldly, in the part of Desdemona, but as it would have been all too easy to overdo it, her neatness and discretion were to be commended, and won for her a considerable measure of success. Especially notable were the duet in the first Act and the Ave Maria of the fourth. The triumph cannot be said to have been absolute, and without detracting from the excellent performances of the artists named, 'Otello' as an opera is more or less where it was before.

The second revival was Giordano's 'Siberia,' given for the first time in 1903. The last performance in this theatre was in 1917, when the composer, not without precedent, retouched it (and in certain places altered the orchestration), removed from the first and third Acts the personage of Walitzin, and made the drama to centre (in the third Act) about the repugnant figure of Gleby. The second Act, considered the best, remained intact. It is here that Giordano introduced the celebrated Volga song. The three leads were sung respectively by Scacciati, the tenor Merli, and the new baritone Damiani, to whom probably the highest laurels fell. In the character of Gleby both his voice and dramatic instincts showed to distinct advantage.

Of a whole shoal of pianists this month, Jascha Spivakovsky towered a giant in no mean company. His programme, though big in the broad sense of the word, was not apparently long enough to satisfy his audience. It drew on each of the three B's, Chopin, Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Borodin, Liadov, and Liszt. He is a remarkably strong and virile player, and evidenced extraordinary skill, but this was not obtruded.

A discovery of international interest by Maestro Boghen, of the Florence Conservatorium, was that of an unpublished oratorio by Mozart. (Maestro Boghen, well known for his extended researches, recently found a 'Stabat Mater' for two voices by Alessandro Scarlatti.) Careful examination indicates its authenticity. It is entitled 'Isacco (Isaac), Figure of the Redeemer, Oratorio in two Acts by Signor Volfango Mozart.' Until the present there has been uncertainty as to the actual existence of the oratorio, which Boghen asserts to have been written between 1771 and 1773, on the occasions of Mozart's second and third journeys to Italy.

WOLF-FERRARI'S NEW OPERA, 'SLY'

Based upon an adaptation of the Prologue to 'The Taming of the Shrew,' 'Sly,' under the title of 'Leggenda del dormiente risvegliato' ('Legend of the sleeper re-awakened') has had, as may be imagined, great success in Italy. The author, Giovacchino Forzano, a well-known man of the theatre in this country, is the producer of the operas at La Scala and an occasional writer in the Corriere della Sera, an important Italian daily. In setting the libretto, Wolf-Ferrari has not succeeded in saying anything new musically, and his melodies though grateful, and at times forcible, do not possess originality. Free enough from melodramatic influence, and with but occasional touches of modernity, the music is in a style that varies indeterminately between the 17th and 20th centuries. One observes the composer's already established predilections, his strength and his weaknesses. Be it said, however, that the music is sincere and rings true; notwithstanding the occasional use of idioms whose virginal freshness has long since vanished, the marriage of text to tune is on the whole happy. Unfortunately, 'Sly' challenges comparison with previous works of the same composer, and is not always strong enough to substantiate its claims. In the first Act, which opens with a scene in the Falcon Inn, in London, there is a recitative for Dolly (a variation on Rosalind) which does not manage to get far away from the forms used in the early part of last century. Then, with the entry of the Count of Westmorland—more or less a Malvolio—one is strongly reminded of Lohengrin. At times, however, the composer achieves a vein of humour which he develops quite successfully.

The arrival of Sly himself, a drunken, genial poet of the tavern, occasions many good things, and effects a surprise or two. The 'Ballata dell' orso' reveals in the composer a musician possessed of rare observation. The theme, preceded by eight pungent chords, is narrative, somewhat sentimental, and supplies an eloquent background to the lines of poor Sly, with which it finishes, 'Viva l' orso filosofo amatore che divora l' amante per amore.' Before the Act closes, the music again becomes half serious, half facetious, and Sly, drunk to unconsciousness, is carried to Westmorland's castle, there to be the victim of the pranks of his lordship.

The second Act, dramatically speaking, is admirable. The music acquires a deeply fantastic and Oriental colour, not a little suggestive of Stravinsky's 'Firebird.' Here the poet awakens to find himself richly dressed and surrounded by fantastically costumed servants and courtiers, who all combine to convince him that he is really a great lord, who has lain long under the spell of drink and hallucinations. An intermezzo dividing the Act is a gem. This, with the music of the second part, is the best of the opera.

The following scene borders on the pompous, and the music is inclined to be noisy. It leads to a duet between Sly and Dolly which doesn't altogether come off. Sly's part is too heavy. The work concludes with an epilogue, dramatic and concise. In this section, where Sly is apprehended by the sheriff as the poor inebriate and not the exalted nobleman, there is some excellent string music, to the tones of which Sly, figuratively speaking, comes back to earth, to find Dolly, who is really good and sincere, weeping penitently and seeking pardon.

In the person of Pertile, the character of Sly found an interpreter whose performance approached as high a degree of perfection as one can reasonably demand. The rôle of Dolly, originally entrusted to Margaret Sheridan, was, owing to that lady's unfortunate and protracted illness, given to Mercèdes Llopart, with whom Rossi-Morrelli as Westmorland, and Badini as John Blake, shared secondary honours. A word of praise is due to the excellent handling of the orchestra by M. Panizza.

It is interesting to note the recognition by the Minister of Education, the Hon. Fedele, of the value of music in the schools in the formation of character and intellect, and the nature of his recent circular to the teachers on this subject. The decadence of the Italian lyric art may be charged against the thousands of foreign students whose willingness to pay to sing in Italy has tended to corrupt not only the art, but the teaching profession as well; and it is to the restoration of a good standard in this and other branches that the Minister is devoting his attention. The decision to begin with simple theory and (a northern influence?) choral and class singing, indicates the soundness of the methods to be adopted. The decision to introduce a pianoforte into every school will no doubt be carried out with the usual Fascist swiftness, and this year will find the new régime well established. In addition, there are to be scholars' concerts at which the conduct of affairs is to be 'decorous and dignified.' Still further, the instruction is to be entrusted only to those whose life and studies have been devoted to music. High ideals, indeed; but there seem to be good grounds for hope and enthusiasm.

CHARLES D'IF.

PARIS

The past month has witnessed a boom in operatic production. No less than six new works have been staged, ranging from the single-Act ballet 'Evolution' to 'Angelo, Tyrant of Padua,' a five-Act opera of the elaborate melodramatic type.

'Evolution' is a short ballet with no other aim than the parodying of the various society dances which, for the last thirty years, have been ushered into success and then swept into oblivion by goddess Fashion. M. Leufant, who composed the music, had little chance of displaying any personal talent. The score is an ingenuous pastiche, with a lucky touch of irony now and then. The ballet stands halfway between the Russian conception as realised by Diaghilev's group and that of the music-hall. Unhappily, it lacks the occasional veracity of the former and the rich decoration of the latter; the Opéra-Comique being, naturally, unable to compete on this ground even with a second-rate music-hall.

Darius Milhaud's 'Pauvre Matelot,' produced by the same theatre, was anticipated with considerable interest. It is a one-Act piece, divided into three tableaux. The author of the text, Jean Cocteau, in a stern and condensed language imitating often that of the popular song, tells the story of a sailor returning home with a big fortune after an absence of fifteen years. All this time his wife had been keeping an inn. Anxious to test her faithfulness, the sailor, whose features have been deeply altered by time, conceals his identity and calls on his own wife as a friend of her husband's. Incidentally he displays his treasures, and deplores that her husband is soon to come back decrepit and poor. He asks for a bed, and goes to sleep intending to reveal the truth next morning. But during the night the wife, tempted by the guest's treasures and longing to spare her husband shame and misery, kills the sailor with a hammer. The curtain falls while the too-faithful wife and her father-in-law remove the sailor's body and throw it into a pit. When dealing with this rude subject the main aim of the authors seems to have been the total banishment of anything that might have looked like a theatrically conventional scene. The piece gives the impression of a succession of unprepared shocks by which the essence of the drama is shot out upon the public. Such a conception of dramatic art leaves room for neither lyrical effusion nor musical development of a dramatic or symphonic character. Occasionally a theme of popular cast appears in the orchestra, and creates the requisite atmosphere, but is soon submerged, along with the vocal parts, by dissonant chords let loose seemingly at unexpected junctures. In spite of unchallengeable assets, both poetic and musical, the 'Pauvre Matelot' has been roughly and unjustly dealt with by most of the critics. It may drift into failure chiefly on that very ground of theatrical make-up which the authors have purposely ignored.

As a contrast to this grim story the Opéra-Comique produced 'Le bon Roi Dagobert,' an amusing musical comedy written by André Rivoire, and composed by Marcel Samuel Rousseau. As early as 1908 M. Rivoire had composed for the Comédie-Française a piece based on the gallant freaks of King Dagobert. M. Rousseau's musical commentary is light and often entertaining. Now and again it takes a plain, colloquial character, while an abundant use of student and nursery songs make the public at large quite at home with the show.

M. Alfred Bruneau, member of the Institute, ranks undoubtedly among the foremost exponents of French dramatic music. His new opera, 'Angelo, Tyrant of Padua,' takes a place beside such works as 'Rêve,' 'L'Attaque du Moulin,' 'Messidor,' &c. The libretto, in five Acts, is drawn by Charles Méré from Victor Hugo's well-known drama. M. Bruneau's score displays his efficient talent of lyric and dramatic expression. Each of the five Acts is introduced by a symphonic prelude of solid composition, and there are many instances where M. Bruneau attains genuine dramatic power.

Passing to the National Opera we have to note the simultaneous production of two new works, 'Matines d'Amour,' poem by Raoul Gastambide, music by Jules Mazellier, and 'Cyrca,' by A. Boucheron and P. Choudens, the music by Mare Delmas. The two pieces have taken rank in the répertoire of the Opéra by virtue of the Grand Prix de Rome won by the composers, and giving them the right of public performance of their first works. Cyrca is the favourite wife of the King of Tyre, some seven hundred and fifty years B.C. She mourns the king's death, and marches to the fire accompanied by a long procession of priests, slaves, &c., in obedience to the sacred law. The music is of the conventional and impersonal mould. Given a less worn-out subject M. Delmas may some day reveal his own personality.

M. Mazellier has attempted, in honest and conservative language, to depict how the mercy of the Holy Virgin saves from sin the monk Theophilus and sweet Magdalena, wife of an aged gentleman. Tempted by the demons, they had fled from their respective nests. But the grace of the Holy Virgin wins them back to virtue, while invisible angel choruses praise the glory of the Mother of God.

Petro J. Petridis.

TORONTO

So far, the season here has been chiefly one of singers, and, we are happy to say, after the disappointing audiences of last year, a very successful one. Galli-Curci, Rosa Ponselle, and Edward Johnson drew crowded attendances; and Ernestine Schumann-Heink gave us an inspiring farewell, also a much needed lesson in style and interpretation.

A delightful evening was spent with Salvi, a harpist of scrupulous taste and sound musicianship. And those remarkable English Singers have again given us the unique treat of hearing some of our finest English music well sung and beautifully enunciated. That deals with the soloists. We have had one visiting orchestra, the Detroit Symphony, and thanks to the indefatigable energy and initiative of our new impresario, Agnes D. Steels, Gabrilowitsch was welcomed with a packed house. The orchestra is small, but beautiful throughout. There is an atmosphere of easy natural beauty about the playing of these Detroit men which is a new experience for us, accustomed as we are to the polished electrified dynamics of the front-rank American orchestras.

Our own orchestra, which now, thanks to the interest of Mr. Herbert C. Cox, takes the name of the Toronto Symphony, gives us regular fortnightly Twilight Concerts, Dr. von Kunits treating us very happily to choice bits of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Tchaikovsky along the fairly well-beaten track. Two of the assisting artists have been pianists, Charles Naegele and Katherine Bacon, the third a soprano of great wealth and influence, Lady Eaton.

H. C. F.

VIENNA

KRENEK'S 'JOHNNY STRIKES UP' AT THE STAATSOPER

Ernst Krenek's opera, 'Jonny spielt auf,' has reached the Staatsoper of Vienna, that last bulwark of operatic conservatism; and its effect upon Vienna's public—still one of the most conservative in existence—has equalled, even surpassed, its success in all other cities. The Staatsoper was, according to statisticians, the fifty-ninth theatre to produce this piece. It is a success unrivalled by any opera within human memory, and a fact that invites analysis. Surely it would be unjust to ascribe the tremendous success of Krenek's work merely to the unprecedented presence in grand opera of the saxophone both on the stage and in the orchestral pit; nor to the fascination of charleston dancers in an operatic theatre; nor to those symbols of 20th-century technical proficiency which play a more or less subordinate rôle in 'Jonny spielt auf': the steam engine, the sleeping car, the loud speaker, the taxi, the film, or the vacuum carpet-cleaner. Rather the secret of 'Jonny's' success lies in the almost infernal cleverness of the young composer in combining such flippant, frivolous devices with a plot that is inherently sentimental, in parts even melodramatic. The plot, after all, revolves around a tenor-singing lover and a mundane soprano diva with a decided 'heart interest' story; and in keeping with the current operetta recipe, Krenek joins to this 'heroic' couple a juvenile dance comedian and a soubrette. The baritone villain is killed (by Just Fate as embodied in a formidable steam engine) in time to ensure the traditional happy end. Police detectives, and all the emblems of the much vaunted '20th-century spirit,' are more or less mere staffage.

Staffage, too, and subordinate in importance, is the widely-discussed jazz element in this music. Krenek himself, in a much-noted lecture delivered at Vienna, objected most strongly against the over-estimation of this feature. 'Jonny,' according to the composer-librettist, is no more a 'jazz opera' than Mozart's 'Don Juan' merits the name of a 'minuet opera' by reason of the employment of what Krenek argues was the jazz of Mozart's period. With equal clearness Krenek refuted the supposition that his 'Jonny' was calculated to épater le bourgeois by its book or music. All he aimed at was to create an effective, amusing, interesting opera, devoid of the false pathos that has come to be associated with the species; and therein he has surely succeeded. Let us not overrate 'Jonny' as an artistic achievement: the book is clever, but far from deep, its music witty, full of imagination, but far from evenly constructed or worked out; indeed, much of the score is more or less sketchy or haphazard. Yet, with all its shortcomings, Krenek's 'jazz opera' may be destined to make history; it may—if that be still possible—deliver that ill-fated species called 'grand opera' from a hopeless deadlock, from the fetters of pathos and 'loftiness' and untimely romanticism. If hereafter the 'traditionalists' will realise that love potions and drinks of forgetfulness (those venerable emblems of Wagnerian stagecraft) may, on the modern operatic stage, be well replaced by champagne, and shaky goats or papier-maché swans by a smart motor car—then 'Jonny' would have served its purpose. It is, perhaps, a landmark in the history of opera, though not one in the career of its composer, who has done, and will do, infinitely better things than this product of a few leisure hours. Krenek has the swing, the 'go,' and the admirable lack of respect which are the privilege, nay the duty, of his twenty-seven years. This is the positive quality of his 'Jonny' opera—and more than outweighs its weaknesses.

Whatever real music there is in this score—and its quantity is considerable—came out, more than elsewhere, in the Vienna Staatsoper's production, under Robert Heger's masterly baton. Heger, for one, dwelt on the serious portions of this score—such as the dialogue of the poet with the voices of the icy glacier—with loving delight. He made his orchestra 'sing' those cantabile passages which no one had fathomed in Krenek's music, and apportioned to the jazz elements the secondary rôle which Krenek intended. The smiling face of dear old Puccini glanced out from between the glowing string passages, and the Straussian subtlety came out in the delicate orchestral mixtures. The singers revelled in what had been thought 'unmelodic' music, with Puccinian fermatas and Verdian cantilenas. Vera Schwarz, Elisabeth Schumann, Koloman Patsky, Hans Duhan, and Alfred Jerger, were the soloists—not all perfect histrionically, but all with beautiful voices. Jerger's impersonation of Jonny was undoubtedly one of the great histrionic masterpieces of decades, a marvellous composite of singer, musician, actor, dancer, and acrobat. With this production the Vienna Opera has shown itself what it is: still the foremost operatic theatre of Europe. The stage management of the often esoteric Dr. Wallerstein was masterly; esoteric enough to lend artistic taste to the coarser scenes, and pompous enough for the final apotheosis, a Breughelian vision of New York's Broadway with a hundred of franctically dancing girls and boys. It was a gorgeous superrevue, but governed by the master hand of a great artist, who brought order into pandemonium. Beautiful and imaginative were the settings of a mundane hotel hall; of a big, bustling metropolitan railway station with an awe-inspiring colossus of a locomotive; and of a huge glacier in the Swiss Alps. All forces combined to make the première a notable evening.

Even more amusing perhaps than the work itself was its postlude in the Vienna press. An upheaval followed the première, with endless newspaper controversies.

Dr. Korngold and his paper, the Neue Freie Presse, waged a violent campaign, and with strange means, even prior to the première. Since the first performance, Dr. Korngold has conducted a new press propaganda which barely succeeds in hiding behind its alleged 'ethical' motives the loving care for his composing son. Happily, Dr. Korngold is isolated in his attacks; the unanimous verdict of all progressive writers has thrown Korngold's wailing to the winds. On the evening of December 31—the memorable date of the première—the much-vaunted 'operatic dignity and tradition' have received a decisive blow. That is why Krenek's opera marks an epoch for the species; and the laments of peeved Hanslickites in the Vienna press will not stop history.

BALLET—AND 'BALLET'

Another recent novelty of the Staatsoper was far less successful and less happily chosen—a ballet compiled by a gentleman named Regel from music by Carl Maria von Weber. Whatever may be said for, and particularly against, Richard Strauss's régime as director of the Vienna Staatsoper, his foible for dance (a predilection which he indulged in, to be sure, often at the expense of serious operatic activities) resulted in a number of notable ballet productions. Franz Schalk, now in charge, evidently believes more in productive operatic work, much to the dissatisfaction of the ballet ensemble at his house. This season's novelty, the Weberian concoction referred to above, probably satisfied neither the dancers eager for employment, nor the public. The doubtful product named 'The Nixen of Schönbrunn,' a locally tainted court romance from the Maria Theresa epoch, was a painful exhibition of 19th-century ballet antics, hopeless in choregraphy and staging, pitiful in its doubtful 'poetry' and sentimentalism.

The Vienna Opera, alone of all German-speaking theatres, still clings to what may be called 'classic' ballet dancing. Germany, more progressive and invariably 'intellectual,' has since produced a new and, in its one-sidedness, no more positive style. Mary Wigman and the strange German prophets of 'expressive' dance are bound to approach choregraphic art with the serious-mindedness and intellectualism which is the inheritance of the Teutonic race; with the result that dancing in Germany has become a thing replete with problems, be it practised with music or without (which is one of the newest fashions): a thing closer to acting and pantomime than to terpsichorean art. Its apostles—they are actors, even philosophers, but not dancers—look askance on classic training, as a German Wagnerian soprano would upon the 'old fashioned' coloratura singer.

This explains why Serge Diaghileff's Russian Ballet, which has recently toured Central Europe, proved a failure and disappointment in Germany; but made a tremendous success at Vienna, the city which, though German by language and history, is spiritually a composite of Teutonic and Latin influences, with the latter predominating. Diaghileff's répertoire, so familiar to British audiences as to make a detailed account superfluous, found receptive eyes and ears here. Diaghileff's performance of de Falla's delightful 'Tricorne' may serve as a suitable example for the relative valuation of ballet here and in Germany. In the Berlin of Erwin Piscator—the present stage director à la mode of Berlin and apostle of political propaganda by means of the theatre—a stage-manager should have easily seized the opportunity of making the piece the vehicle for ironic parody directed against nobility (as represented by the unhappy Corregidor) and a triumphant apotheosis of the working people as symbolised by the Miller and his friends. With Diaghileff it is a series of brilliantly executed dances, with the histrionic element as a mere incidental feature of the action. At Vienna, where the public expected from the Russian Ballet dance, and nothing but dance of the first order, their success was enormous, with the lion's share going to Serge Lifar, the 'lyricist' of the troupe, to Léonide Massine, Georges Balanchine, Alexandra Danilova, Alice Nikitina, and to a fifteen-year-old dancer, Alicia Markova (said to be an English girl), whom Diaghileff has recently added to his troupe.

ORCHESTRAL EVENTS

In Vienna concert-halls modernism has recently made strong headway through the advent of Wilhelm Furtwängler as conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra (jointly with Franz Schalk). Not since Schalk's performance of Stravinsky's 'Le Sacre du Printemps' have the peaceful pre-prandial Sunday exercises of the Philharmonic subscribers been so rudely disturbed as with the première of Paul Hindemith's Concerto (Op. 38) for orchestra, under Furtwängler, who succeeded in leading the daring piece to ultimate success here. Less offensive was the latest novelty of Rudolf Nilius's Tonkünstler concerts, a long and somewhat loquacious Symphony in E flat major, by Lothar Riedinger—music of the epical sort that is rare in our epoch, replete with Wagnerian, Straussian, and Mahlerian elements. It is the sort of music to please the Conservative who loves his 'revolutionaries' when they have ceased to be such, and when presented by late-coming eclectics. Mahler himself, with his fourth Symphony, was heard in a Philharmonic concert under Erich Kleiber. This Viennese, who has made a phenomenally quick career and in young years achieved the post of head of the Berlin State Opera, was on this occasion heard here for the first time with Vienna's greatest orchestra. He represents the modern type of the 'nervous,' analytical conductor that Mahler inaugurated; and he has, which is more important, the gift of synthesis to such an extent that Mahler's music is divested of its alleged 'incoherence.' Kleiber has a marvellous method of putting the musical structure of the piece bare before his hearers, of 'exposing' the subject-matter and developing it with consummate clarity of form and construction. He is a conductor laden with energy and concentration, a great leader gifted with a magnetism that extends to orchestra and hearers alike, and brought the home-comer a tremendous success. PAUL BECHERT.

[We regret the notes from Germany arrived too late for insertion.—EDITOR.]

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

PHILIP BROZEL, at Twickenham, on December 23. He came to London from his birthplace, St. Petersburg, when about twenty-five, and seems to have been first heard here in the choir of Bayswater Synagogue. Later he studied at the Royal Academy of Music, where he became a gold medallist, being subsequently made a Fellow. While still a student he came under the notice of Sir Augustus Harris, who engaged him as Canio in 'Pagliacci.' The following year saw him appearing with Calvé and Patti, and his operatic career was crowned by an invitation to sing the name-parts in 'Lohengrin' and 'Parsifal' at Bayreuth. Brozel sang in practically every important opera-house in Europe. Since his retirement some years ago he has frequently sung in and on behalf of various Jewish institutions.

[An appreciation of Brozel, by one who knew him, will appear in our next issue.—EDITOR.]

COURTICE POUNDS, on December 21, in his sixty-sixth year. He received his early training as a choir-boy at St. Stephen's Church, Kensington, and the Italian Church, Hatton Garden, afterwards studying at the Royal Academy of Music. He will be long remembered as one of the most successful of Gilbert-Sullivan singers, but a no less treasured recollection is that of his Feste and Touchstone, especially the former. He was unusually well-equipped for such Shakespearean parts, adding to his charming voice a sense of comedy, and its almost inevitable accompaniment, a touch of pathos. In addition to the Savoy operas, many musical plays—notably 'Chu Chin Chow' and 'Lilac Time'—benefited by his delightful art.

J. H. G. Baughan, on December 12. For several years he edited the Musical Standard, in succession to his brother, E. A. Baughan, and he also acted for a time as musical critic to the Daily Mail.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

M. C.—You ask for information respecting the graces in Couperin's 'Les Roseaux' in List B of the Associated Board Examination, Advanced Grade. Play the mordents with grace and not too bitingly, as befits the nature of the music. Treat the appoggiaturas with some freedom. They are all of the short variety, but never approximate to the acciaccatura. That in the first whole bar, for instance, may be regarded as the first two members of a triplet of semiquavers. On no account let the principal sound come with an accompanying sound: either before or after, but not with. The shake in the fifth bar after the double-bar may be formed of demisemiquavers, the first note being F sharp tied from the previous sound. That occurring some nine bars later starts on the auxiliary sound and incorporates a 'turn' at the close. These seem to be all the points of importance; but should you still be uncertain, write again and give examples in notation of what you propose.

H. V. W. P.—The French horn is a very important member of the orchestra, which occasionally takes a hand in chamber music. The repertory is not very extensive, and it cannot do quick passages and shakes, although nowadays, in the hands of a good performer, it seems to do most things. You are not too old to learn it if you are also patient and determined, and you need not fear that your lungs will suffer. If you acquire sufficient skill you would get a good deal of enjoyment out of the horn both in orchestras and in occasional chamber music performances.

T. W. C.—Some clarinet questions: (1) Apparently you have a high pitch instrument. This is useless for ordinary orchestral purposes, though suitable for a military band. (2) The E flat clarinet is rarely used save in military bands, and not often even there. (3) The clarinets most commonly used in orchestral work are in B flat and A. The classical composers often wrote for clarinet in C, but the part is now invariably transposed. (4) The Boehm system is the best; we know nothing about the other you mention. (5) Self-tuition is not advisable if you can manage some lessons. But if you must teach yourself, work with the Tutor by Klose (Hawkes, 20*s.*).

Choral Conductor. — Bach's B minor Mass: (1) There seems to be no standardised method of abbreviation, mainly because the work is usually given entire. The time occupied in performance without cuts is two hours and a quarter. Novellos publish a Sol-fa edition (choruses only) at 3*s.*; The Staff notation vocal score is 4*s.*; separate vocal parts, 8*d.* each. (2) For the constitution of your orchestra of (say) twenty-two players, we suggest: violins, 5, 5, violas, 2, 'cellos, 4=16; wind, 1 each=6; with organ. (3) Verdi's 'Stabat Mater' is published by Ricordi. Write to them for the particulars you name.

Sussex.—(1) In accompanying a hymn on the organ the inner parts are, as you say, usually sustained, but this practice should not be invariable. Reiterated bass notes are better played as written, like the treble part. But a good accompanist will employ as many varieties of touch in hymns as in playing a solo. (2) 2-4 time, re-written in notes of double length, would become 2-2.

K. W. F.—As a substitute for the Mendelssohn Wedding March, try that of W. T. Best, or the 'Bridal March' from 'The Birds,' by Parry (both published by Novello). But almost any march will do—e.g., the 'Pontifical' of Widor. Your recital on the occasion need not consist of pieces nominally of a matrimonial type. A programme of good, well-contrasted, and light music will be suitable.

B.M. / V.C.H.V. — The fact of your not being an A.R.C.M. or L.R.A.M. is no bar to your sending in pupils for the Associated Board Examinations.

W. M. G.—Certainly it will be worth your while to take organ lessons with a view to obtaining a post in a village church. Your age is nothing: plenty of players have started far later and done well. Although the organ is a difficult instrument, a student with a good foundation of pianoforte technique can soon become a useful performer.

Billet.—(1) The only dumb pianoforte for practising purposes that we know of is one obtainable from Messrs. Murdoch's, Oxford Street, price ten guineas. (2) The touch of the Dulcitone tuning-fork piano is somewhat springy, rather more like that of a modern organ than of an ordinary pianoforte. The instrument is eminently suitable for use in a small room.

B. K.—We do not know 'the original publishers of the music of the Russian Orthodox Church.' Probably there were several. Messrs. Bayley & Ferguson publish a series of Russian Church Music, edited by A. M. Henderson, with English words. Write for a list. We have not heard of any book dealing with the subject.

J. T.—So far as we know, there is no book on Tudor Church music, but you will find much material on the subject in Grattan Flood's 'Early Tudor Composers' (Oxford University Press), and in the series of articles on 'Late Tudor Composers' now appearing in the Musical Times.

John Sebach.—(1) We regard the Harold Brooke edition of 'The Forty-eight' as by far the most convenient and practical, and therefore the best. It is published by Novello. (2) An excellent recent edition of Beethoven's Sonatas is that of Alfredo Casella, published by Ricordi, in three volumes.

Festival.—Play the treble semiquavers with the bass quaver, and make it short. A more usual and simple way of writing this passage would be to write quavers in the treble with a staccato dash over the second note.

E. S. N.—In the opening bar of the Finale of Beethoven's Pianoforte Fantasia in G, Op. 49, No. 1, the accent comes on the second quaver D. Without such accent (which should be slight) the 6-8 tempo is not defined.

E. B. S.—The great 'Wind versus Wynd' battle was fully fought out recently in these columns, and we are anxious to drop no spark that will set it blazing again. In the case you quote, we ourselves should sing . . . . But no!

Plainsong, Devon.—We feel sure you will find all you want in 'The Accompaniment of Plainsong,' by J. H. Arnold (Oxford University Press, 12*s.* 6*d.*).

G. W.—CC is the bottom note of the organ; the C's above are respectively known as tenor C, middle C (usually indicated as $C^{I}$), treble C ($C^{II}$), and $C^{III}$.

M. A. G.—It is not necessary to ask permission to set Monsell's 'Rest of the Weary' and Wesley's 'Love Divine.'

W. H. R.—Try 'Examination Aural Tests,' by Frederick G. Shinn (Augener, 6*s.*), supplementing them by intelligent work on your own account.

---

In our reply to 'S. M. X.' last month we said we knew of no book dealing with choral conducting. We didn't; but we do, for Messrs. Paxton send us Herbert Antcliffe's 'The Chorus Master,' a very practical little book in which a chapter is given to conducting.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Two Lines ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Three Lines ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 | 4 |
| For every additional Line ... ... ... | 0 | 0 | 10 |
| One inch (displayed) ... ... ... ... | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Half a Column... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A Column ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| A Page ... ... ... ... ... ... | 7 | 10 | 0 |

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement

CONTENTS.

| | PAGE |
|---|---|
| The Destinies of Musical Romanticism. By Leonid Sabaneev | 113 |
| The Nature of Harmony. By Matthew Shirlaw (continued) ... | 115 |
| The Music of the Halls. By F. Bonavia ... ... ... ... | 118 |
| On Faulty Sensations of Musical Pitch, with Notes of a Personal Experience. By Edwin Smith ... ... ... ... | 119 |
| Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ... ... ... ... ... | 121 |
| The Singer and Broadcasting. By Corbett Sumsion ... ... | 124 |
| Anniversaries. By Charles F. Waters ... ... ... ... | 125 |
| The External Stimulus in Music. By Robert H. Hull ... ... | 125 |
| New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XXXI. John Bull. By W. H. Grattan Flood ... ... ... ... ... ... | 127 |
| Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ... ... | 128 |
| Points from Lectures ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 129 |
| New Music ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 130 |
| The Musician's Bookshelf ... ... ... ... ... ... | 134 |
| Occasional Notes ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 138 |
| Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ... ... ... ... ... | 140 |
| Player-Piano Notes ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 142 |
| Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel' ... ... ... ... ... | 143 |
| The Booster in Organ Building. By Reginald Whitworth ... | 144 |
| I.S.M. Conference ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 151 |
| Church and Organ Music ... ... ... ... ... ... | 152 |
| Royal College of Organists: Pass-lists and President's Address | 152 |
| Letters to the Editor ... ... ... ... ... ... | 156 |
| The Amateurs' Exchange ... ... ... ... ... ... | 162 |
| Royal Academy of Music ... ... ... ... ... ... | 162 |
| Royal College of Music ... ... ... ... ... ... | 163 |
| Trinity College of Music ... ... ... ... ... ... | 163 |
| Associated Board: Award of Medals ... ... ... ... | 163 |
| Music in Public Schools ... ... ... ... ... ... | 163 |
| London Concerts ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 165 |
| Elgar's 'Caractacus' as Opera ... ... ... ... ... | 166 |
| Ernest Bryson's second Symphony at Manchester ... ... | 167 |
| Music in the Provinces ... ... ... ... ... ... | 167 |
| Music in Scotland ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 168 |
| Music in Wales ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 169 |
| Music in Ireland ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 169 |
| Musical Notes from Abroad ... ... ... ... ... ... | 169 |
| Obituary ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 173 |
| Answers to Correspondents ... ... ... ... ... ... | 174 |

MUSIC.

| | |
|---|---|
| Four Hymn-Tunes. Arranged with Descant. By H. A. Chambers ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 145 |

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:

1. 'Fair are those eyes.' No. 3 of "6 Ayres to 4 Voyces." By Michael Cavendish (1598).
2. 'Benedicite, omnia Opera.' By C. H. Lloyd.

NOVELLO'S

VILLAGE CHANT BOOK

No. 1

CONTAINS

ONE HUNDRED SINGLE CHANTS

Price Eightpence.

No. 2

CONTAINS

FIFTY DOUBLE CHANTS

Price Eightpence.

The Chants contained in these collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which, with one exception, in no chant exceeds C natural. The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

CLARK, H.—"Break, break, break." Song. 2s.

COLBORN, A. G.—Short Postludes Nos. 5 and 6, for Organ. (No. 6, The Stapleton Series.) 1s.

DAVIES, H. WALFORD.—Solemn Melody, arranged for Brass Band, by J. Ord Hume. 3s. per set. Separate parts, 2d. each.

FOUR HYMN-TUNES.—Arranged with Descant, by H. A. Chambers. (No. 1020, The Musical Times.) 3d.

HOLST, GUSTAV.—"Egdon Heath." For Orchestra. Full Score. 10s. 6d. String Parts (5), 8d. each; Wind Parts (13), 7s. per set.

LANG, C. S.—"Lochinvar." For Chorus and Orchestra. String Parts (5), 1s. 6d. each.

PONSONBY, NOEL.—Mass for three Voices (English Words). For small Choirs. 1s. 6d.

PURCELL, HENRY.—"The Married Beau." (Incidental Music.) Suite for Strings, with additional Wind and Drum parts (ad lib.). Edited by Gustav Holst. Score, 6s. String Parts (4), 8d. each.

ROGERS, E.—"Over a Sapphire Sea." Hymn and Tune. 3d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 428, contains the following music in both notations. "Very Lovely." Unison Song. By CECIL SHARMAN. "Buttons for sale." Unison Song. By ALEC ROWLEY. "The four sweet months." Round. By E. T. SWEETING. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

| | | A. | B. |
|---|---|---|---|
| No. 1481. | "Eternal Ruler of the ceaseless round." (Unison Hymn-Anthem for Massed Voices.) ERIC H. THIMAN | 3d. | — |
| 1504. | "Dulce Domum." Arranged for Senior Forms in Schools, or small Male-Voice Choirs. Melody by JOHN READING | 2d. | — |
| 1505. | "Drink to me only with thine eyes." Arranged for Senior Forms in Schools, or small Male-Voice Choirs. ENGLISH AIR. | 2d. | — |

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERIES, Hymns and Tunes. Set 9. Both Notations Complete, 6d. Or separately. 1½d. each.

No. 71. "Alleluia! Hear us singing." H. E. BUTTON.
,, 72. "Shepherd of tender youth." H. A. CHAMBERS.
"God in all." EDGAR MOY.
,, 73. "Father, hear Thy children's praises." G. RATHBONE.
,, 74. "God of the morning." C. BURNEY.
,, 75. "Let all the world in every corner sing." H. E. BUTTON.
,, 76. "Our hearts are full of gladness." ALEC ROWLEY.
,, 77. "Thanksgiving." M. B. FOSTER.
"God Whispers." R. MCLEOD.
,, 78. "Hear Thy Children, Gentle Jesus" (with descant) C. J. MAY.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS.

BRAHMS, JOHANNES.—"A Song of Destiny." Cantata for S.A.T.B. 1s.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2536. "Vineta." Part-Song for S.A.A.T.B.B. J. Brahms 3d.

,, 2548. "Fain would I change that note." Canzonet for Four Voices (T.T.B.B.). R. Vaughan Williams 2d.

,, 2549. "Midsummer Song." Two-part Song for Female Voices (S.A.). Ethel Boyce 3d.

,, 2550. "Lift up your hearts." Hymn-Anthem for S.A.T.B. H. A. Chambers 2d.

,, 2551. "God is our hope and strength." Anthem for Festival or General use. A. Herbert Brewer 3d.

VAN-LENNEP, H. M.—"Enchantingly the bird-song floats." Song. 2s.

WILLIAMS, C. LEE.—"A harnet zet in a hollow tree." (Traditional Song.) Part-Song for A.T.B.B. 4d.

—— "The Curfew tolls the knell of parting day." Part-song for A.T.T.B. 3d.

—— "The Despairing Lover." Part-song for A.T.T.B. 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

EDMUNDS, C. M.—Sonata in B flat. For Organ. $2.50 (10s.).

FORSYTH, C.—"Sweet Spirit, comfort me." (Litany.) Song for Contralto, or Mezzo-Soprano, with 'Cello Ob. ad lib. 50 cents (2s.).

LEACH, R.—"Great and Marvellous." Short Festival Cantata. Soprano and Tenor Solos and Chorus. Organ or Instrumental Accompaniment. 50 cents (2s.).

MACKINNON, H. A.—"Seekin'." Spiritual for Solo Voice. 50 cents (2s.).

—— "The Mother of Mary McPhee." Song for Baritone. 50 cents (2s.).

—— "Whatever the weather may be." Song for Bass or Baritone. 50 cents (2s.).

RULISON, C.—"Hodie Natus est." Carol. 10 cents. (6d.).

SANDERS, H.—"O Strength and Stay." (The Londonderry Air.) Sacred Song for Medium Voice. 50 cents. (2s.).

VORIS, W. R.—"Drop, drop, slow tears." Penitential Anthem for Mixed Voices. (No. 903, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

WILLIAMS, D. McK.—"Venite." Set for Mixed Voices in Chant form. (No. 931, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

WOODMAN, R. H.—"Andante Religioso." For Violin, 'Cello, Harp, and Organ. $2.50 (10s.).

JUST PUBLISHED.

"O LORD, SUPPORT US"

SHORT ANTHEM FOR EVENING SERVICE.

BY

R. WALKER ROBSON.

PRICE THREEPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

IMMEDIATE DISPOSAL.

PROFESSOR OF SINGING (taking appointment abroad) wishes to dispose of excellent, large Provincial connection. Could recommend for valuable choir-training appointments. Immediate application necessary. "Box 13," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SHEFFIELD.

THE JAMES ROSSITER HOYLE CHAIR OF MUSIC.

The Council are about to make an appointment to the above Chair. Salary, £750 per annum.

Applications should reach the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained, not later than February 20.

W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.

CHURCH OF ST. MARY MAGDALENE, NEWARK-ON-TRENT.

The post of ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER will be VACANT SHORTLY. Candidates must be Communicants of the C. of E., have exceptional Choir-training abilities, and be strong disciplinarians.

Fine Church; Four-manual Hill organ. Stipend, £160 per annum, and good house. Apply by letter, stating age, and enclosing copies of testimonials and three references to:—

H. W. Shipman, c/o Midland Bank, Newark-on-Trent.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.—Fully qualified. WANTED for St. Paul's Parish Church, North Shore, Blackpool. Important post; wide scope for capable and energetic man. Communicant. Fine organ. Commencing salary, £100. Apply, Rev. H. C. Parslew, The Vicarage.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for St. Anne's Church, Moseley, Birmingham. Good choir. Musical services. Salary according to qualifications. Apply, with three copies of testimonials, to Rev. R. S. Lourd, Vicarage.

ORGANIST WANTED for St. Mary's Church, Guildford. Churchman, choir-trainer, disciplinarian essential. Congregational music. Three-manual organ. No week-day Services. £80. Silence negative. Canon Kirwan, Rectory House, Guildford.

CHOIRBOYS WANTED at All Souls' Church, Langham Place, W. Generous terms if proficient. Personal application only, to Choirmaster at Church (North door), on Monday or Wednesday evenings, at 7.30.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED at Trinity Presbyterian Church, Harrow. Salary, £50. Apply by letter, to Mr. E. A. Smith, 29, Arkwright Road, N.W.3.

WANTED.—BASS. £20. St. Peter's, Belsize Park, N.W.3. Write, "Organist," 42, Heath Street, N.W.3.

PROMISING VOICES WANTED for assisted training. Italian method. West-End Studio. Write, "X. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR REQUIRED.—For Nonconformist Church, N.E. London. Light duties. Reply, "Box 12," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO A.R.C.O. CANDIDATES.—Jan., 1928, paper work solutions, including Ear-tests. 24 Transposition and 24 Accompaniment Tests, all modelled on the latest papers. 5s. each set. "F.R.C.O./L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FIRST-CLASS TENOR SOLOIST,

PRINCIPAL TENOR, WEST-END CHURCH,

OFFERS SERVICES FREE

in return for healthy employment London or Provinces.

(Age 25, single.)

Apply, 128, Olive Road, Cricklewood, N.W.2.

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO ATTACHMENT FOR SALE. £5. Write Cosslett, 3, Palmeira Gdns., Ilford, Essex.

ROGERS TWO-MANUAL (7 octaves) and Pedal (CC to G) PIANOFORTE FOR SALE.—Exact R.C.O. Console measurements. Write, "Box 14," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

UNIQUE BARGAIN.—REED ORGAN, equal to new, two manuals; R.C.O. pedals, and console. Below trade price. Seen London. Write, "J. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions Wanted for Publication. We compose Music to Lyrics if desired. Advice free to new authors and composers. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

LYRICS WANTED, suitable for Sentimental and Humorous Songs, Ballads, Vocal Dances, &c. Send MSS. to The Lyric Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

LYRICS FOR SALE.—We can supply Composers with excellent material for any kind of Song. Send for Lists, stating requirements. The Lyric Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, W.C.1.

OVER EIGHT MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW EASTER ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

English Choirmaster writes: "Have had 41 years' experience. To me your Anthems, &c., have always been a joy, and to our people a delight."

Scottish Organist writes: "Christmas Anthems were unusually well spoken of, and had to be repeated—real gems of melodious music."

A Welsh Organist says: "My Choir members are delighted with Anthems. They are beautiful Compositions, and a triumph of effective writing."

Thousands of similar expressions of appreciation have been received from all parts of the world.

*THIS IS THE DAY. New, 1928 ... ... ... ... ... ... 4d.
Rousing choruses with telling modulations, also an extremely effective solo.
*THRONED ON HIGH ... ... ... ... ... 8th Edit. 4d.
*HE DIETH NO MORE. HALLELUJAH! ... ... ... 10th Edit. 4d.
*JESUS LIVES... ... ... ... ... ... 13th Edit. 4d.
*SHOUT ALLELUIA! ... ... ... ... ... 12th Edit. 4d.
*TO HIM ALL POWER ... ... ... ... ... 13th Edit. 4d.
*HALLELUJAH! THE LORD IS RISEN ... ... ... 13th Edit. 5d.
*NEW BENEDICITE. No. 9, shortened ... ... ... ... 3d.
*HIM HATH GOD EXALTED ... ... ... ... 10th Edit. 4d.
*REJOICE AND BE GLAD ... ... ... ... ... 7th Edit. 4d.
*THE VICTORY. *AWAKE! ARISE ... ... 13th Edit. ea. 4d.
GOD IS OUR REFUGE. Short Work ... ... ... 9th Edit. 8d.
Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
*GLORY AND STRENGTH. Fine General Anthem ... 8th Edit. 5d.

NEW VOLUNTARY BOOKS, Nos. 11 and 12. Price 2s. each.
Wonderfully popular. Each Book contains Seventeen pieces written on Two Staves with Pedal-part indicated. (16th Edition.)

*Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: A. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY Co., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

POPULAR EASTER ANTHEMS.

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

Highly effective without being difficult. World-wide popularity.

*HALLELUJAH! KING OF KINGS ... ... ... 35th 1000 4d.
*HE IS RISEN. A great favourite ... ... ... 41st 1000 4d.
*CHRIST SHALL GIVE THEE LIGHT ... ... ... 33rd 1000 4d.
*THANKS BE TO GOD (with a fine Bass Solo) ... 28th 1000 6d.
*WHY SEEK YE THE LIVING AMONG THE DEAD? ... 33rd 1000 4d.
*NOW IS CHRIST RISEN ... ... ... ... ... 20th 1000 4d.
*HALLELUJAH! CHRIST IS RISEN ... ... ... 33rd 1000 4d.
*THE LORD REIGNETH (Festival) ... ... ... 22nd 1000 4d.
PRAISE THE LORD, O JERUSALEM (Festival) ... 51st 1000 4d.
*THE BLESSINGS OF PEACE (I WILL EXTOL THEE) 5th 1000 4d.
FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in D 32nd 1000 6d.
Full of flowing melody. Sung at a Choral Festival.
BENEDICITE IN D. Quadruple Chant ... ... 8th 1000 3d.
Varied Acc. for Boys' verses and Men's or Unison Verses.
*NEW BENEDICITE IN B FLAT ... ... ... ... 5th 1000 3d.
Very effective changes. No monotony.

*Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

VESPER.

XVITH CENTURY PRAYER

("O LORD, SUPPORT US ALL THE DAY LONG").
(English and Welsh words.)

Music by W. R. PULLEIN. 3*d.* Novello, London.

Musical Times.—"Suitably expressive music for unaccompanied singing."

Church Music by Matthew Kingston.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| COMMUNION SERVICE IN A FLAT MAJOR ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| THE CONGREGATION'S MELODY TO ABOVE SERVICE | 0 | 3 |
| FESTAL MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D MAJOR ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |
| TE DEUM IN A FLAT MAJOR ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 6 |
| BENEDICTUS ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |
| MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN A FLAT MAJOR | 0 | 6 |
| HO! EVERY ONE THAT THIRSTETH. ANTHEM FOR BASS SOLO AND CHORUS ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BY

Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer,
Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann

and other celebrated makers

The Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

Performed with great success at Copenhagen.

THE

SONG OF HAROLD HARFAGER

BY

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

SET TO MUSIC FOR BARITONE SOLO, CHORUS (MALE VOICES), AND ORCHESTRA.

BY JOHN POINTER.

Price ... One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The "APOLLO" PEDAL REED ORGAN

In the
HOME or STUDIO
the "Apollo" provides the Organist with a perfect and ever-ready medium for practice.

Pipe-like purity of Tone, Smooth and Easy Touch, Prompt Speech and Exactness of Positions are among the many characteristics which have made the "Apollo" Organ renowned throughout the world.

For SMALL CHURCHES
and places of Worship where space or funds will not allow of a Pipe Organ, the "Apollo" Special Church Model has proved the most efficient and reliable substitute.

Convenient Terms of monthly or quarterly payment arranged.

Illustrated Booklet and Specifications from

RUSHWORTH & DREAPER, LTD.

(DESIGNERS AND BUILDERS)

11-17, ISLINGTON - - - - - - LIVERPOOL

London Showrooms: THE CHAPPELL PIANO CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.1.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."
Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."
Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."
Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."
Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing.'"
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."
Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."
Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."
Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:
"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

THE SOLITUDES OF THE PASSION

A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA.

For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus, with Hymns for Choir and Congregation.

Price 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The music is devotional and very singable."—Musical Times.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS ... | 2 | 6 |
| ANTHEMS: The desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |
| I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 4 |
| PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ... ... | 0 | 3 |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Popular Cantatas for Easter

VIA CRUCIS (WAY OF THE CROSS)

TENOR AND BASS SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS.
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION.

BY FREDERICK ILIFFE, Mus. D.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. net. Sol-fa, 1s. 4d. net.
Words with Hymn-Tunes, 3d. each (22s. 6d. per 100).
Words only, 1½d. each (11s. 3d. per 100).
Orchestral Parts can be hired.

CALVARY

BY CYRIL BOWDLER, Mus. D.

S.T.B. SOLOS. CHORUS, AND HYMNS.

Vocal Score, 2s. net.
Words with Hymn-Tunes, 3d. (22s. 6d. per 100).
Words only, 2d. (15s. per 100).
A beautiful devotional work, well worth consideration.

GETHSEMANE AND CALVARY

BY REV. E. VINE-HALL.

FOR PALM SUNDAY AND GOOD FRIDAY.

TENOR SOLO, CHORUS, AND HYMNS.

Vocal Score, 1s. Sol-fa, 6d.
Words, 1½d. (10s. 6d. per 100).
Simple and very melodious. Suitable for small Country choirs.

STORY OF THE CRUCIFIXION

BY CALEB SIMPER.

TENOR AND BASS SOLOS AND CHORUS.

Vocal Score, 8d. Sol-fa, 5d.
Words, 1½d. (10s. 6d. per 100).
A very popular work. Not difficult.

Send for Specimens on appro.

Popular Anthems for Easter

BY

CALEB SIMPER.

45 Separate Anthems which have run into over 2,000 Editions.

Special list on application.

GEORGE BELCHER.

| | |
|---|---|
| As it began to dawn ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| He hath redeemed us... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| A Prince and a Saviour ... ... ... ... | 4d. |

ARTHUR BERRIDGE.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thanks be to God (New 1928) ... ... ... | 4d. |
| This is the Day ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Hallelujah! to the Saviour ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Tell the Tidings ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Christ our Passover ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |

(Introducing a strain from Palestrina.)

REV. E. VINE-HALL.

| | |
|---|---|
| I am Alpha and Omega ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Ye choirs of New Jerusalem ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Alleluia! Alleluia! ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Welcome Happy Morning ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Christ is risen from the dead ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him ... ... | 4d. |

All Anthems also in Sol-fa at 3d. each.

Send for a selection on appro.

A. WEEKES & Co., LTD.
13 & 14, HANOVER STREET, LONDON, W.1.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

---

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

---

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

---

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

---

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE.

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK

(OP. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
(Vocal parts, 1s. each.)

An Edition with Latin words (Stabat Mater) may also be had.

---

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY. SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, With Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

---

LONDON · NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.
THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.
ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY
G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR
TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION
FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE
(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY
E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY
GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
(An Edition with Latin words may also be had, price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.)

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,
FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS
TOGETHER WITH
HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 1½d.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION
ON THE
SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY
FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by E. ELGAR and I. ATKINS. 4s.; paper boards, 5s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100. Book of Words, with the Music of the Chorales, 1s.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s. 6d. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION MUSIC, THE (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). J. BENEDICT. 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) C. GOUNOD. 1s. 6d.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION OF CHRIST, THE. G. F. HANDEL. 4s. 6d.; paper boards, 5s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Words only, 16s. per 100. Abridged edition for Church use, 1s. 6d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. H. SCHÜTZ. 1s. 6d.

*OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm CXXX.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. C. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 1s 6d.

*OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm CXXX.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. G. HENSCHEL. 4s.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. G. ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by G. C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. Latin words. F. E. GLADSTONE. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. Latin words. F. E. GLADSTONE. 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonized by V. NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Latin and English words. G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. B. SQUIRE. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) E. PETTMAN. 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A Simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment. 2d.

*Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE BENEDICITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS

| | |
|---|---|
| ADLAM, F. (in F, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ... | 4d. |
| BENNETT, G. J. (in E flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| BENNETT, G. J. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| BENNETT, G. J. (in D, Unison) ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| BLAIR, H. (in G)... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES ... ... ... | 2d. |
| BUNNETT, ED. (in E, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| BUNNETT, ED. (in F, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| BUTTON, H. E. (in D) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| BUTTON, H. E. (Shortened Form) ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| COBB, G. F. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G) ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form) .. ... ... | 2d |
| ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6d. |
| ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| EYRE, A. J. (in E flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| EYRE, A. J. (No. 2, in F) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| FOSTER, M. B. (in F, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... | 6d. |
| FROST, P. H. (in D). ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| GADSBY, H. (in G, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| GALE, C. R. (in D) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form)... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison) ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| GODFREY, A. E. (in C) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G) ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| H. B. C. (Three Chants) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form) ... ... ... | 2d. |
| HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| HOYTE, W. S. (in F) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| HUGHES, W. (in E flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| ILIFFE, F. (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form) ... ... ... | 2d. |
| LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| LLOYD, C. H. (in E flat, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, Shortened Form) ... ... ... | 2d. |
| MACPHERSON, C. (in F, rhythmic setting) ... ... ... | 6d. |
| MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each | 6d. |
| MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat) ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN) ... ... ... | 3d |
| MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form) ... ... | 3d. |
| PETTMAN, E. (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants) ... | 3d. |
| PETTMAN, E. (in flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| PULLEIN, J. (in E flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 18d. |
| ROBERTS, J. V. (in B flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6d. |
| SLATER, W. (in F) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| SMITH, B. (in A flat) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B. | 3d. |
| STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form) ... ... | 2d. |
| STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS ... | 2d. |
| STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER ... ... ... | 2d. |
| Ditto (Welsh words) (Sol-fa, 18d.) ... ... ... | 2d. |
| STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... | 3d |
| STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form) ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| Ditto, Welsh words, 2d.; Sol-fa, 18d. | |
| STEWART, C. H. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ... | 4d. |
| BARNBY, J. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| FOSTER, J. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | |
| SMITH, M. (two settings) ... ... ... ... ... ... | |
| TURLE, J. (two settings) ... ... ... ... ... ... | |
| WICKES, C. A. (two settings) ... ... ... ... ... | |
| TOZER, F. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| TOZER, F. (in A). Short and simple ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| WEST, J. E. (in G) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6d. |
| WEST, J. E. (in C) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| WESTBURY, C. H. (in C) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| WILLAN, H. (in D) (Shortened Form) ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| WOOD, W. G. (in D) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2d. |
| WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant) ... ... ... | 2d. |

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

| | |
|---|---|
| DYKES, J. B. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| GOUNOD, C. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| HOYTE, W. S. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6d. |
| PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies) (Edited by W. S. Vale) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6d. |
| SPENCE, H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony) ... ... | 2d. |
| WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied) ... | 4d. |

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

THE WORDS BY E. MONRO.

SET TO MUSIC BY

| | |
|---|---|
| BUNNETT, E. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| BUTTON, H. E. ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| FOSTER, M. B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| ROBERTS, J. V. (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| SOMERVELL, A. (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| STAINER, J. (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |

Words only, 2s. per 100.
Large Type Edition, 3s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FAITH HOUSE THE STAMP OF EFFICIENCY. FAITH HOUSE

TO BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY

THE PARISH PSALTER

POINTED FOR CHANTING BY SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON.

The purpose of this Psalter is to secure the proper emphasis and rhythm of the words by the simplest means.

The Psalter will be published in two editions:—(1.) Arranged according to the book of Common Prayer. (2.) Arranged according to the Revised Lectionary.

Both editions will be published in Foolscap 4to, cloth, at 2*s.* 6*d.* each.

Write for prospectus giving specimen pages, &c.

TENTH THOUSAND

THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD

A DEVOTION ON THE PASSION

The words arranged by the REV. C. E. DOUGLAS, S.F., and set to music for Treble, Tenor, and Baritone Solos, Choir, and Organ (with a part for a Reader).

BY SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON

PRICE COMPLETE (Words and Music), 2*s.* 6*d.* (Cloth, 4*s.*). Words only, 1*d.* each; 8*s.* per 100.

Musical Times:—"Mr. Nicholson has produced a work which should have no small share in influencing for good the standard of present-day Church Music—particularly music dealing with the subject of the Passion."

FIFTEENTH THOUSAND

The Passion of our Lord according to St. Mark

Arranged as a Liturgical Devotion by the REV. E. MILNER-WHITE, Dean of King's College, Cambridge, and set to music for choir and organ

BY CHARLES WOOD

PRICE COMPLETE (Words and Music), 2*s.* 6*d.* (Cloth, 4*s.*). Words only, 1*d.* each; 8*s.* per 100.

Musical Times:—"On a plane far above much of the Church Music of the day. A deeply devotional spirit pervades the whole, and the music maintains a lofty standard throughout."

THE EASTER CAROL SERVICE

Containing Nine Easter Carols with full harmony of the Gospel Record and devotions from the Eastern Orthodox Services. PRICE (Words and Music), 1*s.* Words only, 1*d.* each; 8*s.* per 100.

THE BOY BISHOP. A CHOIR OPERA by SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON. Full Score, 6*s.* 6*d.*

THE CHURCH ORGAN. By N. A. BONAVIA-HUNT.
No. 2 of the Church Music Monographs. 4*s.* 6*d.* each.

THE TENOR TUNE BOOK. Third Edition. 1*s.* 6*d.*
Descants, old and new to well-known hymn-tunes, by HARVEY GRACE, H. V. HUGHES, H. R. NORTON, GEOFFREY SHAW, MARTIN SHAW, and BECKET WILLIAMS.

THE KYRIE BOOK. Containing 22 Settings of the Ninefold Kyries, arranged from the Works of composers of the 16th to 18th Centuries. 1*s.* 6*d.*

UNISON CHANTS. Compiled by SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON. 1*s.* Organ Accompaniment, 5*s.*

NEW CHURCH MUSIC

MISSA PAROCHIALIS. A Simple Setting. By GEORGE OLDROYD. 6*d.*

MISSA PORTÆ HONORIS. With Special Creed. By CHARLES WOOD. 2*s.*

THE NICENE CREED (in the Phrygian Mode). By CHARLES WOOD. 4*d.*

CREDO (for Unaccompanied Service). By HENRY G. LEY. 4*d.*

SHORT TE DEUM (for Use on Solemn Occasions). By C. W. PEARCE. 2*d.*

MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, founded on melodies from "Piae Cantiones." By CHARLES WOOD. 6*d.*

MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, founded on melodies from "The Genevan Psalter." By CHARLES WOOD. 6*d.*

NUNC DIMITTIS. Two Settings. English and Latin Words. By CHARLES WOOD. 6*d.*

For all Church Music—HAVE YOU TRIED THE FAITH HOUSE?

THE FAITH PRESS, Ltd., 22, Buckingham Street, Charing Cross, W.C.2

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS.

SET IX. JUST PUBLISHED.

HYMNS AND TUNES.

SETS PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

PRICE SIXPENCE PER SET. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SET I.

1. COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD ... ... G. C. MARTIN
2. FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING ... LADY EUAN-SMITH
3. I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY ... ... ... FREDERIC CLAY
4. COME, O COME! IN PIOUS LAYS ... ... ... J. STAINER
5. THINE FOR EVER! GOD OF LOVE ... ... W. C. HARVEY
6. JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE ... ... H. E. BUTTON
7. SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR ... ... F. A. CHALLINOR
8. WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE ... ... C. J. MAY
9. ON OUR WAY REJOICING ... ... ... WALTER B. GILBERT
10. NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY ... ... ... J. ADCOCK

SET II.

1. AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS... ... ... ...J. STAINER
2. THE ANGELS' SONG ... ... ... ALBERTO RANDEGGER
3. FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN ... ... ALFRED MOFFAT
4. THE GOLDEN SHORE ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
5. SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR ... ... ... JOHN E. WEST
6. ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING ... ... ... F. H. COWEN
7. MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE ... J. V. ROBERTS
8. STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY ... ... J. STAINER
9. THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER ... ... ... JOSEPH BARNBY
10. GOD WILL TAKE CARE OF YOU ... ... F. R. HAVERGAL

SET III.

1. WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY ... ... ... J. BARNBY
2. HARK! HARK! THE ORGAN ... ... ... G. J. BENNETT
3. O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO? ... ... H. E. BUTTON
4. WHILE THE SUN IS SHINING ... ... ... ... T. ADAMS
5. I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY ... ... ...H. J. GAUNTLETT
6. THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN ... ... A. SULLIVAN
7. LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE ... ... ... A. S. COOPER
8. IN OUR WORK AND IN OUR PLAY ... ... F. WESTLAKE
9. THE BEAUTIFUL LAND ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
10. GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD ... ... ... J. STAINER

SET IV.

1. THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND ... ... ... J. STAINER
2. THE CROWN IS WAITING ... ... ... J. STAINER
3. THE CITY OF LIGHT ... ... ... ...E. J. TROUP
4. HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES ... ...LADY EUAN-SMITH
5. GOD IS IN HEAVEN! CAN HE HEAR ... ... H. E. BUTTON
6. THE GOOD SHEPHERD ... ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
7. A LITTLE KINGDOM I POSSESS ... ... ... R. S. NEWMAN
8. RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS ... ... ... E. J. TROUP
9. FLOWERS ... ... ... ... ... ALBERTO RANDEGGER
10. JESUS, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME ... ... H. PARKER

SET V.

1. CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD ... .. ... J. H. MAUNDER
2. WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR ... ... ... ... E. J. TROUP
3. COME, PRAISE YOUR LORD ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
4. WE WILL PRAISE THEE ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
5. ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY ... ... HERBERT E. CRIMP
6. WE THANK THEE, LORD ... ... ... W. C. HARVEY
7. COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING ... E. J. TROUP
8. COME, SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS ... ... G. W. TORRANCE
9. THE LESSON OF LOVE ... ... ... ... ... J. BARNBY
10. NOW THE DAY IS OVER ... ... ... ... F. W. BLUNT

SET VI.

1. HOSANNA WE SING ... ... ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
2. HEAVENLY FATHER, SEND THY BLESSING ... W. C. HARVEY
3. BLESSED JESU, WE CAN SEE THEE ... ... ... A. ROWLEY
4. THE DAYS OF OLD ... ... ... ... ... ETHEL BOYCE
5. WHAT IS THE GIFT ... ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
6. WHILE OUR LORD WAS PASSING BY ... ... ETHEL BOYCE
7. THE EARTH IS FAIR AND SWEET ... ... ... A. ROWLEY
8. PILGRIMS OF THE NIGHT ... ... ... ... O. KING
9. THE HOLY LIGHT ... ... ... ... ... C. H. LLOYD
10. NOW SINKS THE SUN ... ... ... ... ... C. J. MAY

SET VII.

1. LIFE'S GLAD MORNING ... ... ... ... G. C. MARTIN
2. JESU, BLESSED SAVIOUR ... ... ... A. HERBERT BREWER
3. COME, CHRISTIAN YOUTHS ... ... ... HARVEY GRACE
4. THY WORD IS LIKE A GARDEN ... ... ... E. H. THIMAN
5. GOD OF MERCY, THRONED ON HIGH ... ... HARVEY GRACE
6. GOD OF OUR FATHERS ... ... ... ... E. J. HOPKINS
7. WHEN THE LORD OF LOVE ... ... ... E. H. THIMAN
8. CHILDREN OF GOD ... ... ... ... F. G. RUSSELL
9. THE CHILDREN'S PRAYER ... ... ... ... R. MCLEOD
10. THE LORD BE WITH US '... ... ... ... ... C. J. MAY

SET VIII.

1. THE CHILDREN'S SONG ... ... ... GEORGE RATHBONE
2. THE CHILDREN'S FESTAL DAY ... ... ... J. H. ADAMS
3. SING ALOUD TO JESUS ... ... ... ... ALEC ROWLEY
4. LONG AGO SWEET VOICES CALLING ... ... J. H. MAUNDER
5. CHILDREN'S VOICES ... ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
6. AROUND THE THRONE OF GOD (Tune—"LASST UNS ERFREUEN") Arr. by IVOR ATKINS
7. GOD, WHO HATH MADE THE DAISIES ... ... ... R. MCLEOD
8. FOR EVER AND FOR EVER ... ... ... J. H. MAUNDER
9. FRAMER OF THE LIGHT ... ... ... R. WALKER ROBSON
10. THE JOYOUS DAY, O LORD, IS ENDING ... ... C. J. MAY

SET IX.

1. ALLELUIA! HEAR US SINGING ... ... ... H. E. BUTTON
2. SHEPHERD OF TENDER YOUTH ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
3. FATHER, HEAR THY CHILDREN'S PRAISES GEORGE RATHBONE
4. GOD OF THE MORNING ... ... ... ... CHARLES BURNEY
5. LET ALL THE WORLD IN EVERY CORNER SING H. E. BUTTON
6. OUR HEARTS ARE FULL OF GLADNESS ... ... ALEC ROWLEY
7. THANKSGIVING ... ... ... ... ... MYLES B. FOSTER
8. GOD WHISPERS ... ... ... ... ... ROBERT MCLEOD
9. GOD IN ALL ... ... ... ... ... ... EDGAR MOY
10. HEAR THY CHILDREN, GENTLE JESUS ... ... ... C. J. MAY

The Hymns and Tunes may also be had in separate numbers, price 1½*d.* each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW EDITION.

POCKET SING-SONG BOOK

FOR SCHOOLS, HOMES

AND

COMMUNITY SINGING

CONTENTS.

A-hunting we will go
All people that on earth do dwell (Old 100th)
All through the night
Arethusa, The
Ash Grove, The
Auld Lang Syne
Bay of Biscay, The
Begone, dull care
Bells of Aberdovey, The
Blow, blow, thou winter wind
Blue Bell of Scotland, The
Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond, The
British Grenadiers, The
Campbells are comin', The
Camptown Races
Charlie is my Darling
Coasts of High Barbary, The
Come, lasses and lads
Come, let's be merry
Dashing away with the smoothing iron
Down among the dead men
David of the White Rock
Drink to me only with thine eyes
Early one morning
Flight of the Earls, The
Girl I left behind me, The
Glory to Thee, my God, this night (Tallis)
God rest you merry, gentlemen
God save the King
Golden Vanity, The
Good-morrow, Gossip Joan
Harp that once through Tara's halls, The Heart of Oak
Heave away, my Johnny
Here's a health unto His Majesty
I saw three ships
John Brown's body
John Peel
Keel row, The
Land of my Fathers
Lass of Richmond Hill, The
Last Rose of Summer, The
Let the hills resound
Londonderry Air
March of the Men of Harlech
Marching thro' Georgia
Marseillaise, The
Meeting of the Waters, The Mermaid, The
Minstrel Boy, The
My Lady Greensleeves
Now thank we all our God
O no, John !
Oak and the Ash, The
Oh, dear ! what can the matter be
Oh ! we can play
Old Folks at Home
Old King Cole.
One man went to mow
Onward, Christian Soldiers
Poacher, The
Polly Oliver
Polly-wolly-doodle
Rio Grand
Rounds: Come, follow me
'Tis humdrum
Chairs to mend
Rule, Britannia
So early in the morning
Summer is a-coming in
There was a simple maiden
This great world is a trouble
Tight little Island, The
Twelve days of Christmas
Vicar of Bray, The
Wanderer, The
We be Three Poor Mariners
When I was a Tailor
When Johnny comes marching home
Wi' a Hundred Pipers
Widdicombe Fair
Will ye no come back again
Young May Moon, The

Size 6½ in. by 5 in., rounded corners, and lined paper cover. The songs are generally set in low keys with simple pianoforte accompaniments. The voice part is printed in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa notations.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Words only, price 4*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

Songs for Boys

"When I'm a man"

VOCATIONAL SONGS FOR BOYS.

No more delightful series of songs was ever destined for a better purpose. Twelve jolly little rhymes set to rollicking tunes that will appeal to all boys. Every normal lad longs at one time or other to embrace one of those callings that come to his daily notice, and which appeal to his youthful spirit of romance and adventure. Here they are portrayed in rhyme and rhythm:

Specimen copies of the 12 songs listed below will be sent to readers of the Musical Times on receipt of 6d., but this Journal must be mentioned.

THE WATCHMAN.

I want to be a watchman with a bucket full of fire
And toast myself some bacon on a piece of broken wire,
And sit all night and smoke my pipe and watch the hot coals glow, [that blow.
All sheltered in my little hut from all the winds
I want to be so very old and look so very wise
That all the children at our school will get a great surprise.
I want to be a watchman by a hole dug in the ground,
With buckets, rammers, picks, and spades, and red lamps all around [board,
And great big pipes to crawl along and mortar on a
And hear the people passing by remark: "That man's a Lord!"
I'd put a line across the street and wave my hand and say:
"Now all you carts and motor cars go round the other way."

E. SHENTON.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| JACK TAR ... ... | Wright | Unison | 3d. |
| THE BAKER ... ... | „ | 2 Parts | 3d. |
| THE TINKER ... | „ | 2 Parts | 4d. |
| THE TAILOR ... | „ | 2 Parts | 4d. |
| THE FARMER'S BOY | „ | Unison | 4d. |
| THE SOLDIER ... | „ | 2 Parts | 3d. |
| THE WATCHMAN ... | Shenton | Unison | 3d. |
| THE KNIFE GRINDER | „ | Unison | 3d. |
| THE SAILOR ... ... | „ | Unison | 3d. |
| THE DUSTMAN ... | Moy | 2 Parts | 3d. |
| THE BARGEE ... | Rowley | 2 Parts | 3d. |
| THE POLICEMAN ... | „ | Unison | 4d. |

WINTHROP ROGERS, LTD.
SOLE AGENTS: HAWKES & SON (LONDON), LTD., DENMAN STREET, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOK, No. 271.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH

DESCANTS

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

AND OTHERS.

CONTENTS.

THE BAY OF BISCAY
A-HUNTING WE WILL GO
JOHN PEEL
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT
SCOTS WHA HAE
THE OAK AND THE ASH
EARLY ONE MORNING
O, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE THE BRITISH GRENADIERS
THE ASH GROVE
GOOD KING WENCESLAS
THE FIRST NOWELL

PRICE EIGHTPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED

The tremendous success of TWICE 55 COMMUNITY SONGS (over 200,000 copies sold in eighteen months) made this companion volume inevitable. GEOFFREY SHAW has culled TWICE 44 SOCIABLE SONGS from the treasury of English songs that will bring delight to as many more thousands of people, and all at the low price of 6d. Excepting the canons, all songs are harmonized so that they can be played on the piano. Size 5½ by 8½ inches; Staff notation only.

SIR HENRY HADOW writes:

"One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the increasing number of good song books, not only for schools, though this is of first importance, but for general use. The eminence of England in music during the Elizabethan period was undoubtedly fostered by the custom that at every social gathering people should sing together. It will add a real pleasure to our social life if we can gradually restore this excellent practice; and the surest way of effecting this is to provide in an easily accessible form the songs which people like to sing.

"The collection here offered may be commended without reserve. Mr. Geoffrey Shaw's name is in itself a guarantee of good editorship; the volume contains a wide and varied collection of songs, rounds, hymns, and carols; and it is issued at a price which brings it within everybody's reach. It is, in the true sense of the word, a popular volume, and I cordially hope that its 'appeal to the people' will be successful."

PRICE

6d

WORDS AND MUSIC.

Send for descriptive circular, or better still, specimen copy, 7d. post free.

HAWKES & SON (LONDON) LTD.

DENMAN STREET LONDON W1

COMPOSITIONS BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.

CANTATAS, MASSES, ETC.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Song of Miriam, The (Sol-fa, 8d.; Sol-fa, Welsh words, 8d.) | 1 | 6 |
| Lazarus (Selection only) | 2 | 6 |
| Mass in E flat | 3 | 0 |
| do. A flat | 1 | 6 |
| do. F (Sol-fa, 1s.) | 1 | 6 |
| do. B flat | 1 | 6 |
| do. C | 1 | 6 |
| do. G | 1 | 6 |

SERVICES.

| | | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Communion Service in | | A flat | 3 | 0 |
| do. | do. | B flat | 3 | 0 |
| do. | do. | C | 3 | 0 |
| do. | do. | E flat | 3 | 0 |
| do. | do. | F | 3 | 0 |
| do. | do. | G | 3 | 0 |

ANTHEMS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Christ has risen (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 4 |
| Good it is to thank the Almighty | 0 | 8 |
| Great is Jehovah the Lord (Solo Tenor and T.T.B.B.) (Sol-fa, 3d.) | 0 | 6 |
| Great is Jehovah the Lord (with Chorus for S.A.T.B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 6 |
| Lord, in thankful love adoring | 0 | 2 |
| The Lord is my Shepherd. S.S.A.A. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 6 |
| do. do. do. S.A.T.B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 6 |
| Where Thou reignest (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 4 |

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

PIANOFORTE ALBUMS.

| | | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| No. 47. | Four Impromptus (Op. 90) | | 1 | 6 |
| ,, 48. | do. do. (Op. 142) | | 1 | 6 |
| ,, 49. | Moments Musicals, Adagio and Rondo | | 1 | 6 |
| ,, 50. | Ten Variations, &c. | | 1 | 6 |
| ,, 51. | Adagio, Allegretto, &c. | | 1 | 6 |
| ,, 52. | Five Klavierstücke and Two Scherzi | | 1 | 6 |

ORGAN ARRANGEMENTS

For particulars see NOVELLO'S CATALOGUE.

PART-SONGS, ETC.

MIXED VOICES.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Dance we so gaily | 0 | 4 |
| Forth to the Meadows ("Rosamunde") (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 4 |
| God in the Thunderstorm (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 6 |
| Hail to the Chief (Boat Song) (arranged) | 0 | 3 |
| How merry is life ("Rosamunde") (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 3 |
| Hymn to the Eternal | 0 | 4 |
| To Sylvia. Arranged by John E. West (Sol-fa, 1½d.) | 0 | 3 |
| Welcome Spring (Op. 33). A Suite of Vocal Dances: | | |
| 1. Welcome Spring2. How sweet to wander | 0 | 4 |
| 3. Come, O come, dearest4. As the watcher longs5. I'm in no hurry to marry | 0 | 4 |
| 6. When gallant lovers7. An end will I bring to doubt8. Her true love she greeteth9. As dew-drops at morn10. Hark! silv'ry bells chiming | 0 | 4 |
| 11. Tender music all inviting | 0 | 4 |

MALE VOICES.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Far beyond all mortal ken (Chorus of Spirits, from "Rosamunde"). T.T.B.B. (Sol-fa, 1½d.) | 0 | 2 |
| Gondolier's serenade. T.T.B.B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 6 |
| Hail to the Chief (Boat Song). (T.T.B.B.) (Sol-fa, 1½d.) | 0 | 3 |
| Night is cloudless and serene, The. (T., solo, T.T.B.B.) | 0 | 8 |
| Song of the spirits over the waters. (Double chorus, T.T.B.B.) (Sol-fa, 8d.) | 1 | 6 |
| Spectres' Dance, The. T.T.B.B. | 0 | 3 |

FEMALE VOICES.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Five Choruses | 1 | 6 |
| Or singly:— | | |
| Coronach (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 4 |
| Glory to the Lord Almighty | 0 | 4 |
| God in Nature. (A. Solo.) (S.S.A.A.) (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 6 |
| Lord is my Shepherd, The. (S.S.A.A.) (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 0 | 6 |
| Serenade. (A. Solo and Chorus. S.S.A.A.) (Sol-fa, 3d.) | 0 | 8 |
| Forth to the Meadows ("Rosamunde") (arranged for Two parts, with three-part Semi-Chorus) (Sol-fa, 1½d.) | 0 | 3 |
| To Sylvia (arranged for S.S., or C.). Staff and Sol-fa combined | 0 | 2 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SONGS BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.

VOL. 1.

TWENTY SONGS

FOR A MEZZO-SOPRANO VOICE.

SELECTED, EDITED, AND TRANSLATED BY

NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 2s. 6d.

Praise of Tears.
Knowest thou the land? (Mignon's first song in "Wilhelm Meister").
The Message of Flowers.
Nought may'st thou ask me (Mignon's second song in "Wilhelm Meister").
Oh, let me dream till I awaken (Mignon's third song in "Wilhelm Meister").
The greenwood calls.
The full-orbed moon (Romance from "Rosamund").
Hallow'd night, descend.
Huntsman, rest (Ellen's second song in "The Lady of the Lake").
Thro' the pine-wood.
The Summer waves.
Wanderer's night-song
Trust in Spring.
The maiden's lament.
To Mignon.
The passing-bell.
Alinda.
Ave Maria (Ellen's third song in "The Lady of the Lake").
The fisherman
On the water.

VOL. 2.

TWENTY SONGS

FOR A CONTRALTO VOICE.

SELECTED, EDITED, AND TRANSLATED BY

NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 2s. 6d.

The wanderer.
Fisher's song.
The angry bard.
The unlucky fisherman
Old man's song.
The flight of time.
Litany for All Souls' day.
The weary heart.
Minstrel's treasure.
Soldiers' drinking song.
Sadness.
To the lyre.
Calm at sea.
Lay of the imprisoned huntsman.
Passing to Hades.
Comfort in tears.
Death and the maiden.
Crusaders.
Dithyramb.
Prometheus.

VOL. 3.

TWENTY SONGS

FOR SOPRANO OR TENOR.

SELECTED, EDITED, AND TRANSLATED BY

NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 2s. 6d.

The Erl King.
Omnipotence.
Love's unrest.
Rose among the heather.
Sad heart.
The band of roses.
Thou art repose.
Ganymede.
Mignon.
Secrets.
Hark, hark, the lark.
Thee would I greet.
To the beloved one.
Suleika's second song.
Presence of the loved one.
Laughing and weeping.
Margaret's prayer.
By the doorways I will wander.
To a brooklet.
To Sylvia.

VOL. 4.

SWAN SONGS

(SCHWANENGESANG).

GERMAN AND ENGLISH WORDS.

THE ENGLISH VERSION BY

J. TROUTBECK.

Edited, with marks for phrasing, expression, and breathing

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

Price 2s. 6d.

Love's message—Liebesbotschaft.
The soldier's presentiment—Krieger's Ahnung.
Longings in Spring—Frühlingssehnsucht.
A serenade—Ständchen.
The retreat—Aufenthalt.
In a strange land—In der Fremde.
Departure—Abschied.
Atlas—Der Atlas.
Her portrait—Ihr Bild.
The fishermaiden—Das Fischermädchen.
The town—Die Stadt.
By the sea—Am Meer.
The apparition—Der Doppelgänger.
The pigeon post—Die Taubenpost

VOL. 5.

"THE FAIR MAID OF THE MILL"

(DIE SCHONE MÜLLERIN).

GERMAN AND ENGLISH WORDS

THE ENGLISH VERSION BY

J. TROUTBECK.

Edited, with marks for phrasing, expression, and breathing,

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

Price 2s. 6d.

Wandering—Das Wandern
Whither—Wohin.
Halt!—Halt.
Gratitude to the brook—Danksagung an den Bach.
Evening rest—Am Feierabend.
The question—Der Neugierige.
Impatience—Ungeduld.
Morning greeting—Morgengruss.
The miller's flowers—Des Müller's Blumen.
A rain of tears—Thränenregen.
Mine—Mein.
A pause—Pause.
With the green ribbon—Mit dem grünen Lautenbande.
The hunter—Der Jäger.
Jealousy and pride—Eifersucht und Stolz.
The pleasing colour—Die liebe Farbe.
The hateful colour—Die böse Farbe.
Faded flowers—Trockne Blumen.
The miller and the brook—Der Müller und der Bach.
The brook's lullaby—Des Baches Wiegenlied.

VOL. 6.

"THE WINTER JOURNEY"

(WINTERREISE).

GERMAN AND ENGLISH WORDS

THE ENGLISH VERSION BY

J. TROUTBECK.

Price 2s. 6d.

Good-night—Gute Nacht.
The weathercock—Die Wetterfahne.
Frozen tears—Gefrorne Thränen.
Benumbed—Erstarrung.
The linden tree—Der Lindenbaum.
A flood—Wasserfluth.
On the stream—Auf dem Flusse.
Looking back—Rückblick.
Jack-a-Lantern—Irrlicht.
Rest—Rast.
A dream of Spring—Frühlingstraum.
Loneliness—Einsamkeit.
The post—Die Post.
The grey head—Der graue Kopf.
The raven—Die Krähe.
The last hope—Letzte Hoffnung.
In the village—Im Dorfe.
The stormy morning—Der stürmische Morgen.
Delusion—Täuschung.
The sign-post—Der Wegweiser.
The hostelry—Das Wirthshaus.
Courage—Muth.
The mock suns—Die Nebensonnen.
The organ grinder—Der Leiermann.

THIRTY SONGS

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, BOOK 273.

IN BOTH NOTATIONS.

Price 2s.

Ave Maria.
Courage.
Cradle Song.
Crusaders.
Erlaf-Lake.
Fishermaiden, The.
Fisherman, The.
Fisher's Song.
Full-orbed Moon, The.
Greenwood calls, The.
Hark! hark! the Lark.
Harper's Song, The.
Huntsman, rest.
Know'st thou the land.
Lay of the imprisoned Huntsman.
Litany.
Longing.
Ode to Joy.
Organ-Grinder, The.
Peace.
Rose among the heather.
Secrets.
Thou art repose.
To Music.
Trout, The.
Trust in Spring.
Wanderer's Night-Song.
Wandering Miller, The
Whither.
Who is Sylvia?

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SEVEN PART-SONGS

FOR FEMALE VOICES AND STRINGS.

WORDS BY

ROBERT BRIDGES.

MUSIC BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 44.)

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Say who is this ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| 2. | O love, I complain ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 3. | Angel Spirits of sleep ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 4. | When first we met ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| 5. | Sorrow and joy ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 6. | Love in my heart from Heaven ... ... | 3d. |
| 7. | Assemble all ye maidens ... ... ... | 8d. |

String Parts, Nos. 1-6, complete, 2s. 8d.
Ditto, No. 7, 2s. 8d.

"'Assemble all ye maidens' is very beautiful, with that cold, pure beauty which the composer knows so well how to get from a few simple vocal strains, long sustained drone or pedal notes on the strings, and a basso ostinato in quintuple time enriching the rhythmic movement of the later stanzas."—The Times.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILL BE PUBLISHED JANUARY 6.

PART-SONGS for MALE VOICES

(A.T.B.B.)

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

A Harnet zet in a hollow tree.

A TRADITIONAL BALLAD.

Price 4d.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.

WORDS BY

THOMAS GRAY.

Price 3d.

The despairing lover.

WORDS BY

WILLIAM WALSH.

Price 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY

F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE
STRING PARTS, Price 8s.
An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published.
Price 3s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JOHN GILPIN

POEM BY

WILLIAM COWPER.

SET FOR FEMALE (OR BOYS') VOICES IN UNISON.

(Second Part Optional.)

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

(Two Violins and Percussion Optional)

BY

COLIN TAYLOR.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SEVENTEEN SONGS

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL.

Edited and arranged, with accompaniment for the Pianoforte, by

ARTHUR SOMERVELL.

Price Four Shillings.

CONTENTS.

A PASTORAL ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MR. JOHN PLAYFORD.
AH! CRUEL NYMPH.
AH! HOW PLEASANT.
AH! WHAT PAINS.
AN ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MATTHEW LOCKE.
ANACREON'S DEFEAT.
CEASE, O MY SAD SOUL.
HOW DELIGHTFUL 'S THE LIFE.
I FAIN WOULD BE FREE.
IF MUSIC BE THE FOOD OF LOVE (2nd Version).
LET EACH GALLANT HEART.
LOVE ARMS HIMSELF.
OLINDA.
ON THE BROW OF RICHMOND HILL.
SAWNEY IS A BONNY LAD.
THE FATAL HOUR COMES ON.
THE QUEEN'S EPICEDIUM (ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF QUEEN MARY, 1695).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JESU, JOY OF MAN'S DESIRING

(CHORALE FORM CANTATA No. 147)

BY

J. S. BACH

ARRANGED FOR PIANO SOLO

BY

MYRA HESS

This beautiful and musicianly arrangement of one of Bach's loveliest melodies, made by the famous pianist, Miss Myra Hess, and widely played by her, has been an instantaneous success since it was first published a short while ago, and several large editions have been necessary to meet the extraordinary demand for copies.

It has been hailed as one of those works—so rare in appearing in the world of piano music—that at once take their place in the Standard Répertoire. It is played by the foremost pianists of the day, but is equally suitable for the general music-lover, amateur, or student.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
MUSIC DEPARTMENT: 95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1

FERD. KUECHLER'S

COURSE of VIOLIN INSTRUCTION

is a

TRIUMPH

of practical teaching

TO KNOW IT IS TO RECOMMEND IT

Send for a specimen copy from the publishers, or ask your music-seller to let you have one on approval.

HUG & Co.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS.

BASLE (SWITZERLAND)—ZURICH—LEIPSIC

Foyle's Special Offers.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC. By POLE. An exhaustive treatise on the Theory or Philosophy of Music—its elements and its development. Published at 10*s.* 6*d.* net); offered (new) at 6*s.* post free.

FRANZ LISZT'S GREAT WORK ON THE GIPSY IN MUSIC. The result of the Author's life-long experiences and investigations of the Gipsies and their Music. With Essay on Liszt and his Work. In two Vols. Published, 15*s.* net; offered (as new) at 9*s.* 9*d.* complete, post free.

Above sent on approval. Quote offer 122.

Are you requiring other Music or Books? Foyles can supply, and save you trouble and expense.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,
119-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

BEETHOVEN

AND HIS

NINE SYMPHONIES

BY

GEORGE GROVE.

PRICE.

Cloth, Gilt, Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR THOSE WHO STILL SING——WE HAVE THE SONGS

FOR ALL VOICES.

BIRD SONGS AT EVENTIDE.
G (D-E), B flat ... ... ... Eric Coates

A SONG REMEMBERED.
F (C-E flat), A ... ... ... Eric Coates

LITTLE LADY OF THE MOON.
E flat (B flat-E flat), G ... ... Eric Coates

YOU GAVE ME ALL MY SUNSHINE.
G (D-D), B flat ... ... ... Haydn Wood

BELOVED, I SHALL WAIT.
D flat (C-D flat), E flat, F ... ... Guy d'Hardelot

FLOW'R OF THE DESERT.
C (C-E), D ... ... ... ... Hermann Lohr

SUNDAY.
D (A-F sharp), F ... ... ... Molly Carew

A GARDEN IS A LOVESOME THING.
A (C sharp-D sharp), C ... ... Teresa del Riego

LONG AGO.
G (D-E), B flat ... ... ... Leslie Elliott

TREES.
C (A-E), D, F ... ... ... Oscar Rasbach

FOR SOPRANOS AND MEZZOS.

APRIL IS A LADY.
D flat (C-F), E flat, F ... Montague F. Phillips

SUN-FLAKES.
F (C-F), G ... ... ... Montague F. Phillips

OVER THE MEADOW.
D (D-F sharp), F ... ... ... Molly Carew

FOR BARITONES AND BASSES.

THE HAPPY MAN.
B flat (A-D), C ... ... Thomas F. Dunhill

THE LITTLE SHIPS.
B flat (B flat-D), C, E flat Raymond Loughborough

THE PRIDE OF TIPPERARY.
C (C-D), D, F ... ... ... A. Lochhead

The compass of the first key is given in brackets.

Price 2/- net each (by post 2/1).

CHAPPELL & CO., Ltd., 50, New Bond Street, London, W.1.
NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

ROBERT GODET

EN MARGE DE BORIS GODOUNOF

(FRENCH TEXT)

VOL. II.

Price ... Five Shillings net.

This is the second and final volume of M. Robert Godet's learned and elaborate commentary on the edition of Moussorgsky's dramatic masterpiece in its original form, unencumbered by the revision of Rimsky-Korsakov, which M. Godet demonstrates so convincingly as being rather in the nature of a perversion. This glossary, which is published in French only for the present, is indispensable to the musician who wishes to be fully informed on the fascinating subject of Moussorgsky.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd.,
11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London:—Printed by Novello and Company, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Wednesday, February 1, 1928.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,021—Vol. 69. Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

MARCH 1 1928

Price 6*d.*; Postage, 2*d.*
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7*s.* 6*d*

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

FIFTY-SEVENTH SEASON, 1927-1928

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, at 2.30 p.m.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS

(ELGAR)

MISS OLGA HALEY
MR. STEUART WILSON
MR. HOWARD FRY

Conductor: SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

The Royal College of Organists

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Toccata in D minor (Dorian), J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 10, p. 196; Augener, p. 360; Peters, Vol. 3, No. 3.)

Prelude (in form of a Chaconne), Op. 88, No. 2, Stanford. (Stainer & Bell.)

Romanza, "La Reine de France," Haydn. (Best's arrangements, Vol. 1, p. 199.)

The selected pieces for the July, 1928, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1928.

An ORGAN RECITAL will be given by DR. HENRY G. LEY, M.A., at the Windsor Place Presbyterian Church, Cardiff, on Tuesday, March 27th.

Admission free. No tickets required.

The Choir-Training Diploma and Certificate Examinations will both be held between Monday, May 14th, and Saturday, May 19th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, April 23rd. Application for Membership (or re-election) must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before April 23rd.

Examination Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Visitor ... SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1927-1928

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., D. Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MIDSUMMER TERM
begins Monday, 30th April.

SPECIAL COURSES—CONDUCTORS—OPERATIC SINGERS.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE. The Examination for the SPECIAL DIPLOMA IN TEACHING MUSIC will be held in July.

THE STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA, every Tuesday and Friday, 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Conducted by SIR HENRY J. WOOD, D. Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES under the direction of LIONEL TERTIS, F.R.A.M., and HERBERT WITHERS, F.R.A.M.

SCHOLARSHIPS. Seventy-two Scholarships and Exhibitions.

L.R.A.M. EXAMINATIONS take place during the Summer, Christmas, and Easter vacations.

PROSPECTUSES, and all information from
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A)

Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 9th (Irish Entries, May 2nd), 1928.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and November-December each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,986th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on March 6th, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

The Royal College of Music

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D.Litt.

MIDSUMMER TERM

THE MIDSUMMER TERM will commence on Monday, April 30th, 1928. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Wednesday, April 25th.

COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION
is provided by Teachers of the highest eminence.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT
Classes are held for pupils under sixteen, whose time is also occupied by their general education.

SPECIAL CLASSES ARE HELD FOR:
Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet.

OPERATIC CLASSES
Have the use of fully equipped College Opera Theatre, with sunken Orchestra.

SCHOLARSHIPS
Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are provided from a permanent endowment fund.

A.R.C.M.

Examinations for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) are held three times a year in September, December, and April.

Full particulars obtainable from the Registrar.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Guildhall School of Music

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing, French Classical Drama.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

Manchester School of Music

Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892)

Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC

SESSION 1927-28

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 12 to December 3, December 5 to March 10, and March 12 to June 8.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

FOUNDED 1913

PRESIDENT FOR 1928: J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B.

PRIZE COMPETITION FOR ORIGINAL COMPOSITION

Award: "FINALE IN D,"
By B. J. MASLEN, F.R.C.O.
(Organist and Choirmaster, St. Stephen's, Lansdowne, Bath)

ADJUDICATORS:
EDGAR T. COOK JOHN E. WEST J. WARRINER

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary,
De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

ESSEX CHURCH

THE MALL, NOTTING HILL GATE, W.8

ORGAN RECITAL

By MR. ALFRED R. STOCK, F.R.C.O.,
on TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 1928, at 8 p.m.
Vocalist: MR. KENNETH ELLIS

Programme will include Suite Gothique, (Boëllmann), Prelude and Fugue, C minor (Bach); First Organ Sonata (Borowski); Concert Scherzo (Mansfield); Woodland Sketches (MacDowell); Ases' Death and Morning (Grieg). Songs: "By a Bier-side" (Armstrong Gibbs); "Pilgrim's Song" (Tchaikovsky).

ST. JAMES' MADRIGAL SOCIETY,

MUSWELL HILL, N.

A CONCERT will be given in St. James' Hall, on MONDAY, 19TH MARCH, AT 8 P.M.

Solo Pianist - YORK BOWEN.
'Cellist - ALEXANDER NIFOSI.

Tickets, 2s. 4d.
41 and 43 Buses from Highgate pass the Hall.

STAGE FRIGHT!

Because other people are nervous there is no reason why YOU should be.

THE

Mackinnon Course

banishes "nerves" and makes playing from memory a pleasure.

Read what correspondents say:

"I have much more self-confidence and experience no nervousness when I play to my friends or an audience. I think it is absolutely essential that examination candidates should take the Course."

"Your knowledge of psychology is amazing."

"Prior to your lessons I could not memorise any piece of music. Now I play from memory with ease and confidence."

"Your method of memorising not only helps piano technique; it makes me feel that it is impossible to break down."

The Course is recommended by famous musicians, including

CORTOT, BAUER, MATTHAY, HESS, SCHARRER, POUISHNOFF.

Send to-day for free booklet, giving particulars, testimonials, and guarantee.

COUPON

(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE).

To MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, 1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3.

Without any obligation on my part please send me your free booklet on "MEMORY TRAINING."

Name.....

Address.....

.....

NORTHERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal:

ALBERT JOWETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS:
Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Trinity College, &c.
Many notable Successes,
amongst which was the celebrated Composer and Pianist,
WILLIAM BAINES,
who was entirely trained by Mr. JOWETT.

PIANOFORTE PLAYING AND INTERPRETATION.
SINGING, VOICE-PRODUCTION AND INTERPRETATION.
PERSONAL LESSONS IN LEEDS AND NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.
Including all Modern Work: Italian, French, German, Spanish, &c.
COMPLETE COURSE IN COMPOSITION.

A simple and completely successful system of SIGHT READING
with harmonic basis, and giving complete and thoroughly practical success to young or old.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, ACCOMPANIMENTS WRITTEN TO SONGS.

State Exam. or Subject.

HEATHFIELD, MOORLAND DRIVE, HARROGATE ROAD, LEEDS

THE NEW SCHOOL OF MUSIC

26, WESTBOURNE GROVE, W.2

Tel.: PARK 7249

Patrons:
THE COUNTESS OF LAUDERDALE
THE LORD BLANESBURGH, G.B.E.
LADY NEISH

Directors:
G. R. GALSWORTHY, A.R.C.M. J. M. SYMONS, M.C., A.R.C.M.
MISS M. E. GALSWORTHY, A.R.C.M.

Day and Evening Tuition in Singing, Piano, Strings, Wind Instruments, &c., and Theory, Composition, Ear-Training, Sight-Reading, Memorising, Elocution, &c.

ORCHESTRAS AND CHORUS
OPEN TO NON-STUDENTS

PREPARATIONS FOR R.A.M. and R.C.M. EXAMINATIONS

Prospectus on application to the Secretary.

—but can you play these without music?

Memory-playing is your next step towards advancement in music. It will open up many new and bigger opportunities to you, a higher standing and recognition, and greatly increased financial recompense. If you feel that you have gone as far as your present musical training will take you; if you are ambitious to make further progress, enjoy greater recognition, and increased financial benefits, then you owe it to yourself to find out what the

MASTER-METHOD OF MEMORY-PLAYING

has to offer you. At a very small cost and with no interference with your regular work you can quickly and easily memorise anything within your technical capabilities. Kindly send for my free book (post free) which includes testimonials from grateful pupils in all parts of the world, stating whether you play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ, and if a moderate or advanced player. The same prompt and courteous attention is given to your inquiries as if I were teaching you personally.

Send for this Free Booklet

To REGINALD FOORT,
F.R.C.O.,
194 Beacon House, Hemstal Rd., London, N.W.6

Admittedly the greatest work on Music and Musicians ever compiled

GROVE'S DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS

FIVE VOLUMES : (NEW) THIRD EDITION

EDITED BY

H. C. COLLES, M.A., MUS.B., F.R.C.M.

The demand for the NEW "Grove"—generally recognised as indispensable to every musician's library—is greater than for any of the earlier editions.

Over 4,000 pages, full of up-to-date, authoritative information on every phase of music and musicians.

24 plates in colour
72 plates in half-tone
and many smaller illustrations.

GOUNOD

Why not let us send you the volumes this week? You may spread the payment over many months, while you enjoy the use of the Dictionary. Send the coupon below for free illustrated booklet.

"The new 'Grove' is more closely packed with fact than the old. There is a distinct change of character in the new contributions. The method and style are more severe and concise. Anecdote and even description tend to disappear. But the proportions of the new 'Grove' are a great improvement on the old editions."—Daily Mail.

The contributors include many of the greatest musicians and the most eminent musical authorities

Sir ARTHUR SULLIVAN
Prof. E. J. DENT
Dr. FRANZ GEHRING
Dr. ED. JOHN HOPKINS
ADOLPH JULLIEN
H. E. KREHBIEL
M. MAURICE KUFFERATH
Mrs. ROSA NEWMARCH
Herr A. MACZEWSKI
Sgnr. GIAUNANDREA MUZZACATO.

MUSICAL TECHNIQUE

A few of the many Articles:

Modulation, Notation
Phrasing
Voice Production
Harmony, Transposition
Composition
Counterpoint, &c.
Folk Music, Welsh Music
Musical Form and Musical Theories
The Sonatas, Symphonies
The Chorale, Fugue, &c.
Orchestration
Conducting

Sir FRED GORE OUSELEY
Sir HUBERT PARRY
EBENEZER PROUT, Mus. Doc.
LUIGI RICCI
Dr. PHILLIP SPITTA
ERNEST WALKER, Mus. Doc.
R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Mus. Doc.
Rev. E. H. FELLOWES, Mus. Doc.
Prof. SANFORD TERRY, Mus. Doc.
A. H. FOX-STRANGWAYS

The three Editors (Sir GEORGE GROVE, Mr. FULLER-MAITLAND, and Mr. H. C. COLLES) and a host of other equally famous authorities.

Bound in Stout Cloth, or Half-Morocco with Gilt Tops.

7/6

as first payment brings the complete set to

YOUR HOME IMMEDIATELY

To the GLOBE PUBLISHING CO., Ltd.,
112, Strand, London, W.C.2
(Use unsealed envelope, ½d. stamp.)

Please send me Prospectus of the New Grove's Dictionary of Music, with full particulars of payment-out-of-income, and discount for cash.

Name.....

Address.....

M.T. 268. .....

POST THIS COUPON

TO-DAY

for Free Illustrated BOOKLET

BOURNEMOUTH

Musical Competitions Festival

SECOND YEAR

MAY 19th to 26th, 1928

CHORAL, SOLO INSTRUMENTAL, AND VOCAL CLASSES. ELOCUTION. FOLK-DANCING ORCHESTRAL AND BAND CONTESTS

OVER 100 CLASSES

Entries close April 2nd, 1928

Syllabus and Entry Forms from the Hon. Sec.,
MR. HADLEY WATKINS,
CAIRNS MEMORIAL HOUSE, BOURNEMOUTH.

BRIGHTON

Competitive Musical Festival

ROYAL PAVILION AND DOME

MAY 19th to 26th, 1928

Competitions in all branches of VOCAL MUSIC, PIANOFORTE, ORGAN, STRING INSTRUMENTS, ORCHESTRAS, REED and BRASS BANDS, ELOCUTION, FOLK-DANCING, and COMPOSITION.

ADJUDICATORS:
Dr. HAROLD DARKE, Dr. G. OLDROYD, Messrs. FREDERICK DAWSON, W. H. REED, JAMES AGATE, DOUGLAS KENNEDY, WALTER REYNOLDS, Mme. EDITH HANDS, HENRY DAVEY, A. M. GOODHART, and Rev. A. J. YOUNG.

SYLLABUS free from the Hon. Secretaries, B.C.M.F. Office, c/o LYON & HALL, 1, East Street, BRIGHTON

Entries close March 19th

SCARBOROUGH

Competitive Musical Festival

APRIL 26th, 27th, 28th, 1928

GRAND HALL, THE SPA

SOLO, DUET, QUARTET, CHORAL, ORCHESTRAL, SCHOOL CHOIR, ETC., COMPETITIONS

Syllabus now ready, and may be had from
MR. F. CROMACK, Secretary,
Scarborough Townsmen's Association,
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough.

CLARE COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

AN EXAMINATION

will be held on Thursday, March 15th,

FOR THE

ELECTION OF AN ORGAN SCHOLAR

To come into residence in October, 1928, by which date the Previous Examination or equivalent must have been passed.

THE SCHOLARSHIP IS OF THE VALUE OF £80 PER ANNUM

Particulars may be had, on application, from The Dean, Clare College.

DENSTONE COLLEGE.—The Post of Director of Music will be vacant in September, 1928. Applications for particulars should be made to the Secretary, Denstone College, Staffs.

ST. MATTHIAS CHURCH,

EARL'S COURT, S.W.5

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7th, 1928,

at 8.30 p.m.

ORGAN RECITAL

BY

G. D. CUNNINGHAM

F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

Birmingham City Organist

PROGRAMME

| | |
|---|---|
| RHEINBERGER | Passacaglia (from Sonata in E minor) |
| WESLEY ... ... ... | Two Short Pieces |
| FRANCK ... ... ... ... | Choral No. 3 |
| BACH ... ... ... ... | Two Choral Preludes |
| WIDOR ... | Allegro, from Sixth Symphony |
| VAUGHAN WILLIAMS ... ... | "Rhosymedre" |
| HANDEL ... ... ... ... ... | Bourrée |
| M. DUPRÉ ... | Prelude and Fugue in G minor |

A Silver Collection will be made.

The Organ has been rebuilt and electrified by Messrs. H. Willis.

The Church is close to Earl's Court Station, two minutes' from Warwick Road exit.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1

President: A. NETTLEFOLD
Principal: DAVID GODELL

Instruction in all Vocal and Musical Subjects.

Voice-Curing Courses for loss of tone and all Vocal defects.

OPERATIC CLASS now forming under A. DAVIES, A.R.C.M.

CHORAL CLASS under F. T. DURRANT, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., F.I.S.S.C.

The Daily Telegraph says: "A number of pupils . . . . came through the test with infinite credit to themselves and to those who are responsible for their artistic welfare."

Particulars from Sec., Miss MAIMIE M. HEATH. Mayfair 3819.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD"

SIGHT-READING LESSONS

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Music: "Goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service."

A PUPIL WRITES: "Dr. —— tells me to practise more, and I feel all the time I am practising on the wrong lines, and not improving at all."

AFTER SECOND LESSON.—"I find I have more confidence, and Dr. —— says my reading is certainly more fluent. Your hints have helped me considerably at both organ and piano."—(F.R.C.O. Exam.)

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON,

and WEEKES'S STUDIOS, 14, HANOVER ST., W.1

('Phone: Croydon 2703)

MS. PAPER. (Devon Valley Superfine). 3,000 Sheets FOR SALE.—12-stave open. 200 sheets, 13s.; 100 sheets, 7s., Post free. Bibby, Aranmore, Sandy Lane, Romiley, Stockport.

— MODERN —
CORR. COLL.

MATRIC. Jan., 1928.
4. All at 1st attempt.

A.T.C.L.
93% Art of Teaching.

A.R.C.O. ... 31

F.R.C.O. Jan., 1928.
A London Student writes: "This success is entirely due to your splendid Tuition. This was my FOURTH ATTEMPT."
The above student passed at 1st attempt under M.C.C. Tuition.

L.R.A.M. ... 28

A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte) Jan., 1928. I obtained 123 marks out of 136 for Paper on Course of Instruction.

MUS. BAC.
FINAL ... ... 5
EX., March, 1927 ... 3

A.MUS. T.C.L.
Counterpoint ... 93%
Harmony ... ... 84%
History ... ... 82%

YOUR DEGREE or DIPLOMA for ONE POUND PER MONTH

A.R.C.M. (Singing) Your Course may be summed up in one word, "MODERN."

A.R.C.M. (Musical Appreciation)
Entries ... ... ... 3
Successes ... ... 3

MODERN CORR. COLL. SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM

South London Philharmonic Society
Conductor: ARTHUR FAGGE
Asst.-Conductor: FRANK GREENFIELD
REHEARSALS: TUESDAYS
VACANCIES FOR VIOLAS, WOOD-WIND, AND BRASS
also in Choral Section for
TENORS AND BASSES
Hon. Org. Sec., JOHN W. WATERER,
50c, Crooms Hill, Greenwich, S.E.10.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED
THE THIRTY-FIFTH EDITION
OF THE
"ROLL OF THE UNION OF GRADUATES IN MUSIC"
(INCORPORATED)
A Register of all holding recognised Degrees in Music, together with particulars of University Examination requirements.
Price Three Shillings and Threepence (post free)
Copies may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary,
MR. CHARLES LONG, MUS. B., OXON.,
5, Clifton Villas, London, W.9.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.
Oxford Preliminary Arts, and Durham Matriculation, Also B.A. and B.Sc.
EXPERT TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE.
For terms, testimonials, &c., address,
Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A.,
14, ELSHAM ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.14.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glenholme, Hessle High Road, Hull, Yorks.

£250 FREE SCHOLARSHIPS IN SINGING, PIANO, and ELOCUTION, Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition for the trained and untrained, April 28th, May 5th and 12th. Adjudicators: Mr. Charles Webber, Conductor, Carl Rosa Opera Co.; Mr. Fred Cutchee, and Miss Phyllis Windsor. Results at Lecture-Recital, King George's Hall, W.C.1, May 21st, at 7.30 p.m. Prospectus, Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

MUSIC DUPLICATING.—All kinds, any number; perfect copies. Specimens and prices on application to E. Herrick, at 37, Amhurst Road, West Ealing, W.

The Pianist's Hands

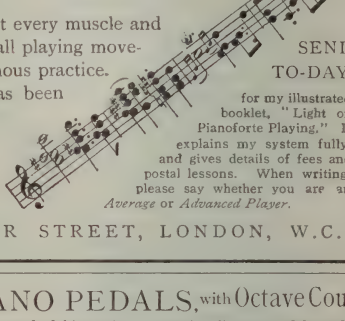
The Times says: "The excellence of Mr. Macdonald Smith's methods has been abundantly proved."

PREVALENT among pianists is the idea that you cannot play well unless you have a special sort of hand; this is a mistake. It is obvious, however, that the hands must be in a perfect condition, otherwise the many technical difficulties to be overcome will be found insuperable. For a pianist every single muscle of the hands and arms must move the instant it is required to do so, and if this fails to be the case with even a few of the muscles brought into play in any complicated passage of music, no further reason need be sought to account for failure.

Let the "From Brain to Keyboard" System perfect every muscle and nerve in your hands and give you instant control over all playing movements without any of the usual drudgery and monotonous practice. Why not learn something about the System that has been used by many of our eminent musicians.



SEND TO-DAY for my illustrated booklet, "Light on Pianoforte Playing." It explains my system fully, and gives details of fees and postal lessons. When writing, please say whether you are an Average or Advanced Player.

From Brain to Keyboard

Macdona'd Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

M. C. MACDONALD SMITH, 94, GOWER STREET, LONDON, W.C.1

"SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

A simple and very effective appliance for giving strength and flexibility to the fingers.
Recommended by Editor of the Musical Times

IMPROVED MODEL
Price 2*s.* 6*d.*; postage and packing, 3*d.*

BYEWAYS, CLIFF ROAD, SEABROOK, HYTHE, KENT.

THE TECHNIQUER

A BOON TO ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS
Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.
BUSONI and THE TECHNIQUER

Extract from a letter:
"A pianist is not imaginable without hands. Their physical culture is therefore of importance.
In fact, there are some functions which belong exclusively to the mechanical department.
Mr. Pitcher's apparatus . . . proves helpful against stiffness and inflexibility of the hands. I wish his good results may ever increase."—Ferruccio Busoni.

Send for list of testimonials and full particulars post free
"Hand Development," with 16 Photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*
Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

| | |
|---|---|
| SOLO-PLAYING | SCORE-READING |
| TRANSPOSITION | ACCOMPANIMENT |
| ESSAY | (with list of 75 Solos) |

3*s.* each. 10*s.* 6*d.* the set

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS
Price 5*s.*

"A.R.C.O. EXAMn. AIDS," 166, County Road, Walton, Liverpool.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.
"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.
"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., Ltd.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London Address: 34, Spencer Hill, Wimbledon, S.W.19.
Please mention this paper when writing.

PIANO REPAIRS. "WIGMORE HALL FINISH"

denotes a standard not obtainable elsewhere.

THE MOST HIGHLY SKILLED WORKMANSHIP.
THE FINEST MATERIALS (regardless of cost).
PERFECT SATISFACTION.

WIGMORE HALL AND PIANO GALLERIES, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

SHAPED PIANO COVERS

Stocked in 12 different materials
Patterns and Prices by return post

Plush Tops, Backings, and Key Covers

W. MOORE & CO.,
Lauderdale Buildings, Aldersgate, London, E.C.1.
Phone: Clerkenwell 2827

SAMPLE PARCEL

8 Pianoforte Pieces, 5*s.* Post free.
"A. H.," Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., 45, France Street, Parkgate, Yorks.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal:

JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., Mus.D., Oxon., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LICENTIATESHIP EXAMINATION

CHRISTMAS, 1927.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SINGING.—As TEACHERS: Marjorie Helen Brown, Marjorie Else, Hannah Eliza Kaye, Madge Nicholson, Emily Josephine Penn, Archibald McBryde Ross.

As PERFORMERS: Elsie Bond, Doris May Clipston, Florence Jane Daniel, James Davies, Geoffrey Dunn, Emily Evans, Dorothy Mary Hughes, Esther Hulbert, Chrystabel Jessie Jennings, Jane Evelyn Kapp, Marjorie Annie Knightbridge, Dulcie Knowles, Maurice Milbourn, Charlotte Peacock, Eileen Mary Pilcher, Lilian Emily Pilgrim, Ydris Roberts, Doris Evelyn Rossington, Norah Stevenson, Lulu Thomson, Elsie Webb, Kathleen L. Whittome.

EXAMINERS: Henry Beauchamp, Maurice d'Oisly, Edward Iles, J. Frederick Keel, Frederic King, Thomas Meux, Selina Pitt Soper, Marcus Thomson, Mary T. Wilson.

PIANOFORTE.—As TEACHERS: Annie Winifred Alderson, Nancy Allen, Nancy Archer, Mabel E. Armitage, Betty Gertrude Arnold, Lucy Hooper Ashby, Joan Munro Ashwell, Eva Mabel Attridge, Doris Millicent Bagg, Marion Bailey, Florence Annie Bain, Gertrude Ellen Baldock, Gertrude E. Baldwin, Constance M. Baxter, Sarah A. O. Beddow, Evelyn Rosa Bengough, Lena Alice Best, Charlotte Billson, Dorothy Mary Birch, Mary Muriel Bolton, Margery L. Bonner, Kate Bonney, Eileen Bowerbank, Evelyn Florence Bray, Gladys Mary Lydia Budge, Marion Eliza Burch, Constance Katie Burchett, Chalmers Burns, Madeline Moss Burton, Margaret McMillan Carmichael, Barbara Cass, Frances Margaret De Dibon Charlewood, Rachel Sareta Clarke, Doris Cohen, Mabel Phyllis Cook, Mary Muriel Couper, Katherine Hilary Davis, Dorothy Kathleen Dixon, Daisie Louise Eley, Dorothy Charlotte Elkington, Doris I. Elliott Dorothy Elsworth, Ruby Escott, Marjorie Frances Eve, Freda Finegold, Marie Flower, Margaret Fuller, Phyllis E. Gallegue, Evelyn Rayner Gaunt, Lucy Constance Gibb, Barbara Mary Gibbs, May Caroline Gibson, Margaret Louise Gofton, Madeline Fanny Habgood, Elizabeth Florence Hale, Ethel Elizabeth Weavers Hall, Janet Douglas Hamilton, Margaret H. Hamilton, Annie Winefred Hammond, Muriel Janet Hardy, Kathleen Hart, Phyllis Mary Wilde Harvey, Ruth Mabel Henniker, Evelyn Hoare, Edith Hood, Gwenllian Mercia Howard, Beatrice Maud Hulme, Helen Mary Hunter, Dorice Rosa Huntley, Grace Frances Jeffries, Marjorie Enid Jenkin, Kathleen Mary Jevon, Enid Jones, Nina Llewella Jones, Rosalie May Jones, Lamorna Florence Kynaston, Carmelita Lawless, Jessie Martin Little, Doris Lockey, Retta McAllister, Madge Medley, Edith Bessie Morrison, Elsie McCorkindale Morton, Elsie May Nicholson, Doris Nield, Pauline Jeanne Ouless, Charles Albert Paint, Vera Paqualin, Mary Morrell Patchett, Lucie Lena Philpott, Beatrice Irene Pile, Harry Platts, Mary Helen Pope, Amy Louise Potts, Terezina Daisy Preston, Florence Mary Proctor, Sarah Ramsin, Freda Ravenhill, Robert Aitken Reid, Joan Pitt Rew, Juanita May Riding, Jean Blair Ritchie, Sheila Doreen Keith Roach, Mary Robinson, Theresa Ross, Eileen Rowlandson, Erica Royce, Florence Beatrice Savill. Doris Kathleen Serrell, Robert Smith, Marjorie Snell, Marjorie Stansfield, Margaret Allan Stobo, Ivy Lilian Stokes, Florence Stoneman, Doris Stones, Elisabeth Winsome Taylor, Nellie Thompson, Marjorie Kate Thurston, Katharine Twiss, Arthur Norman Tyrrell, Evelyn Rose Want, Kathleen Winifred Warrington, Nancy Marjorie Watson, Lilian Mary Weatherseed, Margaret F. Weir, Phyllis D. Wells, Marjorie Grace West, Norah Whittingham, Mary Wigglesworth, Phyllis Louisa Mary Wood, Gladys Victoria Woollerton, Betty Avril Goodwin Wright, Winifred Mary Wright.

As PERFORMERS: Wilfred Robert Collet, Marjorie K. Ewing, Wilhelm Myers Foggin, Doris Evelyn Hardcastle, Beatrice Maude Heathorn, Frances E. Lewis, Charles Kenneth Turner.

EXAMINERS: Victor G. Booth, York Bowen, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, Eric Grant, Welton Hickin, Thomas B. Knott, Vivian Langrish, Dora Matthay, Frederick Moore, A. Brian Nash, John Pauer, Reginald Paul, Claude F. Pollard, Charles F. Reddie, Felix Swinstead, B. McCara Symons, Lawrance Taylor, Egerton Tidmarsh, Percy Waller, Septimus Webbe.

ORGAN.—Arthur Pirie.

EXAMINERS: Stanley Marchant, Mus.D., Oxon., Reginald Steggall, Walter S. Vale.

ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS.—VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS: Enid Berridge, Dorothy Rosa Crampton, Sybil Marian Linnell, Annie Sacks (September, 1927).

As PERFORMER: Gwynneth Ada Trotter.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC—(contd.).

VIOLONCELLO.—As PERFORMERS: Dorothy Churchill Barker, Claude Frederick Tanner.

EXAMINERS: Spencer Dyke, Marjorie Hayward, James T. Lockyer, Mario Lorenzi, Charles Stainer, Herbert Walenn, Rowsby Woof.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.—Cecil J. Belcher, Marjorie Graham, Llewela Roberts.

EXAMINERS: Maurice d'Oisly, Welton Hickin, Vivian Langrish, Montague Phillips.

AURAL TRAINING AND SIGHT-SINGING.—Dorothy Kemp Archbold, Gladys Mary Baker, Marjorie Jones, Lewis Marlow, Mildred Mowbray Marriott, Isabel Mary Nash, Frances Ramsden, Alice Thompson, Ivy Watson.

EXAMINERS: Arthur J. Greenish, Mus.D., Cantab., Stewart Macpherson, Frederick G. Shinn, Mus.D., Dunelm.

VOICE CULTURE AND CLASS-SINGING.—Kathleen Boland, Dorothy May Saywell.

EXAMINERS: Stanley Marchant, Mus.D., Oxon., Ernest Read, Frederick G. Shinn, Mus.D., Dunelm.

ELOCUTION.—As TEACHERS: Pamela Chapman, Winifred Elizabeth Cooke, Edward Gordon Davis, Nellie Cooke Farleigh, Anita FitzGerald (September, 1927), Muriel Jessie Hudson, Mina Clark Key, Guion Thurnall Ingledew Leonard, Beatrice Mackenzie, Henrietta Amy Llewellyn Mulcahy (Amy Winter), T. M. Eadie Palfrey, Kathleen Margaret Louise Stone.

As PERFORMERS: Hesper Œnone Ames, Nina Hope Boreham, Muriel Gale, Sybil Mitford Heriz Heriz-Smith, Greta Traub.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton-Bond, Wilton Cole, Cairns James, Cecil Martin, Constance Newell, Katie Thomas.

A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

EDWIN H. LEMARE

is paying a visit to England, and will be available for

ORGAN RECITALS

during July, August, and September.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply

Edwin H. Lemare, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.,
160, Wardour Street, W.1.

New Numbers in the "YORK SERIES."

ALLELUIA HAIL WITH GLADNESS.
J. LAMONT GALBRAITH.
Cantata. Price 2*s.* net.

CROWN OF LIFE.
NOEL HANNENFORD.
Cantata. Price 2*s.* net.

THE SHEFFIELD CATHEDRAL DESCANTS.
(24 Settings of Popular Hymn Tunes.)
By T. W. HANFORTH.
Price 6*d.*

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD.
2*s.* 6*d.* Post free; Abroad, 3*s.* Pre-eminent Technique.
It will thoroughly prepare you for the position of "Conductor."
M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM (A.R.C.M.)
SOPRANO.

"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.

"Her extraordinary, bird-like purity and clarity."—Surrey Advertiser.

"Possesses a voice of remarkable purity and strength."—Surrey Advertiser.

41, Avondale Road, South Croydon. 'Phone: Croydon 2703.

ROSA ALBA
SOPRANO.

"The first of weight from Australia."—Morning Post, London.

"The rare temperament which makes a song live."—Hastings Observer.

"Free from the distressing vibrato."—Musical Opinion.

Concerts. Masonics. Oratorio. Opera. Orchestral.
94A, Kennington Park Road, London, S.E.11.
Tel.: Reliance 1102; or Agents.
Vocal Lessons given.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Lecture-Recitals of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.
Pupils prepared for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Scholarships and Festivals.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Lessons given at above address or West-End Studio, Cricklewood Conservatoire of Music, N.W.2; and Highbury Conservatoire, N.5, &c. Primrose 3869.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR.
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
Shirley, Park Road, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

WILLIAM LOMAS
(Late Royal College of Music, Manchester)
TENOR,
GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.
ORATORIO, OPERA, BALLAD, AND SACRED.
45, St. Mary Street, Gloucester.

VERNON HARRISS
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medalist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

FRANK POULTON
L.R.A.M., L.G.S.M. (Performer, Singing.)
BASS-BARITONE,
Next Broadcast from 5 GB., on March 14th.
33, Hounslow Ave., Hounslow. Hounslow 1536.

PERCY BEADLE, A.R.C.M.
Gives Lessons in Singing and Voice-Production.
Æolian Hall Studios, New Bond Street, W.1.

TO COMPOSERS

NICHOLAS GATTY
MUS. DOC. CANTAB.
is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.
For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, W.1.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
ALBERT GARCIA
CARRIES ON THE TRADITIONS OF HIS GRANDFATHER, THE LATE MANUEL GARCIA.
STUDIO: 59, QUEEN'S ROAD, N.W.8.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
26, Onslow Square, S.W.7. Tel.: Kensington 3627.

FRED LEACH, A.R.M.C.M.
Conductor: ROCHDALE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRAL AND CHORAL SOCIETY and TODMORDEN ORCHESTRA.
Open for engagement as Coach and Conductor of Orchestral, Operatic, and Choral Societies.
PROFESSIONAL OR AMATEUR
TUITION: VIOLIN AND VIOLA
Address: 497, BURY ROAD, ROCHDALE, LANCS.

ELIZABETH LEVY
L.R.A.M., GOLD MEDALLIST.
TOBIAS MATTHAY'S PIANOFORTE METHOD taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for Scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

MISS PITT SOPER F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing, Royal Academy of Music, London.
Prepares Candidates for L.R.A.M., and A.R.C.M. Examinations (Teachers and Performers).
For particulars, apply Wigmore Hall Studios.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
SOLO PIANIST.
RUSSIAN MUSIC.
CONCERTS AND RECITALS.
TALKS AT THE PIANO.
For terms, apply to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

ORGAN LESSONS.
GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O.
specializes in the teaching of Organ Playing
at
ST. STEPHEN'S WALBROOK, E.C.4,
and coaches for all practical diplomas.
SINGLE LESSONS.
2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6. Tel: Putney 4208.

W. ORGAN
SOLO ORCHESTRAL OR BACH TRUMPET.
65, Clova Road, London, E.7.

E. SIMS-HILDITCH
LECTURER AND ADJUDICATOR.
Address, 37, Victoria Street, Crewe.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1. Langham 3909.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON
MUS. BAC. (DUNELM.), L.T.C.L.
POSTAL TUITION IN MUSICAL SUBJECTS.
PREPARATION FOR EXAMINATIONS.
FEES FROM 10*s.* 6*d.* FOR TEN LESSONS.
A Student wrote recently:—"Thanks for encouraging me to start on such a Course. When I saw the advertised cost of the lessons I was sceptical of their being genuine. However, I have no hesitation in saying that I am getting better tuition now than I previously obtained for £3 3*s.* per term."
Address:—"Balcary," Kegworth, near Derby.

YOUNG MUS. DOC.
COACHES BY CORRESPONDENCE.
ALL branches of Music, including Paper Work for Professional and Higher Examinations.
Send stamped, addressed envelope and specimen of work for FREE LESSON.
FEES FROM 2*s.* EACH LESSON.
"H. K." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG, Mus. Bac., A.R.M.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L. Correspondence Lessons in all subjects. Preparation for diplomas. 131, Warbreck Drive, Blackpool, N.S.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

SUCCESSES (with those for January, 1928) include 3 F.R.C.O. (1 for Jan., 1928). 3 A.R.C.O. 2 L.R.A.M.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-27... 324 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-27... 88 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work (25 Successes.)
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint. (21 Successes.)

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple), 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone: Battersea 0916.

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. inst. Also large four-manual organ. Pieces registered and phrased.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

| | |
|---|---|
| 1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920. | 1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921 |
| 1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1926. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1926. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. | 4 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., July, 1927. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1927. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. |

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1. 2/8 post free.

POSTAL TUITION by F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L. (Registered Teacher). Any Exam. One guinea ten lessons. Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, &c. Courses in History, Choir-Training, Aural Tests, Analysis, R.C.O. exams. Recent successes, F.R.C.O., July, 1927; A.R.C.O., January, 1928. Address: BM/JRMB, London, W.C.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., PIANOFORTE.—Special Coaching by Arthur Ellarshaw, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, Mus.B., F.R.C.O., &c. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Prep. for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. 1, Newington, Liverpool.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M. EXAMS., ETC.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, author of "TWELVE TEST PAPERS IN RUDIMENTS," &c., and joint author of "FORM AND TEACHING TEST PAPERS" (both published by Warren & Phillips), gives lessons in the above. Apply, 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D.Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

TO COMPOSERS.—Complete and systematic course, by correspondence, in Military Band Instrumentation. Write, Captain Charles Hoby, M.B.E., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Director of Music, Royal Marine Barracks, Chatham.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London.

SUCCESSES IN ORGAN PLAYING SINCE 1910:

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1910 | ... | 8 | 1919 | ... | 11 |
| 1911 | ... | 10 | 1920 | ... | 7 |
| 1912 | ... | 20 | 1921 | ... | 9 |
| 1913 | ... | 18 | 1922 | ... | 15 |
| 1914 | ... | 25 | 1023 | ... | 15 |
| 1915 | ... | 25 | 1924 | ... | 7 |
| 1916 | ... | 18 | 1925 | ... | 14 |
| 1917 | ... | 2 | 1926 | ... | 11 |
| 1918 | ... | 3 | 1927 | ... | 12 |

5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. W. HUNT, Mus. D. Durham (1926), F.R.C.O. Gives Lessons by Correspondence, for degrees and diplomas in music. Thorpe Road, Melton Mowbray.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1927, Mus. Doc., 3 Final Mus. Bac., and three 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Also in 1927—4 Mus. Doc. and 3 Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition. 200 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning" prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Specialist in Pianoforte Playing, Touch, Technique, and Interpretation. Thirty years' experience in preparing for examinations. More than 1,000 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have gained Degrees and Diplomas. Address: Weekes' Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

DR. A. E. TAYLOR. PUPIL GAINED STILLIE Bursary for Cpt.; Gold Medal for Cpt., Ass. Board; Gold Medal for Har., Ass. Board; C. C. Scholarship; A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., Mus. B. Compositions revised and accompaniments written. Portland Place, Lancaster.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A. Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Musical Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
Preparation for all Exams. by Post and Personal Lessons.
Special Courses of Papers: Singing, Piano, Touch, Musical Appreciation, &c.
Nearly 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
Send for Prospectus,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture, Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

"BY CORRESPONDENCE"

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc., Lond., L.R.A.M.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work
(3.) Touch, and Technique (for Pianoforte Diplomas)
(4.) Trinity College Diplomas
(5.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.
(6.) Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. (London and Durham)
(7.) Separate Subjects
NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.
Dr. SPRANKLING also gives PERSONAL LESSONS in Bristol and London. Special Coaching for all Pianoforte Diplomas.
Address: Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING, 46, Clarendon Road, Redland, Bristol. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.
319 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
189 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

| | |
|---|---|
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921. | 8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. | 9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. | 8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. | 12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., July, 1927. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1927. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928 | 12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Registered, Pianoforte, Singing, Theory. Personal or Postal Coaching. General Musical Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

SINGING ACCOMPANIST.—(Lady) efficient, and very experienced teacher, wishes to offer her services as Accompanist to Teacher of Singing. Write, stating full particulars, to "Box 8," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO SINGERS.—ITALIAN, GERMAN, and FRENCH LESSONS. Purest accent, acquired abroad. Moderate terms. Box 14, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TEACHER, FOR SINGING, must have L.R.A.M. or A.R.C.M. Teacher's Dip. Also Teachers for Pianoforte, Elocution, and Violin; all must be qualified. For London Academy. Box 14, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BARITONE AVAILABLE FOR ENGAGEMENT. Excellent testimonials. Expenses. "Lyric," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BOYS REQUIRED for FARM STREET R.C. CHURCH CHOIR.—Applications to Vivian Stuart, 114, Mount Street, W.1, or call Monday or Wednesday evenings, 6 to 7.30.

SOLO BOY REQUIRED for West-End Church.—State experience. Salary, £20 to £30. "W. T.," c/o Murray & Co., 180, Brompton Road, S.W.3.

SOPRANO (lady) WANTED.—£12. City Church. Light duties; Communicant. Apply, "M. K.," 171, Grove Lane, S.E.5.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, Muswell Hill, W.10. LEADING SOPRANO WANTED. £25. C. F. Carter, 5, Coppetts Road, W.10.

SOPRANO WANTED for Choir of Free Church in N.W. London. Must read well, have a good voice, and know usual Oratorio solos. £20 per annum. Write, Choirmaster, "Newhaven," The Avenue, N.W.6.

WANTED.—Christ Church, Westminster. ALTO, £14; BASS, £10. Edward G. Yeo, A.R.C.O., 29, Wentworth Avenue, N.3.

ALTO, TENOR, and BASS REQUIRED.—Church in S. Kensington. Good readers essential. Cathedral Psalter. £20. Sanders, 34, Altenburg Gardens, S.W.11.

BACH'S "PASSION," "CRUCIFIXION," ETC. Chorus Altos, Tenors, and Basses supplied. Moderate Terms. Apply, G. Hugh Weedon, 487, Green Lanes, Harringay, N.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.
TENOR WANTED. There is a vacancy for a Tenor in Westminster Cathedral Choir. Applicants, who must be Catholics, should apply in writing, giving particulars as to experience, references, &c., to the Choirmaster, Westminster Cathedral, Clergy House, Francis Street, S.W.1.

S. MARY MAGDALENE, MUNSTER SQUARE.
TWO TENORS WANTED. £25 and £20. Readers. Anglo-Catholic Church. Plainsong, and some modern music. Sundays, 10.30 and 6.30; Fridays, 8 p.m. Written applications only, E. F. Mather, 31, Sussex Place, N.W.1.

TENOR available for Stainer's "Crucifixion," &c. "J. E. F.," 3, Springfield Road, S.W.19.

TENOR REQUIRES CHOIR APPOINTMENT.—City Church preferred. Good voice, and first-class sight-reader. Thoroughly experienced. Stipend about £20 p.a. "H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR WANTED.—Plainsong and some Modern Music. Age under 36. Reader preferred. Anglo-Catholic Church. £20. Write, E. F. Mather, 31, Sussex Place, N.W.1.

URGENT.—TENOR and BASS WANTED for Holy Trinity Church, Grays Inn Road. Offered £5 or expenses. Write, The Rector, 27, John Street, Bedford Row.

ARMAGH CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, BARITONE. Must be good soloist and sight-reader. Salary, £100 per annum. Apply, Dr. Chaundy, Armagh.

EXCELLENTLY QUALIFIED TEACHER of SINGING (lady), starting New Connection, will receive pupils at very moderate fees, at West-End Studio. Write, Miss Clapton, 23, Groombridge Road, E.9.

PIANISTE, A.R.C.O. (Lady), good sight-reader, could give one morning or afternoon weekly to practise with Instrumentalist or Vocalist. "E. C.," Robinia, Walden Road, Hornchurch, Essex.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST (Voluntary) WANTED for WELL-KNOWN Free Church in London. Fine 4-Manual Organ. Prep. for R.C.O. exams. if desired. State experience to Box 20, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. (young) desires deputy work. Anglican or Plainsong. Keen. 4, The Drive, N.11.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Saviour's Church, Hanley Road, N.4. Mixed Choir. Evangelical. £40. Write, giving full particulars, to the Rev. W. H. Stuart-Fox, The Vicarage, Holly Park, Crouch Hill, N.4.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the great Central Hall in connection with the Bristol Mission, Bristol. Fine organ. Great opportunity. Central position touching the life of the city. Committee prepared to consider organist and choirmaster combined, or organist and choirmaster as separate appointments. Send testimonials, and salary asked, to the Rev. J. A. Broadbelt, Central Hall, Old Market Street, Bristol.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER (Irish) seeks position. Cathedral-trained. Choir-training a speciality. "W. J. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST of WEST-END CHURCH has VACANCIES for PUPILS, view assistantship. Moderate terms, simple services. Box 18, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. WITH GOOD PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE OF CATHEDRAL CHOIR and ORGAN, also Parish Church Services, desires APPOINTMENT as CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST (not Anglo-Catholic Church), with scope for teaching. London, or North London district. Write, Box 18, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST WANTED, N. London. Nonconformist. Small honorarium. Experience, to Box 19, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

IMMEDIATE DISPOSAL

EXCELLENT TEACHING CONNECTION for SALE. Church of England Organist and Choirmastership. £100 per annum. Principal Schools, also other public work in the Town. Applicant must hold diplomas, Mus.Doc., Oxon. or Camb., or F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M. Full particulars of Income, &c., on request. Only applicants who can afford to buy this connection out-and out will be considered. Box 21, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PHOTOS.—St. Anne's Soho, St. Margaret's, Westminster; Brisbane T. H. Any organ successfully taken, by G. Benham, "Bramerton," New Barnet.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., July next. Secure now. New Series of 6 Model Essays on the book set for the Exam.: Success assured. Also valuable "hints" on writing the Essay. Enclose 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO R.C.O. CANDIDATES.—Jan., 1928, paper work solutions, including Ear-tests. 24 Transposition and 24 Accompaniment Tests, all modelled on the latest papers. 5*s.* each set. "F.R.C.O./L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CHURCH ORGAN.—3 Manuals, CC to C, 61 notes, and pedals CCC to F, 30 notes (built by Jardine) pneumatic action. Gt., 8 stops; Ch., 11 stops; Sw., 11 stops: Ped., 6 stops. 13 couplers, with other accessories.
The Trustees of the School for the Blind, Hardman Street, Liverpool, are prepared to consider offers for this instrument as installed in the recently disused Chapel adjoining the School. Inspection by arrangement with the Superintendent.

CHURCH ORGANS.—Restorations, Enlargements, Re-voicing, Repairing, and Tuning. Attractive terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London, S.W.19. Established 1896.

NEW CHURCH ORGAN.—Two manuals (61 notes) and pedals. Angle stop-jambs. Fine oak case. £550, including erection and electric blowing. Photo, &c. "Organist," 10, Lancaster Road, Forest Gate, E.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS.—One, Two, and Three Manuals. Bargains. From £15. Best Makers. Stagg, 56, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.1.

UNIQUE OPPORTUNITY.—HOLT 2-Manual ORGAN. 9 stops on Great, 7 on Swell, 4 on Pedal. Write "P. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—Norman & Beard Pneumatic Pedal Attachment, radiating and concave, complete with Stool. First-class condition essential. 7, Brudenell Road, Leeds.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6.
ORGAN LESSONS at ST. STEPHEN'S WALBROOK, E.C.4. GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O. Tel.: Putney 4208.

BROADWOOD Semi-Grand PIANO for SALE. Length 7-ft. 6-in. Splendid tone and condition. Iron frame. Rosewood case. Ivory keys. Full keyboard. £30, or offer. Write, Mr. R. W. Wright, India Office, Whitehall, London, S.W.1, for appointment to view.

UNIQUE OPPORTUNITY occurs, through retirement, to secure very old-established West Country PIANO and GRAMOPHONE BUSINESS. Large scholastic and professional connection. Hire-purchase business could be worked up. Principals only write, "Music," care Deacon's, Fenchurch Avenue, E.C.3.

FOR SALE, by direction of the Receiver.—Old-Established MUSICAL BUSINESS in Ealing; good lease. Full particulars on application to The Receiver, Mr. J. L. Goodwin, Chancery Lane Station Chambers, 31-33, High Holborn, W.C.1.

FOR SALE.—DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS, by Sir George Grove, 4 vols. Unused. What offers? Box 16, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

"GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC," 5 Volumes. 1919 edition, new condition, cheap. 7, Belle Vue Place, Blackpool.

FOR SALE.—Almost new. CYLINDER CONCERT FLUTE. Cocoa, nickel-silver keys and tips, Boehm system; Class A Lamy (and case). Original cost, approx. £36. Would take £18. A. L. Oxford, 66, Stanton Road, Burton-on-Trent.

AURAL TESTS.—MOST IMPORTANT PAPER. All the leading Examinations. Shows how to train up in order to pass the tests. Very successful. Send P.O. 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DURHAM DESCANTS.—Complete set of 54, 6*d.* The Organist of St. George's, Everton, says: "To my mind, the amazing thing is the ease with which the boys learn them, and they are non-readers. Your descants are so full of melody: that is why I prefer them to others." Send postcard for free specimen, to Mus. Pub. Agency, 45, Dingwall Road, Croydon.

"MERRIE ENGLAND" (Concert Version) VOCAL SCORES FOR SALE.—About 12 to 15 copies. Absolutely new, being surplus from Choral Society. New price, 5*s.* each. Offers invited. Lamplugh, 669A, London Road, Westcliff-on-Sea, Essex.

MUSIC COPYING, Transposition, Arrangements, Band Parts, &c., Smith, 40, Coniston Rd., Muswell Hill, N.10.

THE REVISION OF MSS. is UNDERTAKEN by musical critic and song composer. Lessons in piano, singing, theory. Herbert H. Nelson, 9, Grange Rd., Canonbury, N.1.

"SONG WRITING AS A PROFITABLE HOBBY OR CAREER."

24-Page Booklet on application. Free advice on Songs, Lyrics, Music. International Music Agency, Box M.T., 10, Kingsley House, Harp Lane, London, E.C.3.

TO CHOIRMASTERS and S. S. Secretaries.—Quantity of S.S.A. MUSIC for SALE, cheap. Stamp for List. A. Dytham, Swadlincote, Burton-on-Trent.

IMPORTANT TO COMPOSERS.—Send stamp for our latest prospectus on music publishing. The Norman Reed Music Company, 133A, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

SIX NOTABLE

ORGAN RECITAL PIECES

Played by Mr. H. L. Balfour, Mr. G. D. Cunningham, Mr. Reg. Goss-Custard, Mr. H. F. Ellingford, Dr. Alfred Hollins, Mr. Arthur Meale, Mr. Herbert Walton, &c.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Minuet Antique, in D flat—HORACE F. WATLINGPlayed at the Royal Albert Hall, London, St. George's Hall, Liverpool, Winchester Cathedral Recitals, &c. (Easy.) | 2 | 0 |
| Toccata, in D minor—T. G. OSBORN ... ...Guildhall School of Music, Organ Exams., St. George's Hall, Liverpool, Recitals. (Mod. dif.), solid style. | 2 | 6 |
| Bohemesque, in G—WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME ...Composed for the opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg, by Hollins. (Brilliant.) | 2 | 6 |
| Fantasia, in E—T. G. OSBORN ... ... ... ...Incorporated Society of Musicians Organ Exams. (Dignified.) | 2 | 6 |
| Rondino, in D flat—WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME ...Played at the inaugural Recitals, Westminster Cathedral. A universal favourite. (Easy.) | 2 | 0 |
| Marche Heroïque, in E flat—HORACE F. WATLINGComposed for the opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg. Played at the Royal Albert Hall, St. George's Hall, Liverpool, Glasgow Cathedral Recitals, &c. (Majestic.) | 2 | 6 |

The above are included in

NATIONAL INSTITUTE EDITION

OF THE

Works of British Blind Composers

Published for the

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND

(Registered under the Blind Persons Act, 1920)

by

RYALLS & JONES, LTD.,

107, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD

BOOK 5
Now Ready
2/6

THE

BOOK 5
Now Ready
2/6

"HUNDRED BEST"

SHORT CLASSICS

FOR PIANOFORTE
Seven Graded Books

TOBIAS MATTHAY
HAROLD CRAXTON

Selected by

HAROLD SAMUEL
EDWIN EVANS

Book 5 Now Ready
Edited by

HAROLD SAMUEL

CONTENTS.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| SCHUMANN ... | Kinderscenen No. 4 | TSCHAIKOWSKY | Chanson Triste | SCARLATTI ... | Sonata in C |
| SCHUMANN ... | Kinderscenen No. 5 | PARADISI ... | Toccata | TSCHAIKOWSKY | Song without Words |
| HANDEL ... | Allegro in G | RUBINSTEIN ... | Melody in F | SCARLATTI ... | Tempo di Ballo |
| SCHUBERT ... | Moment Musical, A♭ | COUPERIN ... | Sœur Monique | SCARLATTI ... | Pastorale |

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.
GLASGOW: 152, BUCHANAN ST. LONDON: 95, WIMPOLE ST.
NEW YORK: 35, WEST 32ND STREET.

CRAMER

MAGNIFICENT 1928
LATEST MODELS

BABY GRAND ... 120 Gns.
UPRIGHT GRAND 65 Gns.
UPRIGHT PLAYER 103 Gns.
FULL SCALE
LATEST DEVICES

Write for our very generous Hire-Purchase Terms.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., Ltd.,
139 NEW BOND ST., W.1.
46 MOORGATE, E.C.2.
128/130 KENSINGTON HIGH STREET, W.8.

FERD. KUECHLER'S

COURSE of VIOLIN INSTRUCTION
is a
TRIUMPH
of practical teaching

TO KNOW IT IS TO RECOMMEND IT

Send for a specimen copy from the publishers, or ask your music-seller to let you have one on approval.

HUG & Co.
MUSIC PUBLISHERS.
BASLE (SWITZERLAND)—ZURICH—LEIPSIC

All smoking affects the throat

Pipe, Cigar or Cigarette—no matter which—the delicate membranes of the throat object to smoke, which eventually produces irritation either mild or severe. There are few smokers who have not experienced the uncomfortable effect of "one cigarette too many." To prevent this, take an "Allenburys" Glycerine and Black Currant Pastille occasionally between smokes and let it dissolve slowly in the mouth. Containing pure glycerine and the luscious fruit juice of ripe black currants, they are delightfully soothing. They effectually remove the smell of smoke from the breath.

YOUR CHEMIST STOCKS THEM.

Packed in distinctive tin boxes containing:
2 oz. - 8d.
4 oz. - 1/3
8 oz. - 2/3
1 lb. - 4/3

Allenburys
Glycerine & Black Currant PASTILLES

A larger and safer Income with freedom from care

ARE you aware that you can double or even quadruple your Income from Investments? For example, £1,000 invested in the ordinary way yields about £50 per annum. Invested in a Sun Life of Canada Annuity, the income for a man age 55 would be £83.15.1; for a man of 60, £95.4.9; for a man of 70, £132.19.7—and so on, according to age at time of investment. If health were impaired the Annuity would be still greater.

For further particulars apply to

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA

100 SUN OF CANADA HOUSE, VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, LONDON. W.C.2

Stating exact date of birth

BOOSEY'S

EDUCATIONAL MUSIC

THE MUSICAL GATEWAY
(Very First Lesson at the Piano)
BY DONALD GRAY
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* net
Donald Gray is the pen name of one of the most experienced teachers of the day, who understands child psychology and musical development. "This newest method will supersede others by reason of its directness and extreme simplicity."

PRELIMINARY
SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS
Prepared in accordance with the Syllabuses issued by the Associated Board, Trinity College of Music, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.
Edited and Arranged
BY DONALD GRAY
Price 1*s.* net

Elementary Progressive Piano Duets
TINY TUNES FOR TWENTY FINGERS
BY STUART YOUNG
Price 2*s.* net
Will prove as useful to present-day teachers as a past generation found the famous Diabelli Five-Finger Duets. Strikingly original and tuneful, and skilfully planned to lead the beginner step by step to a higher grade.

LAND O' FAERY
BY RODNEY EDEN
Price 2*s.* net
These delightful fancies, expressed with a touch of modernity, lie well for the hand and are within the scope of the junior grade pianist.

BOOSEY & CO. LTD. 295 Regent St. London W.1

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.
Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.
Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus.D.

March 7, 14, and 21, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concerts.

March 17th, at 3 p.m.—Invitation Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W.1. (Sole lessees of Queen's Hall: Chappell & Co.)

March 29th, at 3 p.m.—Invitation Chamber Music and Choir Concert at the Grotrian Hall, Wigmore Street, W.1.

March 10th.—Last day of entry for the April Diploma Examinations, and for the next open competition for Scholarships.

March 31st.—Term ends.

April 30th.—Summer Term begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The Orchestral, Choral, the Operatic, and Chamber Music Classes are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Organists who like music of reasonable modernism

SHOULD GET

"CATHEDRAL WINDOWS"

SIX PIECES ON GREGORIAN TUNES.

BY

KARG-ELERT.

Price complete Five Shillings net.

Here will be found all the characteristics which organists have learnt to expect from this composer—the rich harmonic idiom, the charming atmospheric effects, the tumultuous brilliance.

ELKIN & CO., Ltd.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., Ltd.

THE SEASON'S ANTHEMS & SERVICES

LENT

DERING, RICHARD (1618)
(Edited by Sir Frederick Bridge)
I will arise (5 parts) ... ... ... ... ... ... 4d.
BESLY, MAURICE
Benedicite in E flat ... ... ... ... ... ... 3d.

GOOD FRIDAY

(Edited by Sir Frederick Bridge.)

DERING, RICHARD (1618).
O all ye that pass by (6 parts) ... ... ... ... ... 6d.
VITTORIA, T. L. Da.
O My People (4 parts) ... ... ... ... ... } ... 4d.
PORTUGAL, JOHN IV. of Faithful Cross (4 parts) ... ... ... ... ... }

EASTER

PALESTRINA
(Edited by Sir Frederick Bridge)
This is the Day (6 parts) ... ... ... ... ... ... 4d.
CHANTER, RICHARD
Sing with Joyful Exultation (4 parts) ... ... ... ... 4d.
GOSS, JOHN
Christ our Passover (4 parts) ... ... ... ... ... 3d.

SEVEN SACRED SOLOS
of the
EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL
composed by
Dr. MAURICE GREEN (1696-1755)
Edited, with marks of expression and phrasing and a pianoforte accompaniment, by
E. STANLEY ROPER, B.A., Mus.Bac. (Cantab.).
Published in one book, complete, 1s. 6d.
High Voice or Low Voice.
NEW CHORAL CATALOGUE sent FREE on request.

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd.,
8, Heddon Street, Regent Street, London, W.1.

New York Symphony Orchestra, Feb. 12; Cheltenham, Feb. 13; London: Royal Philharmonic Society, Feb. 23.

GUSTAV HOLST

EGDON HEATH

(FOR ORCHESTRA)

"It makes no concessions to the ear and no attempts to be attractive, but it grips."

"We may wonder that his vision is so stark, but men have similarly questioned Hardy whether life was so grim as he saw it."—The Times, Feb. 14, 1928.

"It is all strangely hushed and severe, and, so to speak, awestruck. Masterly to a consummate degree in the effect of spaciousness and bleak majesty made by the composer with the fewest possible notes and orchestral colours."—Daily Mail, Feb. 14, 1928.

"'Egdon Heath' is the nearest approach we have to painting in terms of musical notes. The achievement is notable even for a past-master of orchestral colour like Holst. He conjures up the vision which was Hardy's of something mysterious and gigantic, of a force that is not brutal yet irresistible."—Daily Telegraph, Feb. 14, 1928.

SCORE, 10s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts, 7s.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MARCH 1 1928

(For List of Contents see Page 271.)

NIKOLAI MEDTNER

By Leonid Sabaneev

I want to say a few words concerning one whose great and noble work is unjustly and strangely allowed to remain in obscurity. This composer, who began more than brilliantly, was at one time a candidate for the hegemony of Russian music in alternation with Scriabin, and then was somehow flung violently from those heights—not by the qualities of his talent, but, if I may thus express it, by the musical taste of the world dating from the period of the war. That period has proved to be really fatal for music: the impetuosity characteristic of our age has permeated musical creation and infected it with an insatiable desire for originality, for unlikeness to the past. Music and composition have become a sport, at which betting takes place as to who will write the most extraordinary stufi, as to who will subvert, en passant, most of the old laws of the musical profession. As it is usually not difficult to upset laws in music, the tempo of the achievements has become so rapid that no flying records can equal it. And there is nothing surprising in the fact that in the background of this mad chase into which the sphere of musico-creative work has been converted, a few big and deeply sincere musicians—who have been perplexed observers of what was going on, and who have had no desire to sacrifice their work to the headlong rush which is now the mode—have seemed amazingly old-fashioned and remote.

The composer to whom I refer is Nikolai Medtner, the friend and companion of Rachmaninov, who likewise repudiated modernism. Medtner's compositions are almost unknown to the general public. Born in 1879, and therefore a man of mature age, he made a brilliant start, as already stated. In him were blended the depth and philosophical temperament of the German (he is half German by descent) and the lyrical soul of the Slav. Over his creative work—which, as regards form, seemed to be technically perfect when first it was presented to us—hovered the shades of the great founders of German art: Beethoven, Bach, Brahms. Medtner began his activities when musical impressionism was making its conquests, at the outset of that craze for innovation, the fruits and dismal consequences of which we are now reaping, and with heroic resolution he came forward as a convinced conservative, an enemy of impressionism, a partisan of the old and mighty tradition of art. To the diffusiveness of impressionism he opposed a clear-cut steadiness of rhythm; to an unconcealed nervousness and ecstasy an austere restraint of thought and feeling, equally remote from the extreme rapture of Scriabin and the æsthetic gastronomy of Debussy. Medtner at once became a man of note in Russia, but the attitude of Russian advanced musical thought, then pre-eminently captivated by the passion for novelty, was somehow not always friendly to a composer whose daring was not displayed in the revelation of the new, but in its haughty rejection, in defiance of the fashionable taste. Nevertheless by 1910 Medtner had a large following, who not only admitted him to the ranks of genius, but compared him to Scriabin, and even awarded him the preference as the wiser and more profound phenomenon.

His creative work, confined to the sphere of the pianoforte, is stamped with a severe and ascetic grandeur. Imaginatively he comes of the world of Beethoven's last compositions, of the inspiration of Brahms, of the severe style of Bach. From the very beginning his work bears the impress of power and profundity of thought. His popularity, increased by his fame as a superb pianist (in this respect he may be compared to Rachmaninov as regards expressiveness and virility of style), soon became so considerable that, as already mentioned, the question arose as to the supremacy of Medtner or Scriabin — those two dominators of the musical ideas of pre-war Russia.

Medtner's genius, profound and meditative, essentially philosophical, deeply romantic in its trend, was always markedly behind the times. Had he appeared in the days of Schumann, or even of Brahms, this great and serious artist would undoubtedly have become a world composer. But the present has too little contact with such temperaments as his; it lives on the showy and sensational, and in Medtner's work there is nothing of either. Like his friend Rachmaninov, he has made no concessions to modernity: he has repudiated it—not so much as an external form of expression as a fundamental mood. Medtner's genius is utterly foreign not only to advertisement, which is so widespread in these days (and has, indeed, become a necessity), but even to any desire to thrust itself forward, to glorify itself. Exceedingly modest and unassuming, and taking pride in these qualities, it relies entirely on the righteous judgment of history to put every one in his proper place. Idealists may think that such will be the case, but contemporary life teaches us the opposite.

A great romantic (and music has always been pre-eminently the language of romance), a great classic in his regard for form, Medtner, although he produces nothing sensational, nor astonishes the ear with unexpected cacophonies, with a sudden irruption of trivialities, with ingenious quests of the ultra-novel, undoubtedly gives us something original, new, and beyond question his own. And his own is not sensational; in our noisy and tempestuous age it does not 'hit the eye,' it is not clamorous, but this does not prevent its being new and original, in the way in which Beethoven, Schumann, and Wagner were essentially original. Medtner lies wholly on the plane of that old music which to this day, as he has the courage to admit, is for him the only real music. Stravinsky's tonal 'fun of the fair,' Prokofiev's inveterate buffoonery, Scriabin's drawing-room ecstasy, Debussy's perfumed tone cuisine, Richard Strauss's martial plebeians, Schönberg's musical adventurousness—none of these entice him. For him these things are all strange and belong to the sphere of the 'non-musical.' Beethoven's spirit, the spirit of the last Quartets, reigns over Medtner's Sonatas, over his monumental Sonata in E minor, over his grandiose Sonata in A major: the spirit of old Bach over his 'Nocturnes for Violin': the spirit of Schumann and Wagner over his 'Legends'—those fantastic and poignant tonal grotesques. Medtner's is a serious talent; it is none of his business to provide musical smiles, jokes, or sarcasms; his operations are confined to the sphere of moods, either painful or philosophically profound. His vocal compositions carry on the ancient line of the song, which began in days of old with the immortal arias of Schütz and Bach. His favourite poets, who inspire him to song, are Goethe, Nietzsche, Tyutchev (the first Russian symbolist poet), and Pushkin and Fet (supreme in the poetic art of Russia). His best achievements, the crowning points of his austere creative work, are, I consider, his Pianoforte Sonatas and Legends, and his songs. The five songs to words by Pushkin and Tyutchev, Op. 37 (particularly No. 1, entitled 'Bessonnitsa'*), bear the indubitable impress of that real genius which is now lost to music, obscured by the ideas of sensation and effect, it being considered admissible nowadays to confuse these with genius.

Fate has been merciless to Medtner, as it always is to the real geniuses of thought and feeling, as it was to Beethoven, Wagner, and Berlioz. Medtner has acquired no popularity. On the European horizon his creative work has passed unnoticed; his merits have always been entirely beyond the limits of the crude receptive faculty of the contemporary public and critic, and even of composers and musicians. He and his work belong to another sphere, to another age, when the perceptions were more subtle and the tastes more penetrating; when criticism was concerned with mastery and not merely with sensations. He now lives at Paris, almost forgotten, almost unrecognised, save by a little group of friends. This great musician languishes in an atmosphere quite foreign to that musicality which he is accustomed to regard as the only musicality. The latest compositions written by him here at Paris (a Violin Sonata and a Pianoforte Concerto) convince me that in him we have a musician of the rank of those great musicians of the past, of whom we hardly seem to think nowadays with sufficient clearness and consciousness. The Violin Sonata (his second) is a monumental work, with an elevation of thought worthy of Beethoven, with an inflexibility of the stern musical will which again reminds us forcibly of the composer of the ninth Symphony. Beethoven was cut off from the musical world by his deafness, and was likewise forgotten by the musical world of his day, which flung itself on the alluring blooms of Rossini's art. Medtner is estranged and isolated, not by deafness, but by a complete rupture with the contemporary musical outlook. And, like old Beethoven, he creates without regard to his surroundings, even in spite of them, evidently believing that the hour will come, the modern 'gods' will be forgotten, and music will again worship at its old fountain-head. Then his music may be resurrected and will find the way to comprehension. But will it be resurrected? Will history retrace its steps? Or will the process of musical degeneration, which is connected with the destruction of the romantic outlook and the wrecking of idealism everywhere—will it henceforth triumphantly hack a path for itself over the corpses of those heroes who have incautiously put themselves in its way, and have conceived the audacious idea of staying and overthrowing its blind force?

Personally, I consider that we have in Medtner one of the few remaining oases of the old musical outlook—when music was music and not a sport; when it still served as the language of expression; when it was permissible and not ridiculous to feel, and to disclose one's feelings. Medtner left Russia in the revolutionary years, thinking to find in Europe a more congenial musical atmosphere: it is evident that he was greatly disenchanted. But the process of musical 'de-psychologization' is a comprehensive one—it includes not only Russia and individual countries of Europe—it is world-wide. We are entering upon a new era, an anti-musical era, in which, generally speaking, there will of a surety be no place for music. Hence I have little belief in the advance of Medtner, for whom I have a deep and heartfelt sympathy, since, like him, I am imbued with sentiments of contempt and disgust for the latest cries of the musical fashion—even of actual hatred for this poverty-stricken new art. Those musicians who have not yet been carried away by the herd sense and the collective hypnosis of self-glorification and advertisement, and so have not allied themselves to this so-called 'new' art—which is nothing more than a kind of stock-jobbing with inflated bonds on the universal musical 'change—such musicians should at once interest themselves in Medtner, a genuine composer who is fully commensurable with the greatest Russian masters, with Tchaikovsky and Moussorgsky, and should support him and his work in every way.

(Translated by S. W. Pring.)

* 'Insomnia.' An edition of these songs with English text, by M.-D. Calvocoressi, has been, or will shortly be, published by J. H. Zimmermann, Leipsic. (Translator's note.)

THE NATURE OF HARMONY

By Matthew Shirlaw

(Concluded from February number, p. 118)

Our inquiry into the nature of the minor harmony is almost complete. For what has already been said in treating of the harmonic division of the octave agrees in every essential respect with the facts relating to the harmonic division of the fifth. It is necessary to examine these, but we shall go over practically the same ground as before.

The major third, in dividing the fifth harmonically, gives rise at the same time to the minor third. The converse is obviously untrue; we cannot say that the minor third, in dividing the fifth harmonically, gives rise to the major third. In the harmonic division of the fifth, therefore, the minor third appears as the fifth complement of the major third. And thus do we hear it, for in the major harmony, as c-e-g, although the eye may perceive the three different intervals of the fifth, major third, minor third, we hear directly only the fifth and major third; indeed, these two are the only intervals present if we reckon from the bass upwards. In order that the minor third should produce its characteristic minor effect, it is necessary that its lower note should appear in the bass, and further, that this lower note should assume the rôle of fundamental, to the extent at least of giving rise to its fifth. The minor third then cannot be dissociated from the fifth. If it occupy the higher position within the fifth it produces a major effect; if the lower position, it produces a minor effect:

Ex. 23.

and its major or minor effect depends entirely on the position it occupies within the fifth. If this fifth be not actually present, it must be understood. Similarly with the major third: if it occupy the lower position within the fifth, the effect is major, if the higher position, minor:

Ex. 24.

The major harmony, then, may be described as the harmony of the major third, and the minor harmony as the harmony of the minor third, the fifth in each case being actually present, or understood. The minor third arises as naturally as the major third, for the major third, in dividing the fifth harmonically, gives rise at one and the same time to the minor third. It is incorrect, therefore, to describe the major harmony as natural, but the minor harmony as artificial; the one is as natural as the other. In the major harmony (Ex. 25*a*) c is the fundamental:

Ex. 25

But g may also assume the rôle of fundamental, as has already been explained in treating of the Authentic and Plagal modes. In a similar way, e may assume the rôle of fundamental, at least up to the point of giving rise to its fifth (or 12th) without thereby destroying the consonance of the minor third (Ex. 25*b*). Were the lower note of the minor third to become completely established as a fundamental, and in addition to its fifth were to generate also its major third (17th), the minor third would assume a dissonant character (Ex. 25*c*). It is for this reason, as Helmholtz has pointed out, that composers frequently preferred, and still sometimes prefer, to conclude a composition in the minor mode with a major harmony instead of a minor one ('Tièrce de Picardie').

Thus the minor harmony is the necessary consequence of the major harmony. It assumes the form of the inversion of the major:

Ex. 26.

and this inversion arises quite as naturally as the major harmony arises. In treating of the major harmony,* it was pointed out that the fifth is determined by the octave, or by the octave proportion, and the major third by the fifth, or the proportion of the fifth. The minor harmony, the inversion of the major, presents a remarkable analogy—for in the minor harmony we find a fifth which is brought about by the octave, and a major third which is brought about by the fifth:

Ex. 27.

Strange as it may appear, it is the ascending order itself that brings about the descending order. It is because harmony is generated upwards that the descending order becomes possible. We may go still further, and say that it is because harmony is generated upwards that the descending order becomes inevitable. A glance at the harmonic series reveals to us the whole process:

Ex. 28.

Here $\overset{5}{e}$, that brings about the major harmony c-e-g, at the same time, by assuming the rôle of fundamental up to the point of giving rise to its fifth (12th) $\overset{15}{b}$, brings about the minor harmony $\overset{10\ 12\ 15}{e\text{-}g\text{-}b}$. If it be objected that $\overset{15}{b}$ also arises as the major third (17th) of $\overset{3}{g}$, it has to be pointed out that in the formation e-g-b, the note g is neither fundamental nor bass note. Further, that if we hear b as a fifth sound, as we do, we cannot at the same time hear it as a third sound. Again, if we hear b, as we may, as a third sound, we hear also g as its fundamental. But if we hear g as fundamental of the major third b, we hear it also as fundamental of its fifth (12th), so that the g 'klang' g-b-d predominates, turns the consonant minor harmony into a dissonant one (Ex. 29*a*), thrusts out e, and compels it to become merged in the g 'klang':

* See article in September Musical Times.

Ex. 29.

This is the simple explanation of the chord of the 13th, espoused by Marpurg, Day, Prout, and others (Ex. 29*b*). We may write it as at Ex. 29*c*, for the addition of the dominant 7th does not interfere with the downward movement of e; still less does it entitle us to regard the chord as arising from a series of super-added thirds (Ex. 29*d*). Such an explanation not only represents bad theory, but something worse—it is clumsy, unbeautiful, possessing neither the simplicity nor the subtlety of Nature.

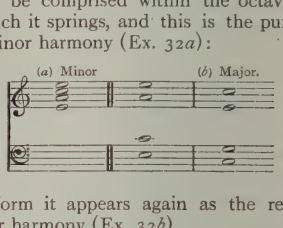
The essential facts concerning the origin of the minor harmony may be summarised in a few words. They are simple facts, and easy to understand. In the minor harmony, as e-g-b, the highest sound b may and does arise as fifth of the lowest sound e, thereby bringing about a major third of which g is not directly the fundamental. It is the reverse of the major harmony. As in the major harmony, as c-e-g, we cannot regard e as fundamental of the minor third e-g, so in the minor harmony, as e-g-b, if we hear b, as we do, as fifth of e, then the major third g-b arises indirectly through the fifth b, and so we hear and understand it.

The whole process is one intimately concerned with musical æsthetics. The following simple chordal succession:

Ex. 30.

has been written by composers, in its simple or elaborated form, perhaps some hundred thousand times since the epoch of Scarlatti or Corelli. The first chord is that of C major; the second chord is that of its third; but even at the present day we, who so well understand the relationship between the two sounds of the third, c-e, and who have little difficulty in understanding c as the fundamental of this third, hear the second chord e-g♯-b as a fifth chord rather than as a third chord; i.e., we hear e as fifth of a rather than as third of c. It will be observed that the bass, in its movement, describes the minor harmony a-c-e. Extremely instructive also is it to observe that Riemann and Prout, whose ears were perhaps as sensitive as their contemporaries', explained the following third succession (Ex. 31*a*) as being in reality a disguised fifth succession, arising from a dominant 13th (Ex. 31*b*):

In the minor harmony, as a-c-e$^1$, the fifth a-e$^1$ is determined by the octave e-e$^1$. The fifth a-e$^1$ then, ought to be comprised within the octave sounds from which it springs, and this is the purest form of the minor harmony (Ex. 32*a*):



In this form it appears again as the reverse of the major harmony (Ex. 32*b*).

Here we discover the nature of that mysterious 'downward construction' of the minor harmony that has so long baffled every musician and scientist who has investigated the problem. How to conceive a perfect fifth and major third as inverted, turned upside down, yet retaining their forms of fifth and third, and springing, not from their lower note as generator, but from their upper note—such a conception might appear to be well-nigh impossible. Yet in the pure minor harmony, as e-a-c-e$^1$, we may observe how these intervals arise, not from the lowest note, upwards, as in the the major harmony, but from the highest note, downwards, for it is the highest note e$^1$ that brings about both the perfect fifth a-e$^1$ and the major third c-e$^1$. Further, it is thus we hear and understand them: we hear, not the higher note springing upwards from the lower, but the lower note depending, hanging downwards, from the higher. How otherwise do we hear the opening fifth of Beethoven's Ninth, or the major third at the beginning of the recapitulatory section of his C minor Symphony, first movement:

Ex. 33.

In this form also we observe the minor harmony in its innermost nature, completely reflecting the unity of the major harmony. Thus not only the fifth a-e (Ex. 32*a*), but also the major third c-e, find in the octave e-e$^1$ their ultimate source. It is a remarkable formation, in certain aspects veiled, mysterious, elusive, throwing softly back, as it were, the rays borrowed from some other and more brilliant luminary. (Perhaps the term 'Moonlight' applied to the opening bars of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata is not so inapt.) It exhibits at once the wonderful simplicity and subtlety of Nature. It has this peculiarity that, especially in its pure form, it does not seem to have any foundation, any real fundamental note, but floats as it were in the air.

Such is the nature of the minor harmony. We may learn of it by listening, not wholly with 'the foolish face of praise,' but intelligently, with open ears, to the music of the great masters—e.g., to the slow movement of Beethoven's A major Symphony. Did someone say of Beethoven that he 'wrested from Nature some of her innermost secrets'? And did his divinely-formed ear, soon to be cruelly exiled from the sounds of Nature, hear in the inner soul of Nature those tones that move us so profoundly?—for with the pure minor harmony that great genius begins and ends.

ON FAULTY SENSATIONS OF MUSICAL PITCH, WITH NOTES OF A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

By Edwin Smith

(M.D. Lond.; Coroner for N.E. London)

(Concluded from February number, p. 121)

Avoiding the realm of barren speculation, there arises the practical question of the extent to which these cases of perverted hearing actually occur. On this point information is scanty, and probably misleading. During twenty-five years of busy medical practice, no known example of the condition came under my notice, and medical friends narrate a parallel experience. Specialists become aware of cases now and then, though very infrequently. It may be assumed, however, that patients in general will be impressed more readily by symptoms such as deafness or dizziness than by abnormal pitch-sensations, the more obvious condition masking the lesser in varying degree; and that for this reason the particular aberration we are now considering may arise and subside unrecognised even in fairly well-marked cases. At times the music professor must encounter the condition as affecting either himself or a pupil, but an inquiry among musical friends has been singularly barren of result. Yet it would seem that examples, if looked for, may be discovered fairly often. This view is supported by the results of a few tests with tuning-forks made among friends. The trials were on a small scale; nor have I kept any notes of the results. Had the publication of a paper on the subject been contemplated, I should no doubt have made tests sufficiently extended for the findings to have some evidential value. Should the field of inquiry appeal to some investigator, I think the ranks of pianoforte tuners may be found to yield results. Lest this observation should conceivably disturb the equanimity of any member of the tuning fraternity, be it remarked that it is based simply on a recognition of the pitch-discrimination of the trained ear. A tuner with whom I conversed recently described a difficulty occasionally experienced in tuning a pianoforte to his satisfaction. The same note, he said, seemed to produce a different impression of pitch in each ear. The discrepancy was apparently slight, but he was unable to understand how it could exist at all. He knew that the arrival at the ear of a fixed number of vibrations per second was a definite physical event, and he assumed that there was an inevitable parallelism between the physical and the physiological, ensuring an equally definite pitch-sensation. He could not imagine the sensation corresponding to a given note to be other than fixed and unchangeable. There was in this instance no opportunity for a tuning-fork test, but it may be assumed that in the case of this particular individual a positive result would be obtained by a trial at the appropriate time. Incidentally, this pianoforte tuner had not noticed any relation between his times of difficulty in tuning and the state of his health.

When there is a difference of opinion between the ears on a matter of pitch, the deafness or other sense of discomfort, if limited to one side, will indicate the ear affected; and the extent of the fault may be estimated approximately by the simple test of holding a vibrating tuning-fork to the ears alternately. If there is access to a series of forks differing by small gradations of pitch it may be possible by trial to find two of these with different vibration rates but producing identical sensations of pitch when one is held to the right ear and the other to the left. If the pitch of each fork is known, the extent of the discrepancy is therefore ascertained. This test suggests another, enabling an existing fault to be apprehended in an accentuated form. Suppose the right ear is functioning normally, while the left is faulty to the extent of a semitone of raised pitch-sensation. It is clear that a fork sounding, say, the note A natural, heard with the right ear, will produce the same sensation of pitch as an A flat fork heard with the left. The left ear, so to speak, mistakes the A flat it hears for A natural, thus bringing its own pitch-sensation into conformity with the normal sensation experienced on the other side. Now let the forks be reversed, so that the A flat fork is applied to the right ear, and the A natural fork to the left. The left ear, still interpreting wrongly what it hears, will get the impression of B flat, while the right ear records faithfully the A flat heard. We have now, by a sort of trick, produced a difference in pitch-perception amounting to as much as a whole tone. This method of testing would help in confirming the suspected presence of small deviations from the normal, an existing fault being appreciated in exactly doubled degree when the reversal of the forks is made. In any extended application of the test, a large number of forks of varied pitch would be required. Many years ago a series of such tuning-forks (differing by steps of four vibrations per second) formed part of the collection of physical apparatus belonging to the late Dr. W. H. Stone ('W. H. S.,' of 'Grove'), lecturer on Physics at St. Thomas's Hospital. On Dr. Stone's death his instruments and apparatus became dispersed, and I fear it would be difficult to find a similar collection of forks to-day, though I am informed by Messrs. Griffin, of Kemble Street, that such a series may be obtainable. In the case of persons with poor discrimination of pitch the results of tests made will naturally be inconclusive. But this consideration is unimportant, seeing that such individuals will be recognised at the outset as unsuitable for inclusion in any systematic series of experiments.

Has all this any practical bearing of interest to the musician? Perhaps it has. One obvious question arising is that of possible injustice to a musical performer at the hands of a critic who is unaware of existing faults in his own equipment. Possibly the risk of this is inconsiderable. At the same time, some may question whether the critic is really entitled to enjoy an unassailable security; or whether, on the other hand, there may be reason to suspect the basis for an assumption of infallibility too often apparent in published opinions of musical performances. May it be suggested that there are things for even the youngest musical critic to learn, and that it may be to the general advantage should he become aware that the possible target for a shot is not of necessity that alone presented by the performer?

Among other considerations is the general question of the causes of false intonation among instrumentalists and vocalists. I think most will agree that the latter are the greater offenders. Why do we hear so much faulty singing? It is sometimes suggested that it is a case of either sheer laziness or physical inability to hit the note aimed at. But the explanation cannot be so simple; for there may sometimes be noticed a capricious yet consistent distribution of the faults, the notes affected may not be the upper ones, and lapses noticed at particular levels of pitch may be heard repeated as the notes reappear. It would seem that in these cases not only is the singer unable to hear his own voice satisfactorily, but that this disability must be more marked with some notes than others. The instrumentalist, producing his notes, unlike the vocalist, by means of an external mechanism, has no doubt less difficulty in appreciating the pitch and quality of the sounds. Lapses in intonation on his part must often be merely accidental, and apparent to himself, though puzzling instances occur where violinists even of high rank may be heard offending the ear in an unaccountable way. There are even particular places in certain compositions where a special note seems somehow to be singled out for ill-treatment. Attention is invited to two specific instances: first, the soloist's final note in the middle movement of the Brahms Violin Concerto; secondly, the last note of the corresponding movement of the 'Kreutzer' Sonata. In each place violinists can often be heard playing sharp. As these notes happen to be identical, my own capacity for hearing this particular F may be doubted: so that it is as well to say the observation is not put forward unsupported, but has been corroborated by competent companions present on many occasions of the lapses referred to. I hope some information may be forthcoming as to whether others have noticed these particular instances of faulty intonation in violin playing, and if so what views may be held in explanation. Considerations of space prevent my venturing here on a simple theory that I think may possibly meet the case, this article being already quite long enough. The point, moreover, does not appear directly related to the matters now before us.

Finally, I hope that other readers may be willing to contribute to our knowledge in a field of inquiry not devoid of interest, and that they may receive an opportunity to do so in the columns of the Musical Times. It remains to express my appreciation of the valuable help given by my friend Dr. William Brander in the search for published records relating to the subject-matter of these notes and comments.

---

THE TEACHERS OF THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By Edith A. H. Crawshaw

'When I am forgottén, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble . . . .
Say, I taught thee.'—Henry VIII.

Of many of the composers the saying is true that 'their name liveth for evermore.' But those who taught them are too often forgotten, though many of the great musicians spoke with sincere affection and gratitude of those to whom they knew their indebtedness, for 'it is only the little who depreciate their teachers.'

To go back four hundred years: the name of Lassus should be interesting to us because he was the friend and adviser of Palestrina, the 'saviour of Church music,' as the latter has been called. From the great Netherlander the composer of the 'Missa Papæ Marcelli' no doubt learned much that he was afterwards able to use with good effect in his own sacred music.

One of the most important pioneers of keyboard music was William Blithman, who was a chorister at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1564. His epitaph at St. Olave's, Queenhithe, records his skill as an organist, and the fact that John Bull was his pupil.

We are told that Handel's only teacher was Zachau, the principal organist of Halle, but Handel has laid himself under obligation to many composers, immortalizing them by introducing parts of their works into his own. Mr. A. J. Balfour (as he was when he wrote his 'Essay on Handel') says:

> The fact is that Handel has not cheated them out of their due meed of fame, he has cheated them into it.

Handel was only about seven when he became Zachau's pupil, and the master soon grew highly interested in the boy, who 'pleased him so much that he never thought he could do enough for him.' Handel esteemed his master highly, though the latter was a believer in hard work. One account says that Zachau required his pupil to produce a Church cantata every week—a thing which Bach did for about five years—and Handel admitted, according to Burney, that in those days he worked 'like a devil.' The affection between master and pupil remained unimpaired: Handel sought out his old master when he visited Halle, and after Zachau's death, in 1721, sent 'frequent remittances' to his widow.

Of Zelter, Mendelssohn's master, it has been said that he was > . . . a rough, obstinate, rigid man, never known to yield except to Goethe, before whom, however, he bowed down and worshipped with nigh disgusting prostration.

He deserves to be remembered as the 'first promoter of the faith and study of Sebastian Bach.' Sir George Smart describes him thus:

> Zelter is a pleasant, unassuming man. One of his fingers is crooked. He was formerly a mason. He said he had built ten or twelve houses at Berlin, and did not begin music before he was twenty.

In writing to Rellstab, on May, 3, 1825, Beethoven sends 'all love and esteem to Zelter, the honest preserver of true art.' One night, walking through the streets of Berlin with a friend, Zelter heard some one playing a pianoforte. After listening for a while, he seized his friend's arm, saying: 'Come along; that fellow's music is only fit for his own ears.' Schumann, in 'Music and Musicians,' also relates how > . . . old Zelter at a certain passage of 'The Creation' fancied he saw the moon rise, and used to rub his hands at the place, and say delightedly, 'Aha! there we have it again.'

Once in Zelter's presence the conversation turned upon genius and its limits. Zelter asserted that nothing was impossible to genius, and that 'a genius can curl the bristles of a pig.' It was Zelter who introduced Mendelssohn, then a boy of twelve, to the poet Goethe. Master and pupil spent a fortnight at Weimar under the poet's roof. At the age of fifteen, Mendelssohn's comic opera, 'The Two Nephews,' was rehearsed for the first time with orchestra. It was at the supper which followed, when Mendelssohn's health was proposed, that Zelter made his famous remark:

> My dear boy, from this day you are no longer an apprentice, but an independent member of the brotherhood of musicians. I proclaim you independent in the name of Mozart, Haydn, and old father Bach.

It was with Zelter's assistance that the first and ever-memorable performance of Bach's 'Passion' was given on March 11, 1829, under Mendelssohn's baton. Zelter had bought the score of the 'Passion' as waste-paper at an auction of the goods of a deceased cheesemonger! Zelter spoke of Bach as 'a sign of God, clear but inexplicable.' Three years later Mendelssohn heard of the death of Goethe, and he remarked, 'Mark my words, Zelter will not live long now,' and his old master did not very long survive the poet.

Schumann's parents were not really musical, but the father favoured his son's love for music and provided for him the best instructor to be obtained at Zwickau, namely, the organist of the Marienkirche, J. G. Kuntzsch, who appears to have been struck with Schumann's gifts. But ere long the master declared the boy could progress alone—the pupil was outstripping the master. Schumann always retained an affection for Kuntzsch, and in 1845 dedicated to him his 'Studies for Pedal Piano,' Op. 56, and when Kuntzsch celebrated his jubilee at Zwickau, in 1852, Schumann wrote him a charming letter, which was one of many, Wasielewsky says. At twenty years of age Schumann went to Leipsic as a resident student in the house of Frederich Wieck, when Clara, Wieck's gifted daughter, was a little girl of eleven. Under Wieck, Schumann pursued his pianoforte studies with enthusiasm. Having strained and permanently injured the third finger of his right hand by a mechanical device which he hoped would strengthen his fingers, Schumann had to relinquish the idea of becoming a pianoforte virtuoso. He became a pupil of Kapellmeister Dorn, a notable figure in the musical world of Leipsic, and desired to perfect himself in the theoretical part of creative work. Dorn soon recognised the unusual talent of his pupil, and Schumann afterwards spoke of his indebtedness to Dorn's instruction, saying he had learnt more from his teaching than Dorn could believe. He never forgot his old master, and in correspondence with him addresses him as his 'dear and most honoured friend,' and makes him his confidant in many matters.

To a Viennese gentleman who told Chopin that people were astonished at his having learned all he knew at Warsaw, the composer gave the reply, 'From Zywny and Elsner even the greatest ass must learn something.'

The earliest of Chopin's teachers was Zywny, a Bohemian by birth, who played the violin and taught the pianoforte. Some say the boy was allowed to spend most of his time in improvisation, but it is certain that Zywny gave his pupil

> . . . a thorough grounding in the rudiments of his art, encouraged and guided his talent for improvising, and so advanced his progress at the keyboard that before long he became the wonder of all the drawing-rooms of Warsaw.

Elsner was intended for the profession of medicine, and had no regular instruction in music beyond harmony lessons with a theatrical director at Breslau. Sir Henry Hadow describes him as > . . . a good-tempered, easy-going old Kapellmeister, who did his pupil the greatest service by teaching him to love Bach, and then allowed him to go his own way without further supervision. . . . Liszt is probably right in drawing special attention to the moral value of Elsner's teaching. . . . The most successful teacher is he who knows how to train mediocrity and to leave genius a free hand.

When, at the age of twenty-two, Chopin went to live at Paris, Kalkbrenner was the leading teacher of the pianoforte, and Chopin consulted him about lessons. Kalkbrenner proposed to teach him for three years, and this Chopin regarded as too long a time. He wrote to his old master for advice, and the reply was to the effect that Kalkbrenner would only destroy Chopin's originality. Elsner wrote:

> That quality in an artist (who continually learns from what is around him) which excites the wonder of his contemporaries can only arrive at perfection by and through himself. The cause of his fame, whether in the present or the future, is none other than his own gifted individuality manifested in his works.

A genius '. . . should be allowed to follow his own path and make his own discoveries.'

Chopin did not study with Kalkbrenner, but attended some class-meetings, and was gracious enough to dedicate his Concerto in E minor to him. Mendelssohn told Chopin soon after that he (Chopin) had nothing to learn from Kalkbrenner, as he played better than the latter. A couple of years later Chopin writes to a friend :

> Pupils of the Conservatoire, nay, even private pupils of Moscheles, Herz, and Kalkbrenner (consequently clever artists) still take lessons from me, and regard me as the equal of Field. . . . I feel daily how much I have still to learn, and become the more conscious of it through my intercourse with the first artists here, and my perception of what every one, even of them, is lacking in.

Prof. Niecks says :

> Kalkbrenner may not inaptly be called the Delille of pianist-composers, for his nature and fate remind us somewhat of the poet, for Delille was extravagantly over-rated in his lifetime. Delille left France at the Revolution of 1788, and came to England, where he translated 'Paradise Lost.' He is said to have been a > . . . fluent versifier, whose knack of turning out vigorous paraphrases exactly suited the taste of his contemporaries.

Wagner's earliest teacher for harmony was Gottlieb Müller. This was when he was fifteen years of age. But the pupil was destined to be idle and refractory :

> He would do nothing but talk nonsense about the personality of the notes, and other fantastic absurdities ; and Müller decided 'it was useless to imagine that he had any gift or aptitude for serious music.' When, in 1830, Wagner left school and matriculated at the Leipsic University, he determined to master counterpoint, and became the pupil of Theodor Weinlig, the cantor of the Thommasschule, who became to Wagner 'what Dorn was to Schumann, or Lesueur to Berlioz.' After six months' tuition, Weinlig dismissed his scholar, saying: 'You may go now, for you have learned to stand on your own legs.' And it does not appear that Wagner received any further instruction, save what he obtained himself by perusal of Beethoven's works. Dorn says :

> I doubt whether there ever was a young musician who knew Beethoven's works more thoroughly than Wagner in his eighteenth year. The Master's Overtures and larger instrumental compositions he had copied for himself in score. He went to sleep with the Quartets, he sang the songs, he whistled the Concertos (for his pianoforte playing was never of the best).

And Sir Henry Hadow writes :

> Through Beethoven's music Wagner found a new world open before him, and after a few days of almost ecstatic wonder and delight, determined that he would devote his whole life and work to its exploration.

Weber also was a visitor at Wagner's Dresden home, and remained throughout Wagner's life 'as a demigod : from "Die Feen," his boyish opera, until after "Lohengrin," he used freely the Weber phraseology and melodic contours.'

Verdi's musical gift was discovered by an itinerant violinist, called Bagasset. The boy Verdi and he struck up a friendship, and Bagasset suggested to the father that music should be Giuseppe's profession. Many years afterwards Verdi sought out the violinist, then very poor and old, and gave him all the help he could. Verdi's first lessons were with the organist of La Roncole (his birthplace) named Baistrocchi, who declared at the end of one year that he could teach the boy nothing more. Later Verdi had the good fortune to be helped by a friend of his father's, Barezzi, of Busseto, whose eldest daughter Verdi subsequently married. This gentleman was a good musician, and could play several instruments. The Philharmonic Society of Busseto met at his house, so young Verdi frequently listened to performances of music. The director of the Society and organist of the Cathedral, Provesi, became Verdi's teacher ; but when the pupil was sixteen Provesi dismissed him with similar words to those of his first instructor, adding, 'He will go far, and one day become a great master.'

Brahms at the age of seven had pianoforte lessons from Otto Cossell, who was pleased with his pupil's success, but regretted he wasted so much time at his 'everlasting composing.' After three years it was Cossell himself who suggested a change of teacher, and, after several refusals, Marxsen, the Royal Music Director at Altona, consented to take him as a pupil for pianoforte only, and with him Brahms remained a number of years. At the age of fourteen he made his debut as a pianist, and though an agent was anxious to arrange a concert tour for the boy, Marxsen's advice was followed, and after two more concerts Brahms went back to his studies, more especially that of composition. Marxsen impressed upon his pupil the need for a thorough knowledge of Bach, and the great importance of a critical study of Beethoven.

Dvorák's musical ambition was aroused by the bands of itinerant musicians who played on great occasions in the inn of which his father was proprietor. The village schoolmaster, Josef Spitz, gave him his first lessons in singing and the violin. When twelve years of age he was sent to school at Zlonitz, and here the organist, Liehmann, became his master. Under his tuition (says Hadow) Dvorák

> . . . ventured out into new fields, and learned something not only of organ and pianoforte but of the elements of musical theory. No doubt the instruction was very imperfect and very narrow of range, but within its limits it was gratefully accepted ; and the old Kapellmeister deserves some honourable mention as having been the first to discover evidences of unusual capacity in his shy, simple-hearted pupil.

As a last example, let us go back to an English composer of the 17th century. Henry Purcell was a pupil of Dr. Blow, who is described by the late W. H. Cummings as > . . . the very master Purcell then needed, for he was eminent for his goodness, amiability, and moral character, and combined with those excellent qualities all the learning and experience of a sound musician. It speaks strongly for his singleness of heart and the total absence of envy and jealousy in his nature, that recognising and proclaiming the remarkable abilities of his pupils, Purcell and Jeremiah Clarke, he resigned his appointments at Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral in order that they might occupy those prominent and advantageous positions.

After Purcell's death, Dr. Blow became once more organist at Westminster Abbey. How often is his tomb in the Abbey visited? An interesting story is told of the Emperor of Brazil, who, when in London, was an indefatigable sight-seer. Dean Stanley had made him promise to visit the Abbey before he left England. The Emperor put off his visit until almost the last moment ; he arrived at the Deanery, unexpectedly, at about two o'clock one Sunday afternoon, and requested to be shown the wonders of the Abbey. The Nave was prepared for service, and it was only with difficulty that the Emperor was shown some of the chief brasses on the floor. Then the Dean was amazed by the Emperor's most unexpected request: 'Now I want to see the tomb of Dr. Blow, a famous organist. Do you know where it is?' The Dean did know, and took the Emperor to the tomb, which is in the North Aisle, behind the organ. The inscription on the monument was read to the Emperor, and it has been said—though not verified—that he hummed the upper line of the music which is engraved upon it. 'The most jealous belief in the English school of music could never have conceived that Dr. Blow's fame could have reached as far as Brazil.' And this is part of the inscription on the monument: 'Master to the famous Henry Purcell.'

A NOTE ON FASHION

By J. H. Elliot

Thackeray, when illustrating 'Vanity Fair,' clad his puppets in contemporary costumes in preference to those of the period in which Becky and Amelia had their fictitious being, on the ground that the former were less offensive to sartorial æsthetics—a viewpoint which he sought to justify by demonstration. It is, however, amusing to note that, judged by modern standards, the costumes of Thackeray's own day appear to be several degrees more hideous than those of the Waterloo period. Thus the wheel of fashion turns. Nor have Apollo, Orpheus, and the rest of them remained oblivious of its revolutions. Along with common male humanity they have discarded the classical tunic and passed through the knee-breeches stage into plus fours and Oxford bags; for, truly, the sway of fashion is as potent in the arts as elsewhere. As with mantles, so with music; as with costumes, so with composers.

It will be of interest, perhaps, to put forward a few tentative inquiries into the matter. To probe it deeply would afford neither pleasure nor profit, for by the time we had hacked through the jungle of contradictions and inconsistencies and reached a clearing, the wheel would have taken many more turns; moreover, we could not apply a governor to control its giddy revolutions even if it were possible to evolve one.

Nor should we presume to assess the taste of a bygone age. Judged by the standards of to-day, no doubt, the Victorians appear lamentably—Victorian. An age which virtually overlooked Bach* and ranked Mendelssohn as the equal of Beethoven is deserving, one might say, of our most crushing sneers. But it is well to reflect, before we commit ourselves, that if the past eighty years could bring about so radical a change in outlook, there is no reason why the next eighty years should not do likewise. Each successive generation imagines itself to be reared upon the apex of progress; but evolution recks not of its self-conceit.

The whole subject, indeed, is illimitable, and it will be well to restrict ourselves to the most striking present-day aspect of it—in a word, the breakdown of Romanticism. In this connection, then, it is barely sufficient to say that the Romantic movement, having been fairly launched, was compelled to voyage on to its destination and be replaced by an entirely new vessel; for, in truth, there was no destination, and though its boards may have called for some patching and its hull for an occasional fresh coating of tar, there was no a priori reason why it should not, like the craft of Vanderdecken, have sailed the seas for ever. Fashion—or, if it be preferred, the spirit of the age—sank her, and it will be fashion that will salvage her, should she ever rise to the surface again.

What, then, are the particular characteristics of this age of ours which are inimical to the Romantic outlook? Doubtless the emotional strain of the war contributed very largely to the final and widespread reaction against the Romantic spirit and the pseudo-'realism' which it implies, and helped to broadcast a conscious or unconscious realisation that art, after all, is not life, though the two necessarily touch at many points.

The nucleus, however, had taken root long before in the commanding geniuses of Romanticism itself. The aspects of music which, thanks to the predilections of the present era, are daily becoming more and more insistent—to wit, intellectuality and austerity—while not entirely conspicuous in the less progressive figures of the 19th century, are startlingly evident in the last periods of Beethoven and Wagner. In the former they held almost absolute sway; crude romanticism gave place to an impressionistic sense of life's mystery, and of the conscious necessity for austere detachment—a revival, as it were, of stoicism—the substitution of universal ideas for individual sensations, of objective philosophy for subjective psychology. In the latter, Romanticism struggled with new-born conviction, preconceived theories with evolutionary necessity. 'Tristan,' written direct from heart and brain, touched a new note; the amorous riot of 'Die Walküre' was burned in a purer, whiter flame. It is nonsensical to apply to the music of 'Tristan' the term 'hot-house,' or to suggest that there is a complete abandonment to passion in its texture. The opening phrase of the 'Vorspiel'—although some commentators have labelled it the 'Confession-of-Love-and-Desire Motive,' or some such monstrosity—should be sufficient to show that Wagner is concerned here with ideas rather than feelings—that, in fact, the music represents the union of mind and heart symbolised in the drama itself. Wagner could never be quite the same after 'Tristan,' and the return to the former style ('Götterdämmerung' and 'Parsifal') proved sterile and insincere.

This new spirit, moreover, manifested itself more decisively in the progressives who followed, although it took a variety of shapes. Strauss, when he arrived at his own authentic style, followed the footsteps of the Wagner of 'Tristan' by (as it were) intellectualising the emotion which he was called upon to reproduce. The Straussian bent for absolute programmisation is not confined to musical glaciers, windmills, and scaffolds; it penetrates even to emotion itself, and the highly-wrought passion-storms in 'Salome' and elsewhere appeal to the purely musical instinct as feelings described rather than feelings experienced. Doubtless there are many passages in Strauss where sheer emotion predominates over deliberate, calculating intellect, but there is nothing parallel with (for example) the utter abandonment to passion of his great contemporary, Scriabin. In these two, perhaps, we find the strange paradoxes of emotion presented intellectually and of ideas expressed emotionally—neither of which is Romanticism proper, and both of which foreshadow its ultimate negation. Debussy, again, lived beyond the bounds of both emotion and intellect, in the vague, shifting atmosphere of the land which lies between them—not, perhaps, a healthy district in which to take up residence, though wholly admirable as a holiday resort. The consideration of the final and complete reaction against the Romantic spirit, now to be discerned in almost every direction, we may—and perhaps ought to—leave to the next generation but one. Sufficient for our present purpose that the reaction has indeed set in, and that it calls for some tentative inquiries which may perchance reveal a danger signal.

* The 'overlooking' of Bach was on the part of the generation that followed him; the Victorians helped to revive him.—Editor.

The matter requires something more than a mere submission to current predilection, which, whether individual or universal, is quite probably no more than skin-deep. We may be justified in saying—and few of us would hesitate over the matter—that the first movement of the 'Choral' Symphony is incomparably superior to the third; but it might be more profitable if, during the progress of that interminable number, we gave ourselves over to mental reflection rather than to the mere physical effort of stifling yawns. We might start with the assumption that, of its kind, the movement is magnificent—which, surely, is no less than truth. If, then, we have here the authentic Beethoven, why is this particular aspect of him distasteful? Because (we might proceed) it represents that slightly sentimental, that romantic (ultimate censure!) reflection upon what Arnold Bennett, in an apt phrase, has called 'the melancholy of existence.' It withdraws for a moment from the contemplation of sublime mysteries and mighty issues, passively to brood; and this is not an age which broods. Can one press the indictment further than that, which in itself is no condemnation?

We must, then, question our right to regard this awakening of a new spirit inevitably as a step forward in the direction of ultimate perfection; for we have no guarantee that it is not merely a turn—and, for aught we know, a wanton and gratuitous turn—of fashion's wheel. We have no objective standard to guide us, and an idiom which we may pronounce obsolete in one decade will disconcert us by arising with renewed strength in the next. Thus, a short while ago one might have spoken with impunity of the triviality of Mozart; to-day, one may hail him the very king of composers and obtain at least a respectful hearing. In one era the glory of music is conceived to lie in its power of close commentary upon human problems; in the next, to rest on its transcension of the commonplace.

In music, we have simultaneously leapt forward with the modernists and back to the classicists, for in both the growing need for austerity is met. With the former we may don the hair-shirt and set out in quest of the Perfect Fourth, or some other 20th-century Grail; with the latter we may steep ourselves in objective beauty and rhythmic vitality—subtleties in comparison with which the idioms of Romanticism seem crude and brutally direct. There are remoteness and tranquillity in pure beauty, a sanctuary from the prying Romanticism which seeks to plumb the rough turmoil of the spirit and interpret it before the world. Bodily laceration or ice-cold objectivity—either will serve to free us from the morbid introspection of the Romanticist.

This is, moreover, an age which is loth to call a spade by its dictionary name. We hate a platitude—which is probably why Mendelssohn now lies beneath a shower of half-bricks; yet (and here is the rub) a platitude may be as true in essence as the subtlest of allegories, and as close to the cosmic standard as the the most esoteric system of philosophy. The fact remains, however, that we are badly out of sympathy with composers who, whatever their degree of emotional ardour, throw down all their cards with a frank gesture. Thus the Tchaikovskys of this world are de trop in æsthetic circles, although their method qua method may prove in the long run to be as good as that of more sensitive craftsmen; certainly it is no worse than that of the pseudo-progressive who, having no cards to throw, bluffs unashamedly with a hand of gratuitous cacophony and Heath-Robinson orchestration.

But this superficial survey might be protracted for ever, and the warning to be drawn from it is, in all conscience, obvious enough. But it is the obvious which is so easily overlooked; and it is well occasionally to remind ourselves that, in the absence of any objective scheme for our guidance, it behoves us to beware of proclaiming this turning or that turning to be the road to ultimate perfection.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XXXII.—John Daniel

Among the composers of the last years of Elizabeth, John Daniel is very important, especially as a lutenist; but, as in many other cases, his biography has not hitherto received adequate treatment. Dr. Fellowes says that 'little is known of John Daniel, except that he took the degree of B. Mus. at Oxford, in 1604, and was one of the Court musicians to Charles I.' ('English Madrigal Composers,' 1921). Davey's 'History of English Music' gives six lines, with little added information, save referring to his well-known publication of 1606. A really fine appreciation of Daniel was given by Mr. Philip Heseltine (Peter Warlock) in the Musical Times (April, 1925).* But biographical data is scant; in fact, he writes: 'Of his life we know next to nothing.' Fortunately, I have succeeded in unearthing some new facts of his career, though there are not a few gaps that still await a patient student of musicology.

Fuller ('Worthies') is our authority for the interesting information that John Daniel was a younger brother of Samuel Daniel, and was thus in the Shakespearean circle. His birth-date may be given as probably 1564, and the place was probably 'not far from Taunton, in Somerset,' where was born his better-known elder brother in 1562. Of his musical education we know only that he studied under his father, John Daniel, who, according to Fuller, was a 'music-master.'

Nothing else is known of John Daniel till about the year 1587, when we find him as chief household musician to Thomas Lord Burgh, who was Governor of Brill from 1587 to 1595. Quite an interesting letter in the Hatfield MSS. (Part 6, p. 68) throws new light on this portion of Daniel's career. It seems that Lord Burgh returned to England early in February, 1596, and had entertained Sir Robert Cecil with a 'consort of music,' contributed by Daniel and his three articled pupils. So pleased was Queen Elizabeth's great Secretary of State with the musicians of Lord Burgh that he begged the latter to give him Daniel. Lord Burgh, who was soon after appointed Lord Deputy of Ireland, wrote to

* The article is now included in 'The English Ayre,' by Peter Warlock, issued by the Oxford University Press (1926).

Cecil on February 24, 1596, that not only could he have Daniel, but also the three boys, 'one of whom both plays and sings an excellent treble, and one other hath a voice for a very high measur.' He adds: 'The last [of the three boys] is Jack, of whom I think you have taken best notice. The four, with all his instruments, were all by my worthy companion bequeathed me; choose as freely as where your commandments have most interest.'

Daniel found a liberal patron in Sir Robert Cecil, and he probably continued in the Cecil household from 1596 to 1602. Previous authorities give us the year 1604 as the date of his degree at Oxford; but, as we learn from the official registers, he studied at Christ Church, whence he supplicated B. Mus. on December 16, 1602, and graduated on July 14, 1603, according to the 'Fasti' (1, 302). Soon after he entered the service of Prince Henry.

In 1606 Daniel issued his volume of twenty-one solo songs 'for the lute, viol, and voice,' with a poetic dedication to 'Mistress Anne Grene, the worthy daughter of Sir William Grene, of Milton, Knight.' Of these twenty-one songs, eighteen are solos, or ayres; one is a madrigal for four voices (S.S.A.T.) and lutes; one song is for four voices and two lutes, and one is a lute solo—a set of variations. This folio volume (of which the unique copy is in the British Museum) was printed by 'Thomas Este for Thomas Adams at the White Lion in St. Paul's Churchyard.'

From the Lord Chamberlain's Accounts we learn that in 1612 Daniel received an allowance of mourning on the death of Prince Henry of Wales ('The King's Musick,'* p. 50). For some years previously he had been attached to the household of Queen Anne, and doubtless was present at the performance of his brother's Masque 'Tethys,' produced at Court on June 5, 1610—a masque in which the Tritons sang a four-part song to the accompaniment of 'twelve lutes.' He was also tutor of the boy actors, and in 1615 we find him, as Prof. Wallace writes, 'leader of that old-men's company practising on the reputation of the children-companies, as an asset, under the name of the Children of Her Majesty's Royal Chamber of Bristol' (Patent dated July 17, 1615). In 1618 he had a Royal Warrant to train up a company of children renewed (with permission to assign it to others), and was appointed successor to his brother Samuel, as censor of all plays performed by the Children's Company.† On his brother's death, at Beckington, Somerset, in 1619, the poet named his 'faithful brother' John as sole executor.

The next glimpse we get of Daniel is in 1622, when he edited his brother's works, dedicated to Prince Charles, whose service he had entered on the death of Queen Anne (March, 1619). In that same year (1622) appeared Thomas Tomkins's 'Set of Madrigals' (Songs of 3, 4, 5, and 6 parts), in which each of the twenty-eight 'Songs' was dedicated to separate individuals, including Byrd, Day, Ward, Gibbons, &c., No. 7 being dedicated to 'Doctor Dowland,' and No. 8 to 'Master John Daniell.'

From 'The King's Musick'* it is evident that Daniel was sworn a Musician to King Charles, in 1625. This is the last reference I can trace of him, and it is to be presumed that he died soon after, as his name does not occur in the list of royal musicians for 1626.

As to his music, I cannot do better than quote the following estimate by Mr. Philip Heseltine:

> As a composer of serious songs in extended form he stands second only to John Dowland among the composers of the great period of English song; and for the bold originality of his harmonic sense, which is always controlled by a polished technique, and a sure instinct for beauty of sound—and, too, for the breadth and spaciousness of his style, so widely different from the almost miniature song-forms of Rosseter, Campion, and others, Danyel deserves an honourable place in the history of music. . . . . Danyel's 'Chromatic Tunes,' of 1606, is constructed on such big lines, and each section is so homogeneous and closely knit, that it is difficult to convey any adequate impression of its style by means of short quotations . . . Surely, one of the finest songs ever written by an Englishman.

THE REVIVAL OF MUSIC

By Robert H. Hull

One imagines that everybody possesses, to a greater or lesser degree, what may be termed the Shavian instinct of criticism; an instinct by which one is prompted violently to oppose any popular demonstration in favour of some particular movement. But this attitude is not exclusive to Mr. Shaw; it is the useful function of every critic to check extravagances and to moderate extremes, although by so doing he may find himself in conflict with established opinion. And though, when all is said and done, the unfortunate critic may be at fault in his ultimate conclusions, he may comfort himself, if he has read his Cecil Gray, by remembering of what nature are those people who are always right.

Criticism of musical resurrections is no new thing; several efforts have been made to restrain the undisciplined enthusiasm of the Elizabethan and folk-song revivalists. But viewed from a more general standpoint, the difficulty with which one has to contend arises in two forms: the revival of music by means of press propaganda, and the revival of music by actual performance.

In connection with the former, it may be well to make clear from the outset that the activities to be deplored lie in a sphere other than that in which is contained the admirable research work of Dr. Grattan Flood, Dr. Fellowes, and others; the latter investigations cannot be too highly praised, either on grounds of erudition or dispassion. But the scholars are in a minority, and it would be out of sense to shut one's eyes to the fact that a noisy majority, undisciplined but enthusiastic, has far more chance, as matters stand, to impose its claims upon a willing and partially-trained musical public, than have the few men who have brought to bear upon the subject of 'revived' music real learning and undisputed scholarship.

No doubt scholarship will ultimately prevail, but meanwhile we must recognise the force of counteracting tendencies, of which the following is not one of the least strong.

The power of press propaganda has become considerable during recent years, and in the present connection there is urged upon the musical public at large a practical interpretation of the elementary advertising truth that if you tell people a thing frequently enough, they will end by believing it. The immediate application becomes evident if one considers to what extent musical periodicals are filled with contributions relating to little known composers born prior to the 18th century. It would be offensive and unnecessary to particularise further, and it is not my intention to do so, but in justice to

* 'The King's Musick.' By H. Cart de Lafontaine (Novello, 1909).
† It is well to note, as Mr. W. J. Laurence writes, that the Queen's Revels Company went out of existence in 1608. Mr. Warlock has confused the two companies.

the present subject it is necessary to indicate the prevailing condition. Perhaps the phase is a passing one—there are signs which lead one to believe this to be the case—but so long as the problem is with us it is premature to rejoice until its decease has become a certainty. There is quite a legitimate complaint against this form of propaganda, in that such articles are apt to tell us very little, and it is rare that the works of the composer in question are of genuine interest. There is a definite need for realisation on the part of undisciplined enthusiasts that because a composer lived, let us say, in the 16th century, and left behind him a few indifferent religious works, these are quite insufficient reasons for drawing attention to his existence.

Some of the works of William Byrd are intolerably tedious, and are now beginning to be recognised as such; but at first such an opinion was accounted equivalent to blasphemy. To the revivalist all is sacrosanct; there is little attempt at discrimination.

But if the disciples of revival are in evil case in so far that they often lack the ability to convince, those of us who would restrain their efforts are no less handicapped. As a critic has rightly pointed out, it is difficult actually to prove music to be bad unless it is assumed that one's readers possess the score, and to take this for granted is not justifiable. If this limits the field of criticism unduly, one has to confess that the principle is just; nevertheless, in present conditions, the written word is the closest approximation to illustrative conviction.

The objection is not so strong in the case of a well-known composer. One can write on Delius, for example, with the certain knowledge that typical quotations from representative works will be clearly understood. The same applies to an essay upon any established musician. The objection arises in its most acute form where the material is fragmentary and insufficient, and where the readers have not access to the works under discussion.

One of the conventional arguments advanced in opposition is that had not the work of discovery been prosecuted at some time or another the greatest names in musical history would have remained in obscurity to this day. Such a protest sounds reasonable enough until one comes to make a closer examination of it, for in simple fact the 'great names' of musical history have never been so utterly lost as to necessitate a revival of them. In 'A Musical Critic's Holiday,' Ernest Newman says:

> I believe that this theory of the inevitable failure of any generation to recognise its great composers is a fallacy, and a modern fallacy at that.

Bach may not have been appreciated by the generation which immediately succeeded him, but in his case the lapse was of a very temporary character. England may not have been acutely conscious of him during the early part of the 19th century; still, it was not necessary on that account to make a 'discovery' as though the name of Bach had been forgotten throughout Europe. This same application can be made in respect of other great composers; they may pass into temporary obscurity, but they have never been entirely forgotten. Cyclic reaction is as much a part of music as it is of politics.

From another angle it must be admitted that there is always a danger of one famous composer being exploited to the exclusion of a contemporary almost equally worthy. A particular example of a general grievance may be cited in respect of the much disputed merits of Handel in comparison with Bach. One is not prepared to allow that Handel is the 'greater' musician, nor even equally great; what can be said with fairness is that he has written works more worthy of our attention than some of the less interesting Bach cantatas. A recent brilliant performance of 'The Messiah' has brought a number of people to their senses on this point at all events, while the Bach fever which for a time raged with an intensity calculated to do no lasting good to that composer has shown some signs of abating. But a certain section of the community is always unwilling to concede that Bach could have perpetrated a dull work. This attitude is difficult to understand unless it is to be supposed that the people in question know very little about Bach.

So long as revivalists confine their enthusiasms to the press one has at least a means of defence in so far that the more injudicious of their excitements can for the most part be ignored. But this policy will no longer serve when it comes to a question of actual performance. In consideration of the fact that in this country there are, on the whole, so few performances of new and interesting works, it is much to be regretted that such excessive zeal and energy should be squandered upon uninteresting relics of the past. The real trouble is that there is so little discrimination in this respect, and that we are as likely to have a performance of a dull ancient work as of one that is interesting; in practice the former seems to be the type most frequently selected. And when a dull work receives a bad performance it is all the more necessary to raise the voice of protest. There is a tendency on the part of critics to waive the application of their ordinary standards where 'revived' music is concerned, and to treat it with a generosity the reason for which is not apparent. The saving grace of antiquity is a poor defence in music when it is advanced as the only defence.

What, then, should be the attitude? Clearly our purpose will be in no way served if wholesale condemnation is to be the order of the day: by the employment of such drastic methods more will be lost than gained. But at least one can put forward a plea for careful discernment; a plea that the guidance of responsible authorities be not scorned, and that an attitude of moderation be adopted towards the less controlled enthusiasms of those who are foremost in proclaiming their discoveries. By some such means the desired end may be achieved.

Finally it is suggested that a more active spirit of inquiry into the nature and quality of music made in England at the present time might conceivably yield more fruitful results than a too active research into some of the less profitable fields of music of past ages. We have many composers, not all of them young, writing in our midst to-day. Some have already made a contribution judged to be of permanent worth, while others show promise of doing so. That we are ignorant of the existence of several of them is in no way a sufficient excuse for leaving their work unexplored and unassessed. This country has not been so productive of 'great' composers in the past that we can afford to shirk our responsibilities in this matter.

WILLIAM GARDINER AND THE MUSIC OF NATURE

By Orlando A. Mansfield

III

(Concluded from September, 1927, number, page 810.)

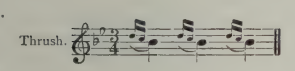
In fulfilment of the promise to reserve for the last article of this series an examination of that portion of Gardiner's work which is consonant with its title, it should first be observed that, as already intimated, this particular division, although superior to the other in quality, is vastly inferior as regards quantity. Indeed, it is not until seven chapters have been inspected that we encounter any sign of the demonstration of the theorem enunciated on the title-page, namely, 'that what is passionate and pleasing in the art of singing, speaking, and performing upon musical instruments, is derived from the sounds of the animated world.' Even then we are only favoured with a couple of engraved plates which are representations rather than demonstrations. But inasmuch as they are intended to represent the 'Song of Birds' and the 'Cry of Animals,' they are at once valuable and interesting as justifying the compiler's statement that 'in the busy world, or in quiet or repose, he has amused himself with taking down these germs of melody.' As these plates are typical of many that follow, to which allusion will be made en passant, it is only possible to give here a limited selection from the large number of examples with which Gardiner has supplied us:

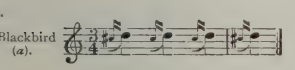
BIRDS

Ex. 1*.

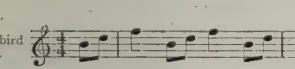
Ex. 2.



Ex. 3.



Ex. 4.



Ex. 5.

Ex. 6.

Ex. 7.

Ex. 8.

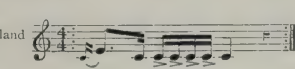
* The writer of this article is responsible for the insertion of time-signatures into the musical examples.

ANIMALS

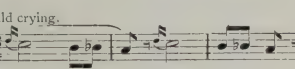
Ex. 9.

Ex. 10.

Ex. 11.

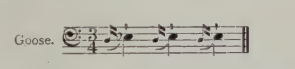


Ex. 12.



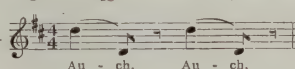
Ex. 13.

Ex. 14.



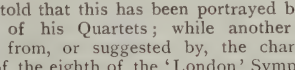
But it is not until Chapter 10 is reached, and nearly two hundred pages have been examined, that our author really arrives at serious discussion of his declared title. Here, in a chapter which deals primarily with 'the exclamations of the human voice,' and is accompanied with various interesting and amusing examples too numerous for quotation, Gardiner asserts that 'we can scarcely turn a page of Haydn, Mozart, or Beethoven, but we find traces of these passionate tones.' This statement is supported by the examples of 'common salutations' above mentioned; while, as 'imitations of laughter,' he quotes from Weber and Handel, selecting from the latter the now well-known passage from 'Haste thee, nymph,' in 'L'Allegro.' Then we have the following as a representation of yawning:

Ex. 15.



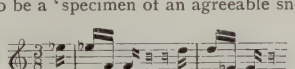
and are told that this has been portrayed by Haydn in one of his Quartets; while another figure—adapted from, or suggested by, the characteristic motive of the eighth of the 'London' Symphonies—is said to be a 'specimen of an agreeable sneeze':

Ex. 16.



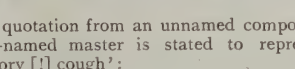
Another quotation from an unnamed composition of the last-named master is stated to represent 'a satisfactory [!] cough':

Ex. 17.



and the following, from Beethoven's String Trio in C minor, Op. 9, No. 3, is given as a representation of 'the brawling voices of three persons in a passion':

Ex. 18.



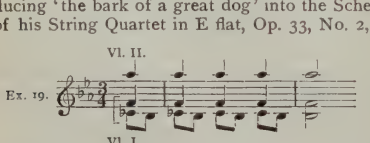
'Such a clatter of sounds,' says Gardiner, 'indicate rage and ferocity,' and 'escape us in the ebullitions of our worst passions'! What would the good man have said concerning much of the 'discordant junk' known as 'modern music'?

Passing from exclamations to cries, Gardiner accuses Rossini of imitating the sobbing of a child in the pensive duet, 'Ebbere per mia memoria,' in 'La Gazza Ladra.' Then follows a singularly inaccurate statement to the effect that the fugue subject in Mozart's Overture to 'The Magic Flute' was suggested by the composer's wife, in a bad temper, breaking in upon his studies! Whereas every student of musical history well knows that this subject was one given by some Court musician of the Emperor Joseph II., as a theme for extemporization, to Mozart and Clementi on the occasion of their famous and not altogether unfriendly contest on December 14, 1781. Clementi afterwards employed the theme as the subject for the Allegro of his Pianoforte Sonata in B flat.

The upper descending tetrachord of the harmonic minor scale Gardiner proceeds to describe as a representation of 'a person weighed down with sorrow and pain,' and implies that for that reason Beethoven has adopted it as one of the themes of his Trio last-named; while a chromatic passage, which Gardiner claims to represent 'the endearing tone of a mother fondling her child,' is said to be 'elegantly interwoven' into one of Haydn's String Quartets. Continuing to confuse post hoc with propter hoc, Gardiner considers a quoted strain from Mozart's 'Figaro' and the subject from the 'Trio al Rovescio,' from the same composer's String Quintet in C minor, to be founded upon 'the natural ebullitions of children at play'; and while Rossini in his 'Semiramide' is stated to have introduced with admirable effect 'the frolicsome squealings of little urchins,' the well-known subject of Beethoven's fifth Symphony, in C minor, is actually declared to be 'indebted' to the 'sudden growling' of the voice produced by 'children in their gambols' attempting 'unawares to frighten each other.' Of all the curious explanations of this subject, and of all the improbable origins to which it has been referred, it is difficult to recall one more 'rich and strange' than that of the Leicestershire stocking manufacturer.

Proceeding from human cries and exclamations to animal sounds, Gardiner supplies musical illustrations professing to represent a dog 'barking with excess of pleasure upon going out with his master,' 'the yelp of a cur whose foot has been trod upon,' 'the whine of a dog tied up,' and 'a mastiff dog.' Then, by way of conclusion, Haydn is charged with introducing 'the bark of a great dog' into the Scherzando of his String Quartet in E flat, Op. 33, No. 2, e.g.:

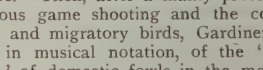
Ex. 19.



—again a confusion of coincidence with design. Further musical examples illustrate the sound of the lowing of oxen, the cry of a cow deprived of her calf, the horse who, although described as 'a more silent animal,' is said to possess a 'shrill and piercing whinney passing through every semitone of the scale'; and concerning the music of the ass Gardiner asserts that 'though coarse, his notes are passing sweet compared to those of his brother mule, who, when he opens his hideous throat, puts every admiring friend to flight.' Finally Gardiner quotes, from one of Haydn's Quartets, the more orthodox representation of the donkey's 'ejaculations,' namely, the descending seventh. From this it would seem as if our friend had not heard Mendelssohn's Overture to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' which had received its first London performance in 1829, three years before the appearance of Gardiner's magnum opus.

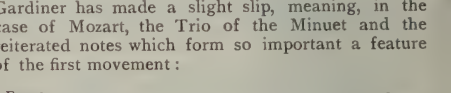
From this point we have to travel on to Chapter 12 to find our author's next allusion to his principal subject. Here we are provided with musical representations of the song of the English robin, of the thrush, and of the nightingale, allusion, of course, being made to Handel's song from 'L'Allegro'—'Sweet bird that shunn'st the noise of folly.' But, strange to say, not a word appears about Beethoven's most accurate representation of the nightingale's song in his 'Pastoral' Symphony, which had been heard in London as early as 1811, and to which Gardiner refers in a later chapter of his work. As an example of 'the tones of the smaller birds,' which, says our author, are made the more difficult to reduce to musical notation because so 'lofty,' and at times 'above the reach of the ear,' Gardiner attempts a tonal representation of the notes of a canary, this being followed by the deepest tones produced by winged creatures, the credit of which latter he assigns to the cormorant, whom he styles 'the basso in his tribe.' Then, after a manly protest against miscellaneous game shooting and the confinement of singing and migratory birds, Gardiner gives us examples, in musical notation, of the 'brisk and lively note' of domestic fowls in the morning and their 'drawling tone' in the evening, afterwards discussing the crow of the cock, which he declares to be audible at a distance of three or four miles, and describes as consisting 'of five notes, generally in the key of B.' These, says he, so inspired the French that 'when Buonaparte returned from Elba, the crowing of the cocks was taken as a certain omen of his regaining the throne; and such was the enthusiasm of the French people that they confidently believed and declared that they heard every cock distinctly shout:

Ex. 20.



Here, it would seem, some Waterloo soldier had been pulling poor Gardiner's leg! Nothing daunted, however, he next gives us a musical sample of the crow of the bantam, and goes on to assert that not only in the Finale of one of Haydn's String Quartets, but also in the Minuet of Mozart's second String Quartet, the composers have 'transferred the language of this chatty brood [hens] with great skill.' Here Gardiner has made a slight slip, meaning, in the case of Mozart, the Trio of the Minuet and the reiterated notes which form so important a feature of the first movement:

Ex. 21.



Determined to ride his hobby to death, Gardiner next declares that 'Rossini has adopted many of these cackling passages in his operas, and to keep the resemblance as close as possible, he has given them to the oboes and clarinets'; and Beethoven is also credited with having 'listened to these exclamations,' the Scherzo from the 'Eroica' Symphony being, in the opinion of our author, 'obviously derived from these barn-door conversations.' Cackling passages and barn-door conversations are good expressions, but, unfortunately, they constitute no proof of a real fact.

Of course the cuckoo comes in for musical illustration, but, strange to say, Gardiner gives a major instead of the orthodox minor third as the interval of this call, asserting that in Leicestershire he has invariably found it to be in the key of D. He then deplores the fact that in his day there was no 'standard of pitch,' although here he would have been more accurate had he said that he was not aware of any; and since the celebrated naturalist, Gilbert White (1720-93), of Hampshire, had asserted that in his neighbourhood he had found, by the aid of a pitch-pipe, that the owls hooted in B flat, and the cuckoos sang in the key of D, Gardiner gravely proposes that the notes of the cuckoo should be taken as the standard of pitch! Apart from the probability that Gardiner's pitch was nearly a tone lower than the concert pitch of to-day, nothing more variable than the song of the cuckoo could have been selected. For a musical illustration of the song of the owl we are wisely referred to the reiterated notes in Dr. Arne's well-known setting of Ariel's song, 'Where the bee sucks,' at the words 'There I crouch, when owls do cry'; while after an illustration of 'the cooing doves in mournful mood,' the figure employed is said to have been 'copied' into his 'Creation' by Haydn, at the words 'Cooing dove that seeks his tender mate,' in the song, 'On mighty pens.'

Gardiner's chapter on the pianoforte, noticed in the previous article, is followed by one devoted to the cries of insects. Here we encounter the doubtful statement that Beethoven, on a hot summer's day, sat upon a stile in the environs of Vienna, and 'caught from nature those imitative sounds in the "Pastoral" Sinfony' (sic). The house fly, we are told, is destitute of voice, his song proceeding from the rapid motion of his wings, this song or sound being invariably on middle F. The large humble-bee, 'the contra-basso of the tribe,' hums a somewhat similar refrain an octave lower—on tenor F—while the 'drone' of the cockchafer, as he wheels by you 'in drowsy hum,' sounds his 'corno-di-bassetto' an octave lower still, namely, on bass F (F below the bass staff).

After a further protest against cruelty to animals, Gardiner asserts that 'the mezzo tones' which emanate from a hive of bees who 'shed a mellow music from their odorous wings,' will, 'on listening . . . be found in the key of F.' Our author then goes on to relate how, on one occasion, being 'placed in the gallery of the Royal Exchange,' he found 'the buzz of two thousand voices' to be 'perceptibly amalgamated into the key of F.' Later on he declares that this key should be termed the 'key of nature,' since 'the cries of animals, the buzzing of insects, the roar of storms, the murmurs of the brook, and some of the grandest sounds of the natural world are to be referred to this harmony.' All of which, however greatly we may dissent from Gardiner's conclusions, only goes to prove his indefatigable industry in collecting facts and making observations concerning 'the Music of Nature.' Then the chirp of the cricket he regards as consisting 'of three notes in rhythm, always forming a triplet' on middle B. The grasshopper has, in his opinion, 'a less powerful note.' Consequently, in view of the statements recorded by classical writers concerning the songs of 'these delicate creatures,' Gardiner concludes that 'as a race of musicians they must have greatly degenerated.' The so-called 'death-watch,' which our author more or less correctly describes as 'a sound resembling the tick of a watch, which proceeds from a small spider,' he declares to be produced by 'two insects, probably the male and the female, calling to each other'; and the pitch of these calls he claims to have 'detected' by personal observation to be on middle B flat and G respectively. Lastly, the gnat, which, he says, 'in the night-time, on waking out of sleep,' he has at first 'taken for the sound of a post-horn at a remote distance,' possesses 'a clear and well-defined note' on middle A. Hence, says Gardiner, 'he may be called the trumpeter of the insect orchestra.'

With the exception of several valuable music plates, illustrating, as before, 'the sounds of the animated world,' we arrive at Chapters 35 and 36 before again coming to grips with our principal subject. Of these chapters the first deals with 'The Roar of Storms,' and in this our author likens 'the experiment of rolling a portion of rock into Heldon Hole, in Derbyshire,' producing a noise 'more terrible than the whirlpool of Charybdis,' to a chorus—which he had adapted from Haydn—in his oratorio 'Judith,' to the words 'The Lord devoureth them all.' In the second chapter, on 'Ominous Sounds,' we are reminded of various classical legends, and then of the Cornish fishermen's refusal to put to sea after hearing a mysterious sound off Land's End, and also to the acceptance by the English peasantry as 'a certain presage of disaster and death' of the 'croaking of the raven or the thrilling of the screech owl.'

We have now to pass on to Chapter 40, on 'Composition,' for our next reference. Here, alluding to the music of Haydn, our author says that it was at first regarded as 'so wild and out of keeping with what English ears had been accustomed to' that Jackson, of Exeter, notorious for his Te Deum in F, 'compared it to the ravings of a bedlamite.' Gardiner, however, considers that Haydn 'was the first to recognise, in the language of Nature, those vivid sounds which so powerfully move us, and by which he has animated his musical art.' Hence he concludes that 'in descriptive music, unaided by dramatic scenery, Haydn has even surpassed Mozart.' Beethoven, too, he considers, 'has drawn many thoughts from Nature'—a milder and more reasonable statement than that all that was 'passionate or pleasing' in the music of the masters must have been prompted by 'the sounds of the animated world.' After mentioning, with the shrewd eye of a business man for business, his introduction of the best classical movements into his adaptations 'Judith' and 'Sacred Melodies,' Gardiner states that at the Derby Festival, in 1828, he made an attempt to secure the performance of two numbers or 'chorusses' (sic) from Beethoven's Mass in D, arranged or adapted by himself, 'but the effects were thought so strange, even by the talented London performers, that they were bewildered and lost.' Considering that 'another twenty years must pass away before these pieces can be repeated with success,' Gardiner's instinct was almost prophetic; for, although his arrangements or derangements have been swallowed up in what Carlyle would have called 'the oblivion of small potatoes,' and although the Mass in D was performed privately in London on Christmas Eve, 1832, at the house of Mr. Alsager, it was not until 1846 that the London Philharmonic Society, conducted by Sir Michael Costa, gave the first public hearing of this magnificent work in Great Britain. After this there is scarcely any direct reference to the subject proper. Although somewhat impeded owing to the paucity of examples possible in the space so generously permitted him by the Editor, the writer of these articles ventures to hope that his efforts will be found to be sufficient to deepen interest in Gardiner's work where the former is already in existence, and to arouse it in cases in which it is as yet latent or inert. At the same time it is further hoped that these imperfect attempts to discuss William Gardiner and his chief work will be such as to excite the curiosity of readers and lead them to study the book for themselves. A copy is to be found in most free libraries, and one can occasionally be procured for a few shillings through the agency of our excellent English dealers in second-hand music and musical works. And, above all, if these fugitive papers should induce some, several, or even all readers to record for themselves such 'sounds of the animated world' as may present themselves to their notice, these contributions will at least have been instrumental in confirming Byron's statement to the effect that:

> There 's music in the sighing of a reed;
> There 's music in the gushing of a rill;
> There 's music in all things if men had ears:
> Their earth is but an echo of the spheres.

THE LATE W. W. STARMER AND ENGLISH CARILLONS

By W. A. Roberts

The death of William Wooding Starmer, as briefly recorded in the December obituary column, has occasioned very sincere regret. Those who knew and esteemed him for his qualities as a musician and a man, felt a sense of personal loss when they saw the announcement of his passing at the comparatively early age of sixty-one, before he had reached the eventide which is often the happiest time of a busy life.

In one special direction, that of campanology, he had achieved much, and the cult of the carillon as a musical instrument in England is probably largely, if not entirely, due to him. He was its leading apostle, and advocated it with a sincerity which greatly impressed his hearers wherever he gave one of his interesting and lucidly-informing lectures on 'Bells and Carillons,' a subject on which his knowledge, enthusiasm, and patient habit of exactness, rendered him the chief authority. No man is irreplaceable, but it is certain that his successor will be difficult to find.

His training as a musician stood him in good stead, as did his technical accomplishment as an organ-player and pianist, as all will remember who have heard his pianoforte illustrations of bells and bell-music. His knowledge went so far beyond that of ordinary bell-ringers and bell-lovers, that his lectures opened up new vistas in the consideration of the mysterious influences of bells, whose history goes back to the misty ages.

Our first peal of bells, tuned in harmony together, was probably that of Crowland Abbey, that sweet peal whose broadcasting has so greatly delighted us. It was not until the 14th century that the swinging-bell was introduced, with a wheel and clapper, as at present used.

Real change-ringing came into vogue in the 17th century. It is a peculiarly English institution, which flourishes in no other country. We have made it our own, and long may it continue, although broadly speaking it may be said to give greater pleasure to the performers than the listeners. Its chief interest is more mathematical than musical. Starmer's contention was that the carillon, that equally firmly-rooted institution of the Low Countries, raises bell-music to a higher artistic plane.

His creed was that if a great Cathedral visibly represents the piety, liberality, civilisation, and art-skill of a nation, it should have a carillon as well as a ringing-peal; but a carillon alone, if it came to the necessity of a choice between the two. It is owing to his persistent writings and lectures that we know what the word 'carillon' really signifies, and that the fundamental difference between a carillon of bells and a ringing-peal subsists in the fact that a carillon is essentially chromatic in its intervals, while a 'ring' or 'chime' is diatonic.

It is this chromatic characteristic combined with the extended compass, range, and size of the bells, which enables the master of a carillon-keyboard with pedals not only to play the notes of a great variety of music, especially that on a folk-tune basis, but also to interpret their sentiments, and to produce effects which are distinctive, and beyond the powers of any other musical instrument. With Starmer, it was a fixed and unalterable belief that the carillon is the musical instrument in excelsis, for it can be heard by many thousands of people at the same time.

He believed that the real music of bells was only possible to hear when a keyboard and pedal carillon was installed. In the past, English bell-founders were inferior to none in the craft, and the bells made in the mediæval monasteries apparently recognised the presence of overtones. Bell-founding at a later period paid chief attention to what is called the 'hum-note' induced by the striking-note. The discovery by our English bell-founders that a bell has five component sounds has revolutionised bell-founding methods, and resulted in the tuning of bells scientifically adjusted to vibration. But in establishing carillons in England, besides their considerable cost there is the real difficulty of obtaining trained and skilful players. This difficulty Starmer foresaw, and advocated the provision of a training-school in England such as that at Malines. It was to Malines that the young Loughborough town-carillonneur was sent for instruction under the great Jef Denyn. Starmer's practical knowledge of organ construction also enabled him to suggest improvements in carillon-action and mechanism which amazed foreign carillonneurs accustomed to play only on clumsy and fatiguing actions, far less perfect than those devised by British brains. And it is very probable that some further improvement in the action-work, either pneumatic, electric, or both, will enable players to obtain still further degrees of command and expression, at less cost of physical exertion. What the latter entails one can readily understand after a little practical experience. Then in England we have, as yet, no carillon-traditions, or carillon-players like those in Belgium, whose skill is generally hereditary. For instance, Antony Neuwelaerts, the famous Bruges carillonneur, represents the third generation in direct line of notable players in his family.

There is also the necessity of building carillon towers of suitable height. Starmer strongly advocated the utilisation of the Clock Tower at the Houses of Parliament (height, 316-ft.), which is about the same height as St. Rombold's splendid tower at Malines. The writer hoped that some wealthy person would donate a carillon to London, as American millionaires 'are in the habit of doing.'

Starmer's advocacy of carillons was a very real and vital thing, which attracted him to others perhaps less sturdy in their beliefs. Bluff, cheery, and unassuming, his personality was essentially of an English type, especially noticeable when one met him in company of other carillon-lovers—at Malines,

Photo by] [Johnson Bird & Co., High Street, Tunbridge Wells

W. W. STARMER

He would have got rid of 'Big Ben' and his cacophonous voice, and replaced it by a bell of slightly lower pitch, of true and sound casting, in perfect tune, similar to those in all our recent English carillons. One remembers reading in the Daily Chronicle a plea for a great London carillon. Think of it! Half a million people could hear a tune on the bells. Imagine a bunch of sixty or seventy bells near the Serpentine! Would not Peter Pan spring to life and join in the refrain? Bruges, Rotterdam, Queenstown, or other centres where enthusiasts gathered. In him was a combination of humour and good fellowship, and he had made his ideals not merely delights of the imagination, but also guides and inspirations to action, which in his life-time materialised in the great carillons designed and constructed in England, and erected at Queenstown (forty-two bells), Armagh (thirty-nine bells), Loughborough War Memorial (forty-seven bells, weight, 21 tons), Rotterdam

(forty-nine bells), and in the smaller carillons at Bournville and Parkgate, which were erected to his specifications and under his supervision. So that in England a beginning has been made, and we already have four trained and expert carillonneurs (one a Mus. Bac.) now engaged in making traditions for the carillons at Loughborough and Bournville.

Two lectures of his will always remain in memory. One was given in Liverpool Royal Institution, in 1917, to the local members of the I.S.M., who were specially able to appreciate his neat and artistic playing of typical carillon music by Van den Gheyn, Wagenaar, Denyn, and by the lecturer himself in his own 'Aria et Varia,' written for and played by Josef Denyn, at the International Concours de Carillonneurs held at Malines, in 1910.

One apt pianoforte suggestion of bell over-tones which Starmer used to play was the descending scale of C, as he harmonized it:

As Belgian refugees during the war, M. Denyn and his family were received into Starmer's house at Tunbridge Wells, where Starmer was for many years organist at a church which, in the irony of things, possessed only a single bell. I myself am fortunate in being associated with a country church which has a chime of eight bells, played from a carillon keyboard—the only one in Lancashire. Years ago it was highly interesting to be present at the casting of these sweet bells, at Loughborough, and although silver is strictly taboo as a bell-metal, one likes to remember wickedly casting a half-crown into the molten metal, as did others of the party, so that we have a small stake in the tenor bell of 13 cwt. 2 qrs. 22 lbs. It was, after all, an ancient custom for the faithful to make some personal offering on such an occasion, and we made ours in this way. All the same, the best bell-metal must be an alloy of copper and tin in certain proportions. Any other metal—such as iron, steel, or even gold—is an abomination to bell connoisseurs.

The other occasion referred to was at Parkgate, in 1922, when Mostyn House School Memorial Carillon of thirty-seven bells was blessed by the Bishop of Chester, in the presence of a great gathering. Here, on the sunny greensward one summer's afternoon, Starmer held his audience in thrall for half an hour, telling them things about bells which surely had never previously entered into their philosophy. Neuwelaerts, the Bruges carillonneur, also listened from the belfry casement, and occasionally illustrated the lecturer's remarks by touches on the new carillon, which is now used with such novel charm in directing the daily class-movements.

Another feature of Mr. Grenfell's fine school is the beautiful Chapel in which, in the Hope-Jones organ, is a pedal bourdon in two powers. The school-buildings, by the way, have absorbed the old 'George' Hotel where Handel stayed when en route for Dublin, in November, 1741, with the MS. of 'The Messiah' in his pocket. Dublin was then the port for Ireland, and its sailing packets were renowned. There were in those days great visions of Parkgate docks and ship-yards, which never transpired, for the tides departed, and left only a vast expanse of sands, above which the old Marine Parade now dreams of things which have ceased to be. It is very charming to hear Handel's 'Let me wander not unseen' on the Parkgate Carillon, while gazing over the sands of the narrow channel of the Dee, with the soft outlines of the Welsh hills in the distance.

The inauguration of the splendid carillon of forty-two bells at Queenstown Roman Catholic Cathedral, in 1919, is another ineffaceable memory of a solemn religious ceremony befitting a great occasion, with a long procession of bishops and dignitaries, in which the frail frame but dominating personality of the aged Cardinal Logue was a conspicuous figure. Another notable person was Starmer himself, the projector of the carillon, wearing a straw hat and knickerbocker suit, being content to remain behind the scenes, and thus not required to don what he described as a 'pontifical topper.'

In his company and that of Mr. Denison Taylor, the eminent bell-founder, one heard the carillon from various points as played by M. Neuwelaerts, whose recitals included various examples of what can be done by an expert player on a carillon worthy the name, in such music as a Sonata by Van Hoey; 'Ave Maria,' Schubert; Short Organ Prelude in C, J. S. Bach; Adagio from the 'Sonata Pathétique'; and the 'Rubens' March by Benoit. The 'Ave Maria' as a baritone solo, with the arpeggio accompaniment played on the higher bells, was quite affecting in its ethereal beauty. Starmer, for one, drank in the perfect tones with tears in his eyes. And at nightfall, when the carillon had ceased playing, who could ever forget the sudden illumination of the spire and seaward façade of the great Gothic building in brilliant lines of electric lights?

I met Starmer again at Rotterdam (1921), and Loughborough (1923), when the new carillons were inaugurated. Rotterdam has forty-nine bells (a scale of four chromatic octaves, the largest bell exceeding four tons in weight), and the Loughborough War Memorial Carillon has forty-seven bells placed in a specially-built and handsome bell-tower, 150-ft. high, at a cost of £20,000. Chevalier Denyn, from Malines, was the player, and among those present were Dame Melba and Field-Marshal Sir William Robertson. For the occasion, Sir Edward Elgar specially composed a 'Memorial Chime,' and has thus led the way in a new field for our composers, and a new order of bell-players. Rotterdam Carillon is not so well-placed, for the City Hall is in a very busy, noisy street. But the superior tone of the English bells, in this instance from the Loughborough foundry, was again manifest. They have yet to acquire traditions, but even now they possess the same qualities of brightness, clearness, and velvety softness which distinguish the bells cast by Hemony Van den Gheyn, and Dumery, along with a scientific exactness of tone throughout the scale which the foreign bells do not possess and cannot be expected to possess, having been generally cast as single bells in different centuries and tuned by rule of thumb. Modern methods of bell-casting and tuning require more space to discuss, but in these directions Starmer played a part. Himself not a change-ringer, he was not concerned with the antipathy of bell-ringers to carillons, a feeling possibly actuated by jealousy—or, it may be, fear, but surely in either case groundless, for in England it is certain that carillons will never succeed in ousting ringing-peals, whose methods rest on a technical basis the very opposite of both the emotional effect and technique of the Flemish carillon.

The lectures Starmer gave at Birmingham University, in his capacity as Lecturer in Campanology, no doubt drew further and special attention on the theoretical side to bells and carillons, which the University made a subject for Course V. of the music section for second year's course for the honours degree of Bachelor of Music. The lectures given during the first term of the year dealt with bell-making and tuning, acoustics of bells, carillons and carillon construction, carillon music, chime-tunes, &c., and in addition to the carillon at Bournville a practice clavier was available for students. The lecturer's scheme was to ensure that a carillonneur should be a well-educated musician whose musicianship should at least equal his expertness as a player.

Starmer's other musical activities were fully noticed in the obituary notice of The Times, to whose columns he was a frequent contributor. It is unnecessary again to recount them, except that it may be permitted to add a personal note respecting his courageous and enterprising work in stimulating public appreciation of carillons, in whose educative value he believed so firmly. Whatever their future development may be remains to be seen, but even in his life-time he saw them pass beyond the experimental stage in this country and in the colonies, so that one may fitly quote the lines: 'He does not die that can bequeath some influence to the land he knows.'

Music in the Foreign Press

HAYDN

In the February Musik, a capital essay by Ernst Merz deals with Haydn's significance as a creative artist:

There can be no doubt that Haydn is the founder of modern music. It is not a new tuition that came from him, but a new essence of musical art. His creative work exists of its own right, and for its own purposes, and has stimulated and directed creative force in others. He is generally called a 'classic,' but this is not accurate in the usual sense. He is in many respects a problem. When we deal with his works, we are constantly encountering one or another of the vital problems of art. Which Haydn is a 'classic'? Is it the youthful Haydn, who unintentionally and quite apart from the conventions of his time enkindled the hearts of his contemporaries? Is it the second Haydn, in whose music (from the Quartets, Op. 9, to the works of 1780 or so) a new creative principle stimulated hitherto latent powers? Is it the Haydn of the third period, who (from 1781 or so) created the principle of thematic working-out? Or is it the fourth Haydn, the Haydn of the visits to London and after, with whom the principle of working-out rises to poetic freedom? There is also the Haydn of the Masses and Oratorios, whom we must connect with the Beethoven of the 'Missa Solemnis.' The truth is that we do not know which Haydn should be conceived as 'classical.' His work is one constant stream—uninterrupted creation. There was a time when criticism wrongly assumed that clarity and purity of form was incompatible with romanticism—a notion due to the attitude of those romantics who, being theorists and nothing more, proclaimed their contempt for form. Musical history, succumbing to this fallacy, saw in Haydn nothing but his form, and overlooked all that is live and seminal and forward in his music. So that it is to the romantic theorists that the extraordinary misrepresentation of Haydn, a pioneer of musical romanticism, is due. The true history of modern music cannot be written until Haydn—and especially Haydn in his youth—is seen more clearly and fully. Historians must devote attention to studying the young Haydn. In respect of Haydn from the historical point of view and the critical, practically everything remains to be done. Pohl's biography, with its complementary third volume by Botstiber, gives us nothing but the raw materials for a good biography. But no good biography is possible unless Haydn's music is seen as live music.

SCHÖNBERG ON TONALITY AND ATONALITY

Le Monde Musical (December 31, 1927) publishes the text of a lecture delivered by Schönberg at the Paris Ecole Normale de Musique (an admirable institution, by the way, which should be better known in this country):

To decide between the claims of tonality and those of atonality has become a matter of feeling, or rather of conviction, quite apart from considerations of fact. Music depends not only upon acoustics, but upon logic and upon those particular laws which result from the combinations of tone and time. Hence the need for perceptible relationships between the single, brief musical facts and especially harmonic facts. Tonality, tending to render harmonic facts perceptible and to correlate them, is therefore not an end, but a means. If it is at all possible to achieve unity and terseness without resorting to tonality, tonality ceases to be needful. Its relinquishment, it is true, implies a corresponding relinquishment of the structural processes founded upon the very principle of tonality; and therefore early examples of works written 'by means of twelve notes between which no relationships exist other than their relation to one another' (Schönberg prefers this definition to the term 'atonal') were necessarily very brief. Schönberg accordingly sought a substitute for the structural principle founded on tonality, and intends to set forth the results of his search so soon as he shall have found replies to certain questions still in abeyance. It is likely that, for a time at least, consonant chords will have to disappear from music if the tonal principle is eliminated—not for physical reasons, but for reasons of economy. A tonal consonance asserts its claims on everything that follows it—and regressively on all that came before. Hence consonant chords tend to occupy an excessive amount of room, and might disturb the balance proper to the new scheme—unless some way is eventually found either of satisfying or of suppressing the requirements of such chords. Despite the fact that several of the composers who had followed him along the path of 'atonality' have swerved by now, Schönberg is convinced that a time—still far distant—will come when audiences will find dissonances natural and the harmonic phenomena resulting from dissonances quite intelligible.

[Note.—For this summary, use has been made also of another version of Schönberg's dicta, which appeared in Musique (January 15, 1928) in a translation from the German by Stefan Freund.]

BRUCKNER PROBLEMS

In the Signale (January 18), S. Brichta writes:

About two months ago came the almost incredible news that Bruckner's seventh Symphony had been performed for the first time at Milano, and that part of the public and most of the critics had objected to it. This is but one instance of the attitude to Bruckner of the whole musical world outside the German countries. France, England, and America hear very little of Bruckner's music, and do not seem to wish to hear more. Nearly everywhere, therefore, Bruckner remains a problem: his music is considered as tedious, or as difficult to understand. More propaganda abroad, leading to more general and better acquaintanceship with his works, will show in the long run whether it is on account of circumstances only that Bruckner leaves so many countries indifferent, or whether his music lacks the universal significance which would make it as popular abroad as it is among his own people.

RAVEL

In the January Rassegna Musicale, Guido Pannain devotes a long and substantial essay to Ravel. He points out how wrong it is to consider Ravel as a humorist rather than a poet; or, according to the fashion of the moment, to proclaim the 'objectivity' of his music. Ravel is essentially subjective and romantic in many of his works. Throughout his thirty years of creative activity, he has remained true to himself and impervious to alien influences.

BARTÓK'S RECENT WORKS

In the January Melos, Otto Gombosi writes:

Bartók's line of evolution has always remained firm and straight. It was determined on one hand by his far-seeing closeness to Hungarian native melody (so far-seeing that it enabled him to solve the problem of finding a principle of style and form for the coming Hungarian music), and by his live interest in all new happenings in music. His evolution led him to inquire ever more earnestly into the possible uses of polyphony and into form problems; and in the matter of harmony to strive towards the elimination of all unessentials. As regards certain external features, he was temporarily influenced by Stravinsky, from whom, however, he differs fundamentally. What with Stravinsky is mere play, is with Bartók an impassioned quest. Where Stravinsky leaves rhythm to do its work mechanically, Bartók gives us live, pulsing, inspired orgies of rhythm. Stravinsky's manifold, fluent, asymmetric and dynamic forms show nothing like the will to stability, dignity, inner completeness, and organic necessity of form that is Bartók's.

NEW DUTIES FOR CRITICISM

In the same issue of Melos, Heinrich Strobel says:

The radical change that has taken place both in musical tendencies and in the musical outlook—demonstrated by the growing popularity of certain typically modern works such as Stravinsky's and Hindemith's, and even more so by the growing interest in very old music, in the music of Mozart, Handel, and Verdi—lays new duties upon critics. They can no longer rest content with complacently dwelling upon their individual subjective impressions, nor upon associations that have nothing to do with music. It is imperative to discover some sort of basis which will help to eliminate so far as possible all subjective sources of error. The modern method must consider works as so many intransmutable units, and exclude all judgments founded on mere feeling.

A PLEA FOR MEDIÆVAL MUSIC

In the January Musique, Ch. Van den Borren suggests that greater attention should be devoted to early music, from the French 12th-century organa onwards. This music, he says, is neither primitive nor barbaric. It can and must be performed exactly as it is written. It contains much that will appeal to music-lovers.

MOZARTIANA

The January Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft contains articles by H. Rietsch on Mozart's Violin Concerto in G major; H. Volkmann on Mozart's stay at Dresden; and Stefan Strasser on 'Suzanna and the Countess.'

CONTEMPORARY RUSSIAN COMPOSERS

An article in the December Sovremennaya Muzyka gives information on Gavriil Popof (b. September 12, 1904), whose output consists of a Septet for strings and wind, a Pianoforte Suite, a Concertino for violin and pianoforte, and songs. An analysis of the Septet follows.

In the January Muzyka i Revolutsiya, 'E. M.' writes on Mikhaïl Krassef (b. 1898), whose output comprises about eighty part-songs, sixty children's songs, and an imposing number of miscellaneous works. In the October issue of the same periodical are articles by L. Sabaneev on Alexander Krein, and by A. Drosdof on Mikhaïl Gnessin.

VIRGINAL BOOKS AT PARIS

The November Revue de Musicologie contains the third instalment of M.-L. Pereyra's survey of the MS. virginal books in the library of the Paris Conservatoire.

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' Edited by H. C. Colles. Vols. 4 and 5: P—Sonatina; Song—Z.

[Macmillan, 30*s.* each vol.]

Alphabetical order is responsible for a good deal of disparity in the importance of the volumes from a consultative point of view. The B's and S's will soon make volumes 1 and 4 well thumbed—Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Byrd, Berlioz, Chopin: the Dictionary opened with a galaxy. Vol. 4 runs it close with Pianoforte, Schubert, Schumann, and Sonata. And one might write a good book on opera by the aid of vol. 5, with its articles on Spontini, Weber, Verdi, Wagner, and Strauss.

In our review of vol. 1 we complained that the article on 'Counterpoint' was silent concerning the methods of the Tudor and Elizabethans, and we thought it probable that the omission would be made good in some later article. It is—by R. O. Morris, in his substantial addition to 'Polyphony.' His lucid discussion of Rhythm should check some of the nonsense talked about the so-called 'tyranny of the bar-line.' Some composers, editors, and conductors, are so anxious to avoid any suggestion of metre that they reduce polyphonic music to a flabby mess. 'Measure in itself is good,' says Mr. Morris:

> The regular periodic rise and fall which measure gives is an element of power for music as for poetry. But freedom must be able to assert itself from time to time within the domain of law, for where there is no freedom the spirit will not enter. The 'free rhythms' of the present day are unbalanced and self-conscious; moreover, the constant, abrupt changes of time and bar are bewildering to the players and a terror to their conductor.

The trouble with the 'free rhythm' enthusiasts is that they forget the 'domain of law.'

To 'Purcell' Mr. Colles adds a fourteen-column discussion of the composer's characteristics—one of the best things in the Dictionary. There is in some quarters a tendency to over-rate Purcell: his real position seems to us to be well expressed by Mr. Colles's remark that he is 'of the same order, if not of the same calibre' as the acknowledged masters. Calibre counts. The laudatory article on Reger is deficient on the musical side: for example, his organ music (which, unequal though it is, contains some monumental works, and may yet prove to be his most permanent legacy) deserved at least a column. The original articles on Schubert and Schumann, by Grove and Spitta respectively, remain, with slight corrections: they might have been cut with advantage, in order to allow of a fresh critical estimate. Dr. Fellowes's article on the 'Service' could hardly be bettered.

Judging from the later symphonies, Sibelius is a big enough man to deserve more liberal space than Mr. Blom was allowed. The Editor adds a neat pendant to 'Sonata.' Those of us who regard unaccompanied violin sonatas as freaks which ought never to be allowed to escape from the studio to the concert-hall, will chuckle over this comment of Mr. Colles:

> Amongst the laborious products of Germany in the generation after Brahms, the name of Max Reger stands forward for many ingenious manipulations of the sonata type, and especially for his revival of the sonata for violin alone, which had been dormant since Bach. Reger's activity in this direction has recalled to some minds the saying as to the wisdom of letting sleeping dogs lie.

Let us be thankful that the kindred infliction, the unaccompanied suite for violoncello, has been left snoring.

Mr. Edwin Evans is very readable on Schönberg. The lengthy article on 'Song' stands, with short additions on recent developments in various countries. It seems a pity the historical portion of this article could not have been cut liberally in order to allow more space for these additions. The English school of song-writers of the past few decades, for example, is far more important than the era of 'Simon the Cellarer' and 'Dawn, gentle flower.' The importance of Parry and Stanford, not only on the musical side of the song, but in the beneficent influence they have exerted through their choice of words and their scrupulous regard for verbal accent—here was a topic worth a couple of columns. Instead, about half-a-column disposes of the post-Sullivan English song. Strauss brings an excellent article from Mr. Kalisch—judicious and well proportioned. We wish Eric Blom's article on Stravinsky had been longer: it breaks off just when we want a discussion of the composer's latest pseudo-classical back-to-Bach phase—one which may well turn out to be fruitful. The Wind Instrument Octet, for example, with its dry cogency and athletic counterpoint, exploited the characteristics of this family very fully, and changed them from bores (which they usually become when used as a family for any length of time) into a very lively lot. In the addition to 'Symphony' (Richard Aldrich), the column on English composers in this form might well have contained a reference to Bax, Goossens, Bliss, and Holst.

The article on Sullivan deals overmuch with such creative small fry as 'O hush thee, my babie,' 'The distant shore,' and other songs concerning which the least said, &c. And we think most Church musicians will dissent from the valuation of Sullivan's hymn-tunes and anthems.

Tallis, Taverner, Tomkins, and Wilbye are in the safe hands of Dr. Fellowes. The Editor brings Parry on 'Variations' up to date. Incidentally, we are glad to see his tribute to the set of Tchaikovsky in the A minor Trio. This composer, in fact, deserves a high place as a variation writer, few though his essays in that form may be. From the Editor comes a discerning article on Vaughan Williams; Mr. Bonavia revises and abridges the old article on Verdi, and adds a capital supplement of eight columns; and Dr. Herbert Thompson does a similar service for Dannreuther's 'Wagner.' Vogler still has more space than he deserves; and Spitta on Weber might surely have had a touch of the knife, if only in order to allow more space for Hugo Wolf.

With the five volumes before us, we are able to realise the size, and even more, the difficulties of the task. With every revision of a work on such a scale as 'Grove' the problem of allotment of space must needs grow. The holding of the balance between the claims of historical and contemporary interests is an especially ticklish operation to-day, after a period of upheaval and developments in all sorts of new quarters. If the new edition leans rather to the retention of a good deal that just now seems discredited, that attitude may yet prove to be right. For a study of the history and development of an art we need data relative to changes of taste and values hardly less than facts concerning the art itself. On the whole, then, we think there will be (if there is not yet) general agreement that this part of the enterprise has been wisely handled.

As to the new material, opinion seems already to have settled down to a highly favourable verdict. Here we single out one name only. As to how far an editor should himself be a contributor is a question akin to that other profound problem: should the captain of a cricket team be a bowler? It is fatally easy for a captain to put himself on too soon and often, or too late and rarely: there will not be many days on which the old hand in the pavilion will not decide he has bowled too much or too little. Mr. Colles probably felt some of the misgivings that must beset Mr. Fender at times. But there can be no grudging voice in the pavilion (so to speak) concerning his success. He is in excellent form throughout, whether—to continue the figure—he is on for a long spell with full dress articles, or merely taking an odd over or so with fillings-up or notes.

Here, then, is our new-old 'Grove,' the musician's stand-by and companionable guide, ready for another couple of decades of service—a big job well done.

---

In our review of vol. 1 (November Musical Times) we speculated as to whether Mr. Colles and his blue pencil would have spared 'the only paragraph allotted to a dog in any biographical dictionary'—Turk, a Bath singer's pet whose epitaph was set to music in canon by Haydn. When vol. 5 came we turned to Turk with foreboding . . . . Alas! for poor Turk and his canon . . . .

---

'Julius Stockhausen.' Von Julia Wirth (geb. Stockhausen).

[Englert & Schlosser, Frankfurt-a-Main.]

This copious collection of Stockhausen's letters, well edited by his daughter, will be especially acceptable to those who are interested in the circle of Brahms, Joachim, and Clara Schumann.

Both Stockhausen (1826-1906) and his mother Marguerite Schmuck (1803-77) had associations with England. The mother's were pleasant. The son's were full of bitterness, and it would need Mr. Herman Klein to refute the harsh accusations of insensibility and philistinism which we find in these descriptions of mid-Victorian musical England.

Marguerite Stockhausen was Alsacian. Her husband was a German of Cologne, who became naturalised French. Jules was a student at the Paris Conservatoire. His lack of success there increased his German leanings. He declared that he owed little or nothing to the Conservatoire, that he learnt to sing outside its precincts, from Garcia, and that the music of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Schubert, and Brahms made Germany his spiritual home. In 1864 he declared for German nationality, and became a citizen of Hamburg.

The elder Stockhausen, who was a harpist, had settled at Paris in 1812. The first letter in the book comes to him there from Beethoven. Stockhausen married Marguerite Schmuck in 1822. She was (unlike her son) a born singer. Her teacher said to her, 'When you came into the world the Creator gave you a push and said, "Go, sing, my child."' She was a great favourite in England, and later on, when Jenny Lind was carrying all before her, there were 'old hands' who still sighed for Madame Stockhausen.

On July 26, 1827, Stockhausen writes, 'Since May 14 we have made £500. Expenses, £211, balance, £289.' Madame Stockhausen sang a duet with Sontag before George IV., who was enchanted. The Stockhausens took their children on tour with them. In the winter of 1829 they were giving concerts in Scotland with Catalani. The 1830 letters record another tour in which Stockhausen, with Malibran and Bériot, essayed 'a new means of travelling, namely, the Steam Wagon, . . . . here called Rail-Road . . . . by which we covered the distance between Liverpool and Manchester . . . . in an hour and fifty-five minutes.' The prudent Madame Stockhausen preferred to go by road.

A letter from Madame Stockhausen to her husband describes the 1839 Norwich Festival, at which Spohr conducted his 'Calvary.' There were festivals in those days! The local clergy denounced the text of the new oratorio from their pulpits.

'Spohr was in the congregation at the Cathedral last Sunday when the preacher spoke against it. . . . For all that, the hall was as full as an egg, and people paid five shillings for the book of words. . . . The concert was not over till half-an-hour after midnight.'

The Stockhausens were well content with England, and out of their English earnings they bought property in Switzerland. Years afterwards Jules tried to reap the same rich fields. The tone of this series of letters is quite different. For one thing Jules was an idealist, whereas his good mother had been happy to give the public what it wanted; and there was something else—Jules had not a great voice.

The story of his career and his eventual celebrity should interest every singer who is determined to sing and get on without possessing great natural power. We have an impression that Jules was something of a prig. But he will probably have the sympathy of the majority of readers of this book in his almost religious faith in the superiority of German romantic music over all that was popular in the Paris and London of his young days. And everyone must respect his pertinacity.

While he was still at Paris he found out Garcia and pinned his faith to him. Garcia moved to London and Stockhausen followed, although his parents withheld supplies; for his mother, the born singer, could not understand what he wanted with so many lessons. Surely, she suggested, he had only to sing in order to know how.

Stockhausen came to London in 1849. 'The season is bad,' he writes, 'the committee of the Gloucester and Worcester Festivals engage names, not singers.' In the mother's letters we heard no such complaints.

His idols are Pauline Viardot-Garcia (whose top notes, however, are, he says, ugly, and who labours under the delusion that she can sing any rô'e, thereby undertaking some that lie too high for her) and Jenny Lind, whose departure from Liverpool on her American tour in 1850—a kind of State departure—is described. We also hear echoes of the English religious controversies of 1850-51, that were occasioned by the establishment of a Roman Catholic Episcopate.

He sings the bass solo in the Ninth Symphony under Costa, who 'insults Beethoven,' and is enough to make one 'rage and curse.' The soloists were drowned by Costa's chorus and orchestra. Elsewhere he admires the energy of London choral singers, who are superior to the Parisians, but he begs leave to smile if anyone praises the London orchestras. If he sings, his little Swiss ditties are encored, but Schubert leaves the public cold. 'The English public! The provincial public! What does it know of music? . . . . It is like a child, only to be attracted by gaudy colours.'

One day he bewails that he will never have the voice to sing oratorio in the immense spaces of English concert-halls. On another he has successfully sung in 'The Creation'—a work unknown to him—at only twenty-four hours' warning. After a year he can say something for our climate. Disagreeable, wet, and changeable as it is, it braces the nerves. A singer who comes over for three months rarely has a good day, but if he stays for a year he is thoroughly invigorated. A year is, however, enough for him. 'I need a country where I can find artists, not tradesmen. Here all the musicians are traders.'

Judgments not less sharp are pronounced on the frivolousness of France. Only in Germany is there nothing wrong—except the singing. In Germany he found good voices in the rough, but 'hardly one singer who knew how to execute a mordant, or an actor who knew how to speak his own language purely.'

Stockhausen did not return to England until 1859. In the meantime he had gained rich experiences. He sang for a season at the Mannheim opera. At Vienna, in 1854, he won Hanslick's suffrage by his Lieder-singing. From 1856 to 1859 he was a member of the Paris Opéra-Comique company. He seems to have been stiff and uncouth as an actor, but his singing in Boieldieu and Méhul won nothing but praise. An odd factor in his situation was the disapproval felt in the family circle towards his stage work. His mother (who at thirty-seven had given up singing) seems to have suffered remorse for ever having taken to so worldly a calling, and considered in derogatory to the family's solid burgess position that her son should be a 'theatrical.' The only musical occupation sufficiently dignified for a Stockhausen was to teach. Julius groans, 'To be a schoolmaster at thirty! No, not now, or ever!' A teacher, nevertheless, and a very distinguished one, he became in the last period of his life (Frankfurt, 1878-1906).

Stockhausen never knew Schumann. Clara Schumann first heard him sing her husband's songs in 1854, and recognised him as worthy of admittance to her circle. She completely met Stockhausen's notions of what a German woman, artist and mother, should be. It was only a step thence to the friendship of Joachim and Brahms.

Wagner's name first appears in 1859. Wagner was at Paris, and wrote to ask Stockhausen for the collaboration of a German choir which he had organized at Paris. Stockhausen was no Wagnerian. He was too much engaged with the other camp. But he went to Bayreuth in 1876 without overmuch prejudice, and certain things impressed him. 'We have to deal with the most magnificent creation of our time. . . . But, you know, we are a tasteless nation, and rarely have a sense of proportion. Wagner is a new proof of this national failing.'

His criticism of the 1876 Siegfried (Georg Unger) has been echoed by many a Bayreuth critic since. 'A big young robust tenor, but with baritone quality, and without diction, without intonation or stagecraft; an unmusical child of nature who is better at imitating a bear than the bird which shows Siegfried the way to Brünnhilde's rock, and whose song he has to mimic.'

Stockhausen's affections, then, did not embrace the whole of Germanism. What he craved for, by temperament, was the earnest sentiment of Brahms's music. He cared nothing for the music—Berlioz's, Rossini's, Verdi's—which was to be enjoyed in Napoleon III.'s scintillating Paris His home-sickness for a tender and melancholy sort of music would be more touching if all the time there were not a certain self-righteousness in his preference.

He first met Brahms at the Lower Rhine Festival in 1856. The two got on together famously. 'Man kommt zu nichts,' writes Brahms to Clara Schumann, 'vor diesem französischen Sänger.' There are many letters from Brahms here. His curious dislike of England comes out in them. Since he did not know England, it may have been partly due to Stockhausen's unflattering reports.

If Belfast and Dublin wish to know what the eminent baritone thought of them in 1870, the reference is p. 336. He was touring the British Isles once more, after becoming a European celebrity. 'Mapleson and Tietjens are the ruination of musical taste.' Mapleson cut out the final symphony in Schumann's 'Widmung.' 'There must be no symphony—only shrum, shrum; then the house will come down.'

Englishmen do not, he says, understand expressiveness, and when they see anyone in a passion, they remark, 'What a pity! He is an enthusiast!'

The English reader must be allowed to smile and to reflect that, with all respect for the great artist that Stockhausen undoubtedly was, he clearly had no sense of humour, and that in these letters of his, particularly to his young wife, whom he married at thirty-eight, there is a tiresome, gushing strain. After reading some hundreds of them, one wonders if there is not a common factor to be made out between the more cloying portions of German romantic music and this complaisant sort of domestic sentimentality of his. It is not so much that an Englishman cannot understand the expressiveness, the 'Ausdruck,' of Stockhausen's family correspondence, as that he does not like it.

His last visit to London was in 1872. He came away disappointed both artistically and pecuniarily. He retails a shocking story of the gallery calling 'Author!' at the end of a performance of 'Cymbeline.' 'Could such a thing have happened in Germany? I think not.' His Schubert and Schumann songs were, except 'The Wanderer,' not appreciated. The accompanist at the 'Monday Pops.' was pitiable. He left the 'great money-making land,' he says, 'with pained feelings.'

Among the later letters in the book, is one of much interest from Hermann Levi (1899), pointing out in the course of a friendly controversy faults of accentuation in Brahms's songs which the loyal Stockhausen did not wish to recognise.

The tributes to Stockhausen's musicianship and artistic understanding scattered up and down the book are impressive. The conductor Bernard Scholz has said that whoever did not hear Stockhausen in his best period does not know of what effect the masterpieces of German song are capable. His enunciation and his vocal quality combined in such a unity that it was hard to say which was the more admirable. His masterly breath-technique enabled him to phrase entirely according to his musical impulse.

Scholz often accompanied Stockhausen, both as pianist and conductor, and he compares his rubato with Chopin's. The great singer would appear to take numerous little liberties with the time, but the pianist had only to keep going quite steadily to find the singer's rubato was so delicate that he was never out with the accompaniment. The word of order was Free Phrasing on a solid rhythmical basis. C.

---

'Henry Purcell.' By Dennis Arundell.

[Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*]

A reliable English book on Purcell—i.e., one which should embody the results of the research of the past few decades—was badly needed. Here it is. The author has modest space, it is true (a mere hundred and thirty pages), but he uses it to such advantage that there is little feeling of shortage. He wisely disposes of the biographical side briefly, and so is able to discuss the music with very fair comprehensiveness. His enthusiasm is a little untempered at times, and many of us (who are no less ardent Purcellians) will still think that Parry was more right than wrong in certain strictures on the Church music. It is easy to say: 'Parry was so prejudiced against the Church music of the Restoration that there is little temptation to agree with any of his opinions on the subject: he seems to have totally misunderstood the period.' (This sounds uncommonly like prejudice against Parry, by the way.) But how many of us can listen to Restoration Church music, even some of the best of Purcell's, without irritation at the shortwindedness of most of it, the 'gabbling Hallelujahs,' and the trivial instrumental interludes? Mr. Arundell, it is true, admits that 'to us—who for the most part have to judge by the printed page—the result [of the gabbling Hallelujahs] is little short of trivial.' But the 'printed page' for once in a way is sufficient to go upon, despite the fact that 'often the baldest efforts on paper become electrically brilliant when sung.' Mr. Arundell's main defence of this feature of the Restoration school is that 'we are biased by the undeniable fact that we do not think as the 17th century thought.' To us the 'Hallelujahs' seem fatuous. 'To congregations of that time they did not seem fatuous, and it may well be that our sophistication has brought with it a lack of simplicity which is rather a loss to us than an achievement that warrants any self-congratulation.' Very well; apply this critical method to certain of Purcell's successors. Take that monument of fatuity, Kent. Can anybody defend his complacent nothings to-day? 'Yet to congregations of his time' . . . .! No; it won't do. Despite the tag, there are some details of taste that can be disputed, and the 'gabbling Hallelujahs,' no matter how august their writer, are bad for two solid reasons: they are poor regarded as musical material; and they are hopelessly inadequate as an expression of the tremendous word concerned. In this matter, as in too many others, Purcell was the victim of the taste and manners of his time. The point is dwelt on, because it exemplifies a danger-point in revivals. The problem is to hold the balance fairly between the historical and musical claims.

One might even put up a defence for poor Burney in the matter of Purcell's dissonances. Of course the Doctor was often wrong, but he was more often right than present-day critics admit. Some of the dissonances quoted with warm approval by Mr. Arundell are hideous. We need not edit them away, but still less should we suspend our aural judgment. Our line is to regard them as examples of harmonic experiment that do not 'come off'—the kind of thing that every composer worth his salt has perpetrated.

However, this review will be unfair if it gives an impression that Mr. Arundell can see no spots on his sun. On the contrary, he is quite frank about some of Purcell's lapses. His real achievement, however, has little to do with the question of valuation. His book is so attractive to the ordinary reader as well as to the musician, that it should very materially help along a real Purcell revival. An unreal one is only too likely so long as so much of Purcell's best work is not to be had in cheap and handy performing editions. We shall never get the right view of him till we realise that he was to the plain man of his day what Sullivan was to that plain man's descendant. He has the stuff of popularity in him yet, but he must be brought out of the museum—even dusted down a bit (e.g., fresh texts written where the original are unusably bald or otherwise unfit). This admirable little book will put both musician and plain man on the right track.

H. G.

---

'Encyclopédie de la Musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire.' (2me Partie—Technique, Esthétique, Pedagogie—vols. 2 & 3.)

[Paris: Delagrave, 85 frs. per vol.]

With these volumes is reached a most business-like and useful part of this giant and at times rather lubberly publication—a part that, like the whole of the work, will prove far more useful when alphabetical indices will render reference easy.

Vol. 2 is devoted to the human voice and to the organ. Drs. J. and H. Glover deal with the physiology of the voice; A. de Martini with the history of singing, and with singing itself; Raoul Duhamel with the physiological culture of the vocal organs, and Jane Arger with the evolution of vocal technique from the beginning of the Christian era to the present day. The specialists who deal with the organ form an imposing array of universally known and esteemed authorities: Charles Mutin (the instrument), Alexandre Guilmant (forms, performance, extemporisation), André Pirro (the art of the organist—an admirable essay, historical, technical, and critical), and Alphonse Mustel (the harmonium). This second part would suffice to render this volume invaluable and quite unique of its kind.

Vol. 3 covers all other musical instruments, including the mechanical. Again, most of the monographs are the work of first-class experts (some of them, it is true, less known outside France than they deserve to be). It is a pity that all contributors should not have given a repertory of music for the instruments they deal with. The lists of pieces and books of exercises for flute (given by Taffanel and Louis Fleury) and for bassoon (given by Letellier and Flament) are extremely welcome. Particularly instructive, from the historical point of view, are Paul Garnault's article on the Viols, Marc Pincherle's on the Harp (up to the 17th century), and those on the Lute (A. Mairy and L. de la Laurencie), the Guitar (Emilio Pujol), and the Harpsichord (A. Schaeffner). That on the pianoforte and its technique (L. E. Gratia and Alphonse Duvernoy) is the feeblest, and contains a good deal of perfectly useless rambling—for instance, biographies of composers (on the grounds that they have written pianoforte music), which are dealt with far less inadequately in the biographical part of the work.

M.-D. C.

---

'Art, Love, and Life.' By Ernest Newlandsmith.

[Longmans, Green, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

A passionately religious book by a trained musician is such a rarity that the reader feels discomfort—the right sort of discomfort, be it added: the sort that any sermon preached with conviction ought to induce. For Mr. Newlandsmith's homily is based on the ancient motto of the craftsman, Ad majoram Dei Gloriam; how many musicians now give it a thought—even Church musicians? Modern art has failed, holds the author; the need is for a return to simpler and purer standards. 'A true work of art, like a human being, is sacramental in its nature.' The cant of 'art for art's sake' has made many miss the mark.

> If we were to see a man building a house, and upon our asking him for what purpose he was building, he was to reply: 'Building! Why, I'm building for the sake of building,' we should probably think the man a simpleton. When, however, an artist says that he works at Art for Art's sake, we are inclined to think him a very clever fellow.

Very clever fellows will have no use for Mr. Newlandsmith and his gospel of art as 'the greatest of all links between heaven and earth, between God and man.' Yet it is a faith that has been not too fantastic for many of the world's greatest creative geniuses in every department of art. It has moved the author to give up a career as a violinist—a career in the ordinary professional sense, that is, for he still plays, but as a wandering minstrel, in the open air as often as may be, with the countryside folk for listeners, his fee (it seems) such gifts in kind as are necessary to maintain existence. Not many of us can do that, so shackled have we allowed ourselves to become; but the next best thing is beyond nobody. A mere grain of the faith that speaks in this book would serve to check the materialism that is the worst threat to the artist to-day. Here, then, is a courageous evangelist, a voice in the wilderness. Most grown-ups are too busy to listen; but a stray one or two may hear, and will work the better for being helped to recapture some dimmed ideals.

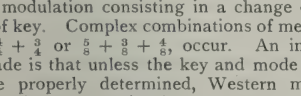
H. G.

'Mélodies populaires Serbes (Serbie du Sud).' Recueillies par Vlad. R. Georgevitch. Introduction par Ernest Closson.

[Skoplje, 1927.]

A very useful book, containing four hundred and twenty-eight folk-songs, most of which were unpublished so far, and some of which are very beautiful. There is a Preface (in Serbian) by M. Georgevitch, and an interesting technical Introduction by M. Ernest Closson, in which the modes, modulations, rhythms, and metres are tabulated and discussed.

Among the peculiarities to which M. Closson draws attention, one of the most remarkable is that form of modulation consisting in a change of mode but not of key. Complex combinations of metre, such as $\frac{2}{4}+\frac{4}{4}+\frac{3}{4}$ or $\frac{5}{8}+\frac{3}{8}+\frac{4}{8}$, occur. An important point made is that unless the key and mode of these tunes be properly determined, Western musicians will instinctively harmonize them wrongly—e.g., given the following (No. 318 in the book):



they would be led to harmonize it in E minor, whereas it really is in D major with final on the second note of the scale. It should therefore be supported, from beginning to end, on the chord of the dominant of D major. M.-D. C.

---

'Leo Ornstein: the man, his ideas, his work.' By Frederick H. Martens.

[Edward Organ, Acocks Green, Birmingham, 7s. 6d.]

This book, published in 1918 in New York, is virtually new so far so England is concerned. It makes good reading, partly because Ornstein's life story is one of unusual vividness and incident, and also by virtue of its quality as a critical study. A good deal in Ornstein's music, and not less his attitude towards the art, is due to his experiences as a ten-year-old in his native Russia. The revolution of 1905 was in progress, and on his way daily to the Conservatoire at Petrograd he had to dodge fierce street-fighting. He was witness of a massacre in Admiralty Square, and on one occasion, hurrying along, music under arm, was thrust into a shop just as a horde of Cossacks came thundering down the street. Fourteen hours passed before it was safe to venture out again. The odd thing is not that his later works are such terrific conglomerations of dissonance, but that his early ones should have been so tame and unoriginal. The Russian Suite, for example, though its opus number is 12, is very ordinary work indeed. His 'Prélude Tragique' in C sharp minor is strongly reminiscent of Rachmaninov's piece. Yet when we reach 'Poems of 1917'—evoked by the war—we find music that cuts itself adrift from all that preceded it. The resources of player and instrument are strained to the uttermost—in one instance ('The wrath of the despoiled') the laying-out is on six staves! No. 8, 'The Battle,' must be seen to be believed—as recitalists avoid it, and the domestic player is helpless, we are not likely to get beyond the seeing stage. These pieces should be 'cut' for player-piano, if not already made available in that way. Perhaps the composer may be induced to visit England again. Those of us who heard his recital in March, 1914, still have vivid recollections of his fine playing—not least in some Bach. He should come and play these 'Poems of 1917,' even at the risk of exciting the derision that greeted his 'Wild Men's Dance' fourteen years ago. (But our ears have had so many shocks since then, from Bellona as well as from Apollo, that we should probably not turn a hair!) Anyway, Ornstein, as player, composer, and man, is clearly a striking figure, and we ought to know more of him. The music mentioned in this review is stocked, like the book, by Mr. Organ. H. G.

---

'En Marge de "Boris Godunof"' (Vol. 2). By Robert Godet.

[J. & W. Chester, 5s.]

This second volume is devoted partly to miscellaneous topics, ranging from an historical survey of the times of Tsar Boris and after, to short biographies of Moussorgsky's friends, partly to remarks on Moussorgsky's style and to a merciless criticism of Rimsky-Korsakov's arrangement of 'Boris Godunof.' Like the first volume, it contains a considerable amount of useful information (most of it compiled from the best Russian sources) rather loosely strung together—or, perhaps one should say, distributed. M.-D. C.

---

'La Décoration Artistique des Buffets d'Orgues.' Par Georges Sevières.

[Les Édition G. van Oest: Paris et Bruxelles.]

This work, published at the subscription of a hundred and fifty francs, is a sheer delight to organ-lovers and all who have an eye for fine craftsmanship in wood and stone. M. Sevières is primarily a writer on music, it seems; here he leaves his usual field, and is concerned solely with the organ as a constituent in the architectural and decorative aspect of the building in which it is installed. The volume is 11½-in. × 9-in., with two hundred and forty pages of text and forty-eight plates of about seventy of the most beautiful organ-cases in France. The author made tours of inspection in England and elsewhere, but confined his detailed descriptions and examples to his own country. We have seen nothing to approach this work, either in research, plan, or (above all) in beauty of illustration.

---

'Feuillets d'Histoire du Violon.' By Marc Pincherle.

[Paris: Legouix, 15 fr.]

Under its unassuming title, this little book contains a wealth of first-rate substance; it throws light upon many an obscure point of old history and on many a modern topic. There are seventeen essays, of which five are devoted to the Czecho-Slovakian school. The one on ornaments in Corelli's Sonatas is of particular interest to players. There is a good deal of wisdom, and not a little wit, in that on Kreisler's arrangements. Brief, but remarkably fine, is that on Ysaye; and the one on the origins of the String Quartet is a really capital piece of work.

M.-D. C.

---

Prof. Sanford Terry has completed a biography of Bach, which will be published shortly by the Oxford University Press. The work (the author tells us) is 'a record of Bach's career, not a critical appreciation of his music.' Illustrations will be an important feature; they will number over seventy, and will consist largely of reproductions of photographs of Bach localities taken by the author himself. The book will be issued simultaneously in a German edition.

The handy series of booklets issued by the Oxford University Press under the general title of 'The Musical Pilgrim' continues to grow. Four further numbers lately received for notice are 'Tchaikovsky's Orchestral Works,' by Eric Blom; 'Schubert II.: Quartet in D minor and Octet,' by Alexander Brent-Smith; 'Mendelssohn,' by Cyril Winn; and 'Schumann's Pianoforte Works,' by J. A. Fuller-Maitland. Mr. Blom treats of four of Tchaikovsky's works—the 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture, the Pianoforte Concerto, the fourth Symphony, and the 'Casse-Noisette' Suite. There is real criticism here, clearly written, and admirable in tone. Schubert is apparently a composer with a special appeal to Mr. Brent-Smith, if we may judge from the author's evident enjoyment of his intensive study of the two chamber works. Readers will enjoy making it with him. Mr. Winn is disappointing. His method is too much that of the dry dissector. He discusses the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, the Violin Concerto, the 'Hebrides' Overture, and the Prelude and Fugue in E minor for pianoforte—the finer of the two works bearing that title. By the way, Mr. Winn says that 'Mendelssohn's compositions for pianoforte alone are few, considering his mastery of the instrument.' Is 'few' the word, seeing that the pieces number round about a hundred, including a good many works of large scale, such as the three sets of variations? One of the best of the 'Pilgrim' lot is Mr. Fuller-Maitland's essay. The practised hand is shown in the ease with which the whole of Schumann's pianoforte output is dealt with in about fifty pages—a triumph for the old brigade! There is even space for an occasional hint on fingering or phrasing. The booklets make liberal use of music-type illustrations.

Two handy pocket guides are 'The Art of Violin Playing,' by Melsa, and 'The Art of Pianoforte Playing,' by Percival Garratt. Each a little less than a hundred small pages in length, they contain a great deal of practical information. Melsa confines himself to the exposition of technical and interpretative matter; Mr. Garratt adds a lot of valuable pointers as to the purchase of studies and other material (Foulsham).

---

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Notes on the Church Cantatas of J. S. Bach.' By William S. Hannam. Pp. 128. Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*

Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music (Incorporated), 1928.'. Pp. 110. Murdoch, Murdoch, 3*s.*

Les Ancêtres Flamands de Beethoven.' Par Raymond van Aerde. Preface by E. Closson. Pp. 137. Malines: W. Godenne.

'King Arthur.' A Dramatick Opera by John Dryden. Libretto. Pp. 80. Cambridge University Press, 2*s.*

'Byrd.' By Frank Howes. ('Masters of Music' series.) Pp. 267. Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'Money for Art.' (How to Establish a National Fund for all Arts.) By Gunn Gwennet. R. W. Simpson, 70, Sheen Road, Richmond, Surrey, 1*s.*

---

Mrs. J. A. Fuller-Maitland has given £1,000 for the foundation at Cambridge University of a prize for Antiquarian Research in Music.

Points from Lectures

Schubert is the popular subject of the month's lectures, and doubtless his star will be in the ascendant during the centenary year.

Speaking of both Beethoven and Schubert, at the Sussex University College Lectureship at Brighton, Sir Henry Hadow said that Goethe and Schiller were one day discussing the fact that the Germans were always quarrelling with each other as to who was the greater. 'It would be very much better,' said Goethe, 'if they thanked God for both of us.' That is the attitude which should be adopted in regard to the two great composers. Schubert wrote at a tremendous rate. It is, of course, well known that one of his most famous songs, 'Hark, hark the lark!' was written in a restaurant on the back of a menu, and the same evening he wrote 'Who is Sylvia?' He was the clairvoyant of music, as Keats was the clairvoyant of poetry. The lecturer suggested that the centenary enthusiasts who are advocating that the 'Unfinished' Symphony should be finished this year, would do better to turn their attention to the poetry of 'Rosamunde,' which so ill-fits the music Schubert wrote for it. He particularly appealed to those who do not yet appreciate the great significance of Beethoven's music, and especially that of his third period, to go on studying. They would be rewarded later on with a great insight into this most magnificent music which had yet been given to the world.

Great music may lose in appreciation, said Mr. Arthur Hirst, at the Heaton Chapel Literary and Philosophical Society, even in the case of its creator himself, if technical interest, or, in the case of a musical performer, the danger of endless repetitions in the name of practice, should so deaden the soul that it become permanently atrophied. It had been said that an artist was a man who could acquire the technique of an art without losing his soul. And this was profoundly true. The two instincts which were in evidence in every living being, and which never die, however much outward circumstances seemed bent upon their destruction, were the instinct for beauty and the instinct for intercommunication or expression. Plotinus, in the 3rd century, wrote, 'The admiration and awe of beauty mark the upward path to God,' and his words embodied an irrefutable truth.

Mr. M. Baritz, addressing a Halifax Society about Hector Berlioz, pointed out that it was entirely due to the Hallé Orchestra and its associations that Berlioz was so well known at the present time in England. Berlioz, who for originality out-Wagnered Richard himself, was a composer with immense ideas. Revolutionary in every way, no one had endeavoured to manipulate an orchestra as he had, and he was gifted with a fearlessness that only came through genius.

Always fresh and informative in manner, Mr. Thomas Henderson, of Darlington, reviewed 'The Composer and his Work' before the West Hartlepool Lecture Society. Many people, he said, thought that composers did not work, but that they simply sat down and wrote, perhaps not even knowing what they had written until they had finished. The fallacy of this idea was shown by analogy. Does a painter sit down and daub away until something happens? No, obviously no. He starts off with a definite intention to paint a portrait or a particular scene; admittedly the idea develops as the execution proceeds, but nevertheless the germ is there when the painter starts. Similarly, the composer's general idea was there before he started.

'Some aspects of organ playing' were discussed by Mr. W. H. Vipond Barry, of Dublin, before the local Society of Organists and Choirmasters. Much of the present elaboration of the organ to produce orchestral effects was, he said, undesirable. In the organ they wanted standardisation. If it were a domestic instrument like the pianoforte it would have been standardised long ago. As it was, they were at the mercy of experimenters, and organists never had the slightest idea of the type of instrument they would have to play away from home. A feature of modern technique was the increasing use of the heels. As to Swell pedals, some people had the same craze for these as others had for vibrato. The majority of organists spoiled their playing by doing something silly. His advice to students of the organ was: (1) sit still; (2) be sparing in the use of the Swell pedal; (3) be careful not to use the pedals incessantly. In modern playing there was too much of the organ and too little of the composer and his music.

At Ilford, Mr. Rutland Boughton, having reviewed 'Six Centuries of Song,' asked Where did they find themselves in the 20th century? That they lived in an age of much strong feeling and a large incapacity for expression was shown in the arts. Cubist, futurist, and other strange expressions were a sign of loss of great mass feeling and of a sense of unity among the great body of people. They could never stop the degeneration of music until they ceased to turn to the critics, ceased to ask composers to lecture to them—until they got back the sense that they belonged to each other—and the arts belonged to all to use.

Diocesan conferences rarely give music a 'show.' Sheffield is an exception, and, at a meeting at Doncaster, Sir Henry Hadow asked for a census of hymns with a view to cut out half of the six-hundred hymns in a book. Further, he appealed for simplicity in the services. Small churches tried to do music which was too difficult for them. 'I love the elaborations in the great places like York Minster,' he went on, 'and I love the beautiful stained glass. But it does not follow that I like the bad glass which I see in large quantities in the small churches. In the same way I do not want village churches to attempt to rival elaborate music which is done in the great churches.'

Royal Institution lectures demand a high intellectual standard, and Mr. H. C. Colles was appropriately the lecturer to treat 'Musical London from the Restoration to Handel.' His first of three lectures was concerned with domestic instrumental music. He held that the importance of the French influence, due to the taste of Charles II., had been much overrated, and he showed how strenuously it was resisted by English composers, especially Locke and Purcell. The visits of foreign virtuosi to England and the rise of the public concert in London had been much more important. John Banister founded daily concerts in London, in 1672, and the difference between the string Suites of Locke and the Sonatas of Purcell was largely due to the fact that the latter had to take into account what might be called the concert-room attitude of mind.

'Vocal Music, Old and New' was attractive, both as a subject and in illustration, to large audiences of Royal Dublin Society members. Dr. James E. Wallace said that when they examined the technique of choral writing they would find that it had not, during the three hundred years reviewed, made progress to the extent that might have been expected, and to nothing like the extent of the advancement of orchestral technique. The fact was that in those old days composers were experts in writing for voices. Their part-writing was excellent, although they had not learnt to write chords, and were given to the introduction of arpeggios and runs which really were meaningless and led nowhere. Madrigal singing in the old times was not only a pleasure to listen to, but most of all a pleasure to take part in. Being an affair of the home it was on intimate terms. Speaking for himself, Dr. Wallace said that he had played many works by composers of all periods, and he could frankly say that for sheer light-hearted enjoyment there was nothing that could take the place of the old English madrigal.

Dr. George Dyson, in the Cramb Music Lecture series of Glasgow University, has had under consideration 'Music in Social History.' Popular choice to-day, he said, was typical of what existed in the 17th century. Three centuries ago people went after what was odd, pleasant to the ear, and entertaining, and that was why there were so many star performers in opera then and in the 18th century. These artists were out merely to show off their voice and technique, and it was impossible to exaggerate the depths to which they descended. In that sense the present was really improved. To this day, however, we listened to the most appalling trash from people who enjoyed reputations for music but who in reality were not musical.

J. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

H.M.V.

The day seems to be coming when we shall take our opera, like so much other music, at home. The broadcasting of opera is proving far more satisfactory than was expected; and the gramophone, which has already scored with a very substantial version of 'Parsifal,' now goes even farther with 'The Valkyrie.' This latest enterprise of H.M.V. is, all in all, the high-water mark of operatic recording. There are twenty-eight sides—in other words, over two hours of the opera. Such joining of flats as is needed by those who don't know the work well is done by the ample notes issued with the Album. These notes include also music-type quotations of thirteen of the representative motives used in the work, and (for the benefit of those who wish to follow the records with score in hand) an outline of the music covered by the records, with bar and page references to the Schott pianoforte and voice edition.

The performances were shared between London and Berlin. London provides the London Symphony Orchestra and Albert Coates, with Florence Austral, Walter Widdop, and Howard Fry; Berlin, the orchestra of the State Opera, conducted by Leo Blech, with Frida Leider, Gota Ljungberg, Friedrich Schorr, and the eight Valkyries, drawn from the State Opera Chorus. It will be seen at once that Berlin holds a hand of trumps in the solo line—in fact, the records made in Germany beat ours mainly because of this. Schorr can hardly be overpraised for his Wotan. The English soloists sing well, but heard turn and turn about with the Berliners, they show, in comparison, a touch of stiffness. Orchestrally there is little to choose, for what Coates loses at times by his impetuosity he more than makes up by the same quality. The opening scene, for example, which falls to him, is the most thrilling bit of orchestral recording known to me. I have had it on again and again, and the climax of brass (the Donner motive), and the thundering drums that follow, give me a thrill that I should like to experience more often in the opera house. The record of the Ride of the Valkyries is less exciting orchestrally than a former recording, but it is far better as a whole because of the fine singing of the Valkyries. If the rest of the State Opera Chorus can play up to these women, Berlin opera-goers are lucky in a department that is too often disappointing. This set of Wagner records leaves room for a few fault-findings in detail, just as even a first-hand performance of a big work must do; but it is remarkably successful in giving us the sweep and the size of the music. After all, these are the essential qualities. Some readers may wish to buy only the pick of the basket. Here is my choice: D1320 (The Prelude and opening scene); D1329 (The Ride); and D1330 ('Wotan explains his decree': thus the label, prosaically, but this record gives us Schorr at his best, besides being fine orchestrally). After these three, I waver overmuch to commit myself. The whole set is numbered D1320-33.

The rest of this month's large output must be run over briefly.

Two of Elgar's 'Bavarian Dances' are played by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the composer. This is early Elgar, but characteristic and very attractive. It records well, too (D1367). One of these dances (that known as 'Lullaby' in its choral form) is also played as a violin solo by Marjorie Hayward, with, for companion piece, Hubay's Intermezzo 'Le Luthier de Crémone' (B2511).

The records of Brahms's 'Variations on a Theme of Haydn,' played by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pablo Casals, are not of the first rank. The tone is less good than usual, but the chief fault is the occasional going askew of the ensemble. For the sake of Brahms's reputation, it is well that we know this fine set of variations to be a good deal less dull than Casals makes them out to be (D1376-78).

Here is Schorr again, this time in a very fine record of Sach's Monologue, with the Berlin State Opera Orchestra under Blech. Schorr makes the average 'world famous' Italian baritones and basses seem mere vulgar noise-mongers (D1351).

Evelyn Scotney sings Saint-Saëns's 'Song of the Nightingale' with too opulent a tone (here is a nightingale ready for the table); and Wolf's 'Song of the Elf,' with a similar fault, for the elf seems quite a big boy (E481).

A couple of excerpts from 'Carmen' are very vividly sung by Maartje Offers, a contralto who is free from the besetting sins of that type of voice (DA824).

Paul Robeson has a magnificent voice, and it is heard to advantage in the 'spiritual,' 'I'm goin' to tell God all o' my troubles.' In 'Deep river' he is too consistently loud, and his top notes are not well produced (B2619).

It is interesting to speculate as to the verdict of the purists had the Bach-Gounod 'Meditation' been an original work by the Frenchman instead of a clever piece of joinery. Could they have denied its beauty? If not, is Gounod justified? The arrangement in its 'Ave Maria' form is sung by Rosa Ponselle, with the harp playing Bach's share, and a violin obbligato. The voice is glorious, but a more intimate style would have improved the performance. Still, it is so effective an affair as to prompt the speculation above. Without blushing, I confess my enjoyment. The fellow song is Massenet's 'Elegie,' which is no less successful, mainly because of the luscious voice (DB1052).

Elsie Suddaby gets the clarity in 'Let the bright Seraphim,' but not all the size; a touch of excitement seems to be the cause. Something of the same fault shows itself in the companion song, Handel's lovely 'O Sleep, why dost thou leave me,' from 'Semele.' She draws some beautiful lines here, but the power is laid on too unevenly for the song. However, this is perhaps a matter of taste. Not so the accompaniment, which is far too vague. Remembering the perfect effect, at the Cambridge revival of 'Semele,' of this air accompanied only by harpsichord and violoncello, I suggest that the scheme be tried for a few old songs of this type (C1437).

I am moved to suggest this partly because of the improvement in harpsichord recording. Hitherto I have found it disappointing; but here is one that is wholly satisfying. It is of Wanda Landowska playing the 'Harmonious Blacksmith' Variations and the Turkish March of Mozart. The latter I have always detested as a pianoforte solo; it had nothing to do with the Turk, and not much to do with music. But this harpsichord version is another matter. There is a barbaric clash that takes it clean out of the drawing-room and school-room. Certainly Landowska knows how to make these bones live (DA860).

Liszt is represented twice. Mischa Levitzki gives a brilliant performance of the sixth Hungarian Rhapsody (D1383); and Arthur de Greef is in his usual good form with the Polonaise in E (D1364). Tonally, however, both records have a strong flavour of tin-kettle.

Rachmaninov has arranged Kreisler's 'Liebesfreud' as a pianoforte solo, and plays it himself with brilliance, plus a good deal of bad tone (DA786).

Organ students (and some ex-students) who wish to hear what can be done in the way of rhythmic flow on their instrument should get the record of Dr. Alcock playing (on the Salisbury Cathedral organ) Guilmant's Interlude in F, Faulkes's Idyll in D flat, and Lemare's Reverie. Much as one would prefer to hear Dr. Alcock in music of more moment, there can be no denying the pleasure this record gives by reason of his delightful playing (C1376).

I hope all the fine organ music won't be given to Dupré, and the light things to English organists. Here is a capital record of Bach's C minor Fantasia and Fugue (the one orchestrated by Elgar) played by the brilliant Frenchman on the Queen's Hall organ. The texture is unusually clear; the Fugue is taken at the right swinging pace, and well worked up to the end. A fat pedal is forthcoming for the long bass notes. Registration is on the reedy side, but there is solidity as well (D1356).

COLUMBIA

How many times has the 'Lohengrin' Prelude been recorded? Anyway, here it is again, played by 'Willem Mengelberg and his Concertgebouw

Orchestra' (to quote the label). The record was made in the Amsterdam Concert Hall, and is a good one—above the average so far as this music is concerned, for the large proportion of delicate high string work touches the gramophone on its weak side. By the way, has anybody ever yet heard the opening and closing passages sound as ethereal as they look on paper? Invariably there seems to be a sense of anxiety and a slight scratchiness, which would almost certainly be absent if these bits could be left to a few players. The climax in the middle lacks a trifle of body. It is duly loud, but lean (L1941).

A brilliant bit of playing and recording is that of Dvorák's 'Carnival' Overture, by the Hallé Orchestra, under Sir Hamilton Harty. (The piccolo has a particularly fine innings.) This is one of the best of recent orchestral records (L2036).

Hardly less good is the 'Ruy Blas' Overture, played by the Wireless Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Percy Pitt. As in the records mentioned above, however, more foundation is needed when the whole band is turned on. The need is for more bass in the brass. The playing is very spirited (9278).

A good omen is the revival of interest in the old-time waltz. We may not all agree as to the purely musical value of the innumerable specimens turned out by Johann Strauss; personally, I find all the 'Blue Danube' family too naïve and tum-tum-y. The present is a suitable moment for a few of our composers to show that a waltz may have more claims than a graceful rhythm. Johann Strauss—number three of his line—is recorded in 'Kunstlerleben' and 'Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald' waltzes, by Johann Strauss the first. His was a busy pen; the Opus numbers of these waltzes are respectively 316 and 325! (9280).

Mandoline bands are not for everybody. But much depends on their choice of work, and the Circolo Mandolinistico Giuseppe Verdi, of Leghorn (a resounding title for such a combination of tinklers, even when they number sixty-five), is admirably suited with the Intermezzo from Act 4 of 'Carmen,' and makes a very effective series of noises with it. The companion piece is the ubiquitous Serenade, 'Les Millions d'Arlequin,' by Drigo (4639).

By now the 'cellist Antoni Sala is (or ought to be) an established favourite among gramophonists. His latest record—a capital Sonata by the old Italian, Porpora—is well up to the high standard we have come to expect (9281).

For brilliancy and clearness it would be hard to beat the record of Joseph Szigeti playing the 'Tambourin Chinois' of Kreisler. Less good (being vigorous and rather shrill where we want delicacy and grace) is his performance of Debussy's Menuet—the charming piece from the early Petite Suite for pianoforte duet (L2037).

The Salisbury Quartet have excellent voices 'well sorted' (to use an old expression), and they record remarkably well. They sing 'Robin Adair' in an arrangement which tempts them to some sentimental dallying with the time; many of us would prefer a more straightforward style; and Horsley's 'By Celia's Arbour,' which is better in every way. I fancy that such a quartet as this would find it well worth while to draw on the best of our old glees—a form peculiarly English and at its best a very pleasant one. The second bass of these singers has a particularly good gramophone voice (4644).

The Choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, directed by Dr. E. H. Fellowes, sings 'The King of Love my Shepherd is,' to the Irish traditional tune 'St. Columba,' and Psalms 122 and 123 to Anglican chants. The hymn is a little on the slow side, I feel, but is good otherwise; the chanting is excellent, the words being very clear and the rhythm far more free than is usual in Anglican chanting. The label curiously ascribes the hymn tune to 'G. M. Stanford,' a composer hitherto unknown. Somebody in charge ought to be aware that the tune is an old one, harmonized by Villiers Stanford. The two Anglican chants, whose composers could easily be ascertained, are described as 'Traditional.' There is no reason why a record-label should not be as accurate and informative as a catalogue (4647).

A couple of duets from 'Aïda' are sung by G. Arangi-Lombardi and Francesco Merli. The dramatic style will (unfortunately) make many hearers unconscious of the consistently unsteady tone, and (in the case of the soprano especially) a good deal of slightly out-of-tune singing (L2039).

Norman Allin's voice is hardly the one for Schubert's 'Erl King'; he lightens it when the characterisation demands, but it is still too big and dark. The orchestral accompaniment is questionable; the original is so pianistic that it cannot well be dispensed with. The singer is heard to advantage in Koeneman's 'When the king went forth to war.' Here the orchestra is effective (L2038).

Bells are notably good for recording purposes, but I recall nothing better in this way than the latest sample—St. Paul's Cathedral bells rung by the Ancient Society of College Youths on Armistice Day. They ring, half muffled, 'Stedman's Cinques,' whatever that may be. The best effect is got by listening in an adjoining room; the effect is thrilling and a trifle uncanny (4660).

The 'Two Black Crows,' Moran and Mack, are as funny as ever in a couple of duologues. But I suggest that the constant background of pianoforte is no help. These unctuous funniosities need no kind of musical or other bolstering (4686).

---

NATIONAL GRAMOPHONIC SOCIETY

One is surprised to find Haydn's 'London' Symphony recorded by a Society whose object is the recording of works which, for commercial reasons, are outside the scope of the various companies. I turned up the 1928 H.M.V. catalogue, and was astonished to see that the symphonic side of Haydn is quite unrepresented! The players for the N.G.S. records are the Chamber Orchestra of the Society, conducted by John Barbirolli. Performance is excellent and recording good, except that there is more scratch than we expect nowadays. The Symphony is on seven sides, the eighth being given to the Andante from Mozart's second Cassation.

It is time Boccherini had fair play. He has been too lightly dismissed as an 'also ran' who did nothing that was not done infinitely better by Haydn and Mozart. For myself, I confess to a sneaking liking for the overshadowed second-raters, who at their best are often better than the bigwigs when below par. The N.G.S. has done a valuable bit of salvage work in recording Boccherini's E flat Quartet, played by the Poltronieri String Quartet. Here is fluent music, always capitally written. I have heard quartets by bigger men that pleased me less. The Minuet is as good in its different way as the well-worn one on which Boccherini's fame has hung so long.

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—The outstanding roll is Chopin's Ballade in A flat played by Paderewski—a performance that scarcely calls for comment. The clarity of the pedalling—there is not a smudge—is an object-lesson; and pianists (not only of the amateur brigade!) will do well to note that although the time is free and the rhythm flowing, there is none of the exaggerated rubato from which Chopin is so often made to suffer (6832).

The same composer's Polonaise in C minor is played by Harold Bauer. This also is good, though the repeated chords in the right hand at the opening are over-emphatic (7148).

Another example of clear, well-managed pedalling is by Lawrence Goodman, in Rachmaninov's 'Humoreske,' Op. 10, No. 5. He enters thoroughly into the varying moods of this delightful piece, in which there is much real humour. The dynamic variety is a notable merit (3161).

Leonid Kreutzer gives a warm, sympathetic performance of 'Romance,' from Schumann's 'Viennese Carnival Pranks'; the Scherzo from the same set suits him even better (0298).

Fresh and charming is Hummel's 'Favourite Rondo,' in E flat, Op. 11. The pellucid quality of Emil Sauer's playing is a joy, and makes this capital old piece something to turn to for refreshment after a stiff dose of modernity (0299).

After Hummel, Chaminade's 'Elévation' seems overladen and artificial. It is redeemed as far as possible by the first-rate performance of the composer (0297).

Hand-played.—This section is disappointing musically, though the playing leaves nothing to be desired. The best example is Ilgenfritz's 'Glide Waltz,' played by himself (A1041*e*). There are also Nevin's 'In my neighbour's garden,' from 'May in Tuscany,' played by Josef Martin (A1043*a*); Lincke's 'The Glow-worm' (A1047*d*) and Drdla's 'Souvenir' (A1045*e*), both played by Erno Rapee.

Metrostyle.—Grieg's delightful Scherzo (Lyric Pieces, Op. 54) calls for neat management of delicate effects. It is very well cut, and not difficult (T30356*b*). There is a good four-hand arrangement of Scharwenka's 'Southern Pictures,' Nos. 1 and 2, Op. 39. The first has a decidedly Spanish flavour, and No. 2 is good fun for the player-pianist ready to let himself go for a few minutes (T30357*c*).

The third roll of Beethoven's 'Thirty-three Variations on a Theme of Diabelli' is now available. This covers Nos. 14 to 21. The editing is first-rate; only at one or two points in Variation 14 is the pedalling a trifle blurred. The roll calls for good management on the part of the player. A few of the slow passages may bore the average listener, but in bulk this music is some of the finest Beethoven ever wrote for the pianoforte. Inevitably the trained musician, who is able to follow the composer in his astounding developments of the simple—almost banal—theme, will get the most enjoyment from it. But even the lay ear can hardly fail to respond to the vital energy of the quick variations. In some ways the piecemeal issue of the work is to be regretted. Its immense scope and fertility can be appreciated only by hearing it complete (L30347*c*).

Eric Coates's 'Summer Days' Suite is on three rolls (T3038-60*b*), the third being the most attractive.

Song-Rolls.—Among these are Parry's 'Jerusalem,' rather mechanically produced by Carl Monteith (26836); 'Widdicombe Fair' (26838), and Eric Coates's 'A Dinder Courtship' (26835), both played by Charles Blackmore.

There is much dance music, of which the following three are the least boring (incidentally, they make a remarkable array of names and titles): 'Tenderly think of me,' Pascoe-Dulmage-Whiting, played by Muriel Pollack (0833); 'Blue baby, why are you blue,' Klages-Green-Haid, played by Pauline Alpert (0830); and 'Just another day wasted away,' C. Tobias and R. Turk, played by Freddie Rich (0832).

BLÜTHNER

The selection this month is varied and interesting, without a dull item. At the top of the list must come a four-hand arrangement of Beethoven's Quartet in C sharp minor, on four rolls. These are Ordinary, and make a very fine set (58782-85). It is difficult to say which movements would prove most attractive, as they are all so fine. They are not easy to play, and call for intelligent management. Such splendid stuff is, however, worth any amount of trouble.

There are two Chopin studies, both played by Francis Planté. In the 'Revolutionary' (58768), the artist's time is so erratic as to destroy the rhythm in many places, but in Op. 25, No. 1 (56333), he allows himself freedom without distortion, with excellent results.

Maria Cervantes is heard in a sympathetic performance of 'Sevilla,' from Albeniz's 'Suite Espagnol.' It is good musically, though it hangs a little just before the end. Its slightness hardly justifies the length (55487).

There is not much scope left for originality in the waltz form, but Gabrilowitsch, in his 'Valse Lente,' Op. 1, No. 3, is successful in avoiding the commonplace. His playing is brilliant (55933).

Pierné gives us a delightful 'Humoreske,' Op. 17, of his own. Its unusual rhythm has a charming effect, and the unexpected changes and varying moods are highly effective (57116).

A selection from 'Madame Butterfly' (59456), played by Alf. Szendrei, is good. As usual, the arrangement is very satisfactory.

Ludwig Wambold's performance of Schumann's 'Novelette,' Op. 21, No. 1, is an example of good, firm, purposeful playing. There is plenty of variety in tone, and the rhythm is excellent (57350).

D. G.

Wireless Notes

By 'Ariel'

Some of the difficulties experienced in the arrangement of programmes for the studio are increased when the concert is given in a public hall. Several of the National Symphony concert schemes have been unsatisfactory in that they seem to have been drafted with two publics in view. It was an early complaint in connection with Studio fare that those of us who wished for decent music had to keep dodging to and from our earphones in order to pick up the good and escape the bad. At Queen's Hall it is not so much a question of good and bad as of new and threadbare. The policy of mixing familiar and unfamiliar is wise, but there are degrees of familiar, ranging from the fine standard work which practically everybody is glad to hear, down to the threadbare one which only a few care about. As an instance, the Bridal Procession from 'Lohengrin' was a bad choice for a programme containing several important novelties, for two reasons: it is hackneyed, and it is not representative of its composer. At the National Symphony concert on February 10, the ear so unsophisticated as to enjoy it had little use for the Janacek and Mitchell novelties; and vice versâ. At home we can switch off when we want to miss a work; at Queen's Hall we have to sit things out. It is not impossible to choose a programme free from a sudden decline in interest. There is an abundance of excellent short standard works that will appeal to both the blasé and the novice, and the programme-builder's job is to make good use of them. These concerts, being in a sense subsidised, give unique opportunities for extending the répertoire. The chestnuts of music will never lack a show; we look to the B.B.C. to do in its National Symphony concerts salvage work similar to that it is already doing in the Studio with such excellent results. The Queen's Hall concerts, in fact, ought to be an improvement in every way on the various series of symphony concerts that have been given in London in the past under other auspices. At present they are not, because the aim seems to be uncertain and the playing very unequal.

As an example of a poor scheme for a symphony concert I mention the Verdi programme given at the People's Palace on February 17. Presumably this was a sop to the Orient; and as such it may be defended. But why call it a 'symphony concert'? I found very little of it go a long way, containing, as it did, so large a proportion of early Verdi—music which may be effective in the opera-house, but is not of sufficient value qua music for concert use save in very small doses. Moreover, if the Corporation is as confident of the appeal of great music as the long trumpet solo in the programme books makes it out to be, it must trust Bach and Beethoven in the East End no less than in the West. A complete scheme of Verdi extracts is really little better fare than a third-rate seaside resort, with a band of a dozen, gives its patrons in the holidays. This bad relapse is followed by a really excellent programme for Queen's Hall on February 24, with a good bit of rescue work in the choice of a Stanford Symphony. Let the B.B.C. work out a policy in regard to its public orchestral concerts, and it will do much towards solving more than one of our musical problems.

But (after duly returning thanks) we want no more lavish splashes of the 'Gurrelieder' type. Let us make acquaintance with outstanding works, by all means, no matter where they hail from—some may even be found here at home. But these are hard times, and a composer who makes such fantastic and uneconomic demands as Schönberg does in this work should be left alone till he develops a bit of horse sense. When the vivid attractiveness of a good deal of the latter half of the 'Gurrelieder' is admitted, can anybody pretend that as a whole it gave a fair return for all the labour, cost, and time spent on it? For the bulk of us who sat it out I imagine the two and a half hours yielded at the outside about sixty minutes of really vital musical experience. And the resources demanded by the composer proved to be largely window-dressing. There were five soloists, three male choirs, a mixed choir (eight-part), and a huge orchestra, including (as the papers all announced in gleeful headlines) some 'large iron chains'—which I, for one, didn't hear. The three male choirs were on for a comparatively short time (and even then sounded like one ordinary choir, not like three), and the mixed chorus was not heard till a few minutes before the close. The tonal mountain of which so much had been written beforehand produced—I won't say a mouse, but a rabbit. The 'Gurrelieder' goes back to the shelf, the Schönberg bubble suffers a bad puncture, and the musical world shakes its head over the unwisdom of putting too many eggs—in this case about £2,000, I believe—into one basket.

I gave 'Charlot's Hour' another trial on February 16, and, after sitting through it all, see no reason to alter the opinion I expressed last month concerning this feature. The most I can say is that this 'Hour' was less feeble than its predecessor. We had a bit less of Mr. Charlot himself, but very little worth hearing in its place. My heart sank when Mr. Charlot announced, with quiet but justifiable triumph, that the approbation with which the 'Hour' had been received had led the B.B.C. to arrange for another series of a dozen. Either a good many thousands of people are very easily amused, or I don't know what humour is. Anyway, I hope the B.B.C. will 'explore the avenues' (as the jargon goes) and find some humour of a type more suitable for a few dozen of us who don't frequent revues and so have not acquired a taste for the puerile. I suppose the Corporation is right in catering for the devotees of the Charlots, Whispering Baritones, and various brands of Syncopated Harmonizers (who always give us the same kind of syncopation, and such harmony: the only funny thing about their shows is that the performers seem to be under the impression that they have discovered not only syncopation but harmony too!). But the rest of us want to be amused as well, and there must surely be a few more really witty entertainers knocking about than the B.B.C. has so far unearthed. So we shall go on hoping and grousing.

The feature announced to begin on February 21, 'New Friends in Music,' promises to be very useful as well as enjoyable. When the introduction of new music fails, it is usually because the novelty is shot at us (often without preparation), and then heard no more—or, at all events, not for a long time. A work that is discussed and explained briefly (this word is important) at its first hearing, and then given again a week or so later, may be counted upon to hit the mark if it is anything of a mark-hitter at all. The combined efforts of Mrs. Norman O'Neill and Mr. Scholes on behalf of some unfamiliar pianoforte works by Debussy and John Ireland ought to be valuable, not only directly, but also in suggesting analogous methods in other departments of music.

---

A reader points out that as the B.B.C. is now taking the nation's pronunciation in hand, it might spare a little attention to its announcers. We should then escape hearing cantabile pronounced (as it was the other evening) canta-béelay. I agree; such a lapse is poorly compensated by the meticulousness with which allegret-to has both its 't's' crossed.

Occasional Notes

The correspondence on 'The Ethics of Borrowing,' which began in our January number, and ends this month, calls for editorial comment on more than one ground. First, we must express our conviction that in opening the discussion Mr. Scholes had no other motive than the desire to ventilate a matter that is (or ought to be) of public interest; certainly it is of great importance to authors. Mr. Scholes is, in fact, to be praised for his courage in taking a step that at first sight might appear to be a mere personal attack on a brother author. In publishing his letters we run a similar danger of being misunderstood. Without making any claim for ourselves in the matter of courage, we will only say that, Mr. Scholes's first letter having convinced us of his good faith, and of the importance of the subject, we felt there was no other course open to us than the one we have taken. As we shall show, there are issues involved that must be cleared up sooner or later, and the process is one that lies within the province of a musical journal and must not be shirked.

A complete justification of the writing and publication of Mr. Scholes's letters is provided by the weakness of Dr. Eaglefield Hull's defence. In fact, he makes no defence, his final word amounting to little more than 'I can't be bothered!' Of Mr. Pring's letter he airily says that 'it clears up many of the points raised.' It does indeed, but in doing so makes Dr. Hull's position even worse than it was before.

Dr. Hull has had ample time and opportunity for disproving or admitting the charge brought against him. Had he taken either course, we should have been glad to keep silence. His policy of not meeting the charge squarely compels us, in fairness both to Mr. Scholes and ourselves, to discuss the affair frankly, much as we dislike doing so. It is not a case of 'much ado about nothing,' as Dr. Hull implies, and as some readers may think.

Dr. Hull charges Mr. Scholes with 'many inexactitudes, mauled quotations, mis-spellings, and curious claims to Russian rights.' As this is merely a repetition of charges which Mr. Scholes has invited Dr. Hull to substantiate, but in vain, we do not think it necessary to give Mr. Scholes an opportunity for replying.

Here is the case in a nutshell: Did Dr. Hull, without adequate acknowledgment and without any kind of indication that he was quoting, incorporate into his recent book a considerable amount of material from the typescript of a still unpublished work by another author? The correspondence proves that he did so.

Manifestly here is a matter of vital importance. As Mr. Pring, the owner of the typescript, says in his letter, 'the practice [of an author borrowing, for purposes of his own, matter from a typescript submitted to him in his capacity as publisher's reader] might be indulged in to such an extent as seriously to prejudice an author's property in his manuscript.'

Let us put an imaginary case in order to demonstrate this: Dr. Hull's 'Music: Classical, Romantic, and Modern' was published last year. In it were numerous passages from the typescript of an unpublished translation of a work by Sabaneev, fitted into the text in such a way that they appeared to be Dr. Hull's own original work. The English version of Mr. Sabaneev's book may yet be published: if ever it is, it will contain a good deal of material that has already appeared in Dr. Hull's book. We can conceive such a Gilbertian incident as the potential British publishers of Mr. Sabaneev being sued by Dr. Hull's publishers for infringement of copyright! And some future reviewer may accuse Mr. Sabaneev's translator of 'lifting' from Dr. Hull, whereas . . . . !

We do not think that Dr. Hull realised, or still realises, the seriousness of his action. After all, there is a property in ideas, as in tangible things, and one would expect an author, above all, to remember the fact. A man who applied to material goods the easy-going methods of appropriation avowed by Dr. Hull in the Preface to his book, would have an unpleasant shock; and a plea of 'I can't be bothered' would be followed by 'laughter in court.'

We feel bound to say, in conclusion, that as Dr. Hull cannot deny having made extensive and unauthorised use of another writer's work, he would have done well to make a frank admission of the fact. Mr. Scholes has earned the thanks of authors for his public-spirited performance of a very unpleasant duty.

---

The death of the Reverend William Boyd, at the age of eighty-three, brings to mind the fact that the immense vogue of his hymn-tune 'Pentecost' was mainly due to a happy thought of Sullivan's. The tune was written at the request of Baring Gould (who had been Boyd's tutor at Hurstpierpoint) for use at a service for Yorkshire colliers at Whitsuntide—hence its name. It became popular at once, but remained in manuscript for some years, when it appeared, with other tunes by Boyd, in a collection called 'Thirty-two hymn-tunes, composed by members of the University of Oxford.' A little later, Sullivan, who was then editing 'Church Hymns,' met Boyd in the street, and said, 'My dear Billy, I've seen a tune of yours which I must have.' Boyd thought no more about it until 'Church Hymns' appeared, with 'Pentecost' set to 'Fight the good fight,' instead of to the 'Veni Creator,' for which it had been composed. He rebelled at first, but later admitted that Sullivan's judgment was right. Words and music have since become indissolubly connected, and are now among the most widely-sung of hymns, not only in this country, but throughout the Empire. The copyright of the tune, by the by, has recently been acquired by Messrs. Novello.

---

Believing that Bachites among our readers will be interested in the start made by the Bach Cantata Club of New York, we give a few particulars kindly sent to us from the office of the parent body in London. The first concert took place in St. Thomas's Episcopal Church (where, it will be remembered, Dr. Tertius Noble is musical director). The programme consisted of the Sinfonia to the Cantata, 'My spirit was in heaviness,' for strings and oboe, the Cantatas, 'Lord, enter not into wrath' and 'Sing for joy, ye ransomed band,' and an organ solo.

The executive seems to have been surprised to find an audience of nearly seven hundred, and there was a general air of enthusiasm. Lawrence Gilman, writing in the New York Herald and Tribune, said:

> Sometimes even the prayers of music critics are answered. For years we have been publicly lamenting that most of the music of the Greater Bach is virtually unknown. . . . And now, behold the Bach Cantata Club. . . . The performance last night was earnest and devoted, and much of the beauty and character of the music was conveyed.

(Continued on page 247)

To Blossoms

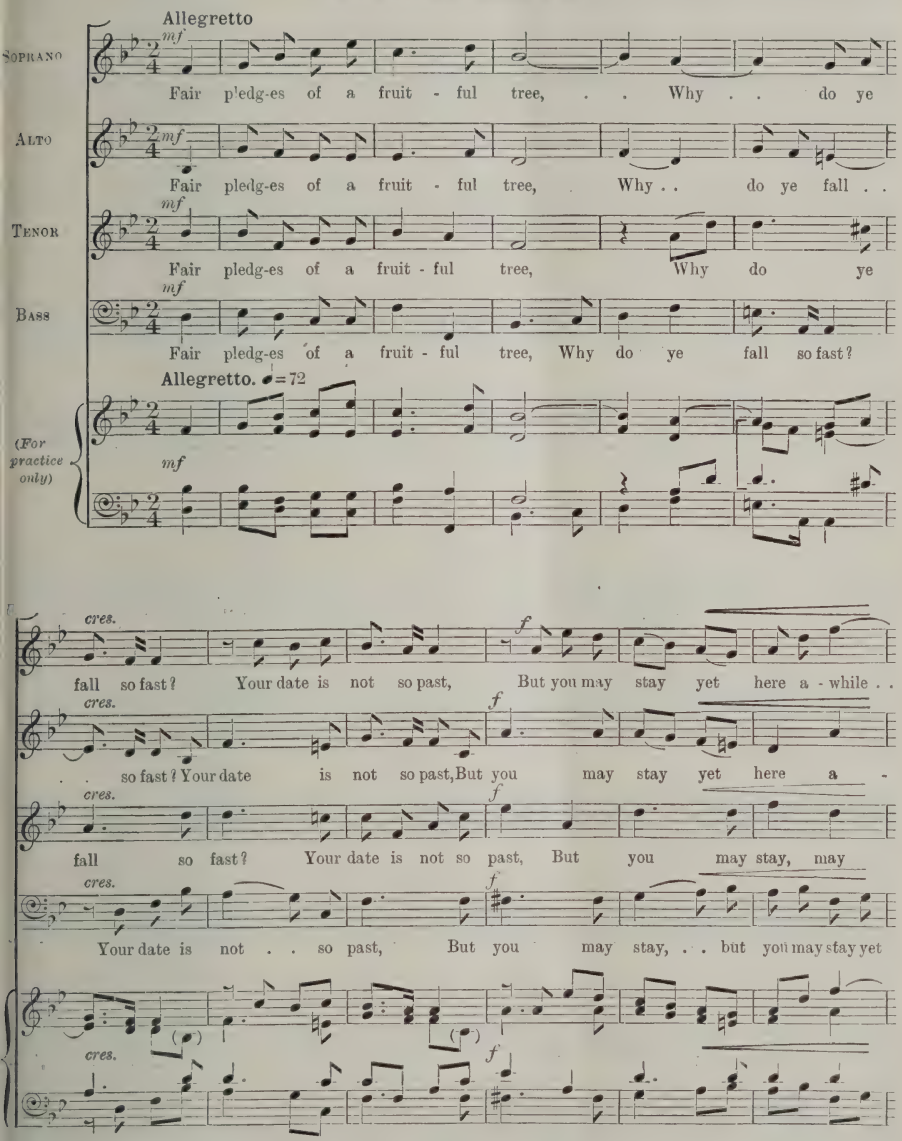
FOUR-PART SONG

Words by HERRICK Music by W. G. ALCOCK

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Allegretto
SOPRANO
mf
Fair pledg-es of a fruit - ful tree, . . Why . . do ye
ALTO
mf
Fair pledg-es of a fruit - ful tree, Why . . do ye fall . .
TENOR
mf
Fair pledg-es of a fruit - ful tree, Why do ye
BASS
mf
Fair pledg-es of a fruit - ful tree, Why do ye fall so fast?
Allegretto. ♩ = 72
(For practice only)
mf
cres.
f fall so fast? Your date is not so past, But you may stay yet here a - while . .
cres.
f
. . so fast? Your date is not so past, But you may stay yet here a - cres.
f fall so fast? Your date is not so past, But you may stay, may cres.
f
Your date is not . . so past, But you may stay, . . but you may stay yet
cres.
f

Copyright, 1928, by Novello and Company, Limited

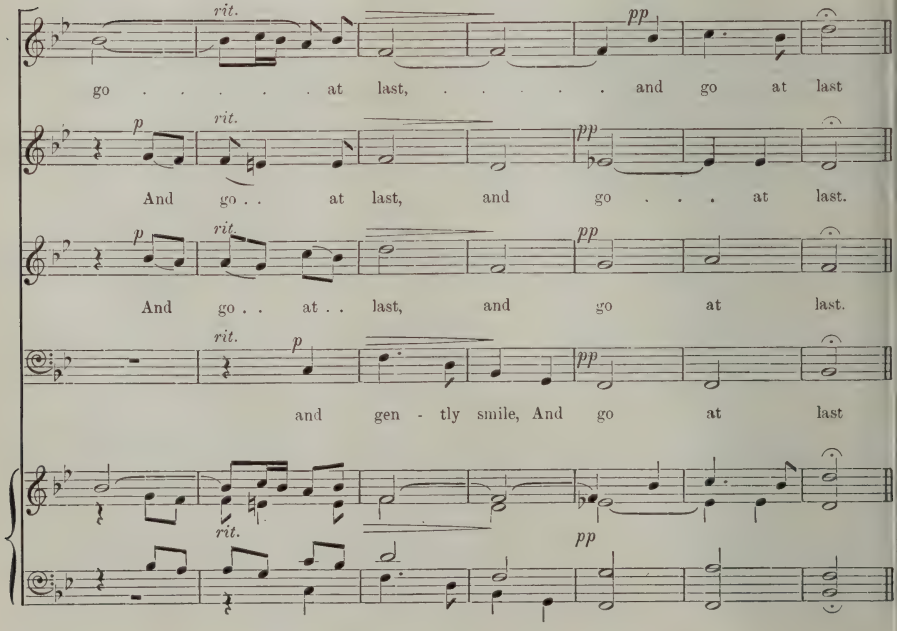
ff
p espress.
. . To blush . . . and gen - tly, . . gen - tly smile, And
ff
- while To blush . . and gen - tly, and gen-tly smile, gen - tly smile,
ff
stay a - while To blush and gen - tly, . . gen - tly smile,
ff
here a - while To blush, to blush and gen - tly smile,
ff
p



rit.
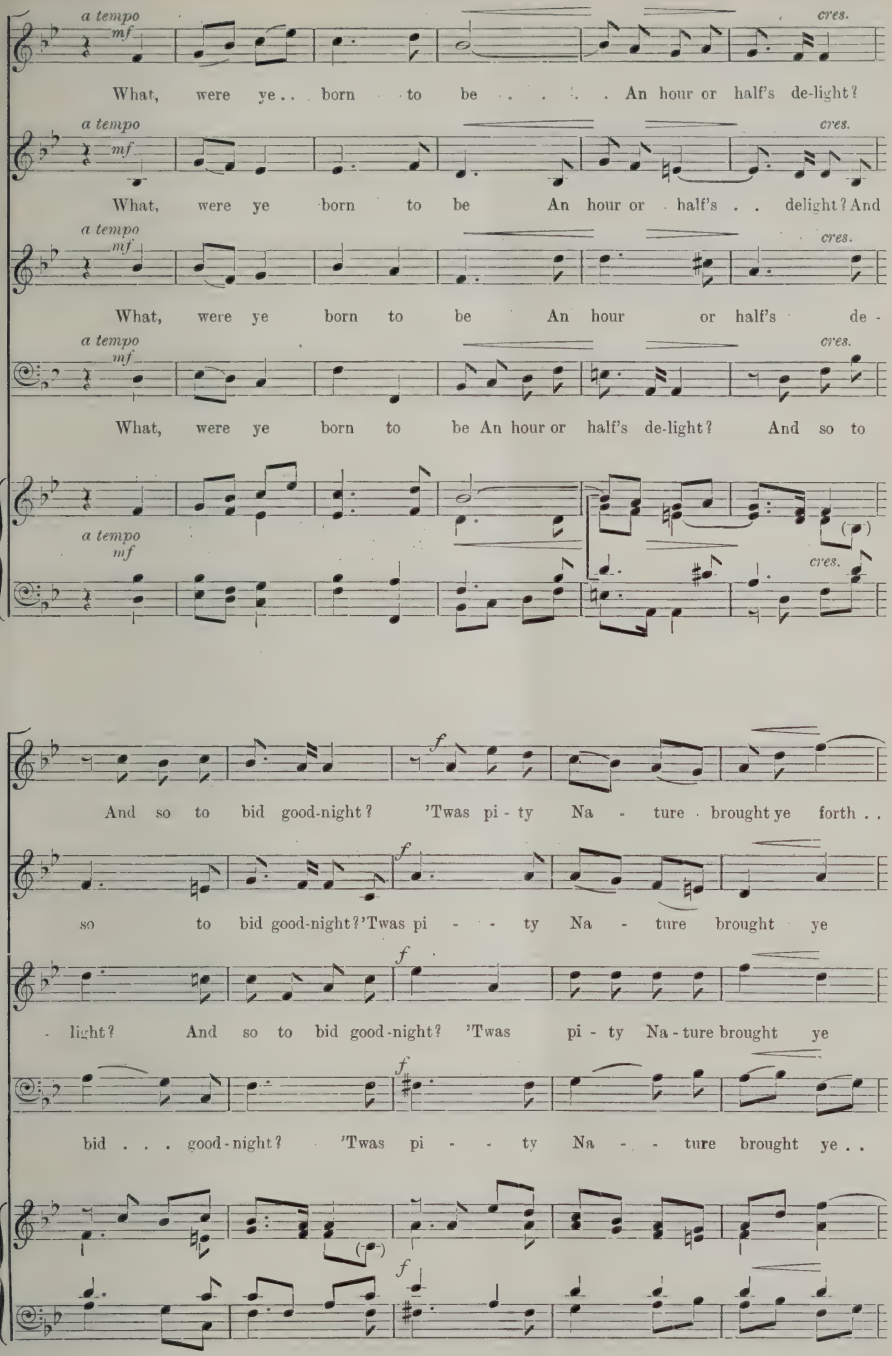
pp go . . . . . at last, . . . . . and go at last
p
rit.
pp
And go . . at last, and go . . . at last.
p
rit.
pp
And go . . at . . last, and go at last.
rit.
p
pp
and gen - tly smile, And go at last
rit.
pp



a tempo
mf
cres.
What, were ye . . born to be . . . . An hour or half's de-light?
What, were ye born to be An hour or half's . . delight? And What, were ye born to be An hour or half's de -
What, were ye born to be An hour or half's de-light? And so to a tempo
mf
cres.
And so to bid good-night? 'Twas pi - ty Na - ture brought ye forth . .
so to bid good-night? 'Twas pi - - - ty Na - ture brought ye
- light? And so to bid good-night? 'Twas pi - ty Na - ture brought ye bid . . . good-night? 'Twas pi - - - ty Na - - ture brought ye . .
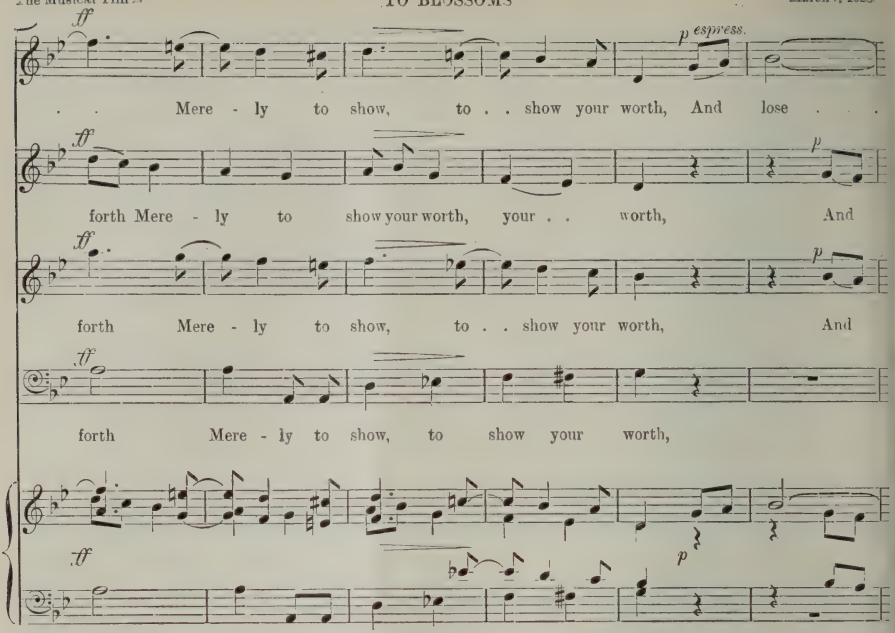
f



ff
p espress.
. . Mere - ly to show, to . . show your worth, And lose . .
ff
p forth Mere - ly to show your worth, your . . worth, And ff
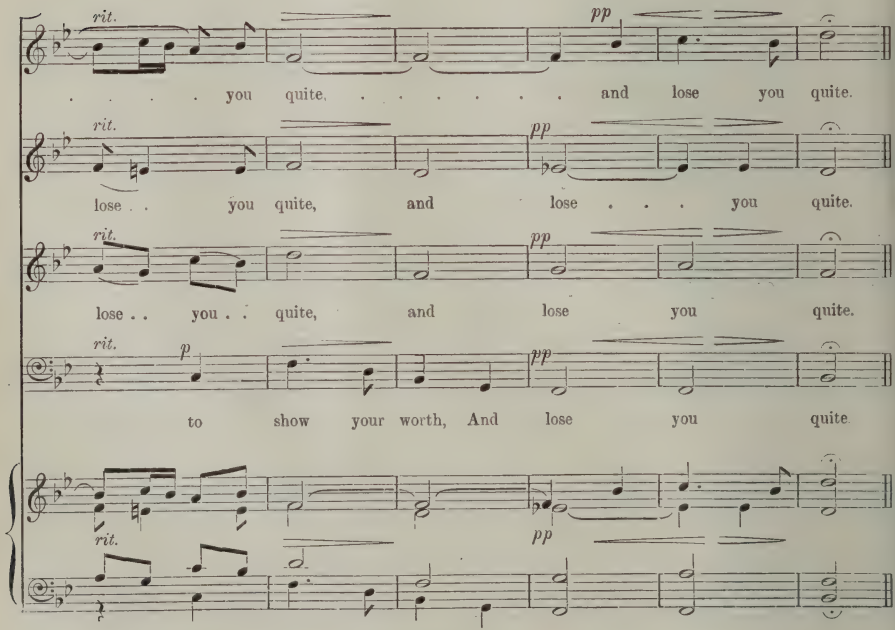
p forth Mere - ly to show, to . . show your worth, And
ff
forth Mere - ly to show, to show your worth,
ff
p



rit.
pp
. . . . you quite. . . . . and lose you quite.
rit.
pp lose . . you quite, and lose . . . you quite.
rit.
pp lose . . you . . quite, and lose you quite.
rit.
p
pp to show your worth, And lose you quite rit.
pp

Più mosso
But you are love - ly leaves, where we May read . . . how soon things
But you are love - ly leaves, where we May read how soon things
But you are love - ly, you . . are
But you are love - ly
Più mosso. ♩=80
have . . . Their end, though ne'er so brave: . . .
have Their end, . . . though ne'er so brave: And af - - ter love - ly, are love - - ly leaves, though leaves, where we May read how soon things have Their end, though f rall.

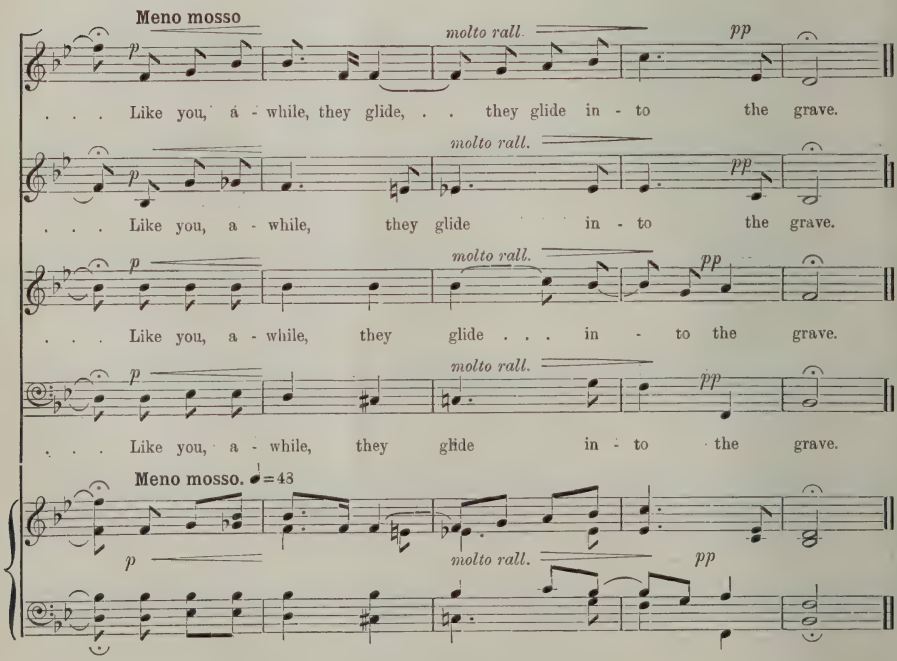
And af - ter they have shown their pride,
they have shown their pride,
ne'er so brave: And af - ter they have shown their pride,
ne'er so brave: And af - ter they have shown their pride,



Meno mosso
molto rall.
pp
. . . Like you, á - while, they glide, . . they glide in - to the grave.
. . . Like you, a - while, they glide in - to the grave.
. . . Like you, a - while, they glide . . . in - to the grave.
. . . Like you, a - while, they glide in - to the grave.
Meno mosso. ♩=43

(Continued from page 240.)

The New York Post critic wrote:

> The thing that counts is the music that this Club has undertaken, and here it must be granted that last night's concert was an important event.

Noel Straus said in the New York Evening World:

> Its efforts should prove of inestimable value. . . . The Club's choir and orchestra proved that much can be gained in elasticity and detail by the employment of a small body of participants.

Four further concerts have been arranged, the chief works being the fifth 'Brandenburg' Concerto, a Sonata for flute, violin, and pianoforte, from 'The Musical Offering,' the Motet, 'Jesu, Joy and Treasure,' and the B minor Mass. One of the concerts will take the form of an organ recital by Lynnwood Farnam, assisted by Felix Salmond, who will play a violoncello sonata. The choir in the B minor Mass will be the New York Oratorio Society. An enterprise backed, as this is, by a committee drawn from the most distinguished musicians in America, seems certain of success. Its progress will be watched with cordial interest by musicians on this side of the water.

---

The London College of Music has lately been busy at Accrington, and the advertisement of a local teacher that we quoted from the Accrington Observer some months ago has a good second. The eight successful examinees are paraded in large capitals, each with appropriate comment; or, rather, seven are thus honoured. No. 1, Robert Riley, of Blackpool, apparently just scraped through, for even his enthusiastic teacher can do no more than tamely add young Bob's address. Thereafter, however, he becomes almost lyrical:

ARTHUR KENNEDY, ALTHAM,
A FINE CARD FOR MARKS GAINED.

FLORRY WIGGLESWORTH,
NORA BUCKETT,
TWO LOCAL PUPILS. THIS COUPLE GENERALLY ENTER AT THE SAME TIME.

ELLEN DOBSON, CLAYTON-LE-MOORS,
WHO WAS QUITE OVERJOYED WITH HER RESULT.

ELSIE BAINES,
WHO GAINED THE HIGHEST NUMBER OF MARKS FOR THE CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION.
SHE IS THE YOUNGER SISTER OF

MISS JENNIE BAINES,
WHO IS PREPARING FOR A VERY HIGH EXAM.

BERTHA CLEGG,
DAUGHTER OF MR. FRED CLEGG, THE POPULAR BARITONE. A CERTIFICATE GAINED IN THE QUICKEST TIME.

—— PIANOS ARE UNDOUBTEDLY PLAYING A PROMINENT PART. WEEKLY INSTALMENTS. KEEP YOUR MONEY IN THE BANK.

---

Once more we admire the ingenuity with which Mr.———, the teacher, contrives to work in an advertisement of a local singer and a brand of pianoforte. And we like the nice distinction between Elsie and her grown-up sister Jennie, who is a Miss, with a Very High Exam. round the corner. The teachers in the Accrington district who prepare pupils for examinations that are worth passing must feel (like little Ellen) 'quite overjoyed' when they see that Mr.——— finds this L.C.M. certificate business so profitable that he is able to take advertising space equal to about a page of the Musical Times. Are they doing anything to open the eyes of the parents of the Florries and Jennies, and to persuade them to keep even more of their money in the bank?

---

Cyril Scott's ballet, 'The Dream of the Piper in the Desert,' has been produced with great success at Vienna. The work was first heard in London in 'Charlot's Revue,' under the title of 'Karma.'

---

Dr. R. S. Thatcher has been appointed music-master of Harrow School, in succession to Dr. Percy Buck, who retired recently. Dr. Thatcher has for some years held a similar post at Charterhouse.

---

We are constantly being asked by would-be composers as to suitable courses of self-instruction and correspondence lessons. The method modestly hinted at in the following advertisement from a Los Angeles newspaper is so comprehensive that we bring it to the notice of aspirants:

PIANO JAZZ

By Note or Ear. With or without music. Short Course. Adult beginners taught by mail. No teacher required. Self-instruction Course for Advanced Pianists. Learn 259 styles of Bass, 684 Syncopated Effects, Blue Harmony, Oriental, Chime, Movie and Café Jazz, Trick Endings, Clever Breaks, Space Fillers, Sax Slurs, Triple Bass, Wicked Harmony, Blue Obligato, and 247 other Subjects, including Ear Playing. 133 pages of REAL Jazz, 25,000 words. A Postal brings our FREE Special Offer.

We are astonished to hear that jazz composers have at their disposal no fewer than six hundred and eighty-four syncopated effects. The fact leads us to hope that some day we may hear the other six hundred and eighty-three.

---

New Music

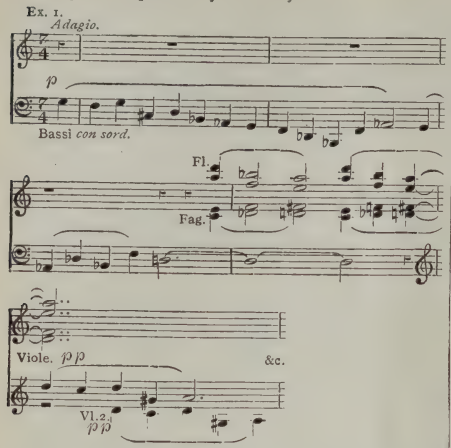
'Egdon Heath' (Homage to Thomas Hardy). By Gustav Holst. Op. 47. (Full Score.) Novello.

The choice of subject is characteristic of the Holst of to-day. It is a type of heath that has probably never before attracted composers. With a Blasted Heath much may be done; a Hampstead Heath almost takes charge of a composer's pen; and a heath, a-quiver with summer and alive with bird-song and bees, is easy game. Egdon Heath sets a problem: 'A place . . . . neither ghastly, hateful, nor ugly . . . . like man, slighted and enduring . . . colossal and mysterious in its swarthy monotony.' Little call for shattering climaxes here, so the orchestra is merely normal, with four of the eleven brass instruments cued in and dispensable. A large body of strings is asked for, however—not for power, but for divisi purposes. A heavily-underlined note points out that the difference between p and pp should be clearly marked; and there is a further injunction that 'the muted brass are not to accent any notes or force the tone.'

The piece steps out mysteriously:

Ex. 1.

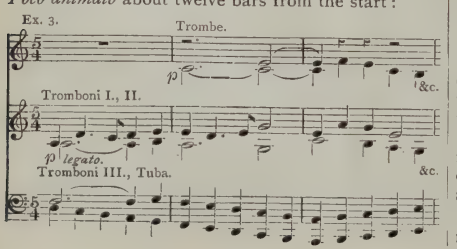


The double-bass phrase is treated by all the strings in nine parts, p and pp. A quickening of pace leads to a Poco allegro section, which opens with a passage for violins, wavering in movement and vague in harmony. This forms a persistent undercurrent to development, by the wind, of the theme stated by oboe:

Ex. 2.

A climax is followed by an impressive passage for trumpets, trombones, and tuba, foreshadowed in the Poco animato about twelve bars from the start:

Ex. 3.



The opening two bars of the first trombone part play an important rôle subsequently. There are some typical Holstian pedal points—long-held string notes, against which pp wood-wind fourths in remote keys impinge, quiet but remorseless. A very striking moment is that in which a long ascending whispered scale by the strings leads to a resumption of the opening double-bass phrase, with the strings divided into ten parts. The piece ends in the atmosphere of mystery with which it began, the double augmentation of the little trumpet figure (first heard in semiquavers in bar 2 of Ex. 2), with tone reduced to vanishing point on a single high note, suggesting a final glance over the waste to the horizon—a good example of musical perspective, which will not be missed by those who can see as well as hear with their ears:

Ex. 4.

This review is written before there has been an opportunity of hearing the work. Its effect cannot well be realised mentally, or on the keyboard, so dependent is it on a delicate adjustment of quiet orchestral timbres. But even a study of the printed page gives one an impression of space and remoteness not often attained by musical means. The aspect of nature with which it deals is more usually and easily depicted by the painter or writer than by the musician.

A work that so faithfully reflects the 'slighted and enduring' may take no audience by storm. But it evokes, with singular success, an unusual mood; it is a fitting tribute to Hardy (made, nota bene, not since Hardy's death, but many months ago, as the result of a visit to the author); and it gives us the essence of Holst. On these three grounds it will, we think, be prized. It is not everybody's music; but, then, Egdon Heath is not everybody's terrain. There will always be more passengers for Hampstead.

---

Last month we drew attention to what appeared to be an error on the part of our reviewer, W.R.A., in saying that Alec Rowley's unison song 'The Policeman' was published by Winthrop Rogers. W.R.A. was right after all. There are two songs called 'The Policeman' by Alec Rowley, one for trebles in unison published by Winthrop Rogers, and the other for two-part treble chorus issued by Novello. If the composer intends to add still further to the force we hope he will reduce the chance of confusion by giving the divisional letter and number.

[We are obliged to hold over other reviews of new music.—EDITOR].

Church and Organ Music

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Lectures will be given at the College, on Tuesday, May 15, as follows: At 3 p.m., by Dr. W. H. Harriss, M.A., F.R.C.O. (organist of New College, Oxford), on 'General Points to be observed in Choir Training'; at 6.30 p.m., by Dr. Ernest Bullock, F.R.C.O. (organist of Westminster Abbey), on 'Anglican Chanting.' Admission free. The Choir Training Examination will be held on Wednesday, May 16.

CARDIFF.—An organ recital will be given in the Windsor Place Presbyterian Church on Tuesday, March 27, by Dr. Henry G. Ley, M.A. (Precentor of Eton College). Full particulars may be obtained of Mr. Joseph Morgan, M.Mus., F.R.C.O., University College, Cathay's Park, Cardiff. Admission free; no tickets required.

H. A. HARDING (Hon. Secretary).

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

The organ is in need of repair and improvement, the cost being estimated at about £4,000. Southwark Cathedral has for some years played a prominent part in the musical life of London, and it is hoped that the many who attend the excellent Special Music Services there will repay a little of their debt by sending a contribution, however small, to the Precentor, The Rectory, Sumner Street, S.E.1. At the Special Music Service on March 17 the 'St. Matthew' Passion will be given.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

At the annual general meeting the five vacancies on the Council were filled by the election of Miss Lilian Coombes, Mr. G. H. Heath Gracie, Dr. George Oldroyd, Mr. Albert Orton, and Mr. Edward Watson. There were eleven candidates. The President for 1928 is Mr. Percy Baker. The meeting was preceded by an organ recital at St. John's Church, Wilton Road, by Mr. W. Wolstenholme.

Dr. Alfred Hollins gave his sixteenth annual recital at Clapton Park Congregational Church, on February 7, when his programme included two duets for pianoforte and organ (a Liszt Hungarian Fantasia and Mendelssohn's Capriccio Brillante), in which Mr. H. L. Balfour played the organ. His organ solos included a Bach Prelude and Fugue and his own Cantilène and 'Maytime' Gavotte. Mr. Roy Henderson sang songs by Parry, Bairstow, Henschel, &c.

Bach's cantata 'Sing we the Birth' received what was probably its first performance in Canada at St. Paul's Eastern United Church, Ottawa, on January 8, and attracted a large audience. It was preceded by a Bach recital given by the organist and choirmaster, Mr. F. D. Wellington, whose programme included a group of Chorale Preludes. Report speaks well of the performances all round.

Dr. Alfred Hollins gave a recital at Victoria Hall, Hanley, a few weeks ago, playing the 'St. Anne' Fugue (with the 'great' G minor as an encore), his own 'Maytime' Gavotte and Toccata, the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and an improvisation on 'Three Blind Mice' ('Loch Lomond' and 'Auld Lang Syne' being worked in). Mr. Leon Forrester joined Dr. Hollins in pianoforte and organ duets—an early Capriccio of Mendelssohn's and the recitalist's own Polonaise.

'Israel in Egypt' was performed by the City Temple Choral Society on February 18, conducted by Mr. Allan Brown, with Mr. G. D. Cunningham at the organ. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Robson, Miss Beatrice Ashton, and Mr. Ben Morgan. The Society will sing 'The Dream of Gerontius' on March 17, at 3 (soloists, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Andrew Clayton, and Mr. Samuel Dyson).

The sixth annual Barclay's Bank service was announced to take place at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on February 23, when the music was to include Bach's 'Sleepers, wake!' and Charles Wood's Motet for double choir, 'Great Lord of Lords,' sung by the Barclay's Bank Choir, under the direction of the honorary conductor, Mr. Herbert Pierce, with Dr. Harold Darke at the organ.

Messrs. Harrison & Harrison have recently built an organ for Tamworth Parish Church, at a cost of £4,500. The new instrument (a three-manual of thirty-two speaking stops) replaces that built by Green in 1792. Mr. G. D. Cunningham gave the first of a series of recitals. The choir and local choral society sang 'The Hymn of Praise.'

Preparations for the Free Church Choir Union Festival (Crystal Palace, June 30) are well in hand. The secretary, Mr. Arthur Berridge (151, Chamberlayne Road, N.W.10), will be glad to hear from choirmasters who have not yet arranged to participate.

Bach's cantatas 'My spirit was in heaviness' and 'The Lord is my Shepherd' were sung by All Saints', Bradford, Choir at its fifth Bach concert on February 15, Mr. Charles Stott conducting, and Mr. Norman Strafford accompanying.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare is about to pay a long visit to England, and will be available for recital engagements during July, August, and September. Letters may be sent to him, c/o Messrs. Novello, 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A special choir of a hundred has been formed from the congregation of Holy Trinity Church, Tulse Hill, for the purpose of singing the 'St. Matthew' Passion in Holy Week.

Messrs. J. W. Walker are building new organs for St. Michael's, Eastbourne, and Christ Church, North Finchley—both three-manuals.

Mr. Herbert Hodge will give a recital of the test-pieces for the R.C.O. July examination at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on March 9, at 1.10.

The annual performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion at St. Paul's Cathedral will take place on April 3, at 6.

RECITALS

Mr. Reginald Moore, St. Saviour's, Leeds—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Choral in A minor, Franck; Passacaglia, West; Prelude in G, Bairstow.

Miss Lilian Frost, Wallasey Town Hall—'Festival March,' Lemare; Toccata in F, Bach; Rondino, Wolstenholme; Finale, Symphony No. 1, Vierne.

Mr. E. J. Duckett, St. Mary's, Slough—'St. Anne' Fugue, Bach; Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger; Concerto No. 5, Handel.

Mr. H. W. Jones, All Saints', Peckham—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Allegretto Grazioso, Hollins; Two Chorale Preludes, Karg-Elert.

Dr. Thomas Keighley, Whitworth Hall, Manchester—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Final in B flat, Franck; Toccata in A minor, Reger; Mass for organ and 'Evocation à la Chapelle Sixtine,' Liszt; 'Versets des Psaumes,' Dupré.

Mr. W. A. Roberts, St. Luke's, Southport—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Variations Poètiques, Eaglefield Hull; Fantasia, 'In Varying Moods,' Roberts.

Mr. George C. Gray, St. Mary-le-Tower, Ipswich—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Adagio, Widor; Prelude, 'Bryn Calfaria,' Vaughan Williams.

Dr. Henry Ley, Eton College—Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Fugue on B A C H (No. 5), Schumann: Finale, Franck; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Concerto in G minor, Handel; Fantasia on 'Aberystwyth,' Ley.

Mr. W. Wale, St. Mary-the-Virgin, S. Benfleet—Pastorale, Franck; Toccata and Fugue in D minor and Pastorale, Bach.

Mr. F. C. J. Swanton, SS. Philip & James, Booterstown—Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; Grave (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Grand Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Mr. J. A. Shaw, St. Luke's, Southport—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Communion, Vierne; Symphony No. 4, Widor.

Mr. F. J. C. Dalrymple, Canton Parish Church, Cardiff—Passacaglia, Bach; Fantasia in E, Wolstenholme; Finale, Symphony No. 6, Widor.

Dr. G. S. Holmes, St. John's, Upper Norwood—Phantasie (Sonata No. 13), Rheinberger; Scherzo in A flat, Bairstow; 'The East Wind' and 'The West Wind,' Rowley; 'Scenes on the Wye,' Frederic H. Wood.

Miss Edna Howard, Wallasey Town Hall—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Concert Fantasia on 'Hanover,' Lemare; Sposalizio, Liszt-Lemare; Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. C. S. Richards, Hexham Abbey—Toccata in C, Bach; Overture to 'The Magic Flute,' Mozart; Choral Improvisation, 'Der Holle Pforten sind zerstort,' Karg-Elert.

Mr. Francis W. Sutton, St. Michael's, Cornhill—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Andante (Sonata No. 4), Bach; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. H. Percy Richardson, Town Hall, Leeds—Chorale Prelude, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' and Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. J. Harold Makinson, Wesleyan Church, Ambleside—Pastorale, Franck; Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Fantasy on two Christmas Carols, John E. West.

Mr. P. Ratcliffe, St. James's, New Mills—Cradle Song, Harvey Grace; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Evening Song, Bairstow; Prelude and Fugue in F sharp minor, Buxtehude; Introduction and Fugue from Sonata, Reubke.

Mr. Frank Wright, St. Botolph's, Aldersgate, E.C.—Sonata No. 14, Rheinberger; Pastorale in F, Bach; Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. Arthur E. Watts, St. Clement, Near Eastcheap—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Pastorale, Franck; Chorale Prelude on 'Christe Redemptor Omnium,' Parry.

Mr. L. M. Jones, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Carillon, Sowerbutts; Pæan, Harwood.

Mr. Eric Brough, Lewisham Congregational Church—Idyll, 'The Sea,' H. Arnold Smith; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Dupré; Four Chorale Preludes, Bach.

Mr. Mervyn Williams, Stephenson Street Congregational Church, N. Shields—Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach; Prelude on 'St. Mary,' Charles Wood; 'Chorus Magnus,' Dubois; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—'Deuxième Légende,' Bonnet; Overture to 'Admeto,' Handel; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Three Pieces, Niels W. Gade; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. C. Spencer Heap, at St. Ann's, Manchester—Overture to 'Saul'; Sonata in F sharp minor, Rheinberger; Chorale, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' Bach; Allegro Fugato, Stanley.

Mr. Arthur E. Watts, St. Dunstan-in-the-East, E.C.—Preludio (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger; Pastorale, Franck; Introduction and Toccata, Walond; March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Allanson G. Y. Brown, organist, St. Oswald's Parish Church, West Hartlepool.

Mr. A. B. Church, organist, St. Mary's, Stratford-le-Bow.

Mr. Harold E. Marriott, choirmaster and organist, Hope Parish Church, Derbyshire.

---

The League of Arts fixtures for the five Saturdays in March will be (in the order named) a song recital by Bertha Steventon and Keith Falkner; a chamber concert by the Pirani Trio; a song and pianoforte recital by Sybil Cropper and Reginald Paul; a concert by the Audrey Chapman Orchestra, conducted by Frank Bridge; and a song and pianoforte recital by Sumner Austin and Harold Craxton. Admission is free, but you are expected to buy a sixpenny programme.

Letters to the Editor

—

THE ETHICS OF BORROWING

SIR,—Lest this correspondence should become unintelligible to any of your readers who have not followed it closely in its earlier stages, I will, if you will allow me, return to the complaint of my letter which initiated the correspondence.

The complaint is a double one—against a principle and against the practice of that principle.

The principle is that one may take the work of a brother author without acknowledgment; it is laid down in the Preface to Dr. Eaglefield Hull's 'Music: Classical, Romantic, and Modern,' in the following words:

> 'This book I have made for my own pleasure; I have taken stones for my walls, and tiles for my floors, wherever good material came to hand, without always troubling to acknowledge it when the lifting is as apparent as the use of the stones and columns from Hadrian's Wall by the church-builders of Northumberland. Such an adaptation of warlike material to peaceful ends I hold entirely justifiable.'

This seems explicit enough, but Dr. Hull has, in answer to my complaint of it, given a surprising interpretation. This is, he says, merely 'a playful introduction,' and is 'intended to cover any omissions of acknowledgments that may have occurred unintentionally.' Your readers must judge for themselves whether it will bear such an interpretation. I myself have never yet been able to grasp the meaning in such a connection of 'adaptation of warlike material to peaceful ends,' but the words 'without always troubling to acknowledge it' have seemed to me quite unambiguous—very novel, and very objectionable.

(You will recall that in your January issue Dr. Hull said of the extract given above, 'Mr. Scholes has deliberately omitted the qualifying phrase. In the same issue I stated that in my copy of the book there was no qualifying phrase. To this Dr. Hull has not troubled to reply, so we may, I think, assume that this was just one of his little slips. But he should be careful before making charges of ill faith. The words 'deliberately omitted' are very brutal, and should, I feel, either be substantiated or withdrawn.)

The first example that I offered of taking 'good material . . . . without always troubling to acknowledge it' was a very important passage from Mr. Frank Rutter's 'Evolution in Modern Art,' a passage that one may call 'epoch making,' since in it Mr. Rutter was the first (as he claims, I think rightly) to reveal the underlying 'concrete' basis of some of the modern 'abstract' Expressionist painting. I gave the passages in parallel columns, and your readers must have formed their own opinions as to the origin of Dr. Hull's passage. Mr. Rutter's own view was expressed in a letter in your last issue, and it will have been noticed that he emphatically desires to be credited with the authorship of the passage in question — apparently obstinately refusing to accept the convenient new principle that one may quote 'good material . . . . without always troubling to acknowledge it,' so clearly laid down in Dr. Hull's now famous Preface.

I really think Dr. Hull will have to reconsider that principle. Authors who have spoken to me seem to hold a very conventional view on the practice 'taking' and 'lifting.' It is sad, but they will not accept this Early Christian idea of 'having all things in common.' Indeed, Dr. Hull is, so far as I know, literature's only Early Christian—and even of that I am in a little doubt, since it is not made quite definite in his Preface that he freely throws his own book into the common stock.

I now pass momentarily to a tiny point. In your January issue Dr. Hull referred to Sir Michael Sadler's 'Spiritual Harmony.' In your February issue I pointed out that he must mean Kandinsky's 'Spiritual Harmony,' translated by Sir Michael Sadler's son. To this, in the same issue, Dr. Hull replies:

'In my reply last month, my confusion of the Sadlers (father and son, despite the pen-name change) was a "pen-slip" due to haste. The father possesses the picture and the son wrote the long and brilliant preface for the English translation of Kandinsky's book.'

That pen-slip is, however, obviously more than a confusion of 'the Sadlers, father and son.' It credits the foundational work on Expressionist painting, written by the greatest exponent of that type of painting, to an English translator. How does it strike your readers? Is Dr. Hull very candid about these little matters? The impression I get is that when he spoke of 'Sir Michael Sadler's "Spiritual Harmony"' he certainly meant some Sadler and had forgotten Kandinsky. But he ignores that point. However, the last thing I want in this letter is to appear severe.

I now approach the great Sabanief-Pring question! I have abundantly shown, by the use again of parallel columns, that Dr. Hull has drawn a very large part of his Scriabin matter direct from Mr. Pring's unpublished translation of Sabanief's book on Scriabin, which book Mr. Pring translated at my own request (I have not stated this before, but now do so), and of which I have a typescript on my files. In explaining my knowledge of the existence and character of this translation, I stated, 'For many years I have had a friendly business arrangement with Mr. Pring, whereby he should give me the benefit of his abundant and scholarly translations from the Russian.'

To this Dr. Hull replies, 'Splendid! I also have had, for many years, "a friendly business arrangement with Mr. Pring, whereby he should give me the benefit of his abundant and scholarly translations from the Russian."'

To that statement I should imagine Mr. Pring will himself wish to reply, as also to the statement 'I told Mr. Pring that I was quoting from Sabanief's work,' but any reader may test for himself my statement that Mr. Pring's name is nowhere mentioned in Dr. Hull's book.

I do not know what Dr. Hull means by the assertion 'Mr. Scholes does not even quote me correctly,' but no doubt you will offer him an opportunity of justifying this charge. It may be that some little word has gone astray in my writing, or my typist's copying, or your printing, but if so I am unaware of it, and I can at least say that I have striven to do Dr. Hull the justice of repeating him, not merely amply, but also accurately. However, we cannot all be masters of the art of quotation.

As for the charge that I 'must know it is not "a matter of public interest," but of private business,' it has been pointed out to me that this may possibly be a touch of that 'playfulness' which Dr. Hull says inspires his Preface, and may have reference to the fact that I am myself an author. If this is so, I would remind Dr. Hull that I was applying my parallel column method to his work at a date when nothing the two of us had ever published could, by any stretch of the imagination, be described as competing—in a review of his translation of Mr. Calvocoressi's 'Moussorgsky' which appeared in the Music Student for February, 1920.

Strange as it may appear to Dr. Hull, there are some of us who do consider the Ethics of Book-Making a subject of 'public interest,' and who would (to quote the conclusion of my last letter to you) like to see 'the never-resting activity of Dr. Hull as author, translator, and editor, directed in the best possible way.'

The fact that Dr. Hull's 'sales went up perceptibly' after last month's letter in the Musical Times does not surprise me. I can readily imagine that after the appearance of my two letters members of the Authors' Society have rushed to Messrs. Dent's sales counter, muttering the anxious question, 'Where do I come in?'

And now, out of pure friendship for Dr. Hull, I have fallen in with the wish that closes his last letter—'I hope that he will keep the ball rolling for me.' But how long is it to roll? It would save my time and relieve your columns if Dr. Hull would frankly say, 'Peccavi.'—Yours, &c.,

PERCY A. SCHOLES.

SIR,—As a peaceable man whose only desire is to 'cultivate his garden' (or allotment), I am very loth to join in the fray, but can hardly look on idly whilst Mr. Scholes does battle on my behalf.

Dr. Eaglefield Hull's reply to Mr. Scholes's letter in your February issue is not altogether in accordance with the facts, and is liable to give a wrong impression of the state of affairs.

Briefly, this is what happened: Dr. Hull had occasion to write to me in February, 1927, on another matter, and in the course of his letter he remarked: 'Some time ago I think you sent me a MS. of Sabanief's book on Scriabin. I tried one or two publishers for you then with little success, but I certainly think this book ought to appear in English and that we might have another try to get it published somewhere or other. I used some of the matter from the chapter on "The Orphic Path" in a forthcoming book of mine on Music (which I will let you see), in the hope it would recreate some interest in Scriabin again.'

I replied that I could not understand how he came to see the MS., as, to the best of my belief, it had been submitted to the Oxford University Press only. (In this I was wrong, as will appear later on.)

Dr. Hull's next letter informed me that he could not remember just where the MS. came from, but that he was very much taken with the work, and tried one or two publishers with it. He went on to say: 'I know that I took a few notes of a chapter which specially attracted me, called "The Orphic Path."' He suggested further that some one else might possibly have sent him another translation, though he thought it very unlikely. On this point Mr. Scholes's quotations in your February issue seem conclusive.

The subject was then allowed to drop, and was not mentioned again until an advance copy of Mr. Scholes's letter resurrected it.

It will be noted that Dr. Hull did not say, 'I am using' or 'May I use?' but 'I used' and 'I will let you see the book.' I therefore assumed that it was already in the press, and that it would contain the customary acknowledgment of the source of the author's quotations; and as I had no objection to being quoted, subject to the usual conditions, I did not refer to the matter in writing to Dr. Hull.

Through an oversight the book was not sent to me, and when I did see a copy after publication I was surprised to find that it contained no reference to the translator, and that instead of 'a few notes,' extensive use was made in the Scriabin chapter of my version of Prof. Sabanief's book. Much of the material did not appear in the form of quotations, but was so woven into the text as to make it impossible to say, without collation, what proportion of it belonged to Dr. Hull and what to Prof. Sabanief.

In a letter to me, dated January 18, Dr. Hull has suggested two explanations of his lapse: (a) 'Had I given the matter a moment's thought, of course I should have been only too glad to have mentioned your name'; and, a few lines lower down, (b) 'The omission of your name was probably due to my doubt as to where the MS. came from.'

With regard to publishers my memory played me false. Not long ago I unearthed the following letter from Messrs. Dent, dated July 1, 1925: 'Acting on the advice of our musical adviser, we have decided not to make an offer for the publication of "Scryabin."'

In Dr. Hull's reply to Mr. Scholes's letter he says: 'I have already approached six publishers on Messrs. Sabanief's and Pring's behalf.' I can account for two—the Oxford University Press and Messrs. Dent—and it would be interesting and useful to me to know the names of the other four. Dr. Hull's efforts on my behalf, for which I am grateful, were made without my knowledge and, as already stated, I do not understand how the MS. came into his hands. He himself has forgotten who sent it to him originally, but 'thinks it may have been some literary agent, but Mr. Foss sometimes hands things on.' In any event I cannot suppose that a publisher who submitted a MS. for an expert's opinion would approve of his borrowing from it for purposes of his own. In my case, except as a question of principle, it is of small consequence, but the practice might be indulged in to such an extent as seriously to prejudice an author's property in his manuscript.

Whilst my business relations with Dr. Hull have always been pleasant, they are of a comparatively recent date and cannot be compared with my long and intimate friendship with Mr. Scholes, whom I have known for upwards of fifteen years. I have not even had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Hull, and our intercourse has been confined to occasional correspondence concerning articles and books submitted for his editorial consideration. In this respect I take it that I am on an equal footing with other translators, which is a very different thing from my understanding with Mr. Scholes.

In justice to Dr. Hull I must add, that with his letter of January 18 he sent me an inscribed copy of 'Music,' 'as the best atonement I can make of my lateness in letting you see what passages I was using,' and also undertook that my name should appear in the third edition.—Yours, &c.,

S. W. PRING.

287, Onslow Drive, Glasgow, E.

SIR,—You have kindly sent me a proof of Mr. Pring's letter. My only comments are: (1) The MS. of Sabanief's 'Skryabin,' translated by Mr. Pring, was submitted to the Oxford University Press on his behalf by Mr. Percy Scholes, but was not accepted for publication; (2) it was never sent either by me or by my office to Dr. Hull.—Yours, &c.,

HUBERT J. FOSS

(Musical Editor, Oxford University Press).

[Dr. Eaglefield Hull writes: 'Thank you for letting me see the proofs of Mr. Scholes's and Mr. Pring's letters. The latter clears up many of the points raised. I should merely like to emphasise the fact that the Sabaneev MS., like many others (alas! about two a week), did not reach me from a publisher's, but from a private source; that it was of my own goodwill that I endeavoured to find a publisher for Mr. Pring (he was doing other work for me at the time); and that Messrs. Dent's letter was merely their formal declining of the work, after discussing costs, possible sales, &c. Mr. Scholes has now fallen back on merely repeating himself; and life is too short and too valuable for me to spend any more time in correcting his many inexactitudes, mauled quotations, mis-spellings, and curious claims to Russian rights. I must leave that to my friend Mr. Sabaneev, if he thinks it worth while. Or I am afraid that poor Mr. Scholes must now keep the ball rolling all by himself.']

[We comment on this correspondence in 'Occasional Notes.'—EDITOR.]

A QUESTION OF AGENT

SIR,—On p. 62 of your issue dated January, 1928, you publish a letter from the hon. general secretary of the Royal National Eisteddfod of Wales, the wording of which is calculated to cause misapprehension in the minds of your readers, and we draw attention to the fact that the mention of our name, in the list of subjects, as being agents for the firm of Breitkopf & Härtel, was made without our knowledge.

We have never represented ourselves as being agents for the firm in question.

Trusting you will give equal prominence to this letter.—Yours, &c.,

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.

11, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

GOUNOD'S 'PETITE SYMPHONIE'

SIR,—Your critic 'F. B.' does me a grave injustice when he suggests that I included Gounod's 'Petite Symphonie' in the programme of my first chamber concert, simply on account of the composer's 'name.' I did nothing of the sort. I never choose for performance works I do not know, and in this case my choice must be attributed to my bad taste rather than to my ignorance. But then my admiration for Gounod does not begin and end with 'Faust'; nor does my knowledge of his works.—Yours, &c., GERALD M. COOPER.

18, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W.3.

[Many Letters are held over.—EDITOR.]

Will the correspondent, 'Sans Diplome,' kindly forward his address? A letter awaits him.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Amateur pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice. S.W. district.—H. C., c/o Musical Times.

Vocalist (lady) wishes to meet lady pianist for mutual practice. One evening a week. Must be a good sight-reader.—Miss D. BARNETT, 13, Venetia Road, Finsbury Park, N.4.

Pianist and 'cellist wish to meet violinist for mutual practice. Good library.—C. N., 'Whittlesey,' Sutton Lane, Heston, Hounslow.

Amateur contralto wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Hackney district or near.—L., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist (lady) wishes to join trio or quartet for mutual practice. Amateur.—T., 31, Maxilla Gardens, N. Kensington, W.10.

Violinist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Walthamstow district.—C. R., 26, Ulverston Road, E.17.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet singer (or violinist) for accompanying and practice. Walthamstow.—K. L. M., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet lady violinist for mutual practice. S.W. district.—M. B., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist and 'cellist wish to meet capable violinist with a view to forming a trio. Croydon and Thornton Heath districts.—ALBERT STEEL, 13, Wharfedale Gardens, Thornton Heath, Surrey.

Young lady, taking L.R.A.M. at Easter, wishes to meet another lady with view to practice in 'touch' questions and other practical work. N.W. London.—W. O. S., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist and pianist (amateurs) wanted to complete small orchestra. Excellent ensemble practice.—C. Y. F., 113, Gospatrick Road, N.17.

Violinist (young lady or gentleman) wanted for mutual practice of standard works. Also 'cellist for pianoforte trio. W. London.—ARCO, c/o Musical Times.

Contralto used to part-singing wishes to join a quartet for mutual practice. Good sight-reader.—A.L.C.M., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady wishes to meet another student taking L.R.A.M. for pianoforte, with whom she may talk and exchange notes on the 'Form and Teaching' paper.—M. E. C., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist, recent L.R.A.M., wishes to meet other instrumentalists for further study and practice in accompaniment. London or N.W. district.—M. C., c/o Musical Times.

Flautist, expert orchestral player, wishes to join good small amateur orchestra. London district. — CLEF, c/o Musical Times.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of March, 1868:

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—Several paragraphs having appeared in the public papers announcing that the Royal Academy of Music is about to close, I beg to state that the Institution will open its summer session, as usual, on the 9th March, with an increase in the number of its students. May I request that you will insert this in your valuable paper, and oblige,

Your obedient servant,

WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT, Principal.

Royal Academy of Music,
17th February, 1868.

Sharps and Flats

For goodness sake, when I am off the stage do not think of me as a tenor! . . .—Rudolf Laubenthal.

I am looking for the contralto singer who will be my successor. She must be the contralto . . .—Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

British audiences are the most faithful in the world. Once they have acclaimed you a favourite, you are made. They never change. Old age does not cool their ardour or their fidelity. They clap an artist when he is old just as did their fathers when he was young.—Ignaz Friedman.

When Honegger imitates a locomotive, as in his 'Pacific 231,' he leaves art aside. To hear a locomotive I go to a railway station.—Vincent d'Indy.

If d'Indy's idea were widely applied, one could go down to the beach and hear the sea without listening to it depicted tonally by well-known composers, including d'Indy himself. No locomotive ever sounded like Honegger's imitation. Take any engineer to hear 'Pacific 231,' and ask him. Honegger seems to have given d'Indy a cinder in his eye.—Leonard Liebling.

In a song of Schubert or Brahms the accompanist does half the work; in some modern songs the singer may be thankful if he can get a word in edgeways.—E. J. Dent.

The question is constantly being asked, 'Are we a musical nation?' My answer to that is, 'Yes; but ——.' —H. C. Colles.

[After hearing Prof. Theremin's music from the ether], 'Well, the violin is still a good instrument.'—Rachmaninov.

Our sense of delicacy prompts us to print this in small type: The eminent Sir Thomas Beecham, guest-conductor from London, had a horrible accident on the Carnegie Hall stand during his debut appearance . . this gentleman is exceptionally animated in all his gestures . . and just before the intermission By Jove if one of his braces didn't break . . the titled Bond Street raiment lost its classic lines for a few moments while Sir Thomas retired gracefully sidewise from the scene.—Musical America.

I felt rather uncomfortable for a few minutes, but everything passed off all right, and I saved my trousers.—Sir Thomas Beecham.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

One of the features of the students' organ recital in the Duke's Hall on January 30, was the accompanying. Only the organ was used, and the various songs and especially two 'cello pieces, which were interspersed among the solos, provided a searching test of the artistic merits of the performers. Generally speaking a high level was maintained during the afternoon. Mr. Colin Hampton-Smith is a promising 'cellist, and he played an Adagio by Tartini and a Bourrée of Handel's. The organ accompaniment by Mr. Owen le P. Franklin was ideal, the two tones blending with quite extraordinary charm. Mr. Leonard Tanner played Bach's Prelude in C in excellent fashion, and the Allegretto from Elgar's only contribution to organ music, the Sonata in G, Op. 7, was well given by Mr. Yelland Richards, although a little more weight in this scherzo-like movement would have added materially to the effect. Miss Valetta Jacopi sang the air, 'Thou, Lord, alone dost crown' (from the Cantata, 'Es wartet Alles auf dich'), in good style. She has a big voice, but uses it with restraint; she will be well advised, however, to watch very carefully her inclination to excessive vibrato. Like other vices it is easy to acquire and difficult to cure.

At the chamber concert on February 13 there were two or three features worth mentioning. Mr. Richard V. Aldridge is a blind student, but nothing daunted by his handicap is on a fair way to becoming a competent musician. He played Four Preludes—Scherzo, Reflections, Mazurka, and Finale—of his own composition. If I say he is a better composer than a pianist, it is not meant as disparagement of his playing, but praise for his Preludes, the fourth of which is distinctly an ambitious effort. Miss Dorothy Haigh, who comes from Bradford, and earned high encomiums at the Blackpool Competitive Festival last autumn, sang two Bantock songs. She has a good voice, and is, in the best sense of the saying, a very promising young vocalist. Another singer, Miss Gwendolene Embley, from Blackburn, sang Bach's aria, 'O think on us with Thy compassion.' She was accompanied by pianoforte, two violins, viola, 'cello, double-bass, and oboe, and the performance was a good all-round effort. Miss Josephine Harrison (Liszt Scholar), a daughter of Mr. Evlyn Howard-Jones, the well-known pianist, played Bach's pianoforte Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue with much skill. This exceptionally good programme concluded with the Moderato and Tempo di Valse movements from John B. McEwen's 'The Jocund Dance,' which were appropriately played and greatly appreciated.

Our latest musical knight, Sir Edward German, is an old student of the Academy. It is a pleasure to announce that the R.A.M. Club is associating with the Music Club, and the two institutions will give a complimentary banquet at the Mayfair Hall on Thursday, March 29, to Sir Edward, to mark the honour conferred on him and on English music. The chairman on this interesting occasion will be Sir Edward's old friend, the late principal of the Academy, Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

The biennial competition for the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship, founded by subscription in 1872 as a testimonial to Sir William Sterndale Bennett, principal of the Academy from 1866 to 1875, will be held in April. This scholarship is open for competition in any branch of music, by male candidates who must be British-born subjects between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one years on the date of the competition, on or about Friday, April 27. The last day for receiving entries is Friday, April 13. F.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Of the numerous concerts and recitals given during the month, two orchestral concerts may be specially noticed. At one of these the whole programme, with the exception of Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent, was in the hands of senior members of the Conducting Class, and included Bizet's 'Jeux d'Enfants,' Brahms's 'Academic' Overture, Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte Concerto, and Haydn's 'Cello Concerto in D. The other concert, given by the First Orchestra, was under the direction of Dr. Adrian C. Boult, newly restored to health and once more working at full speed. The chief items in the programme were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, de Falla's 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain,' and Debussy's Three Nocturnes (with female chorus). Both audience and orchestra were delighted to welcome Dr. Boult on his return, and excellent performances celebrated the happy occasion.

During the past month a new lecture scheme of considerable importance was successfully launched. It takes the form of a course of eight Saturday morning lectures for music teachers engaged during the week in the London County Council schools. The course aims at something more practical than is usually implied in the term 'lecture,' for it encourages those attending the lectures to make music for themselves as well as to listen to it. The scheme includes Psychology (Prof. Percy Buck), Aural Training (Mr. Basil Allchin), History of Music and Appreciation (Mr. H. C. Colles), the Organizing of Concerts for Children (Dr. Malcolm Sargent), and Class Singing (Sir Hugh Allen). In addition, short concerts with explanatory notes have been arranged, and also a choral and orchestral concert in which the members of the course will take part. At the opening lectures, parts of movements of Schubert's Quintet in C were played, and selections from Bach's 'Sleepers, wake' and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols were sung.

The first Patron's Fund rehearsal of the term, under Dr. Malcolm Sargent, was devoted to artists and conductors. By invitation of the Director, four past and present students of the Royal Academy of Music (two singers, a pianist, and a conductor) provided the programme. A crowded audience enjoyed the performances, which reached a high level, both actual and potential, the most conspicuous being perhaps that of Mr. Arthur Fear, in the Credo from Verdi's 'Otello.'

The following awards have been made during the month: Violin Scholarship: Remo Lauricella. Operatic Exhibition: M. Vivian Lewis. Hopkinson Medals—Gold Medal: Leonard Isaacs; Silver Medal: Fredericka Hartnell; commended: Teresa Walters. George Carter Scholarships for organ and composition: J. P. Somers-Cocks, William H. Gabb, B. N. Mayer, E. H. Warr.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The sudden death of Mr. Millward Hughes, chairman of the Birkenhead centre, is recorded with much regret. Mr. Hughes was elected an honorary member of the College in 1920, as a recognition of his services.

His many friends will learn with regret that Dr. Creser, the veteran examiner for the College, has now decided to retire from active work. Dr. Creser has been connected with the College for over thirty-six years. His work in the Colonies and in India made his name world-known as a most capable and genial examiner. It is interesting to record that Dr. Creser paid no less than fourteen visits to India, where he was able to establish the College examinations on the sound foundation they now enjoy. He has also conducted examinations in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. Dr. Creser has been for many years vice-chairman of the College Corporation and also a member of the Board. That he may be spared to enjoy his well-earned rest for a long time to come is the wish of all who knew him.

The annual dinner of the Corporation was held on February 16, under the chairmanship of Mr. W. W. Cobbett. An enjoyable evening was spent, musical items being provided by the scholars. The Rt. Hon. Sir A. Spicer proposed the toast of the College, to which Prof. J. C. Bridge (Chairman of the Board) replied. Among those present were Sir Wilfred Collet (an old student), Mr. Carte de Lafontaine, and others. The annual meeting of the College Corporation will be held on March 16.

Rehearsals are in active progress for the performance of 'Madame Favart' at the Scala Theatre on July 19, 20, and 21.

The following is the list of Colonial examiners for the current year: Mr. Adolph Mann, Australia; Mr. Albert Mallinson, China, Straits, Ceylon, and Australia; Dr. Vaughan Thomas, Australia and Tasmania; Mr. C. Egerton Lowe, Canada and New Zealand (N.I.); Dr. J. E. Borland, New Zealand (S.I.); Dr. C. Edgar Ford, South Africa; Mr. Anderson Tyrer, South Africa; and Dr. Alfred Mistowski, India, Egypt, and Palestine.

The usual orchestral concert will be held at Queen's Hall on March 17. The Grotrian Hall chamber music and choir concert takes place on March 29.

A pianoforte recital to students was given recently by Mr. Archy Rosenthal, and was highly appreciated.

THE OLD VIC. REOPENED

The Old Vic., made cleaner and more comfortable, but still retaining its early 19th-century look, reopened its doors on February 6. The refurbishing had taken some months. The chief alteration is the new sloping floor of the stalls and pit, which gives every one a good view. Nearly £30,000 has been spent.

The happiest spirit reigned at the reopening. Miss Lilian Baylis, the indomitable, had one of the nights of her life. The Old Vic. is her work. She is to be felicitated on it. There is a supposition that the Old Vic., with its 5*d.* gallery, is exclusively the house of entertainment of the 'masses.' Its supporters in great part belong probably to a certain modest and intelligent section of the middle classes who have no use for the inordinately dear and inordinately silly entertainments of most of the West-End theatres.

Shakespeare is of course the mainstay of the Old Vic. Miss Baylis's Shakespearean productions are a cause for proper pride. The Old Vic.'s opera asks for rather more allowances. Opera is such a tall order, and the O.V. opera company sometimes attempts the impossible. It is rather a question whether it would not be better advised to cultivate more light opera. The O.V. is the only London scene where Donizetti's 'Daughter of the Regiment' is ever to be witnessed. What a jolly piece it is, and what a success the company makes of it! And there are many neglected operas of that calibre.

Still, the policy being what it is—to present as well as possible every sort of opera, including the 'grandest' and most exacting—we will not quarrel with it. There is plenty to be said on that side.

'Carmen,' which opened the season, is a lightish kind of opera with special and formidable difficulties of its own. It is usually called a masterpiece. The critical spectator marvels at its occasional overwhelming masterliness, and laments that its authors had not the conscience and the skill to make of it truly and indeed the masterpiece it might have been. The unqualifiable stupidity of certain things! The way in which that poor marionette of a Micaela is dragged on and off the stage as though she were on wires! The inverisimilitude of the Toreador's comings and goings!

Great is the magic that makes the world oblivious of such childishness. And to all the ineptitude of the libretto and the music's inequalities is added an English translation that seems designed to impress this on the spectator: 'These people are not meant to be believed in! Opera is a form of Punch-and-Judy show, and should never have contact with human life. Nothing is to be expressed naturally, for opera is no relation of nature's.'

In the Waterloo Road the story of a soft-hearted young soldier who comes to grief through falling to a vixen's fascination might be credible enough. It is removed to a queer pinchbeck-and-sawdust world by an English such as has never been spoken by anyone and never written by anyone but libretto-translators. The lines simply bristle with artificialities and inversions.

'Come back' and 'go back' are banned colloquialisms. It is always, 'return.' 'I soon shall return,' coos Micaela. 'Return' is a word which in real life we address to nobody but the ticket clerk at the station. Carmen, the vixen of the gutter and the hedgerow, wants to say to José, 'What are you staring at now?' She has to sacrifice half the effect she has been at pains to make with her pretty wickedness by coming out with: 'At what dost thou now gaze?'

The Old Vic. audience is so keen on opera that it does not mind such things too much. But it is certain that the translation used by the B.N.O.C. is a great handicap to their 'Carmen.' The Puccini operas, likewise, are translated in this stilted fashion, which has all along been an obstacle to opera in English—for an English audience, if quick in nothing else, is quick to see absurdity.

The Carmen who was so clever as to make an effect in spite of this unnatural diction was Miss Enid Cruickshank. She gave a lively and engaging performance. One of her merits was to make no pretence that Carmen was a fine lady gone to the bad. Some of the Carmens one sees should be told to go home and read Mérimée. The more Mérimée were to shock them the better.

Miss Cruickshank knows a good deal about singing. She has not a very powerful voice, and is perhaps too aware of this. To spread the smaller vowels in the interests of volume is not a good method. Miss Cruickshank inclined to this in her more thoughtful moments, but when she threw herself into the drama and meant her words to be telling she was excellent. Grander scenes have often witnessed Carmens less effective than hers.

The best voice in the company was undoubtedly the tenor. Mr. Edward Leer has been appearing at the Old Vic. for some few years. We have our eye on him as a coming singer. If his José did not show all the advance that might have been expected, it is fair to remember that in the altered theatre the orchestra, which remains a small one, is deeper and less audible than formerly, and Mr. Charles Corri was, it seems, out of sight of the singers at times.

Mr. Leer has learnt a good deal about soft singing. It was a pleasure to observe his easy demeanour. No upper-chest breathing! His best tone, large and yet not loud, as grateful to the ear. He does not possess the art of maintaining quality while increasing intensity. Often as he went up he pinched his tone. There was probably tremendous effort behind some of his higher forte notes, which for all that were not telling in the fullest way.

Such strictures are expressed because this José is a singer who may, if all goes well, become distinguished. He has many qualities, and the O.V. audience very naturally delights in him. Though a gigantic fellow, he has an easy stage manner. He never overdoes gesture, and yet with discreet facial play he never fails to maintain contact with the drama. In fact, some of the reality of the disastrous pair was truly expressed by this Carmen and José.

The chorus of women was excellent, notably in Act 1; the men were less adequate. In the small parts were singers who had established friendship with the audience before—Miss Winifred Brady, Miss Nono, and Mr. Arnold Beauvais (who was a little too much like Don Quixote for this particular Spanish piece). Mr. Sumner Austin, who must have put in as much hard work in a variety of parts as anyone in the last few years, was the Toreador. Unfortunately, he still allowed an unruly tongue to muffle his tone. In the course of a page he would try half-a-dozen methods of production. He showed so willing that one felt one might expect him any day to discover the way to keep the tongue in its place, and so to release a fine voice. Mr. S. Harrison, a singer who is invaluable in the smaller comic parts (no one can match him as the gardener in 'Figaro'), was the smugglers' chieftain.

At the end of the opera, in a scene of high cordiality, Miss Baylis was presented on the stage with a portrait of herself, which is to hang in the theatre she has made famous. Unfortunately a jarring note was struck by Mr. Ben Greet, who not once but about twenty times appealed for an American millionaire to pay off the Old Vic.'s debts. It is detestable thus to go, hat in hand, begging from well-to-do neighbours. One Englishman, at least, felt humiliated during this long, repetitive, and undignified appeal. Miss Baylis's speech was delightful—femininely inconsecutive and sensible as you like. C.

HOLST'S 'EGDON HEATH'

CHELTENHAM, FEBRUARY 13

Gustav Holst's native town is now (whatever it was not a few years ago) thoroughly awake to the distinction it has won through the composer of 'The Planets.' It brought off a good stroke by staging the first performance in England here, on February 13, of 'Egdon Heath,' which New York had heard the day before, and which London is to hear at the end of the month.

The concert was one of a new series organized by some of the leading musicians and citizens. The City of Birmingham Orchestra has been engaged for the series. Mr. Holst came down to conduct the new work. Dr. Adrian Boult conducted Schubert's C major Symphony.

'A place perfectly accordant with man's nature—neither ghastly, hateful, nor ugly; neither commonplace, unmeaning, nor tame; but, like man, slighted and enduring; and withal singularly colossal and mysterious in its swarthy monotony.' So runs the quotation from 'The Return of the Native' on the score of 'Egdon Heath.' The world must not expect a symphonic poem with musical indications of Eustacia, the Reddleman, and the rest. Nor even a highly coloured landscape with storm and sunrise. Even Hardy's bonfires have been of no use to the musician. The piece is in fact not in the least literal.

It is a fairly brief piece of music, very spare, very concentrated, very quiet. Once again we have 'sensations rather than descriptions.' Holst has stared long over the Dorset scene, and has thought, as he stared, of the poet of the scene—Hardy, the simple, the deep, the disillusioned, the mystic. 'Egdon Heath' is the music in which his thoughts took shape.

The style of its expression is extraordinarily rarefied. It is to such a comparable work of an earlier period as 'Saturn' what Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' is to his 'London' Symphony. It will perhaps suggest a line drawing with a wash of colour. The certainty of the least touch is absolute. The mood of it is severe—neither dispirited, nor exuberant, but steady, attentive, stoical.

It will take time for this music to sink into the English musical public's consciousness. There is nothing in it to arrest an idle ear. For practical purposes it will be wise to associate it in concert-programmes with the irresistible Fugal Overture, as was done here. The Fugal Overture has hitherto not had justice done to it, owing to the lack of a suitable partner for it in a programme.

The performance here had good points, but the playing by the double-basses of the opening theme was not one of these. The Birmingham Orchestra contains some good players, and others less good. It needs more strings. Of course it is much that Birmingham should have a subsidized orchestra. The fact remains that the mighty and affluent city still has not a first-rate orchestra. Cannot Birmingham manage this? C.

PURCELL'S 'KING ARTHUR' AT CAMBRIDGE

On February 14 and during the following days 'King Arthur, or The British Worthy,' described by its author as a dramatic opera by John Dryden and Henry Purcell, was produced at the New Theatre, Cambridge, by a company consisting entirely of dons and undergraduates and other residents of Cambridge. This was, it is claimed, the first real performance of the work since its original production in 1691, at the Dorset Garden Theatre, with Mr. Betterton and Mrs. Bracegirdle in the two principal parts. Many will remember the performance of the music at the Birmingham Festival of 1897.*

Its description as an opera is in a way misleading to 20th-century hearers. It is more in the nature of a Masque, and might without disrespect be called a revue. The dramatic and the musical parts are practically separate. There is a large supernatural element in the plot, and there is Merlin, who seems to have, as well as the heathen magician Osmond, a good deal of power over the spirits who also appear. And a good many of the episodes, as the final scene of the Pageant of the British Ocean and the famous scene of 'Winter in Frozen Countries,' have very little to do with the struggle between King Arthur and the heathen Saxons. The blindness of Princess Emmeline (a curious name for a serious opera) is also irrelevant. The scene, however, in which she recovers her sight shows that Dryden at least did not consider a certain amount of not too high comedy out of place in an opera.

Every musician knows that 'King Arthur' contains some of Purcell's most glorious music, but its full effect cannot be made when it is given on the concert platform divorced from the context. In dramatic appropriateness no less than in melodic beauty, 'Come, if you dare' and 'Fairest Isle, all isles excelling' are not inferior to any later operatic music, and the modernity of the Frost music is astounding, when we consider that it was written when Bach and Handel were six years old. Incidentally, it may be mentioned that the desired effect was—if I am not mistaken—produced on this occasion by causing half the strings to play without a tremolando and the other half with. These are, of course, the best known musical numbers in the work, but the passacaglias at the end and some of the choruses, especially 'Hither, this way,' deserve almost equal fame. Indeed, the whole score well merited the eulogy passed on it by Dryden himself, who said in his letter to the Marquis of Halifax, prefixed to the opera: 'There is nothing better than what I intended, but the music, which has since arrived in greater perfection in England than ever formerly, especially passing through the artful hands of Mr. Purcell who has composed it with so great a genius that he has nothing to fear but an ignorant, ill-judging audience.'

For the performance itself there can be nothing but praise. It was hardly to be expected that the undergraduate soloists could do justice to the great airs, but they worked manfully, and the singing of the chorus, trained by Dr. Cyril Rootham, who also conducted, was excellent.

The production by Mr. Dennis Arundell, who also edited the score, is masterly in the way in which it preserved the 17th-century spirit, and the scenery and dresses with their harmonious colour-schemes, designed by Mr. Humphrey Jennings, and made by the ladies of Cambridge, would have done honour to any opera house in Europe, or the United States. It would be a pity if the talents of these two gentlemen are not some day given the fullest scope in a large theatre. I would specially mention the many-coloured plumes of the helmets of the various soldiers, and the beautiful scene in which the effective final Pageant pastoral ballet took place.

* See Musical Times, 1897, p. 746.

Criticism of the soloists is perhaps out of place, but the excellent singing in the Frost Scene of Miss Margaret Field-Hyde and Mr. Cyril Franklin should not be passed over. Among the actors, Mr. Beves, the Dean of King's, terrible in huge black head-dress and with a most ferocious black beard, showed a fine sense of 'penny plain and tuppence coloured' comedy.

A. K.

London Concerts

SCHÖNBERG'S 'GURRELIEDER'

The B.B.C.'s production of this work (January 27) occurred too late for notice in last month's Musical Times, and already seems too stale as news for the present issue. Indeed, there is significance in the suddenness and promptitude of the silence that followed a performance so eagerly anticipated and so industriously written-up beforehand. One felt that the B.B.C. was doing well in giving us a chance of hearing a work that seemed likely to establish itself as a masterpiece taken on trust because nobody could afford to perform it; but before the evening was over doubts began to arise as to whether, after all, so costly an enterprise had been worth while—for, to be frank, the first twenty minutes proved boring, and even at the interval nothing had been heard that justified so vast an assemblage of performers. Mr. Newman has soundly berated critics who pointed out that the music of this first part was reminiscent of Wagner. 'Why not tell us that Queen Anne is dead?' he asks. Well, it is not difficult to conceive a set of circumstances in which the affirmation of so familiar an historical fact may be necessary; and, similarly, one cannot discuss the 'Gurrelieder' without pointing out that the weakness of the early portion is due to the Wagnerian reminiscences. They pop up in a way that prevents one from taking the early Schönberg seriously. The likeness is even amusing at times; and the lamentable history of Waldemar and Tova can make no impression on hearers who, with the best will in the world, find themselves settling down into a game of spotting old friends. (The 'Tannhäuser' 'Pilgrims' Chorus' did capital service.) So the interval found us disappointedly reporting Queen Anne's death. The Schönberg of the remainder of the work, however, was a horse of another colour. Even when allowance is made for the later date of the music, and for the fact that the 'book' gives greater opportunities—incident instead of interminable love duets—the superiority of the later portion is remarkable.

The composer is losing Wagner and finding himself. True, he is finding Strauss as well, but his touch is so sure that such influences are assimilated instead of being thrown up like the Wagnerian derivatives earlier on. So the evening ended on a top note of enthusiasm. The performance was unequal. It was clear that the early part suffered from the fact that both Miss Stiles-Allen and Mr. Parry Jones (Tova and Waldemar) were ill at ease. The composer was partly to blame here, for the tenor had frequently to contend against such a welter of sound that he was often seen but not heard. The first bit of live vocal work came from Mr. Frank Phillips, as the Peasant, who bravely stepped forward, copyless, and woke us up with some capital free singing. The remaining soloists—Miss Gladys Palmer and Mr. John Perry—also did well. Mr. Arthur Wynne undertook the speaker's part, and is not to be blamed for proving once more that the speaking voice cannot well be combined with instrumental music. The mammoth chorus had far too little to do. The male voices were first heard in what was supposed to be a shriek of horror, behind the scenes. Instead they stood up as one man, and shouted. (The home team, it appeared, had scored a goal!) No blood was curdled. Like the shout in Delius's 'Eventyr,' it disconcertingly amused, instead of thrilled. The full mixed chorus was not used until the close (about 10.30), when the women singers, who had been on duty since 8, were awakened for the purpose of singing a brief epilogue that lasted about five minutes. What a waste! The production is reported to have cost £2,000. What couldn't be done for neglected English works—not one, but a dozen—for that sum! Will the B.B.C. do it? The 'Gurrelieder' as a whole is not likely to be heard again. But cannot the vivid Part 3 be salvaged, and used as an orchestral symphonic poem?

By the way, preliminary press notes made much of the fact that the score included a part for 'heavy iron chains.' I didn't hear them, and have met nobody who did. Did the player miss his cue? Or were they muted?

H. G.

'HERCULES'

Handel is one of the composers who needs saving from his interpreters; fidelity and loyalty to him need to be replaced by more iconoclastic virtues. It is not merely a question of tempo, which conductors can and do vary, but of the dogged style of the choralist grown old in the service of the master. The Handel Society of recent years has suffered many changes of conductor, but it breaks the spirit of all of them by sheer enthusiasm for its own long and now outworn tradition. The instrumental section of the Society is more efficient and much more responsive to the will of a conductor who wishes not merely to resurrect but to revive Handel. Mr. Douglas Hopkins, the assistant-organist of St. Paul's, has now taken over the conductorship of the Handel Society, and appeared with them for the first time in a performance of 'Hercules,' given at the Palladium on January 29, for the National Sunday League. He showed that he perceived the fundamentally dramatic nature of Handel's writing, but he could not convince his choir, especially the men, that it was drama, not sermons, which they were delivering. The orchestra, however, did well with two orchestral interludes which are among the vital things in a work that on the whole merits its neglect. The music is much too machine-made, and is only redeemed by the soprano arias, the big descriptive aria of Dejanira, and a charming duet for tenor and soprano at the end of the oratorio.

The soloists were Miss Flora Woodman, who spoiled a good afternoon's work by an unwarrantable attempt to dictate the tempo in the final duet, Miss Millicent Russell, who warmed to Dejanira's big air in truly dramatic style, Mr. Henry Wendon, who is somewhat impassive but has a beautifully pure tenor tone, and Mr. Stuart Robertson, who sang the music of Hercules with the intelligence and fervour on which we can always gratefully rely in him.

It is a good thing to take out these forgotten works of Handel's from time to time and have a look at them, and it is the main function of the Handel Society to do that for us. It implies, therefore, no ingratitude to the Society when we find, as we did in the case of 'Hercules,' that we need not lament that we hear it only so rarely.

F. S. H.

BACH CHOIR

Bach was represented in the Bach Choir's concert at Queen's Hall on February 1, by the duet Cantata No. 32, 'Liebster Jesu.' The singers, Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Harold Williams, were admirable. Two young R.C.M. composers, Mr. Robin Milford and Mr. Gerald Finzi, were admitted into the programme and justified themselves. The former's Double Fugue struck no excessive gestures, and was modest in the time it occupied the stage—a time in which interest did not flag. Mr. Gerald Finzi's Violin Concerto had its engaging moments. The 'Introit' (slow movement) was an abnormally long introit. The composer is a young hand. There are marks that are missed. But his is a name to remember.

The Choir had clearly screwed themselves up to do justice to the 'Sea Symphony,' whose composer is shortly retiring from his long captaining of them. Noble music! We left, wondering that such a gift can ever have been received grudgingly (but it has!). The Bach Choir are not the sort of people who are grudging in such a case. The willingness of spirit in their singing made up for a deal. The same two soloists were, if anything, better than in the cantata. Mr. Williams has come on. He is a really fine singer. C.

FRANCK'S 'BEATITUDES'

It is a puzzle why Franck's 'Beatitudes' did not capture the English public of a generation ago. It would seem to have been the very music for audiences that liked Mendelssohn, Spohr, and Gounod.

A hint towards an explanation was to be found in the programme of the London Choral Society's performance at Queen's Hall on February 15, in a plaintive remark about the expense of copies of the music and the errors in the parts. Handled by a business-like publisher in the 1880's, 'The Beatitudes' would surely not so completely have missed the English public's ear. Worse music has often been taken up by the choral societies of our land. The principal objection which might have been reasonably raised would have been against the feeble and diffuse paraphrases of Biblical texts which are put into the mouth of Jesus. To-day it looks as though 'The Beatitudes' has missed its moment so far as England is concerned. The music languished at the Queen's Hall performance, and this was not wholly to be put down to the dismally insufficient execution.

Franck's expression of Christian sentiment is—like 19th-century religious painting, from Ary Scheffer to Bouguereau, and like the devotional verse of Mrs. Hemans, Longfellow, and Miss Procter—tiresomely sweet and nerveless. Franck is indeed a Longfellow of music: amiable, felicitous often, and irreproachable in his intentions, but lacking a virile strain. After half an hour or so, these 'Beatitudes' began to seem unctuous—sanctimonious. That was not the spirit of the religion that conquered the world.

The performance, we have said, was bad, and to this must in part be put down our lack of desire at the evening's end ever to hear the work again. But not to this only, but also to a monotonous style of choral writing and ineffective scoring. The music contains undeniable beauties, curiously suggestive of Elgar. These occur at the most intimate and reflective moments. Mr. Arthur Fagge, who conducted, would probably have been more at home in livelier and more superficial music. As conductor he must bear the blame for the lack of that right fineness, sympathy, and poetry—in fact, for nearly everything that makes such a performance worth giving. For whatever reason, the orchestral playing was deplorable. Blunders by the score could have been forgiven if the general spirit had been more elevated.

The soprano soloist sang accurately but coldly. The contralto had the beginnings of a good voice, but she must learn to produce a steady tone. Mr. Hubert Eisdell's light and rather dry tenor was not of the right quality for the music. There were good points in Mr. W. R. Allen's singing of the words of Jesus; his tone had quality, but he was inclined to mouth. The Satan (Mr. Frank Sale), though an immature singer, was one who may be expected to have a future. His broad singing was really distinguished at times, but he pecked at important words. C.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

The Southwark Saturdays go bravely on, in spite of heavy expenses and smallish collections. The latest news is that the organ needs repair at the cost of £4,000, only a tenth of which is in the coffers. A benefactor paid the expenses of the music on February 11, on condition that the collection went to the organ fund. Are there any other benefactors who read the Musical Times? Southwark is worth supporting. Mr. Cook and his men and boys (about fifty of them, on this day) put in a tremendous amount of work, and give us some very sound, sober singing (with a particularly easy, natural, healthy tone from the boys).

E

We had Elgar's second Symphony, Walford Davies's 'Five Sayings of Jesus,' Bainton's 'Hymn to God the Father,' Vaughan Williams's 'O vos omnes,' and Verdi's 'Stabat Mater,' that odd little concentration of suave southern melody, pathos, and drama.

Both the Davies and Bainton works were written for the Worcester Festival (1911 and 1926 respectively). The former has moments of happy winsomeness, but sometimes moves a little self-consciously, lacking ease of modulation, and falling nearly into banality—in such places as p. 11 (the tenor solo, 'Grant me to rest'). It is possible for modesty to o'erleap simplicity, and fall on the other side. Bainton's piece (it is about eight minutes long) has some angularities, but it comes off better than the score (Oxford University Press) suggests. The composer seems to me to have got a grasp of something of the spiritual bluffness that Donne here displays in the poem. There is a tang in both words and music.

The Elgar generates ample power whatever the 'reading.' Mr. Cook and the L.S.O. wisely gave it air and space (a little too much, in the Scherzo, which never quite came up into focus, for me). A cathedral is the spiritual home of music so deep and true as that slow movement. To hear it there, without the noise of applause to dispel our dreams, is a rich benediction.

Many will like to note these events at Southwark: Saturday, March 17, the 'St. Matthew' Passion; April 14, Easter carols, with other choral music by Anerio, Byrd, and Charles Wood, and String Quartets by Mozart and Brahms.

W. R. A.

BASIL CAMERON

For years Mr. Cameron has been of repute as a conductor in the provinces—Torquay, Hastings, Harrogate; but never London. The stigma was at last lifted from him by the Philharmonic Society on January 26. Mr. Cameron bore the operation well. The provincial conductor, as a rule, conforms to type. He conducts week in, week out; his acquaintance with the underworld of musical masterpieces is extensive and peculiar; he is a thorough man of the orchestra; he is one of the hardest workers in the profession, and has more friends in it than enemies. But place him in the larger limelight, and his shadow quickly grows less. This is where Mr. Cameron broke from his type, for his shadow remained of good size all the evening. He handled a big orchestra and big works on a big occasion like one who was at home with all three.

The works were a handful for a conductor: Joachim's 'Overture to a Comedy by Gozzi,' Elgar's Introduction and Allegro, Bax's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte (Miss Harriet Cohen), Delius's 'Dance Rhapsody,' a new work by Malipiero, and Beethoven's eighth Symphony. Conductor and pianist made a brave show of Bax's music, which is one of the most continuously interesting works of its kind—works, that is, in which a composer fills out a large canvas with coloured imaginings, using the pianoforte as his prevailing light. Such works are not to be confused with concertos; one looks back to César Franck for their progenitor.

Mr. Cameron's dealing with Beethoven was clear and apt and refreshing after the many strains of the earlier music.

Malipiero's work was a set of 'Symphonic Fragments' for a musical 'mystery' dealing with the life of St. Francis of Assisi. Very good journeyman's music, of no importance, it needed the rest of the mystery to make its bearings and merits clear. M.

B.B.C. NATIONAL SYMPHONY CONCERT

It is often alleged that nowadays—thanks partly to the development of the music-publishing business, partly to that of the Press, and most of all to the eagerness of would-be pioneers who are ever prowling in quest of new composers to extol before any one else gets hold of them—there is no likelihood of a composer of any merit remaining overlooked. I do not remember whether I ever wrote as much, but I am sure I have thought so more than once. I remembered it quite remorsefully while listening to Janácek's Sinfonietta. To quote from the programme notice (from the pen of Mrs. Rosa Newmarch, who nowadays is exploring Czecho-Slovakian music as sedulously as she was exploring, at an earlier period, Russian music): 'Janácek, born in June, 1854, was scarcely known in his own country until his opera "Jenufa" was produced at Prague in 1916.' He was certainly not better known abroad. During the past four years or so we have been given opportunities to hear a few specimens of his work. He is a most genially imaginative, clever, straightforward composer; and it might be added, considering the fact that the delightful Sinfonietta under notice was written in 1925, one whose mind seems endowed with the privilege of never-fading youth. Whether he is as successful in earnest moods as in moods of mere play, I cannot say at present; but for lightness and sheer joy in banter his music belongs to the most attractive I know. Its success was not quite so great as I should have expected it to be—perhaps because many of those who are constantly clamouring for good music of the lighter kind are not quite so eager for more of it as they think they are.

The other novelty at this concert was Edward Mitchell's Fantasy Overture, for which I cannot find a single good word to say, despite the fact that the judges who recommended this work for inclusion in the Carnegie Trust collection described it as—so the programme notice informs us—'a striking and original work of great force and character . . . full of interest.' M.-D. C.

MEDTNER IN LONDON

Nicolas Medtner is a name that has for years cropped up sporadically on London concert programmes, but it was necessary to go out of one's way to obtain a general view of his art. Seeing the crowd at his first London concert (Æolian Hall, February 16), one guessed that Medtner is better known to those who make music domestically than his public fame indicates. He was received with exceptional cordiality—one might say affectionateness. And the audience appeared to know these pianoforte pieces—Sonata in C, Novelle, Fairy-tales—and songs.

It was a pleasant but not an exciting concert. Medtner has no strange originality to display, no exceptional personality. His idiom is no more surprising than Anthony Trollope's. But all those things which we have come to expect when a new composer gives a concert of his works are nothing to the domestic music-maker, who asks that a new composition shall be accessible to average fingers; that it shall turn up with, so to speak, letters of introduction: that it shall have possibilities of friendliness rather than of revolutionary upheavals. Medtner composes in a homely German 19th-century way. His style is that of a cultivated man whose best friends are the great authors. Any page of his works shows what a good, classic taste he has. His pianoforte playing was beautifully mellow. Altogether, a first-class musician, if not a great composer.

The songs were sung by Madame Makushina, who unfortunately stifled half the music in her voice by her faulty breathing. Only one phrase did we notice that seemed to be easily produced—the first line of 'Einsamkeit,' which was a charming song. Other songs might possibly have been as much enjoyed if the singer had not conveyed so much discomfort. C.

LÉNER QUARTET

The Léner Quartet began a new series of Beethoven recitals on February 8, and Queen's Hall held a good audience at the opening concert, the proceeds of which were devoted to Sir Thomas Beecham's opera scheme. The playing of M. Jeno Léner and his colleagues is pretty well-known, and there was nothing in the programme—C minor, Op. 18, No. 4; E flat major, Op. 74; C sharp minor, Op. 131—to reveal any new aspect of their art. Nevertheless the more one hears this Quartet the greater becomes one's respect and admiration for the care devoted to the minutest detail. The ease of the performance, the sweetness of the leader's tone, suggest at times a care-free improvisation. As a matter of fact I know of no other quartet the readings of which depend for their excellence so much on perfect measure and understanding of minutiæ. These players have evolved a technique which is that of all great interpreters—as opposed to virtuosi—and may be said to consist in reading correctly the indications of the composer and in the realisation that music is sometimes written not as it must be played but as it must sound. This is the pons asinorum of music. It is the test by which you can tell goats from sheep. The Léner Quartet passes the test with greater honours than any other quartet I know, except perhaps the Flonzaley.

B. V.

FIFTH GERALD COOPER CHAMBER CONCERT

Janácek's Concertino for pianoforte, two violins, viola, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, is as pleasing as his Sinfonietta, and in the same way. With this, Herbert Howells's Rhapsodic Quintet, for clarinet and strings, and Beethoven's Septet in E flat, the variety and interest of the concert were as great as could be wished. The performances by the International String Quartet and Messrs. F. Thurston, A. Brain, R. Newton, C. Hobday, and Angus Morrison were excellent throughout. M.-D. C.

LEON ZIGHERA

Greek met Greek when Leon Zighera tackled the Lalo 'Symphonie Espagnole' at the recital he gave at Æolian Hall. A highly emotional piece of music in the hands of a highly emotional player is not a desirable affair. Sweetness added to sweetness becomes intolerable; vehemence on the top of vehemence degenerates into unsupportable violence. Yet even in Lalo's piece Zighera commanded respect for impeccable intonation and quickness of bow and finger. When he came to Elgar's Sonata for pianoforte and violin it was possible, however, to appreciate far rarer qualifications. His reading was intelligent, faultless, warm, and the 'Romance' has never been better played in our experience. What is still more notable, this excellent performance of the violinist's owed nothing to the pianist, whose playing was dull and haphazard. One would much like to hear this violinist again, but it is devoutly to be wished that his programme will then differ from the one under review. Our interest in old music does not extend as far as the Porpora-Salmon Sonata in F major, nor can we imagine the town fired by the prospect of hearing one more performance of Beethoven's Romance in F. F. B.

ORREA PERNEL

There is perhaps something to be said for an education which embraces foreign studies and foreign experiences. But that such an education should not be lightly undertaken was shown, in my opinion, by the recital of Miss Orrea Pernel, a gifted young English violinist, who has just completed her studies at Paris. On the Continent, as in England, teachers are to be found in great numbers, some of whom possess the gift of imparting knowledge, and others who do not. Moreover, there are students who will do exceedingly well under one system, and will gain nothing from the discipline of another. Miss Pernel played most things well, and some very well; but one was under the impression that her method was not likely to produce the best possible results. She appears to have an innate talent for tone of much suavity, and her left hand was equal to all the demands of Vaughan Williams's 'The lark ascending' and Mozart's Concerto in E flat major. The Bach Concerto in E major, on the other hand, lacked authority and grandeur—failings which I am inclined to ascribe to imperfection of style. F. B.

KUBELIK

Kubelik gave a farewell recital at the Albert Hall before returning to his fat acres in Hungary, from which he will no doubt depart again next year bound for the yearly musical pilgrimage. The most satisfactory thing about this last recital was that he forbore from playing one of his own concertos. The next point to be noted was a considerable improvement in technique since last year—greater assurance, better intonation and tone, which often had much of the old sweetness. If Kubelik will devote the next few months to steady violin practice instead of composition, he may yet win back some of his early glories. I say 'some' because the merit of the Sevcik method (of which he is the chief exponent) is all in the left hand. Kubelik's bowing, now that the player can no longer count on the suppleness of young nerves and muscles, tends to reveal deficiencies of method. There were laid bare in the Coda of Saint-Saëns's Concerto (last movement), which failed utterly to attain technical adequacy in spite of a lamentably slow tempo.

B. V.

RAYA GARBOUSOVA

Bach is the best food for infant musicians. 'Cellists and violinists will profit by the study of Bach as much as, if not more than, pianists and organists. But before a Bach reading is ripe for public performance the student must have assimilated not only every outward feature, but the inner significance of his music. Mlle. Raya Garbousova showed herself a brilliant and, indeed, most promising 'cellist at Wigmore Hall. Yet her dexterity and her buoyant temperament were not enough to sustain the listener's interest in the Suite in G for 'cello, unaccompanied. Warmth of tone and the very tactful support she received from Mr. Harold Craxton, gave much attraction to the Brahms Sonata in F major, which marked the highest point in the achievements of the evening. One felt convinced the Mlle. Garbousova must in time win for herself a position of distinction. She will shorten very considerably her apprenticeship if she pays more attention to the strict control of rhythm and emotion.

B. V.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Leo Slezak, the Czech tenor, sang at Wigmore Hall on February 7. This gigantic fellow did hardly anything else so well as Schumann's little 'Nussbaum.' He was equally good in nearly all the 'Mondnacht,' but unhappily he was impelled at one point to let fly. When Slezak lets fly he throws all consideration overboard, and forces shamelessly. It is not that his tone is too big in fortissimo, but that it is wrongly produced—tight, clenched, and quite alarmingly unpleasant. It is astounding that so reckless a singer should have pursued a long career of glory in the most musical countries of Europe. Still, his mezza-voce is entrancing.

Madame Claire Croiza sang Fauré and Debussy at Mr. Gerald Cooper's concert, accompanied by Mr. George Reeves, on January 24. Her choice included part of 'La Bonne Chanson,' but excluded three of the songs. She made the effect of a keenly intelligent, if rather cold, person. Her French was beautifully clear and precise to the point of sounding almost like a demonstration. 'This is how French should be sung,' was the moral of her performance, rather than the poetical sentiments of Verlaine. She was a cultivated singer, and after a few songs one could guess how the rest would come out.

Madame Jarmila Novotna, at Wigmore Hall, on February 2, rather surprisingly sang Schubert in Czech. There are two languages in which a song may be appropriately sung—that of the original composition and that understood by the audience. Madame Novotna's voice was imperfectly trained. There were some agreeable stretches of soft singing, but the higher and louder tones were helplessly uncovered and uncontrolled—mere squawks, in fact. From this performance one could not tell whether or no she would come to any good.

Sir Thomas Beecham, who was warmly welcomed home after his American adventures, gave a concert at the Albert Hall, on February 19, with four singers. Four at such a concert is too much to allow of any orchestral music more than mere interludes; but an extract from Berlioz's 'Trojans' was the most distinguished piece in the programme. The first singer, Enrico di Mazzei (tenor), stood on the platform in a position of utter impassiveness—'at attention,' in fact—and this was felt to hamper his production. The middle of his voice was resonant. His upper tone would have been better for a wider stretching of the throat. He was no mean singer, for all that. The soprano, Madame Guglielmetti, has the makings of a pretty singer, but she attempted to work with the most superficial tone. Except for the lightest of head notes, her breathing was inadequate. The result was the least possible variety—except that which was caused by incertainty. The ice was too thin.

Madame Maartje Offers, a Dutch contralto (or, rather, mezzo-soprano of the Amneris type), came with a great reputation. She sang Verdi and Gounod, whereas her highly emotional style seemed better fitted for Wagner. One realised, if one had not realised it before, how Latin and classic Verdi was, when one heard Madame Offers overdoing the sentiment of the great song from 'Don Carlos' at the expense of solid and dignified tone. She has a very beautiful and majestic voice, but not (so far as could be gathered that afternoon) an adequate style. The bass, M. Laporejetz, was best at the very bottom of his range. Below the bass stave he is not rivalled among the singers we know.

C.

LIVERPOOL REPERTORY OPERA

Blow's Masque 'Venus and Adonis' and the one-Act opera 'Markheim,' by W. P. Napier Miles, formed the subject-matter of the Liverpool Repertory Opera Company's fourth production of this season. From motives of economy an orchestra was dispensed with, and both works were accompanied by pianoforte only. This was a pity, for the score of 'Markheim' is nothing without its instrumentation, and the dramatic strokes are in several places merely grotesque when rendered on the keyboard. Mr. John Tobin had dressed up the score for two pianofortes, and valiantly as he and his partner played, the effect was inevitably that of a makeshift. Still it was a quite honest makeshift, and for amateurs it had the advantage that the performance was more articulate than usual. The production was a sound piece of work, and dramatically one of the best things the company has done. Mr. Tobin's singers have 'come on' enormously of late.

Blow's Masque just missed being completely charming for the same reason—the pianoforte was totally out of the picture. As a production, however, it was very pleasant to the eye, and had a shapeliness of design and a consistency of mood above the average. Blow never touches the heights of Purcell in his chorus-writing, but the ensembles in 'Venus and Adonis' have a dignity and appropriateness of their own. The music was taken, perhaps, too much on conventional operatic lines, and the singing might have had more formality. But there was a genuine and in many ways successful attempt to produce a decorative scheme in the groupings and movement of the figures.

A. K. H.

NEW WORKS AT MANCHESTER

The Overture to Respighi's latest opera, 'Belfagor,' received its first English performance at the January 19 Hallé concert, a week after the introduction to this country of his Violin Concerto. We were told the story underlying it was 'the old fable of the devil who comes to earth to make experiment of matrimony, and who is cheated by even the most simple people.' Candida (the girl) and her lover were disturbed by the old arch-fiend disguised as a swaggering cavalier who cuts a ridiculous figure—literally and musically. The 'Candida' theme is of Straussian beauty, and its treatment lights up the closing pages of the score in the most brilliant fashion. This Overture has value both in æsthetic and utility; if it is at all a fair epitome of the opera, then modern Italian opera of the ancient sentimental type is left behind. The audacious writing is a blend of the manner of 'L'apprenti sorcier' and 'Coq d'or,' and its orchestration is of the most dazzling order. In the orchestral England of to-day, with its strictly-imposed limitations on rehearsal opportunity, none but a virtuoso orchestra could 'bring it off,' and here its utility value was discovered in the convincing playing of the Hallé men and their conductor. Its grotesque passages sounded thoroughly legitimate; the laughable extravagances of the 'Belfagor' music had the graphic pertinence of the composer whose vivid style serves a highly-imaginative genius with perfect fidelity. If all 'novelties' in our orchestral concerts justified their inclusion as well as this, there would be the less need for revivals of the Méhul 'Le jeune Henri' order (February 9), which had not been played for over a quarter of a century, and did not deserve the good-natured tolerant reception bestowed upon it. The short work of eight or ten minutes' length, possessing quality and character, is still a major problem of our orchestral conductors, and in attempts at a solution we seem to record 'outers' (and even 'missed target') oftener than 'bull's eyes': but the 'Belfagor' will surely go into permanent repertory. C. H.

Music in the Provinces

Birmingham.—The Choral and Orchestral Union, under Mr. Joseph Adams, gave 'The Golden Legend,' and the City of Birmingham Choir was heard at its best in a performance of the 'Christmas Oratorio,' under Mr. G. D. Cunningham.——Madame Gell's Ladies' Choir took part in a popular concert at the Town Hall, contributing part-songs and the first performance at Birmingham of Rutland Boughton's 'The Cloud.'——Dr. Adrian Boult returned to his duties on January 22, when he conducted the City Orchestra in a familiar programme at the West End Cinema. The programme given a week later included a Suite on Flemish Folk-Tunes by de Greef.——At a City Orchestra Town Hall concert three Concertos were played by Misses May and Beatrice Harrison (a new Violin Concerto by Cyril Scott, the Violoncello Concerto of Delius, and the Double Concerto of Brahms). Cyril Scott's work (writes our Birmingham correspondent) 'adds nothing new to the range of the composer's style. The idiom is familiar, and most of it genuine Cyril Scott, and the rest of it not too derivative. Those who are indifferent to the more personal expression of the composer may still admire the refinement, the individual colouring, and the craftsmanship of the work as a whole.'——The programme for February 9, excellently performed under Dr. Boult's direction, consisted of Delius's 'Paris,' d'Erlanger's Pianoforte Concerto (played by M. Pouishnov), and a Haydn Symphony.——At a Sunday concert the 'Farewell' Symphony of Haydn was given with appropriate action.——In the course of the excellent concerts at Queen's College, the Philharmonic Quartet has taken part in Brahms's Sextet and Mozart's Oboe Quartet. Mendelssohn's D minor and Tchaikovsky's 'Elegiac' were well played by the Beatrice Hewitt Trio. The Cathedral Quartet was heard in a Beethoven programme, including Op. 131.——Ireland's A minor Sonata was played by Miss Isolde Menges and Miss Betty Humby at a Mossel concert.

Bognor.—The Bognor Philharmonic Society, assisted by members of the Arundel Choral Society, performed Part 1 of Vaughan Williams's 'Sea Symphony' as the concluding item of a programme that included 'A Tale of Old Japan,' Ethel Smyth's 'Chrysilla' (sung by Miss Gladys Gosling, with orchestral accompaniment), and two movements from Holbrooke's Symphony, 'Les Hommages.' In the interval, Mr. Norman Demuth, the conductor, spoke on the subject of the proposed Bognor Musical Festival, a non-competitive event which may possibly be held at Bognor on the lines of those at Margate, Eastbourne, Hastings, and Bournemouth.

Bolton.—The chief choral scenes in 'Aida' were sung by the Choral Union during a programme which Sir Hamilton Harty conducted with the Hallé Orchestra. The chief orchestral works were the 'Symphonie Fantastique' of Berlioz and the Lament and Scherzo from the conductor's 'Irish' Symphony.——A concert was given by the McCullagh Quartet, who played Beethoven in E flat, Op. 74, and Schumann in A minor, Op. 41.

Bournemouth.—The Introduction to Act 5 of Reinecke's 'Manfred' was played at one of the Symphony concerts.——Miss Juliette Folville has completed a series of three pianoforte concerto recitals given with the assistance of Sir Dan Godfrey and the Municipal Orchestra. Six familiar concertos were performed, with preliminary spoken annotations.

Bradford.—The first movement of Elgar's Violin Concerto, played by Mr. Louis Godowsky, was the chief work in a 20th-century programme given by the B.M.S. Mr. Percival Garratt played his own 'London Fantasia' for pianoforte.——The A. W. Kaye Orchestra, from Huddersfield, paid its first visit to Bradford with a popular programme that included Bantock's 'Scenes from the Scottish Highlands.'——Misses Beatrice, May, and Margaret Harrison played at a concert of the Philharmonic Society, the chief items of interest in the programme being the unaccompanied 'Cello Sonata by Kodály and Ravel's Sonata for violin and 'cello.——Messrs. Albert Sammons, Lionel Tertis, Cedric Sharpe, and William Murdoch played Pianoforte Quartets, and Miss Megan Foster sang, at a Subscription concert on the evening when the B.N.O.C. performed 'Götterdämmerung' at the Alhambra.——Miss Dorothy Manley played the C minor Pianoforte Concerto of Delius at a Philharmonic concert. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, which also played the 'Enigma' Variations.

Brighton.—At a recital by Miss Eveline Petherick (viola) and Miss Ella Simeon (pianoforte), the programme included Sonatas by Marcello, Ariosti, Handel, Grazioli, and Leclair.

Bristol.—The two important events of the year have been the concerts given by the Choral Society and the Philharmonic Society. The former was conducted by Sir Edward Elgar on January 28 in 'The Music-Makers,' 'The Black Knight,' and the 'Cockaigne' Overture. Two rehearsals under the composer had prepared the way for admirable performances of these works. Sir Herbert Brewer conducted his own 'Sir Patrick Spens' and Wesley's 'In exitu Israel.'——The Philharmonic Society, on February 4, gave only unaccompanied music, but this included three parts of Bantock's Choral Symphony, 'Vanity of Vanities.' In this the choir showed excellent training under the direction of Mr. Arnold Barter.——The Johann Strauss Orchestra played at Colston Hall on February 3.

Carlisle.—The Choral Society, conducted by Dr. F. W. Wadely, gave a performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' on February 2. The chorus was augmented by contingents from the principal choirs of the city, the music of the semi-chorus being sung by the Cathedral choir. Players from the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, led by Mr. Edward Maude, formed the backbone of the orchestra, and the soloists were Miss Constance Willis, Mr. Trefor Jones, and Mr. Keith Falkner.

Cheltenham.—Ireland's second Violin Sonata was played by Miss Isolde Menges and Miss Betty Humby at a Max Mossel concert.——A well-chosen programme, largely Elizabethan, was given by Miss Olivia Hilder, soprano, and Miss Dorothy Treseder, spinet and pianoforte. The Holst concert is noticed on p. 255.

Chipping Norton.—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha' were performed by the Chipping Norton Musical Society under the direction of Mr. Edgar Smith. Assistance was given by an orchestra from Oxford.

Derby.—The complete cycle of 'The Song of Hiawatha' was performed with good effect by the Derby Co-operative Choir on January 27, under the direction of Mr. Frederick J. Stevenson.——Sir Hamilton Harty and the Hallé Orchestra gave a concert of well-known works, including Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune,' at the Drill Hall, on February 3.

Dover.—The first of the season's subscription concerts given by the Choral Union was a great success. The works performed, under the direction of Mr. H. J. Taylor, were 'Hiawatha's Departure' and Robert Chignell's 'The Jackdaw of Rheims.'

Haslemere.—The London Chamber Orchestra paid a visit on January 28, and played, under the direction of Mr. Anthony Bernard, Vaughan Williams's Overture to 'The Wasps,' the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Beethoven's second Symphony.——A delightful entertainment was given recently by the Dolmetsch Dancers, who performed 16th-century dances in period costume to period music played on period instruments. The scenario into which some of the dances fitted was a wedding festivity in the presence of royalty. The stage management and stage decoration were excellent.

HASTINGS.—Among the works recently performed under Mr. Basil Cameron's direction were Liszt's 'Orpheus,' Litolff's 'Robespierre' Overture, and Dr. W. H. Speer's Nocturne for strings. It was arranged that the programme of the London Philharmonic concert conducted by Mr. Cameron should be reproduced at Hastings, on February 18, with an orchestra especially augmented to fifty-five players.

IPSWICH.—Musical interests have been sustained by the visits of the Pirani Trio and the Virtuoso Quartet, and by the concert of the Ipswich Male-Voice Choir, under Mr. Jonathan Job, at which the soloists were Madame Suggia and Mr. Roy Henderson.

KIDDERMINSTER.—The Choral Society celebrated its fiftieth concert on January 31, by taking the part of listeners while the Birmingham City Orchestra played Beethoven's fifth Symphony and other works under the Society's conductor, Mr. J. Irving Glover.

LEEDS.—At a Saturday concert of the Symphony Orchestra Mr. Julius Harrison conducted Beethoven's second Symphony and other familiar and well-chosen works. The Vice-Chancellor of Leeds University made an appeal for the increased support that is essential for the continuance of these concerts.——Under the same conductor the C minor Pianoforte Concerto of Delius was played at the next concert by Mr. Lloyd Hartley. The Symphony was Brahms's first, and other works were Auber's 'Zanetta' Overture and the 'Burleske' of Strauss.——A song recital was given by Miss Elsie Suddaby with Dr. Bairstow at the pianoforte, the programme being an excellent choice of songs that included Purcell's 'The Blessed Virgin's Expostulation.'

LEIGH.—The Choral Society gave 'Israel in Egypt' at Westcliff Congregational Church under the direction of Mr. Arthur Rose. The choral singing won high praise.

LIVERPOOL.—Max Reger's 'Böcklin' Suite of four movements based upon Böcklin pictures was one of the unfamiliar works in a programme brilliantly conducted by Herr Abendroth at the Philharmonic concert on January 24. The other was Wetzler's 'As you like it' Overture. The Symphony was Schubert's in C.—— At the next concert Sir Henry Wood conducted the sixth Symphony of Glazounov, the Brahms Double Concerto (played by the Misses Harrison), Butterworth's 'English' Rhapsody, and the now familiar 'Five Operatic Choruses' of Handel.——The Catterall String Quartet was joined by Miss Mary Abbott in the second Pianoforte Quintet of Dohnányi.——Mr. Cyril Scott was pianist at a chamber concert of his own works.

LOWESTOFT.—The Male-Voice Choir gave its annual concert on February 1 at the Hippodrome before an audience of twelve hundred. A well-chosen programme included the Alto Rhapsody of Brahms, with Miss Muriel Brunskill as soloist.——'King Olaf' brought out the best qualities of the Musical Society, a well-trained body under Mr. C. J. Coleman.

MANCHESTER.—'Dido and Æneas' was performed by the Vocal Society on January 18, with the assistance of the Fallowfield Orchestral Society, the principals being Miss Lilian Evison and Mr. Harold Spencer, and the conductor Mr. Harold Dawber. The concert ended with Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols.' Under its own conductor, Mr. Maurice Johnstone, the orchestra played the Handel-Elgar Overture in D minor. ——A concert version of 'Fidelio' was performed at the Hallé concert (and broadcast) on January 26. The principal parts were taken by Miss Stiles-Allen, Miss Elsie Suddaby, Mr. Heddle Nash, and Mr. Roy Henderson. Haydn's 'Hunt' Symphony, Delius's 'Paris,' and Strauss's 'Don Juan' were the features of the Hallé concert on February 2. At that of February 9, Madame Suggia played the A minor 'Cello Concerto of Saint-Saëns and the Symphony was Beethoven's second. For February 16, Sir Hamilton Harty chose a programme of special interest: Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings, Mozart's Horn Concerto, Strauss's 'Don Quixote,' and Brahms's fourth Symphony.——'The Spectre's Bride' and the 'New World' Symphony were given by the Hallé chorus and orchestra, under Sir Hamilton Harty, at a Municipal concert.——Johann Strauss and his orchestra provided a Brand Lane concert.——The Edith Robinson Quartet concluded a series of Schubert programmes with the G major Quartet, Op. 161, and, with Hallé players, the Octet.——Three of the Tuesday noon programmes included the 'Rasoumovsky' Quartets, played by the Brodsky Quartet.——(Respighi's 'Belfagor' Overture is discussed by our Manchester correspondent on p. 259.)

NEWCASTLE.—The first performance here of Vaughan Williams's 'Sancta Civitas' was given by the Bach Choir on February 4, under Dr. Whittaker, with Mr. Keith Falkner as the baritone soloist. Butterworth's 'A Shropshire Lad,' Delius's 'Cuckoo' piece, and the three Spanish Dances of Granados were included in a Philharmonic programme conducted by Mr. Edgar Bainton.

NEWPORT (ISLE OF WIGHT).—At the Philharmonic Society's first concert of the year, Mr. H. W. Stubbington conducted the chorus of seventy voices in a programme of part-songs and madrigals that included Parry's 'I know my soul,' Stanford's 'Shall we go dance,' and 'The Valley,' Gibbons's 'Dainty, fine bird,' and Wilbye's 'Flora gave me.'

NORWICH.—The Philharmonic Society and the Choral Society joined forces in a performance of 'The Flying Dutchman,' under the direction of Dr. Bates.——Mozart's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor was played twice within a few days, at a concert of the Norwich String Quartet, and again at a concert given by local players with Mr. Cyril Pearce at the pianoforte.——The Léner Quartet played at the Haymarket Picture House on February 9.

NOTTINGHAM.—'The Creation' and 'The Hymn of Praise' were given by the Sacred Harmonic Society on February 1, under Mr. Allen Gill's direction.——The William Woolley Choral Society, at a recent concert, sang Bantock's 'They that go down to the sea in ships,' Bernard Johnson's madrigal 'Sleep' (composed for this choir), Brahms's 'Night watch,' Rachmaninov's 'Hymn of the Cherubim,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Sea-Drift,' and a selection of madrigals and part-songs.

OXFORD.—At the fourth Subscription concert Dr. Adrian Boult conducted the Birmingham City Orchestra in Schubert's C major Symphony.——'Solomon' was sung by the West Oxford Choral Society, under Mr. Louis Smith, with the orchestral part played on the organ by Mr. T. A. Rushworth.

READING.—Mr. Harold Samuel gave his first recital in England, since returning from America, to a meeting of the Reading Music Club at the small Town Hall. The programme was entirely Bach.

RICHMOND, YORKS.—Haydn's 'Spring' and Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the Unknown Region' were performed by the Richmond Choral Society on February 10, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Fountain. The programme also included Holst's 'Turn back, O man,' and the Yorkshire Quartet played Mozart's Quartet in B flat and McEwen's seven Bagatelles.

RIPON.—An operatic programme was given by the Ripon Choral Society under Mr. P. R. Pfaff, the music chosen being the abridged concert edition of 'Carmen' and a fantasia on 'The Mastersingers.' The principals were Miss Eda Bennie, Miss Dorothy d'Orsay, Mr. John Perry, and Mr. A. Norfolk, a member of the Cathedral Choir.

ST. STEPHEN-IN-BRANNEL.—The Musical Society, a choir of fifty voices drawn from St. Stephen and St. Dennis, gave its second concert on February 1, under the direction of Mr. C. Baker, the first part of the programme being Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day.'

WALSALL.—Mozart's twelfth Mass was the principal work performed at a concert of the Gervase Elwes Choir on February 2. Mr. Charles Harrison conducted.

---

What promises to be a very important Conference of clergy, organists and choirmasters, and choir members, will be held at Ostend (the Hotel de Ville and the Kursaal) from May 28 to June 2. The event is under the auspices of the Churchman's Choral Union. The costs will be low; the social side will be made much of; and there will be interesting excursions to Bruges, Ghent, &c. Full particulars are to be had from the hon. secretary, Mr. A. H. Hamilton, 1*a*, The Cloisters, Inner Temple, E.C.4.

Competition Festival Record

Chesterfield (January 26-28).—The fifth Festival opened with a very successful children's day, in which folk-dances were a great attraction. In the choral classes on the Saturday the test-pieces and winning choirs were: Female-voice, Ethel Smyth's 'Dreaming,' Dronfield Choir; Male-voice, Elgar's 'The Wanderer' and Weelkes's 'Ha, ha, this world doth pass,' Chesterfield and District Choir (Mr. Laurie Hartley); Mixed-voice, Gibbons's 'Drop, drop, slow tears,' and Weelkes's 'Ye that do live in pleasures plenty,' Bolsover Choral Union (Mr. H. Critchlow); Church and Chapel Choirs, Brampton Congregational (Mr. W. Barnes).

Clare (Suffolk).—This Festival (February 3-4) is of the small type that does inestimable service in sparsely populated rural areas. Entries were up to last year's level, and the standard was markedly higher. The improvement in the school classes was especially noteworthy. The Festival has more than justified itself by what it has done for the children in so few years. In the adult choral competitions, Great Yeldham Choral Society showed the best all-round capacity and won the challenge cup for the highest aggregate of marks.

Huddersfield (February 8-11).—The feature of the fortieth 'Mrs. Sunderland' Festival was the contrast between the wealth of support given to the soprano and contralto competition and the poverty of talent which (according to the adjudicator) it brought forth. On the last day there was a gathering of good choirs, among whom Colne Orpheus Glee Union (Mr. Luther Greenwood) and Stockbridge Choral Union (Dr. W. M. Robertshaw) became the chief prize-winners.

Medway Towns.—The Kent Festival is migratory. Feeling that a Festival, in order to exert its influence fully in a district, must be held annually in that district, a few Chatham enthusiasts have started a competitive meeting to cater for the populous neighbourhood that includes the Medway towns of Rochester, Strood, Gillingham, and Chatham. It began with a three-days' meeting—January 28, February 1 and 5. Entries were encouraging, and the standard was high. Capital school-work was shown, and folk-dancing classes were a draw. Given the public support it deserves, this should develop into a very useful event. Choirs conducted by Mr. L. B. Mackay were conspicuously successful, being awarded the first prizes in the female-voice, male-voice, and town mixed-voice classes. The winning Women's Institute choir was that of the Friendly Union of Sailors' Wives, Old Brompton, conducted by Mrs. A. D. Lacy.

Renfrewshire Musical Festival, held at Greenock, ran for seven days and occupied eighteen sessions. Entries were good, and public interest was well maintained. Principal awards — Mixed choirs: Premier, Linthouse Choral Society, Glasgow; Open, Paisley Socialist Choir. Men's choirs: Premier, Glasgow Philharmonic Choir; Open, Ferguslie Mills Choir, Paisley; Industrial, Ferguslie Mills Choir, Paisley. Women's choirs: Premier, Greenock Festival Choir; Industrial, Ferguslie Mills Choir, Paisley. Church choirs: Sherwood U.F. Church, Paisley.

coming festivals

We have been informed of the following dates and other particulars:

Bedford.—March 5-16 (over two thousand entries have been received).

Croydon.—April 30 to May 5. Entries close on March 31. The Secretary's address is 7, Katharine Street, Croydon.

Folkestone will be the meeting-place for this year's Kent Festival. The syllabus may be obtained from Mr. W. H. Jell, 20, Sandgate Road.

Kendal (The Mary Wakefield Festival).—April 17-20.

Oxford.—The Three Counties Festival will be held here on May 5 (Church Choirs) and May 9-12.

Music in Scotland

Edinburgh.—The Paterson Orchestral concerts, with Mr. Albert Coates conducting the Scottish Orchestra, followed the general lines of the Glasgow concerts, noticed below.——At the second of the University Historical concerts, the Edinburgh String Quartet, assisted by Mr. E. Bernini (clarinet) and Mr. Colin Mackenzie (viola) played Mozart's C major Quartet and Clarinet Quintet, and Brahms's String Quintet in G major.——Prof. Tovey's Sunday concerts comprised a vocal and pianoforte recital by Mr. Steuart Wilson (tenor) and Miss Jean Hamilton; an orchestral programme by the Reid Symphony Orchestra, conducted in Prof. Tovey's absence by Miss Mary Grierson; and a pianoforte recital by Prof. Tovey himself.——At the second concert of the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society (Mr. Ralph T. Langdon), Miss Dorothy Salvesen played the Mozart D major Pianoforte Concerto, and the orchestra presented the 'Siegfried Idyll' and works by Mendelssohn, Dunhill, and MacCunn. ——The Scottish String Quartet gave an alfresco concert, the programme including Mozart's 'Jagd' Quartet, Schubert's 'Satz' Quartet, Wolf's 'Italian Serenade,' Bridge's 'Cherry Ripe,' and the Schumann Pianoforte Quartet.——Miss Marjorie Greenfield gave the first of three folk-song lecture-recitals, her subject being 'English Folk-Song.'

Galashiels.—Concerts were given by the Scottish Orchestra, under Mr. Albert Coates, and by Mr. Moodie's Choir, Edinburgh.

Glasgow.—The third and final month's concerts of the Scottish Orchestra's three-months' series were directed by Mr. Albert Coates. The programmes of seven concerts included: symphonies — Beethoven's No. 3 in E flat ('Eroica') and No. 5 in C minor, Brahms's No. 1 in C minor, Mozart's G minor, Tchaikovsky's No. 4 in F minor, and Vaughan Williams's 'London'; overtures—'Figaro,' 'Romeo and Juliet' (Tchaikovsky), 'Tannhäuser,' and 'William Tell'; suites and symphonic poems, &c.—'Scheherazade' (Rimsky-Korsakov), 'Boutique Fantasque' (Rossini-Respighi), 'Les Préludes' (Liszt), and Strauss's 'Don Juan,' 'Death and Transfiguration,' and 'Till Eulenspiegel'; and a Wagner evening. The programme of the concluding concert, chosen by popular vote, comprised the César Franck Symphony, the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, the 'Scheherazade' Suite, the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome.' Mr. Coates's exuberant and flamboyant methods appeared to be relished by the greater part of his audiences. We had him at his best in the 'London' Symphony, at his worst in the César Franck. Soloists — Miss Raya Garbousova, who played the Haydn 'Cello Concerto in D with brilliant technique, much temperament, wayward rhythm, and considerable sketchiness of intonation; Ticciati, who took the place of Albert Blumen in Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte Concerto and added sensibly to our disappointment over the absence of Mr. Blumen; Egon Petri, who gave a sound albeit rather unromantic performance of the Schumann Pianoforte Concerto; and Miss Elsie Black, a young Glasgow contralto, who made a capital first appearance in an aria from Parry's 'Saul.'—— The Glasgow Choral Union and the Scottish Orchestra joined forces in a performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' under the direction of Mr. Wilfrid Senior, who conducted with competence and authority, and gave us an impressive reading of the score. Mr. Steuart Wilson (tenor) and Mr. Roy Henderson (baritone) were distinguished in their solo parts. Miss Muriel Brunskill was rather a temperamental angel.——The Fellowes String Quartet, reappearing in public after a prolonged hiatus, gave an alfresco recital comprising Quartets by Haydn and Beethoven and the Schubert Quintet in C, Op. 163.——Govan Choral Union (Mr. James H. Gibson) gave a programme of part-songs at its first annual concert.——St. George Co-operative Choir (Mr. William Wilson) gave its annual concert of part-songs.——Mr. John Goss gave an attractive song recital at the Kilmacolm Subscription concerts.——Dr. George Dyson, continuing his series of Cramb Music Lectures at Glasgow University, and discussing the orchestral and chamber music of the 18th century, and the effect of aristocratic patronage and its results on performers and composers, was at considerable pains to stress the importance of Philip Emanuel Bach as a pioneer in the evolution of sonata form. Illustrations from Haydn and Mozart were played by the Fellowes String Quartet.

HELENSBURGH.—At the fourth of the Helensburgh Subscription concerts, the Brosa String Quartet, making a first appearance in Scotland, played Haydn's 'Emperor' Quartet, Dvorák's 'Nigger' Quartet, and the Borodin D major Quartet.

PERTH.—Perth Orchestral Society gave its annual concert. The Brosa String Quartet appeared under the auspices of the Duncan Trust. The Glasgow Orpheus Choir visited Perth under the ægis of Perth Madrigal Society.

GENERAL.—'International celebrity' concerts were given at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dundee by Friedmann, 'the colossus of the piano,' and Johann Strauss, presumably 'the apotheosist of the waltz.' At the third of the Max Mossel Subscription concerts at Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Ayr, and Bridge-of-Allan, Miss Isolde Menges (violin), Miss Dora Labette (soprano), and Miss Betty Humby (pianoforte) presented an attractive programme, Miss Menges being outstanding in the Bach Chaconne.

SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—At the weekly college concert on January 19, a presentation was made to Sir Walford Davies as a memento of the services rendered by him to the cause of music at the College and in Wales during the time that he was Professor. Prof. de Lloyd conducted a performance of Mozart's Symphony in E flat by the College Orchestral Union.——The Aberystwyth Festival has been fixed to take place during the last week in April.

BANGOR.—Recent programmes at University College have included Franck's Pianoforte Quintet, the 'Archduke' Trio, Handel's Sonata for two 'cellos and pianoforte, Boyce's Trio-Sonata, with its jolly little dance finale, Schumann's String Quartet in A, three Miniature Trios by E. T. Davies, Beethoven's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in G, Op. 96 (played by Miss Washbourne and Sir Walford Davies), and Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 6, in G minor, and Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite, played by the College String Orchestra, under Mr. E. T. Davies. On February 16 the programme included a suite of Trios, entitled 'Country Magic,' by Armstrong Gibbs, together with a group of unfamiliar melodies from Handel's works, specially arranged for strings and pianoforte.

BUILTH WELLS.—At a concert of the Builth Wells Philharmonic Society, Bach's 'God so loved the world,' and two other Bach choruses, were sung under the direction of Mr. A. P. Morgan.

CARDIFF.—Concerts at University College have included Schumann's Quintet, John Ireland's second Violin Sonata, Brahms's Trio in C—the performers being Mr. Hubert Davies and Miss Leyshon (violin), Miss Nesta Jones (viola), Mr. J. G. Collier ('cello), and Mr. Joseph Morgan (pianoforte)—and Mozart's Serenade for strings, conducted by Prof. David Evans.——Other concerts have been as follows: Cardiff Suburban Choir, conducted by Mr. Ronald Chivers, the programme including Elgar's 'As Torrents in Summer' and 'Weary Wind of the West,' Bantock's 'Awake,' and Lee Williams's 'Song of the Pedlar'; Cardiff Musical Society, conducted by Mr. Warwick Braithwaite, the programme comprising Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the Unknown Region,' and Elgar's 'Light of Life'; a Johann Strauss concert; the Brosa String Quartet in the Vaughan Williams and Ravel Quartets; and the Cardiff Catholic Choral Society, conducted by Mr. J. J. O'Leary, in Mozart's twelfth Mass and a miscellaneous programme.——On February 12, M. le Comte de France de Tarsant, assistant French Consul at Cardiff, gave a highly appreciated lecture on Berlioz to the Anglo-French Society.

HARLECH.—Twenty-one choirs are expected to take part in the Festival, with a total of two thousand two hundred voices. The principal works chosen are the 'Creation' and Bach's 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure.' Dr. Hopkin Evans will conduct.

SWANSEA.—On January 30, the Swansea Chamber Music Society gave a school concert at which Mr. Ernest Tomlinson (viola) and Mr. Reginald Paul played the Viola Sonata of York Bowen and the Romance of Benjamin Dale. In the evening the Society gave a public chamber concert, at which the same artists played works of Arnold Bax and Frank Bridge.

GENERAL.—Arrangements have now been completed for a fusion between the National Council of Music, the National Museum of Wales, the Cardiff City Corporation, and the British Broadcasting Corporation, by which a National Orchestra of Wales will come into being as a standing institution, giving four free concerts per week, which will be broadcast.

Music in Ireland

BELFAST.—A programme of Madrigals and Ballets was given by the 'Pleasure Singers' from Liverpool at a meeting of the British Music Society. —— The Philharmonic Society gave a miscellaneous concert on February 10, the chief contributions of the choir, under Mr. E. Godfrey Brown, being Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' Parry's 'In Praise of Song,' a Psalm by Holst, and Gerrard Williams's unaccompanied Choral Suite, 'A Cycle of the Sea.'—— At a B.B.C. concert on February 14, Sir Henry Wood conducted the 'Eroica' Symphony and Mr. Arnold Trowell played Haydn's 'Cello Concerto on a borrowed instrument, having had an accident with his £1,500 Mantagnana on the way to the concert.——A small choir conducted by Mr. Charles D. Kinnis played the chief part, by singing madrigals and part-songs, in a Saturday organ recital given by Mr. Brennan at Ulster Hall.

DUBLIN.—A notable concert was given by the Dublin Orchestral Society under Col. Brase on January 21. A bright Overture, 'Autolycus,' by Harold R. White, was given its first performance; Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony was played for the first time at Dublin; and Miss Petite O'Hara's playing of Bruch's G minor Concerto was the first full-scale performance of a violin concerto at Dublin since the war, according to the Irish Times, that journal also remarking that the orchestra which performed this music consisted of amateurs, students, military players, and a few professionals.——Concerts have been given by the Brosa Quartet, the Pirani Trio, Isolde Menges, Brailovsky, and Albert Sammons.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

OPERATIC EVENTS AT HAMBURG AND BERLIN

It is a matter of special interest when an Italian composer sets to music a libretto taken from German literature, as happened recently, when Ottorino Respighi made an opera of 'The Sunken Bell,' a dramatic poem by Gerhart Hauptmann. His work was performed at the Hamburg Stadttheater on November 18. Some twenty years ago the same task had been undertaken by a German composer, Heinrich Zoellner, whose work has not lived. Why did Respighi undertake to spend his forces on a subject which had proved ill-suited for the purpose two decades before? This indeed means idealism of which no German composer would be capable nowadays.

Italy was never considered to be the home of romanticism. Where there is so much sunshine throwing a golden light upon everything there is no mystery, and where there is no mystery there is no room for romanticism. It is in the woods of Germany that romantic poetry was born. On the other hand, German romanticism proved peculiarly attractive to Italian composers; even Puccini, when writing his 'Le Villi,' an opera nearly forgotten to-day, was under the spell of German romantic poetry, but he failed to render the spirit of his libretto.

Respighi, who in some respects follows the tracks of Puccini so far as opera composition is concerned, may boast of a more intimate knowledge of German literature. He spent some years of his life in Germany, and evidently profited by it in artistic experience. So, when he resolved to set to music the lyric drama of Gerhart Hauptmann, he could hope to succeed, with his refined technique, in translating the peculiar mood of this poem into a more suggestive language than was possible to other composers. Indeed, there is much interesting music in his score. The atmosphere in which the story moves is rendered with great sensitiveness. Even so, there is something artificial in Respighi's music. He and the man responsible for the translation into Italian (which had to be re-translated into German) were obviously mistaken when they assumed a task which had not particularly attracted the poet's fellow countrymen.

There are works interesting even in spite of their weak points. To these belongs Respighi's opera, which is worth mentioning as an ideal enterprise by one of the foremost of Italian composers. The performance, which had a tiring effect upon the hearers, was conducted by Werner Wolff, Kapellmeister, whose special predilection for Italian opera is well known. Maybe 'The Sunken Bell' will be accepted by some other German stages. Its chance of success is not very great.

The revival of 'Pelleas and Melisande' in the Berlin Staedtische Oper, under the auspices of Bruno Walter himself, was another interesting event in the life of the German musical stage—for this work had been put aside after the not very numerous performances that were given in Germany when the opera was a novelty. It was now to be decided whether Debussy's opera, which may justly be assigned an important place in musical literature, was capable of impressing the present opera-going public. That even nowadays it is greeted with enthusiasm in Paris was proved to me at its re-appearance at the Paris Opéra-Comique nearly two years ago.

Bruno Walter, who generally does not incline to modern experiments, and who prefers to put his trust in the classics, was convinced that he could bring about a revival of 'Pelleas and Melisande.' It was the particular colour of this score that attracted him. Having trained his orchestra to such a degree that it was ripe for the most difficult tasks, he inspired the players with his love for the work, and drew from them all the beauties of sound latent in the score. One thing, however, he forgot: the atmosphere of this work of musical impressionism can hardly be reproduced anywhere else than in France, where it has become a traditional part of the musical stage. The German opera-going public demands more solid operatic gifts. No doubt it found the music very admirable, but all the same it was conscious of a certain monotony, a feeling which was increased by the great dimensions of the Staedtische Oper. So the experiment proved interesting only for the few.

Again, it was vain labour that went to the performance of Igor Stravinsky's 'The Nightingale' in the same opera house. All those who hoped for something revolutionary could not but be disappointed by the lyric character of this work, which certainly has its poetic value, but demands other and more suggestive performance than was given on this occasion.

SOME ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC NOVELTIES

Concerts particularly devoted to modern music have become rare. This is mainly due to the fact that modernity in itself has lost its drawing power, even for those deeply interested in it, owing to the many disappointments they have experienced. We have obviously arrived at the stage of evolution in which the distinction between good and bad modern music is much more easily drawn than it was in the more revolutionary period soon after the war. It must, however, be acknowledged that Furtwängler, the most successful among the concert conductors in Germany, does not spare efforts to make his public acquainted with certain modern works, so far as the particular character of the Philharmonic concerts allows it; for of course subscribers to these concerts are not very anxious to undergo new experiences, and to run the risk of being attacked by what they call cacophonies. This happens everywhere in the world. Furtwängler, while paying due regard to this vis inertiæ of his public, is not afraid of offering, amidst the sweet things he provides, some bitter modern pills which have the great advantage of introducing a little more variety into the orchestral programmes.

One of the novelties performed by Furtwängler was a 'Comedy for Orchestra' by Ernst Toch, a young composer who has gained a certain notoriety among the representatives of the present generation in Germany. His Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra distinguishes him from the many young composers of deficient technique whose originality is based upon their shortcomings. Toch's 'Comedy for Orchestra' is not so gay as the title promises. Certainly he wanted to write a new 'Till Eulenspiegel,' but his humour has been greatly influenced by the love of the grotesque predominating in our time. The beginning of this piece is startling. Rhythmic variety and a sense of colour lead you to expect something very original. After a few bars, however, the composer is marching on the high-road of music, though paved with good counterpoint and full of contrasts. The mood in which he composes is always the same. Grey colour is prevalent. Altogether we may rank this comedy for orchestra as one of the better works written in the last few years.

Another young composer, Hanns Eisler, a pupil of Schönberg, has the curious idea of setting press cuttings to music. An advertisement or a news paragraph inspires him to music. Obviously, he is resolved to deprive music of all solemnity and to make it an expression of every-day life. It is, so to say, music for the man in the street, though seen from the higher point of view of one who has gone through all the experiences of modern music. We had heard a first example of this kind of composition at the Baden-Baden Festival, but his last work, if it is proper to honour it with this title, shows greater surety of style. Eisler writes a new parlando, not without some deference to romanticism. The performance of this piece was brought about by the International Society for Contemporary Music. Besides this, the programme contained some already known works by Schönberg and Alban Berg, and these were the best part of the evening.

SCHERCHEN CONDUCTS SYMPHONIC NOVELTIES

Strangely enough, Hermann Scherchen, a conductor very well known to all the visitors of International Festivals, finds it difficult to win the international reputation that is deserved by his extraordinary talents and capacities. This excellent musician, now appointed Kapellmeister at Bukarest, comes back to Berlin now and then to recall his existence to the music-lovers of this town. His concerts prove to be the most remarkable events in Berlin musical life. First, the Broadcasting Company called him forth to perform, with its orchestra, some new symphonies; secondly, he gave a concert at his own risk, the programme of which consisted of some of the most interesting modern works published by the Universal-Edition.

Wladimir Vogel, whose 'Sinfonia fugata' aroused the greatest attention, is a Busoni pupil, and this work, which he probably looks upon as his most important achievement, is devoted to the memory of his great master. Both the name and the characteristic features of this Sinfonia leave no doubt as to the influence exercised by Busoni on his pupil. The composer always seems to be infected with intellectualism, and to neglect the sensual side of music. The Sinfonia betrays this weakness, though its contrapuntal texture is animated by a certain intellectual fanaticism. The more, however, the work advances, the more the composer seems to free himself from scholarly influences and to shake off the fetters of intellectualism. Then he becomes inventive in the instrumental part, so that his 'post-movimento,' with which the whole work ends, proves a very effective conclusion, blending the characteristic elements of the work into one. A new Pianoforte Concerto by Walter Huebschmann had the great advantage of introducing this young composer as a very sincere and well-trained musician, whereas a new Symphony by Reinhold Wolff could not, with all its pomp, convince the hearer of its value.

The Concerto Grosso by Heinrich Kaminski, the well-known composer, a rather complicated work, had been given here and there in Germany, but certainly had never been so effectively performed as it was by Scherchen. It is a curiosity in so far as it avoids traditional ways, but is rather enterprising in its contrapuntal style and linear movement. Kaminski has perhaps never gone so far in modernity as in this Concerto Grosso, which is obviously intended to prove the possibility of combining the old and the new in grand style. But the impression is not quite so satisfying as the composer had hoped. The synthesis of the two spirits has not been attained, and the conflict between tradition and modernity is apparent. Among the other works performed on this occasion, six orchestral pieces by Anton von Webern, the most ascetic among contemporary composers, and the two Psalms by Ernest Bloch, deserve mention. The latter pieces are pleasant without being important.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

MILAN

Last month was a very busy one in the concert world here. Apart from the unusually large number of visiting artists, in one sense the Schubert Centenary concert was the most important given. The evening's music was preceded by a lecture on the life, works, and relationships between the great Lieder-writer and Rome. The lecturer was Otello Cavara, who curiously chose to address most of his remarks to the supposedly present figure of Schubert, and clothed in these garments his text proved most interesting. The music performed included two groups of songs and the Trios in E flat and B flat. These latter were played by the Trio Italiano Ranzato, led by Virginio Ranzato (violin). The pianist, Marino Beraldi, also accompanied most ably the singer, Janina De Witt, a mezzo-soprano of good quality and power. Her decision to sing in Italian was a mistake, however, as she let her style reflect an Italianism alien to the spirit of the great Viennese. Her interpretations were otherwise intelligent and at times vivid.

Important also were the several concerts given by the Quartet Society, for which were engaged the violinist Busch and the pianist Serkin; Wanda Landowska, pianist and harpsichord player; Mischa Elman; and the pianist Horszowsky. The Busch and Serkin evening was devoted to the Beethoven group, Op. 30 (dedicated to Alexander I.). This set is hardly ever heard here, and in the hands of these two sterling music-makers proved very acceptable fare indeed. Most impressive was the Sonata No. 6, in A major (Op. 31, No. 1), and in particular the Adagio molto espressivo movement. Landowska's programme, for merit of novelty, was the most interesting of all; especially with the repetition of the third movement of Mozart's Sonata in A upon the harpsichord after the pianoforte. It was quite exciting, too, to see Byrd's name figuring on her programme amongst those of Couperin, Telemann, and Scarlatti. As may be imagined, Elman's success was immense, and in a lesser degree that of Horszowsky, though this latter, by paying attention to his tone in the louder passages, would also score unqualified success.

The Poltronieri Quartet gave some interesting concerts, one of Brahms (the C minor and G minor Quartets), one of Schumann (the Trio in F, the Quintet, and songs), and one mixed.

Under the direction of the Ufficio Concerti there were the usual four or five concerts weekly, principal among which were those of Joan Manen, the well-known Spanish violinist; Hildegarde Donaldson (violin); and the German pianist, Edwin Fischer, from whose hands the Sonata of Stravinsky was coldly received.

AT LA SCALA

Since last writing, there have been presented 'Nerone,' 'Turandot,' the ever-green 'Lucia,' two turns of the Wagner cycle, and the new ballet, 'Vecchia Milano,' by Vittadini and Adami, preceded several times by 'Gianni Schicchi' and 'I Pagliacci.' In 'Nerone,' Trantoul (the tenor spoken of last month in regard to 'Otello') scored another triumph. The progress of this singer is extraordinary. The other leads were sung by Scacciati, with Galeffi and Faticanti. Toscanini directed. 'Turandot' was received with the same enthusiasm as last year, which fact gives one to wonder a little. Panizza conducted, and under his direction the pseudo-Orientalism gave every chance to the singers—Merli, Scacciati, and Pampanini, who sang particularly well. The Wagnerian operas were very popular, and several days before they commenced saw the house sold out for both occasions. The interpreters were almost without exception the singers of last year. In the Siegfried of Fagoaga there was a noticeable improvement. Most worthy of notice, too, was the Brünnhilde of Leider. Rossi-Morelli sang an excellent Wotan, more so in the 'Valkyrie' than in 'Rhinegold,' while the Fricka of Cravcenko was impressive. Creditable also were the interpretations of the other members of the caste. This cycle is probably Panizza's strongest interpretation.

And after the 'Ring,' 'Lucia' and Dal Monte. If the change seemed abrupt or incongruous, let it be said at once that it was accompanied by a sigh of relief. Of course, the glory was Dal Monte's. Pertile too sang well, and Damiani was a fine Ashton.

THE NEW BALLET 'VECCHIA MILANO'

The choregraphic action invented by Giuseppe Adami and set to music by Franco Vittadini originates in the Milanese history of 1859, when Cavour despatched his famous order from Turin, 'The Lombardese will not alone resist the clever seductions of the Archduke Maximilian sent from the Viennese Court to ingratiate the sentiments of the people of the city, but they will respond with hostile acts to the smiles of friendship and benevolence.'

A plot of wonderful ballet-material has been drawn from the historic scenes of the time, and with it the choregrapher might have done better than he did. One is bound to say that from the actual scenic point of view, the ballet would go hardly if separated from the gorgeous costumes of Caramba and the lavish production of La Scala. The music is modest and unpretentious, and achieves its composer's end very creditably. He employs some old tunes spontaneously, and manages always to be fresh; there is nothing laboured, notwithstanding little sallies into the realms of modernism, and here and there are purely reflective touches. It might have been better had he adopted new themes instead of repeating certain motives, but here he appears to have preferred varying the orchestration. There are a number of sections worthy of being extracted, and the conductor of the small orchestra in search of pleasant filling-in music might look further and fare worse.

Of the operas selected to accompany the ballet, 'I Pagliacci' proved the more acceptable. Both as protagonist in 'Gianni Schicchi' and as Tonio in 'I Pagliacci,' Carlo Galeffi sang and acted as can very few others. His is a great voice and a great school. In 'I Pagliacci,' Menescali sang Canio, and Rosa Pampanini, Nedda. Both her acting and singing were practically faultless, and whatever her performances may have lacked in Puccini's 'Manon' last month, her Pagliacci showed her to be one of the most satisfying singers heard for a long time.

CHARLES D'IF.

PARIS

'La Tour de Feu' is the title of a new work produced by the Opéra a few weeks ago. The composer, M. Sylvio Lazzari, had hitherto served as a regular contributor of dramatic music to the Opéra-Comique. In this quality he supplied various items, the best of which, the 'Lepreuse,' won for him considerable appreciation in France, if not abroad. For the vast and elaborate staging of 'La Tour de Feu' the composer had to apply to the Opéra, the artistic management of which spared no effort to meet the task.

The story is one of violent passion and no less furious feats. Yves, the keeper of a lighthouse on some abrupt point in Brittany—presumably in the 17th century—celebrates his wedding with Naic, a mysterious and dreamy girl. A Portuguese nobleman, Don Jacintho, sailing in his yacht, is infatuated with Naic, who in turn is dazzled by the foreigner's magnificent presents, and falls in love with him. They lay down a plan of elopement. Naic is to make the necessary signals to the ship for coasting and taking her on board. Yves scents the treachery, and in wild jealousy puts out all lights, heedless of the storm raging at sea. Don Jacintho's ship is smashed on the rocks, and Naic throws herself into the dark waters. Mad with despair, Yves sets fire to the lighthouse, and disappears in the flames.

The three Acts of this opera are of unequal strength. The first seems long and fairly monotonous, with music of no outstanding feature in spite of a few beautiful popular themes of Brittany. The second Act indulges in conventional rhetoric, and not until Act 3 begins can we catch a glimpse of M. Lazzari's otherwise efficient operatic talent. By writing his own libretto the author handicapped himself as a musician. There is little, if any, construction in the plot, which is flat during the first two Acts, and the third suffocates with accumulated dramatic violence. The music follows unavoidably the same curve. Instead of a normally ascending climax, the musician, as if to make good the deficiency of the beginning, lets loose, in the last part, floods of music, the grandiloquent violence of which overlaps lyricism, falling little short of exasperation. Moreover, the dominant characters of the play are too primitive, and defy even an elementary progression of psychological insight. The composer's musical language, though of a belated Wagnerian character, attests nevertheless to his fervid conviction, and in the third Act does not fail to make a deep impression. A novel feature in the staging of 'La Tour de Feu' is the use of the cinema with a view to creating the illusion of a closer reality so far as the sea-waves, the storm, and similar scenic effects are concerned. Moving pictures taken at adequate occasions are shown discreetly inserted among curtains of real decoration. The innovation should rejoice lovers of the realistic theatre.

M. Walther Straram has inaugurated his annual season of sixteen symphony concerts on Thursday nights at the Pleyel Hall. His orchestra is composed of the best elements available, which, under his tenacious and enlightened direction, give performances of a remarkable quality. The programmes are composed in a spirit of large eclecticism. Among the new works performed we should note two pieces by Darius Milhaud, 'Israel is living' and 'Hymn to Zion,' which lasted together less than four minutes, and in which, for sheer lack of time, the best of the composer's talent could not be detected.

At the subsequent concert, M. Alfredo Casella performed (himself at the pianoforte) 'Scarlattiana,' a divertissement for pianoforte and small orchestra, composed on themes from Scarlatti's works. The Italian pianist and composer proved brilliant both in the working out of the themes and in the presentation of his homage to the great master.

When on the following Thursday M. Straram took the lead for the production of Alban Berg's Chamber Concerto for pianoforte, violin, and a limited orchestra of thirteen wood and brass instruments, forebodings came that some trouble lay ahead. In fact, before half of this item had been delivered, those three thousand auditors almost unanimously broke out in vehement protest. Twice had M. Straram to quit his artists and face heroically the clamouring audience. Alban Berg is a pupil of Schönberg, and an earnest exponent of the latter's æsthetics. But while the master's art offers at least the redeeming feature of an aim realised by the means used, the pupil's endeavours fall far short of anything that even convinced Schönbergians may agree to. Although Berg is 'out for' atonality, in the aforesaid Chamber Concerto the main parts—viz., those for violin and pianoforte—are rarely capable of escaping from the fetters of smashed but none the less existent tonality, while the wind instruments, practising seemingly apart from the soloists, display timbre colours in those registers which cannot stand prolonged or frequent exhibition without producing a despairingly monotonous effect on the unprejudiced hearer. M. Straram and his soloists exerted themselves to the utmost in defence of an indefensible work. Praise is due to them, with the regret that so much talent and goodwill have not been extended to musical creations of a less barren issue.

Petro J. Petridis.

VIENNA

'German' conductors

Three prominent conductors have visited Vienna in close succession recently, each representing a different type, all three considered German musicians, yet all three Austrians, either by descent or by long association. It is a peculiar and oft-noted fact that the majority of what are to-day known as 'German' musicians—especially conductors—are more or less Austrians by birth. Austria, a German country by virtue of her language, is yet very different from Germany herself as regards mentality—more cosmopolitan and international, and a blend of northern and southern culture, with the latter decidedly predominating; a fact accounted for largely by Austria's geographical situation and by her mixed nationality. The Austrian soil has produced these artists: Berlin is merely their 'market'—to use a term quite in keeping with the lively atmosphere of that city in music no less than in other things.

The conductors mentioned above came in close succession, which is probably not an accident. Their advent was probably more or less connected with the fact that the Staatsoper is just now, once again, in quest of a new 'first conductor' to take his place beside director Schalk and Robert Heger. And what German musician would not be tempted by the prospect of a prominent position at what is still—and more than ever—the greatest and most aristocratic operatic theatre on the Continent? True that the Staatsoper, under the directorship of Franz Schalk—a musician brought up in the ideals of the Wagner epoch—has been, and still is, slighting the contemporary operatic production; true that the modern (and sometimes violently radical) methods of stage direction have only recently, and only reluctantly, found entrance at the Vienna Opera; but equally true that the seeming 'reactionary' mentality of Vienna's Staatsoper is deeply rooted in a great and noble tradition which should safeguard this house from the far-fetched experiments now in vogue in Germany, and notably at Berlin, where the rivalry between three opera houses and their famous directors bears sometimes strangely 'original' fruit.

The three visiting conductors were Erich Kleiber and Bruno Walter, from Berlin, and Egon Pollak, from Hamburg. (Pollak has often been mentioned as a candidate for the Staatsoper.) Of Kleiber's successful debut concert with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra I have spoken in my last month's letter. After this deeply-intellectual artist, Bruno Walter represented a different type of conductor. Kleiber is of the 'young guard'; Bruno Walter, beloved here from his collaboration with Mahler at the Staatsoper, belongs now—in the eyes of the present musical generation—to the 'classical' conductors, notwithstanding his comparative youth. As usual, Walter made his re-entrée with a Mahler Symphony (No. 1), and few conductors present this work in as truly a 'Mahlerian' way as he does; few are more capable of reflecting the incessant and abrupt changes from elation to melancholy; in short, what I have once termed the 'intermittent hysteria' of Mahler's music. After Kleiber's fourth Mahler Symphony and Walter's first, Egon Pollak presented a new aspect of Mahler conducting in the 'Song of the Earth.' Pollak is chiefly an operatic conductor, and his revival of Verdi's 'Falstaff' at the Vienna Opera, two years ago, was remarkable. He is compelling, but more of the quiet, 'objective' type. After the lyric effusiveness with which Walter is wont to endow the 'song symphony,' Pollak's reading baffled at first by its seeming sobriety. He divests this music of much that makes for its romanticism—which is, perhaps, the attitude the general public will ultimately take towards Mahler's works. It remains to be seen, however, whether, minus its neurasthenic element, Mahler's music will stand the test of time.

ORCHESTRAL NOVELTIES

It is noteworthy, by the way, that German conductors who, in Germany, stand in the front row of the 'pace-makers' for ultra-modern music, generally choose older and acknowledged works for their programmes at Vienna. This fact is significant: Vienna has not the sensation-hunger of the more 'Americanized' Berliners, where new names, new sensations, spring up daily, only to lead an ephemeral life and disappear as quickly as they came. Vienna's musical taste is of the evolutionary sort, which is again the result of an old musical culture: new things are less readily embraced, but more intensely loved once their worth has been tested. Unfortunately, however, this state of things makes conductors reluctant to produce new works here, and consequently novelties are becoming increasingly scarce in Vienna programmes. Robert Heger this season reverted to a newer work for his Gesellschafts Konzerte, which had previously been tried and acclaimed—Erich Wolfgang Korngold's Pianoforte Concerto, a brilliant piece of instrumental music written for, and excellently played by, Paul Wittgenstein, the one-armed Viennese pianist. In this work, a light and bright touch contrasts happily with the dramatic pathos so frequent in Korngold's larger works, and banalities are more carefully avoided than usual. Indeed a certain element of jugglery is welcome in the syncopated portions of the work, which reveal a refreshing willingness on Korngold's part to be 'up to date.'

Although this Pianoforte Concerto is a welcome addition to the small literature of contemporary instrumental music with orchestra, the same cannot be said of Joseph Achron's Violin Concerto which Louis Krasner, a highly-gifted young American artist, presented for the first time in Europe, at Vienna. The long piece consists of two movements, of which the first, excessively protracted, brings forward no less than fifteen themes. The composer terms them 'Trops,' and they are derived from Hebrew synagogue music. Such wealth of themes precludes logical 'development' in anything like the traditional sense, and the result is chaos. The second movement is shorter and more concise, being built on two Hebrew dance-themes. Apart from its doubtful musical worth, the piece cannot even be considered grateful for the instrument. It sounds well in parts, particularly in its bizarre orchestral effects. Krasner played the immensely taxing piece with brilliant technique and fine tone.

SOLOISTS

Katherine Goodson, the British pianist, devoted her recital this season to Chopin, and displayed once more her wide emotional range, artistic conceptions, and mature mastery. Chopin, too, dominated in the programme of Jan Smeterlin, whose fine pianism, particularly effective on the lyric side, is well known and appreciated here. Backhaus, in three recitals, rallied his numerous admirers, and proved one of the outstanding pianists of the season. Like Backhaus, Stephan Askenase chose Liszt's B minor Sonata and, with a plastic and expressive reading, emphasised the eminent instrumental virtues of the piece to an extent which almost obliterated its doubtful musical qualities. Less pianistic, but vastly more interesting, was Prokofiev's third Concerto, of which Askenase gave a great performance under Egon Pollak's baton. With Prokofiev, as with Bartók in his new Concerto, the pianoforte is above all an instrument—and predominantly a percussion instrument—in the orchestral ensemble. This is, perhaps, a drawback for the soloist, but a stimulating experience for the hearer.

The concerts of Adila Fachiri were anticipated with interest owing to this violinist's relationship to Joachim, and these expectations were not disappointed: she met with decided and deserved success. Philipp Scharf, an American violinist, returned after a year's absence, and evinced a remarkable growth in both the technical and musicianly aspects of his work. Judith Bokor was one of the number of 'cellists who have recently visited Vienna—Gaspar Cassado, Rafael Lanes, Arturo Bonucci, and Antoni Sala—and created again a deep impression through her beautiful tone ('dematerialized' to an extent rarely found with this instrument), and through her noble, artistic interpretations. An interesting new-comer in the vocal field was Gladys Greene, an American soprano with a light, beautiful voice, who mastered the stylistic requirements of old Italian arias, classic German songs, and modern compositions with notable versatility.

PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

GEORGE VERNON RIGBY, at Ramsgate, aged eighty-eight. Although even his name is unknown to many musicians of the present day, Rigby was about fifty years ago one of the most famous of tenors. For some years, in fact, he was a good second to Sims Reeves himself. He was born at Birmingham on January 21, 1840, and sang as a boy at St. Chad's Cathedral. When only twenty-one he began singing tenor professionally, being heard at Mellon's Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden and at the Alhambra—at that time a concert room. After singing in the provinces with Henry's Corri's opera company, he went to Milan to study under Sangiovanni, making an appearance at the Carcano Theatre in 'William Tell,' in 1866. From Italy he went to Berlin and Denmark, singing in 'The Barber of Seville,' 'Rigoletto,' &c. In 1867 he returned to England, and a year later established himself, as a result of his successful singing in 'Samson' at the Gloucester Festival, where he was acting as substitute for Sims Reeves, indisposed. For about ten years Rigby enjoyed great popular success, but he retired early, partly, no doubt, owing to the rise of Lloyd. His last public appearance was about 1887.

WILLIAM BOYD, in London, on February 16, aged eighty-three. He was born in Jamaica of Scottish parentage; came to England to be educated—Hurstpierpoint, St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, and Worcester College, Oxford, holding an organ scholarship at the latter College. In 1877 he was ordained, and after various posts in the country he was appointed to All Saints', Norfolk Square, where he remained until his resignation in 1918. For some time previous to his death, he had been blind. Though an excellent all-round musician, his only well-known composition seems to be the hymn-tune 'Pentecost' ('Fight the good fight'), which has long established itself as one of the most widely-sung tunes in the world.

JOHN BEARD, at Birmingham, on January 20, aged eighty-seven. He belonged to a family that had for three generations played no small part in the musical life of Birmingham. He sang for many years in the Festival chorus; all his children—nine sons and a daughter—became active musicians, one of the sons being now a member of the City Orchestra, of which a grandson, Mr. Paul Beard, is leader; and another grandson is a violinist of whom a good deal is expected.

ANDREW NEWLAND DEAKIN, of Hove, Sussex, in his seventy-first year. A well-known and highly successful schoolmaster and tutor, he was a son of Andrew Deakin, a music critic who was also organist for many years at the Birmingham Musical Festivals.

T. H. COLLINSON, at Edinburgh, aged seventy. He was organist of St. Mary's Cathedral in that city for fifty years, and also held the posts of organist to the University of Edinburgh and conductor of the Edinburgh Royal Choral Union for about thirty years.

W. MILNE GIBSON, at Aberdeen, aged seventy-nine, precentor and musical critic, for many years President of the Aberdeen and District Old Precentors' Association, and author of 'The Old Scottish Precentor.'

FREDERICK ILIFFE, at Oxford, aged eighty-two. For many years he was organist to the University, as well as organist and choirmaster at St. John's College. He wrote a good deal of Church music.

PHILIP BROZEL

Philip (or Feodor) Brozel, the tenor who died recently at Richmond, was a Russian Jew, who under the threat of conscription and with an ambition to be a great singer, set out for England towards the end of the 'eighties. He had been singing in the chorus of the Petersburg Opera House (so he once told the writer), and expected to have enough money to pay for the projected journey. Owing to the failure of the impresario the company did not receive their salaries, and young Brozel started out with nothing but his fare to Hamburg. There, after severe suffering from cold and hunger, he found refuge with some friendly people of his race. One night, exhausted and despairing, he stumbled to the lighted door of a house and fell fainting on the threshold. The kind occupants took him in, revived him, and on his recovery paid his fare to London. Here Brozel, helped by a compatriot, obtained employment in a clothier's warehouse, and started saving up for a term's instruction at the Guildhall School of Music, which, in his simplicity, he thought would be sufficient to launch him as a 'star' in the operatic world.

When at the Guildhall School, he was brought to the notice of the wealthy Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Rutson, a patron of art to whom many young students were indebted for help and encouragement. Mr. Rutson sent Brozel to the Royal Academy of Music, paying (during some years) for his studies there, giving him a good pianoforte, and providing him with £1 a week for his living. Of this the lad sent 10*s.* every week to his widowed mother in Russia.

At the Academy Brozel at first studied with Randegger, whose methods did not suit him; nor was he satisfied with his progress under the professor to whom he went next. By chance he heard of Wilkinson, a teacher not in great favour with the authorities, but a brilliant instructor withal. This remarkable man, who had first discovered the powers of his voice on the ranches of Australia, had gathered his knowledge of the art of voice-production during a long and eclectic period of study among the professors of Italy. Brozel at once recognised Wilkinson as a master among masters, and under him he pursued his studies unofficially, while continuing (diplomatically) his course under his regular professor, who, it is stated, wondered at the sudden and striking progress of his pupil.

Brozel owed his initial success to Sir Augustus Harris. The Academy students had performed the new opera, Leoncavallo's 'Pagliacci,' in which Brozel sang the part of Canio. Presenting himself to Sir Augustus he asked for a hearing. Harris at once gave him his chance. As it happened, De Lucia, the only available Canio, was making difficulties, and Harris was glad to engage Brozel to fall back on. He offered the young singer £10 a week to appear during the Covent Garden Opera season in 'Pagliacci,' when required. Brozel, who had been counselled, 'Whatever Harris offers, ask more,' replied, 'How can I live on £10 a week?' (he had been living on 10*s.* !). Sir Augustus responded with an offer of £15. For two seasons subsequently, during Sir Augustus Harris's life, Brozel (now at a handsome salary) sang at Covent Garden with great success, and made his name rapidly.

He appeared some time later in the title-rôle of McCunn's opera 'Diarmid,' the libretto of which was written by the late Duke of Argyll, and received the command to sing before Queen Victoria at Balmoral. Her Majesty paid Brozel a gracious compliment, 'You are a Russian, yet your English is better than an Englishman's.'

Brozel sang in 'Don Giovanni' at Covent Garden on the occasion of Patti's last appearance in public (as Zerlina). He was the Siegfried when that opera was produced in English for the first time.

Philip Brozel was leading tenor both in the Carl Rosa and the Moody-Manners companies. He also toured the United States, and appeared at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. He had great successes in Germany and Austria, mainly in Wagnerian opera, but also in Strauss's 'Salome,' in which he created the part of Herod. During this period he was perhaps at the zenith of his career. The severe strain of Wagnerian opera began early to tell on his constitution, and he retired prematurely from the operatic stage, his last appearance at Covent Garden being in 1910. It is understood that he was offered a professorship at the Royal Academy of Music (of which he became a Fellow); he preferred, however, to give private instruction. This he continued to do until his last illness.

At the opening of Brozel's career, Jean de Reszke received him very kindly, and gave him valuable advice. De Reszke remained ever the younger singer's ideal. There was some resemblance between their voices, and this was specially noticeable, it was thought, in such rôles as Lohengrin and Tristan. These operas Brozel preferred to any, the princely character of Lohengrin, above all, appealing to his imagination. It may be considered that Brozel was never more successful than in the part of Canio, for which he was in appearance and temperament particularly suited, and in the opinion of not a few he was its best exponent.

Philip Brozel's voice had the true tenor quality, and was characterised by a peculiar sweetness not to be forgotten. His style was without affectation or mannerisms, and always in perfect taste. Brozel was an intellectual interpreter of the great masters of opera, an enthusiastic student of everything that is finest in his art, and a most conscientious and energetic worker. His death at a comparatively early age will come as a shock to those who remember him as one of the best known and most popular tenors of his day.

Kate Gerard.

JULIAN EGERTON, CLARINETTIST

How many musicians are living now who played with Sullivan in his twenties, when he was conducting concerts at the old Royal Aquarium? This question was prompted by reading 'Sir Arthur Sullivan: His Life, Letters, and Diaries,' recently published, and by meeting one whose name figured on most of the big concert programmes of that time; to wit, the veteran clarinettist Julian Egerton, who reminded me that he at least is one of such musicians, and possibly the only one.

The eminent instrumentalist is now in his eightieth year, full of life and vigour, with faculties perfect, and still playing his beloved instrument, with a technique and tone which many, fifty years his junior, might well envy. An hour's chat with this veteran, who in his day had few rivals, brought out many reminiscences, and made me feel I was back in the days of side-whiskers, antimacassars, and horse-hair sofas, when conductors appeared at the desk wearing white gloves, and beat time with a silver-mounted baton.

Son of a sergeant in the Coldstream Guards, who gave him his first lessons on the instrument, Egerton soon made use of his talents and secured some deputy work with Manns at the Crystal Palace, who recommended him to Sullivan, who, in his turn, gave him a real start in the series of concerts he conducted at the Royal Aquarium from 1874-76. There followed many important engagements, notably one at the Saturday Popular concerts, as they were called (although the music was classical), in which he played the Mozart Clarinet Trio with Charles Hallé (pianoforte) and Straus (viola). In 1870, Her Majesty's State and private bands were re-organized, W. G. Cusins being appointed Master of the Music to the Queen. Egerton received the post 'to perform on the clarionets' when required, the performances 'not to exceed twenty per year.' There were a number of other conditions drawn up in a very legal-looking document, and of course the performers had Court dress with knee-breeches and silk stockings.

During all this time Egerton was also fulfilling engagements all over the kingdom, and among the conductors he played under were Arditi, Benedict, Cowen, Dvorák, Ganz, Henschel, Mackenzie, Mottl, Parry, Randegger, Richter, Stanford, Sullivan, and Wylde. Of Dvorák he tells an amusing tale. Dvorák came over to conduct the first performance of his oratorio, 'St. Ludmila,' at the Leeds Festival of 1886. He was quite indifferent to his appearance and dressed rather shabbily, but on this occasion he was persuaded to don a 'dicky' and cuffs. When he started conducting, naturally the cuffs slid over his hands. He kept pushing them back, until at last in despair he dragged them off and cast them at his leader!

Richter came to England in 1879, and conducted important orchestral concerts at intervals until 1881, and Egerton was at once engaged by him. Egerton places Richter in the forefront among conductors he played under, largely for his knowledge of all the instruments; and he is certain that Richter could tell when every wind player 'took breath,' and if it was not in the right place he was corrected.

The post of professor of the clarinet at the Royal College of Music becoming vacant in 1894, Sir George Grove appointed Egerton in succession to Lazarus. He held it until 1910, when through domestic trouble he had to resign, greatly to the regret of Sir Hubert Parry, who was then the principal.

Previous to this, in 1889, he was made professor at Kneller Hall, the Military School of Music, and during the sixteen years he held the post many of our present-day bandmasters passed through his hands.

Wishing to have more leisure, at the age of seventy he gave up much of his public work, and retired to a country home in Kent. But, like the true artist he is, he still practises, and to those who are privileged to hear him privately in chamber music there comes the impression that whatever the 'modernist' may think of Victorian music, at least the period had some great executive artists, and Julian Egerton is one of the proofs.

A. W. P.

STANLEY WITHERS: AN APPRECIATION

By the death of Stanley Withers the Royal Manchester College of Music loses a valuable servant, and Manchester one of its most cultured sons.

The idea of a College of Music at Manchester first took practical shape from a proposal made by Sir Charles Hallé at a meeting in the Mayor's Parlour of Manchester Town Hall, in December, 1891. The small committee which was then formed issued a favourable report a few months later, and in May, 1892, the report was adopted at a public meeting in the Town Hall. In the same year upwards of eight hundred applications for the post of organizing secretary were considered; the final choice fell on Stanley Withers. From the date of his appointment to the actual opening of the College, on October 3, 1893, he did excellent work in organizing and addressing meetings in many of the towns in the Manchester district, and the successful launching of the new College of Music was largely due to his initiative.

After that time much good work was done by Stanley Withers, and he crowned his efforts by playing a great part in the movement which resulted in the Royal Charter being granted to the College in 1923. In connection with the application for this, he had many consultations with the leaders of the Royal College of Music and the Royal Academy of Music. These institutions will undoubtedly realise the extent of the loss sustained by the sister College at Manchester.

Stanley Withers was a remarkable man in many ways. Possessing a wide knowledge of literature and the arts in general, his opinions and criticisms of poets, novelists, and other writers, painters, sculptors, architects, and musicians, were characterised by real artistic insight and sound common sense.

During the war he accepted an official position in the army as lecturer on literature, donned khaki, and gave addresses in various camps. It was intended he should go to France, but his health prevented this.

He gave lectures on the poets and novelists to the College of Music students, and when eventually a class in this subject was formed, he was appointed professor. A few years ago the University conferred on him the degree of Master of Arts, honoris causa.

The loss of his devoted wife, on May-day, 1914, was a great blow to him, and at times his mood was that of de profundis; but generally his natural high spirits prevailed, and those who have been fortunate enough to hear him discourse on, e.g., Falstaff, know how he could rise from the depths and thoroughly enjoy the great comic characters in literature.

Failing health during the past two years caused him to relinquish some of his duties. One lovely Saturday in September last, I took him for a motor run to North Wales. The following day an apoplectic seizure gave warning of trouble, and a second attack several weeks later was even more serious. From the latter he never rallied, and the end came peacefully on Thursday, December 29, 1927. Requiescat in pace.

Thomas Keighley.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

Organ Lover.—(1.) We think you would be well employed in filling up the gaps in your Bach repertory. You certainly ought to work at some chorale preludes other than those in the 'Little Organ Book.' Get vol. xvii. of the Novello Edition, containing the 'Eighteen Chorale Preludes.' Take some more of the Trio-Sonata movements; and don't remain content with having learned the easier movements of Mendelssohn's Sonatas. If you can play the 'great' B minor of Bach, you ought to do all the rest of Mendelssohn, including the three Preludes and Fugues (the C minor and D minor are too fine to be neglected by anybody). There is still a great deal of Rheinberger to be explored. You might take the D minor Sonata (No. 11), some of the 'Twelve Characteristic Pieces,' and the set of Twelve Trios, which are delightful both as music and studies. (2.) If you find difficulty in pedalling with speed, make it a separate study. Get Ellingford's 'Pedal Scales and Arpeggios' (Novello, 2*s.* 6*d.*). Are you using the ankles freely? And the heels? Too much toe-work, combined with leg—rather than ankle—action, will keep you on the slow side. Ellingford's manual will give you sound guidance on these points.

'Mill Isle.'—You take so much pleasure in your hobby of writing hymn-tunes that we are loth to say anything to diminish it. But as you ask for our opinion, we must reply that your melody, though singable and not unpleasant, lacks both strength and originality; and the harmonies supplied by the reverend gentleman are decidedly weak and amateurish. The tune is not good enough for use in church, and (although you have published it) it ought to have remained in manuscript. However, go on with your hobby, in spite of what we have said; but let it and its fruits be a purely personal and private affair. There are already too many tunes of the weak or 'not bad' order.

I. W.—You raise a point that is of importance to inexperienced composers. If (you say) a song is submitted to a publisher, and declined, the composer cannot tell whether the failure is owing to lack of quality, or difficulty, or what-not. This leads you to inquire whether there is any musical equivalent to the school of journalism, where composers may be put right in these matters. There are plenty of correspondence schools of composition, and troops of correspondence teachers, ready to help (see our advertisement pages). We do not think any publisher would (as you suggest) give reasons for refusal on payment of a fee. Often, by the way, the reason is that the composer's name is unknown: it takes some mighty good music to overcome this handicap. Common-sense counts for a good deal in marketing your wares. On the face of it, you would be wasting your time if you sent a fox-trot to Novello, or an anthem to Lawrence Wright. Yet, in a lesser degree, that is the kind of mistake inexperienced composers make.

T. A. J.—(1.) There is a general rule that a piece should begin and end in the same key; in the case of a work beginning in a minor key, the end may be in either tonic or relative major. In other words, if it begins in E minor, it may end in E major or in G major, the former being the more usual. The Overtures you quote as breaking this rule are not movements in the ordinary sense of the term. They are more or less of the potpourri (or 'medley') order, in which various numbers from the opera are strung together. Such overtures often have a very free-and-easy key-scheme, and their scrappy construction justifies it. But a movement in a recognised musical form (such as sonata, fugue, minuet and trio, &c.) would lose unity and finality if it did not at the end find its way back to its tonic.

L. M. N.—It is practically impossible usefully to recommend a book on 'how to teach the pianoforte' to one whose qualifications are wholly unknown to us. We will of course do our best to help you, but you must first give us some idea of your powers as a player, your age, previous experience, any diplomas you may have gained, &c. The first steps in the teaching of music are all-important, and perhaps one of the greatest needs is musicianship on the part of the teacher or would-be teacher. This is why, before advising you to read particular books, we should like to know the part you have already played in acquiring musicianship.

J. H. R.—The volume of Chorale Preludes you mention appears to contain the 'Little Organ Book' Preludes, mixed up with others. In order to appreciate the 'Little Organ Book' fully, you should get a good version of it. Novello's publish an excellent one, edited by Sir Ivor Atkins. It contains many helpful notes on interpretation; the Preludes are arranged in their proper order of the Church seasons; and each Prelude is preceded by the Chorale on which it is founded, together with a translation of a portion of the German hymn.——(P.S.—We are glad you have been 'a constant reader for nine years,' but you needn't apologise for venturing after all that time to ask us one little question. What are we here for if not to be of service to our readers?)

A. T.—The following would probably cover the ground in self-instruction for Intermediate Mus. Bac. (London): Form: 'Musical Form,' Pauer (Novello); 'Sonata Form,' Hadow (Novello). History: 'History of Music,' Stanford and Forsyth (Macmillan); 'Oxford History of Music' (O.U.P.), supplemented on special subjects by the new 'Grove.' Harmony: 'Harmony,' Stainer (Novello); 'Unfigured Harmony,' Buck (Clarendon Press); 'Harmony,' Kitson (O.U.P.). Counterpoint: 'Modal Counterpoint,' Dunstan (Novello); 'Applied Counterpoint,' Kitson O.U.P.); 'Contrapuntal Technique of Elizabethan Composers,' Morris (O.U.P.).

SYDNEY (Winnipeg).—(1.) We have no programmes of recitals given by the late Gervase Elwes, nor do we know where a set may be seen. Perhaps a reader can tell us. (2.) The London Gregorian Association Festivals are still held, though the services are no longer confined to St. Paul's Cathedral. The conductor is Capt. Francis Burgess, and the secretary Mr. Edwin P. Tilly, 154, Bedford Hill, S.W. 12.

E. A. M.—In the final two bars of Scarlatti's Sonata in F sharp minor (Intermediate R.A.M. and R.C.M. examinations) the closing trill consisting of as many 'beats' (i.e., repetitions of the shake notes) as the player desires, should stop immediately before the beat. On no account should the final sound come with a beat.

A. S. M.—Your dispute with your friend as to 'whether a melody changed from major to minor mode remains the same melody, or is a variation,' is mere hair-splitting. It would be easy enough to show (if we had time and patience) that you are both right. Instead, we say that you are both wrong in wasting your time over a quibble.

G. L. C.—We have not space to give fingering of the cadenzas in Liszt's 'Liebesträume,' as it would involve printing the music. The work is fully fingered, &c., by I. Philipp, in the Costallat Edition, which may be had from Novello.

F. C. J. S. (Dublin).—(1.) We understand that the Choral Prelude by the late Charles Macpherson, on 'Ye servants of the Lord,' is still in manuscript. No doubt it will be published in due season. (2.) The York Minster Chant Book is printed, but for use at the Minster only.

J. M. O.—(1.) We know of no French-English dictionary of musical terms. (2.) The best English biographical and critical account of Berlioz known to us is that in Hadow's 'Studies in Modern Music,' first series (Seeley, Service, 5*s.*).

NEIL.—The acciaccatura in the middle section of Debussy's 'Golliwog's Cake-walk' displaces its principal sound. Hence it should be heard as a crushing sound against the upper or undecorated note. On no account should it be played before the beat.

A. W. J.—You are merely one of many who ask our advice as to how to obtain a post as pianist in a café or cinema orchestra. We can only suggest that you write to the conductors of the many bands in your large town.

W. M. A.—Some of the larger Gramophone Clubs and Societies have lending libraries of records. Write to the secretary of the one nearest to you—the N. London Gramophone Society, c/o The Gramophone, 58, Frith Street, W.1.

ANT.—The pieces for Trinity College pianoforte examinations have not been treated analytically in the Musical Times. We are considering the feasibility of doing this in future.

GREENOCK.—The usual and most satisfactory way of grouping a three-part female-voice choir is (from left to right): 1st trebles, 2nd trebles, altos.

J. F.—Prout's jingles to the subjects of 'The Forty-eight' were published by Joseph Williams.

H. W. T.—We have none of the biographical details you ask for. Write direct to the composer, at Beechy Knowle, Coxthorne, Sussex.

---

Several readers supplement our February reply to 'S. M. X.' concerning books on choral conducting. Some correspondents draw attention to Dr. Coward's 'Choral Technique and Interpretation'; but this fine work, which is of the greatest value to the choral conductor and trainer on the vocal and interpretative sides, does not deal specifically with the technique of conducting. Another reader suggests a work that is likely to be of value—C. Schroeder's 'Handbook of Conducting,' published by Augener.

In our January Answers we gave some information concerning Purcell's 'Don Quixote' which we gathered from what appeared to be reliable authority. It was not quite correct, however. Dr. Alan Gray kindly writes and tells us that there are three plays bearing that title, the first being so successful that others followed—a state of things not unknown in the theatrical world to-day. Purcell wrote a good deal of music for the first two; and the song we mentioned, 'From rosy bowers,' was written for the third, and was his only contribution to that particular 'Don Quixote.'

CONTENTS.

| | PAGE. |
|---|---|
| Nikolai Medtner. By Leonid Sabaneev | 209 |
| The Nature of Harmony. By Matthew Shirlaw (concluded) | 211 |
| On Faulty Sensations of Musical Pitch, with Notes of a Personal Experience. By Edwin Smith (concluded) | 213 |
| The Teachers of the Great Composers. By Edith A. H. Crawshaw | 214 |
| A Note on Fashion. By J. H. Elliot | 217 |
| New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XXXII. John Daniel. By W. H. Grattan Flood | 218 |
| The Revival of Music. By Robert H. Hull | 219 |
| William Gardiner and the Music of Nature. By Orlando A. Mansfield (concluded) | 221 |
| The Late W. W. Starmer and English Carillons (with Portrait). By W. A. Roberts | 224 |
| Music in the Foreign Press. By M. D. Calvocoressi | 227 |
| The Musician's Bookshelf | 228 |
| Points from Lectures | 234 |
| Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' | 235 |
| Player-Piano Notes | 238 |
| Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel' | 238 |
| Occasional Notes | 240 |
| New Music | 247 |
| Church and Organ Music | 249 |
| Royal College of Organists | 249 |
| Letters to the Editor | 250 |
| The Amateurs' Exchange | 252 |
| Sixty Years Ago | 252 |
| Sharps and Flats | 253 |
| Royal Academy of Music | 253 |
| Royal College of Music | 253 |
| Trinity College of Music | 254 |
| The Old Vic. Reopened | 254 |
| Holst's 'Egdon Heath' at Cheltenham | 255 |
| Purcell's 'King Arthur' at Cambridge | 255 |
| London Concerts | 256 |
| Liverpool Repertory Opera | 259 |
| Manchester | 259 |
| Music in the Provinces | 260 |
| Competition Festival Record | 262 |
| Music in Scotland | 262 |
| Music in Wales | 263 |
| Music in Ireland | 263 |
| Musical Notes from Abroad | 263 |
| Obituary | 267 |
| Philip Brozel: An Appreciation | 268 |
| Julian Egerton, Clarinettist (with Portrait) | 268 |
| Stanley Withers: An Appreciation | 269 |
| Answers to Correspondents | 269 |

MUSIC.

| | |
|---|---|
| 'To Blossoms.' Four-Part Song. By W. G. Alcock | 241 |

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:

1. 'The Strife is o'er.' Anthem for Easter. By Eric H. Thiman.
2. Benedicite, omnia opera (shortened form). By Hugh Blair.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.
Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ALCOCK, W. G.—"To Blossoms." Four-part Song. (No. 1021, The Musical Times.) 3d.

—— Fantasie-Impromptu for Organ. (No. 113, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 2s.

BLAIR, HUGH.—Benedicite, omnia opera (shortened form). (No. 1150, Parish Choir Book.) 3d.

COLBORN, A. G.—Benedicite, omnia opera. (No. 2, in E flat) (Shortened form.) 1½d.

E. K.—"In that day." Anthem for Festival or General Use. 6d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"Who is Sylvia." Arranged for Two Voices and Pianoforte by John Pointer. (No. 237, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

HARWOOD, BASIL.—Three Short Pieces for Organ. (No. 20, Original Compositions for the Organ by B. Harwood.) 2s.

HURST, W.—"Except the Lord build the house." Anthem for Men's Voices. 4d.

LLOYD, C. H.—Benedicite, omnia opera (shortened form), in B flat. (No. 1148, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 2d.

McNAUGHT, W. (arranged by).—"In Derry Vale" (The Londonderry Air). Arranged as a Trio for Female Voices. (No. 522, Novello's Trios for Female Voices.) 3d.

PALMER, C. CHARLTON.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in B flat. 6d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

RATHBONE, GEORGE.—"Song of the Waters, The." Two-part Song for Equal Voices. (No. 235, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 429, contains the following music in both notations. "What way does the wind come." Unison Song. By ERIC H. THIMAN. "The Sleeping Beauty." (Action Song.) By CECIL SHARMAN. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

| | A. | B. |
|---|---|---|
| No. 1481. "Eternal Ruler of the ceaseless round." (Unison Hymn-Anthem for Massed Voices.) E. H. THIMAN | — | 2d. |
| 1482. "To Daffodils." Part-Song in Canon for Equal Voices. E. H. THIMAN | — | 2d. |
| 1483. "Midsummer Song." Two-part Song for Female Voices. E. BOYCE | — | 3d. |
| 1504. "Dulce Domum." Arranged for Senior Forms in Schools, or small Male-Voice Choirs. J. READING | — | 1½d. |
| 1505. "Drink to me only with thine eyes." Arranged for Senior Forms in Schools, or small Male-Voice Choirs. ENGLISH AIR. | — | 1½d. |

SHORE, S. ROYLE.—"Te Deum." An extended Chant setting for Congregation and Choir. 6d. (People's Part, 2d.)

SMITH, W.—"Nearer my God to Thee." Sacred Song for Soprano or Tenor. 2s.

THIMAN, ERIC H.—"The Strife is o'er." Anthem for Easter. (No. 1153, Novello's 8vo Anthems.) 4d, —— "To Daffodils." Part-Song in Canon for Equal Voices. (No. 236, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female Voices.) 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

No. 2552. "Song of the Volga Boatmen." Arranged for S.A.T.B. by H. BALFOUR GARDINER 3d.

,, 2553. "Song of the Volga Boatmen." Arranged for T.T.B.B. by H. BALFOUR GARDINER 3d.

,, 2554. "Day draws on with golden light." Easter Anthem. GEOFFREY SHAW 3d.

,, 2555. "Protect us through the coming night." (Short Anthem for Evening use.) Curschmann, arranged by H. E. BUTTON 1½d.

WILLIAMS, M.—"They that trust in the Lord." Anthem. 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR
THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—Sonata Dramatica for Organ, $3 (12s.).

DICKENSON, C.—An Easter Litany ("Glory be to the Father"). Anthem for Solo and Chorus. (No. 145, Sacred Choruses.) 30 cents (1s. 6d.).

JAMES, PHILIP.—"Little room o' dreams." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 360, Modern Series.) 10 cents (6d.).

SHATTUCK, F.—The Lord's Prayer. For S.A.T.B. (No. 919, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

VORIS, W. R.—"Blessed is He that cometh." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 914, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

—— "Blessed are the pure in heart." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 915, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

—— "While lowly shepherds watched by night." Christmas Carol for Soprano Solo and Mixed Voices. (No. 916, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

YOUNG, S.—"Shepherds sing, The." Song for Low or Medium Voice. 75 cents (3s.).

Church Music by Matthew Kingston

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| COMMUNION SERVICE IN A FLAT MAJOR ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| THE CONGREGATION'S MELODY TO ABOVE SERVICE | 0 | 3 |
| FESTAL MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D MAJOR ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |
| TE DEUM IN A FLAT MAJOR ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 6 |
| BENEDICTUS ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |
| MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN A FLAT MAJOR | 0 | 6 |
| HO! EVERY ONE THAT THIRSTETH. ANTHEM FOR BASS SOLO AND CHORUS ... ... ... ... ... ... | 0 | 3 |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A CONCERT

by the UNITED CHOIRS OF THE GERMAN EVANGELICAL CHURCHES IN LONDON, conducted by MR. E. A. SEYMOUR (F.R.C.O.), will take place in the LARGE MEETING HALL, FRIENDS' HOUSE, EUSTON ROAD, N.W.1 (facing Euston Station), on MONDAY, MARCH 5th, at 8 p.m., in Aid of the

GERMAN-ENGLISH ST. MARY'S SCHOOL,

under the patronage of His Excellency

THE GERMAN AMBASSADOR, DR. STHAMER.

The kind assistance has been promised of:
MISS LIRUM NIGHTINGALE (Soprano), MR. ERIC MARSHALL (Baritone), MR. DETTMAR DRESSEL (Violin), MR. HARRY DUCARDE ('Cello), MISS MIRIAN DUNCAN (Piano), and the CHILDREN'S CHOIR OF THE ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, conducted by the teacher, MR. WALTER LANDSIEDEL.

The PROGRAMME will include: Motets and Folk-Songs, Songs of Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, Hugo Wolf, Trios of Beethoven and Mendelssohn, and Violin Solos.

Tickets, 10*s.* 6*d.*, 5*s.*, and 2*s.* 6*d.*, may be obtained from Mr. G. MEINEL, 45, Hallam Street, Portland Place, W.1, and at any of the German Churches. No tickets will be sold at the door.

PORTSMOUTH
MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL
MAY 3rd, 4th, 5th, 1928.
THE GUILDHALL, PORTSMOUTH.
ALL CLASSES OPEN.

Adjudicators { MR. HARVEY GRACE, F.R.C.O. / MR. THOS. F. DUNHILL

SYLLABUS now ready, post free 1½*d.*, from the Hon. Secretary, W. BOYANTON, 7, Palmerston Road, Southsea, Hants.

EDWARD REACH
TENOR,
SOLOIST, ALL SOULS', LANGHAM PLACE, W.
AVAILABLE FOR ORATORIO, CONCERT, OPERATIC WORK.
Streatham 7888. 12, Maybury Street, London, S.W.17.

TO AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

FOR DISPOSAL, a quantity of bronze Music Stands in good condition. Apply, "Box No. 6," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A PROFESSIONAL SINGER, TENOR, can accept Church appointment, whole time preferred, but not essential. Pleasant conditions and interesting work first considerations. Available for Easter. All particulars, "Plain-Song," c/o Scripps's, South Molton Street, W.1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required for Woodford Union Church, Woodford Green Apply, with full particulars, to Secretary, 36, Glengall Road, Woodford Green, Essex.

TENORS REQUIRED for St. Clement Danes Choir. Good sight-readers essential. £20. Apply, Rector.

ACCOMPANIST, available for Concerts, &c. Experienced; moderate fees. Write, "C. M.," 261, High Road, Kilburn.

MANTHEY BOUDOIR GRAND.—Condition as new, fine tone. 95 guineas. Hodson, 122, Bute St., Cardiff.

FULL TRICHORD GERMAN PIANO.—Good condition. Bargain, £40. R. Webster, 18, Woodland Place, Penarth, Glam.

ROGERS TWO-MANUAL and PEDAL PIANOFORTE FOR SALE.—Fifty guineas cash, or sixty guineas at two guineas per month. Carriage paid. Apply, Box 14, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CELLO FOR SALE.—Magnificent resonant tone. Perfect condition; genuine bargain. £15, or offer. "J. S.," 3, Lawn Villas, Guildford Lawn, Ramsgate.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BY

Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer,
Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann

and other celebrated makers

The Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

PROTECT YOUR VIOLIN CASE!

"HILSON" VIOLIN
CASE COVERS
Regd. Design No. 733865.

BROWN CANVAS. BRITISH THROUGHOUT
No Straps. Simplicity itself.
PERFECT PROTECTION and THOROUGHLY WATERPROOF
Ask your Music Dealer to show you one.
PRICES: Quality A, 12/6; B, 15/6; C, 19/6
MAKERS: HENRY HILL & SONS,
9 & 10, CHRISTMAS STREET,
ESTB. 1887 BRISTOL Tel. 3105

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

VESPER.

("O LORD, SUPPORT US ALL THE DAY LONG").
(English and Welsh words.)
Music by W. R. PULLEIN. 3*d.* Novello, London.

Musical Times.—"Suitably expressive music for unaccompanied singing."

JUST PUBLISHED

THE

DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK

BOOK II.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

| TUNE. | METRE. | HYMN. |
|---|---|---|
| Abridge | C.M. | Be Thou my Guardian |
| Aberystwyth | 7.7.7.7.D. | Jesu, Lover of my soul |
| Alleluia, dulce Carmen | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Alleluia, song of sweetness |
| Capetown | 7.7.7.5. | Three in One, and One in Three |
| Caswall | 6.5.6.5. | Glory be to Jesus |
| Crüger | 7.6.7.6.D. | Hail to the Lord's Anointed |
| Dix | 7.7.7.7.7.7. | As with gladness men of old |
| Duke Street | L.M. | Fight the good fight with all thy might |
| Dundee | C.M. | The people that in darkness sat |
| Ebenezer | 8.7.8.7.D. | Hail, Thou once despisèd Jesus |
| Farley Castle | 10.10.10.10. | 'Lift up your hearts.' We lift them |
| Franconia | S.M. | Bless'd are the pure in heart |
| Lincoln | C.M. | Lord, in Thy Name Thy servants plead |
| London New | C.M. | God 'moves in a mysterious way |
| Mannheim | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us |
| Merton | 8.7.8.7. | Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding |
| O Filii et Filiæ (1st Version) | 8.8.8. (with Alleluias) | O sons and daughters, let us sing |
| O Filii et Filiæ (2nd Version) | 8.8.8. (with Alleluias) | |
| Old 124th | 10.10.10.10.10. | Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face |
| Passion Chorale | 7.6.7.6.D. | O Sacred Head, surrounded |
| Praise, my soul | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven |
| St. Albinus | 7.8.7.8. (with Alleluias) | Jesus lives! no longer now |
| St. Cross | L.M. | O come and mourn with me awhile |
| St. Cuthbert | 8.6.8.4. | Our Blest Redeemer, ere He breathed |
| St. James | C.M. | Thou art the Way; by Thee alone |
| St. Michael (Old 134th) | S.M. | Above the starry spheres |
| St. Stephen | C.M. | O God of Hosts, the mighty Lord |
| St. Thomas | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Lo! He comes, with clouds descending |
| Southwell | S.M. | Thou Judge of quick and dead |
| Stuttgart | 8.7.8.7. | Earth has many a noble city |
| Tallis' Ordinal | C.M. | O God unseen yet ever near |
| University | C.M. | The God of Love my Shepherd is |
| Veni Creator | L.M. | Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire |
| Veni Sancte Spiritus | 7.7.7.7.7.7. | Come, Thou Holy Spirit, come |
| Westminster | C.M. | My God, how wonderful Thou art |

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

CANTATAS FOR LENT

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

---

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

---

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

---

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

---

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE.

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK

(OP. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
(Vocal parts, 1s. each.)

An Edition with Latin words (Stabat Mater) may also be had.

---

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, With Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

---

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.
THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.
ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY
G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR
TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION
FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE
(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY
E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY
GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
(An Edition with Latin words may also be had, price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.)

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,
FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS
TOGETHER WITH
HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 1½d.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION
ON THE
SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY
FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

MUSIC FOR LENT

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by E. ELGAR and I. ATKINS. 4s.; paper boards, 5s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100. Book of Words, with the Music of the Chorales, 1s.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s. 6d. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION MUSIC, THE (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). J. BENEDICT. 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) C. GOUNOD. 1s. 6d.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION OF CHRIST, THE. G. F. HANDEL. 4s. 6d.; paper boards, 5s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Words only, 16s. per 100. Abridged edition for Church use, 1s. 6d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

PASSION OF OUR LORD, THE. H. SCHÜTZ. 1s. 6d.

*OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm CXXX.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. C. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 1s. 6d.

*OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm CXXX.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. G. HENSCHEL. 4s.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. G. ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by G. C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. Latin words. F. E. GLADSTONE. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. Latin words. F. E. GLADSTONE. 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonized by V. NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Latin and English words. G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. B. SQUIRE. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) E. PETTMAN. 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A Simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment. 2d.

*Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE BENEDICITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS

| | |
|---|---|
| ADLAM, F. (in F, Chant Form) | 2d. |
| BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) | 4d. |
| BENNETT, G. J. (in E flat) | 2d. |
| BENNETT, G. J. (in G) | 2d. |
| BENNETT, G. J. (in D, Unison) | 4d. |
| BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 4d. |
| BLAIR, H. (in G) | 2d. |
| BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES | 2d. |
| BUNNETT, ED. (in E, Chant Form) | 3d. |
| BUNNETT, ED. (in F, Chant Form) | 3d. |
| BUTTON, H. E. (in D) | 2d. |
| BUTTON, H. E. (Shortened Form) | 2d. |
| COBB, G. F. (in G) | 3d. |
| COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G) | 4d. |
| COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form) | 2d |
| ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) | 2d. |
| ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) | 3d. |
| ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) | 6d. |
| ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G) | 2d. |
| ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G) | 2d. |
| EYRE, A. J. (in E flat) | 3d. |
| EYRE, A. J. (No. 2, in F) | 2d. |
| FOSTER, M. B. (in F, Chant Form) | 6d. |
| FROST, P. H. (in D) | 3d. |
| GADSBY, H. (in G, Chant Form) | 2d. |
| GALE, C. R. (in D) | 2d. |
| GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form) | 2d. |
| GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison) | 2d. |
| GODFREY, A. E. (in G) | 4d. |
| GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G) | 4d. |
| H. B. C. (Three Chants) | 2d. |
| HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form) | 2d. |
| HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat) | 2d. |
| HOYTE, W. S. (in D) | 2d. |
| HUGHES, W. (in E flat) | 2d. |
| ILIFFE, F. (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form) | 2d. |
| LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat) | 4d. |
| LLOYD, C. H (in E flat, Chant Form) | 3d. |
| LLOYD, C. H. (Shortened Form) | 2d. |
| LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, Shortened Form) | 2d. |
| MACPHERSON, C. (in F, rhythmic setting) | 6d. |
| MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each | 6d. |
| MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat) | 2d. |
| MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN) | 3d |
| MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form) | 3d. |
| PETTMAN, E. (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants) | 3d. |
| PETTMAN, E. (in E flat) | 2d. |
| PULLEIN, J. (in E flat) | 1½d. |
| ROBERTS, J. V. (in B flat) | 6d. |
| SLATER, W. (in F) | 2d. |
| SMITH, B. (in A flat) | 2d. |
| SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.B. also simplified for S.A.T.B. | 3d. |
| STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form) | 2d. |
| STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS | 2d. |
| STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER | 2d. |
| Ditto (Welsh words) (Sol-fa, 1½d.) | 2d. |
| STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS | 3d |
| STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form) | 2d. |
| Ditto, Welsh words, 2d.; Sol-fa, 1½d. | |
| STEWART, C. H. (in the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) | 4d. |
| BARNBY, J. | 3d. |
| FOSTER, J. | |
| SMITH, M. (two settings) | |
| TURLE, J. (two settings) | |
| WICKES, C. A. (two settings) | |
| TOZER, F. (in G) | 3d. |
| TOZER, F. (in A). Short and simple | 3d. |
| WEST, J. E. (in G) | 6d. |
| WEST, J. E. (in C) | 2d. |
| WESTBURY, G. H. (in C) | 2d. |
| WILLAN, H. (in D) (Shortened Form) | 2d. |
| WOOD, W. G. (in D) | 2d. |
| WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant) | 2d. |

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

| | |
|---|---|
| DYKES, J. B. | 4d. |
| GOUNOD, C. | 3d. |
| HOYTE, W. S. | 6d. |
| PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies) (Edited by W. S. Vale) | 6d. |
| SPENCE, H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony) | 2d. |
| WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied) | 4d. |

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

THE WORDS BY E. MONRO.

SET TO MUSIC BY

| | |
|---|---|
| BUNNETT, E. | 3d. |
| BUTTON, H. E. | 3d. |
| FOSTER, M. B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 4d. |
| ROBERTS, J. V. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 4d. |
| SOMERVELL, A. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 4d. |
| STAINER, J. (Sol-fa, 2d.) | 4d. |

Words only, 2s. per 100.
Large Type Edition, 3s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

FOR CONGREGATIONAL SINGING

TWENTY

BACH CHORALES

set to appropriate Hymns for use during

LENT AND EASTER

FROM

THE BACH CHORALE BOOK

EDITED BY

J. HERBERT BARLOW

PRICE ... ... ONE SHILLING

(£2 10s. 0d. per 100)

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Popular Anthems for Easter

BY

CALEB SIMPER

45 Separate Anthems which have run into over 2,000 Editions.

Special list on application.

GEORGE BELCHER

| | |
|---|---|
| As it began to dawn ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| He hath redeemed us... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| A Prince and a Saviour ... ... ... ... | 4d. |

ARTHUR BERRIDGE

| | |
|---|---|
| Thanks be to God (New 1928) ... ... ... | 4d. |
| This is the Day ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Hallelujah ! to the Saviour ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Tell the Tidings ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Christ our Passover ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |

(Introducing a strain from Palestrina.)

REV. E. VINE-HALL

| | |
|---|---|
| I am Alpha and Omega ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Ye choirs of New Jerusalem ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Alleluia ! Alleluia ! ... ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Welcome, Happy Morning ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Christ is risen from the dead ... ... ... | 4d. |
| Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him ... ... | 4d. |

All Anthems also in Sol-fa at 3d. each.

Send for a selection on appro.

A. WEEKES & CO., Ltd.,

13 & 14, HANOVER STREET, LONDON, W.1.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."
Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."
Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."
Birmingham Post, 5-3-98, "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."
Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing.'"
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."
Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."
Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."
Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Foyle's Special Offers.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC. By POLE. An exhaustive treatise on the Theory or Philosophy of Music —its elements and its development. Published at 10s. 6d. net); offered (new) at 6s. post free.

FRANZ LISZT'S GREAT WORK ON THE GIPSY IN MUSIC. The result of the Author's life-long experiences and investigations of the Gipsies and their Music. With Essay on Liszt and his Work. In two Vols. Published, 15s. net; offered (as new) at 9s. 9d. complete, post free.

Above sent on approval. Quote offer 122.

Are you requiring other Music or Books? Foyles can supply, and save you trouble and expense.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

119-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

BEETHOVEN

AND HIS

NINE SYMPHONIES

BY

GEORGE GROVE

PRICE.

Cloth, Gilt, Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS

SET IX. JUST PUBLISHED

HYMNS AND TUNES

SETS PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED

PRICE SIXPENCE PER SET. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SET I.

1. COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD ... ... G. C. MARTIN
2. FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING ... LADY EUAN-SMITH
3. I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY ... ... FREDERIC CLAY
4. COME, O COME ! IN PIOUS LAYS ... ... ... J. STAINER
5. THINE FOR EVER ! GOD OF LOVE ... ... W. C. HARVEY
6. JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE ... ... H. E. BUTTON
7. SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR ... ... F. A. CHALLINOR
8. WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE ... ... C. J. MAY
9. ON OUR WAY REJOICING ... ... ... WALTER B. GILBERT
10. NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY ... ... ... J. ADCOCK

SET II.

1. AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS... ... ... ...J. STAINER
2. THE ANGELS' SONG ... ... ... ALBERTO RANDEGGER
3. FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN ... ... ... ALFRED MOFFAT
4. THE GOLDEN SHORE ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
5. SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR ... ... ... JOHN E. WEST
6. ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING ... ... ... F. H. COWEN
7. MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE ... J. V. ROBERTS
8. STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY ... ... J. STAINER
9. THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER ... ... ... JOSEPH BARNBY
10. GOD WILL TAKE CARE OF YOU ... ... F. R. HAVERGAL

SET III.

1. WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY ... ... ... J. BARNBY
2. HARK ! HARK ! THE ORGAN ... ... G. J. BENNETT
3. O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO ? ... ... H. E. BUTTON
4. WHILE THE SUN IS SHINING ... ... ... T. ADAMS
5. I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY ... ... ...H. J. GAUNTLETT
6. THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN ... ... A. SULLIVAN
7. LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE ... ... ... A. S. COOPER
8. IN OUR WORK AND IN OUR PLAY ... ... F. WESTLAKE
9. THE BEAUTIFUL LAND ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
10. GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD ... ... ... J. STAINER

SET IV.

1. THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND ... ... ... J. STAINER
2. THE CROWN IS WAITING ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
3. THE CITY OF LIGHT ... ... ... ...E. J. TROUP
4. HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES ... ... ...LADY EUAN-SMITH
5. GOD IS IN HEAVEN ! CAN HE HEAR ... ... H. E. BUTTON
6. THE GOOD SHEPHERD ... ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
7. A LITTLE KINGDOM I POSSESS ... ... ... R. S. NEWMAN
8. RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS ... ... ... E. J. TROUP
9. FLOWERS ... ... ... ... ... ALBERTO RANDEGGER
10. JESUS, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME ... ... H. PARKER

SET V.

1. CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD ... ... ... J. H. MAUNDER
2. WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR ... ... ... ...E. J. TROUP
3. COME, PRAISE YOUR LORD ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
4. WE WILL PRAISE THEE ... ... ... ... J. STAINER
5. ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY ... ... HERBERT E. CRIMP
6. WE THANK THEE, LORD ... ... ... W. C. HARVEY
7. COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING ... E. J. TROUP
8. COME, SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS ... ... G. W. TORRANCE
9. THE LESSON OF LOVE ... ... ... ... J. BARNBY
10. NOW THE DAY IS OVER ... ... ... ... F. W. BLUNT

SET VI.

1. HOSANNA WE SING ... ... ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
2. HEAVENLY FATHER, SEND THY BLESSING ... W. C. HARVEY
3. BLESSED JESU, WE CAN SEE THEE ... ... ... A. ROWLEY
4. THE DAYS OF OLD ... ... ... ... ETHEL BOYCE
5. WHAT IS THE GIFT ... ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
6. WHILE OUR LORD WAS PASSING BY ... ... ETHEL BOYCE
7. THE EARTH IS FAIR AND SWEET ... ... ... A. ROWLEY
8. PILGRIMS OF THE NIGHT ... ... ... ... O. KING
9. THE HOLY LIGHT ... ... ... ... C. H. LLOYD
10. NOW SINKS THE SUN ... ... ... ... ... C. J. MAY

SET VII.

1. LIFE'S GLAD MORNING ... ... ... ... G. C. MARTIN
2. JESU, BLESSED SAVIOUR ... ... ... A. HERBERT BREWER
3. COME, CHRISTIAN YOUTHS ... ... ... HARVEY GRACE
4. THY WORD IS LIKE A GARDEN ... ... ... E. H. THIMAN
5. GOD OF MERCY, THRONED ON HIGH ... ... HARVEY GRACE
6. GOD OF OUR FATHERS ... ... ... ... E. J. HOPKINS
7. WHEN THE LORD OF LOVE ... ... ... E. H. THIMAN
8. CHILDREN OF GOD ... ... ... ... F. G. RUSSELL
9. THE CHILDREN'S PRAYER ... ... ... ... R. MCLEOD
10. THE LORD BE WITH US ... ... ... ... ... C. J. MAY

SET VIII.

1. THE CHILDREN'S SONG ... ... ... GEORGE RATHBONE
2. THE CHILDREN'S FESTAL DAY ... ... ... J. H. ADAMS
3. SING ALOUD TO JESUS ... ... ... ALEC ROWLEY
4. LONG AGO SWEET VOICES CALLING ... ... J. H. MAUNDER
5. CHILDREN'S VOICES ... ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
6. AROUND THE THRONE OF GOD (Tune—"LASST UNS ERFREUEN") Arr. by IVOR ATKINS
7. GOD, WHO HATH MADE THE DAISIES ... ... ... R. MCLEOD
8. FOR EVER AND FOR EVER ... ... ... J. H. MAUNDER
9. FRAMER OF THE LIGHT ... ... ... R. WALKER ROBSON
10. THE JOYOUS DAY, O LORD, IS ENDING ... ... C. J. MAY

SET IX.

1. ALLELUIA ! HEAR US SINGING ... ... ... H. E. BUTTON
2. SHEPHERD OF TENDER YOUTH ... ... ... H. A. CHAMBERS
3. FATHER, HEAR THY CHILDREN'S PRAISES GEORGE RATHBONE
4. GOD OF THE MORNING ... ... ... ... CHARLES BURNEY
5. LET ALL THE WORLD IN EVERY CORNER SING H. E. BUTTON
6. OUR HEARTS ARE FULL OF GLADNESS ... ... ALEC ROWLEY
7. THANKSGIVING ... ... ... ... MYLES B. FOSTER
8. GOD WHISPERS ... ... ... ... ... ROBERT MCLEOD
9. GOD IN ALL ... ... ... ... ... ... EDGAR MOY
10. HEAR THY CHILDREN, GENTLE JESUS ... ... ... C. J. MAY

The Hymns and Tunes may also be had in separate numbers, price 1½*d.* each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

PUBLISHED AS A NET BOOK

THE CATHEDRAL PRAYER BOOK

Being the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER with the Music necessary for the use of Choirs, together with the CANTICLES and PSALTER (the Cathedral Psalter), Pointed for Chanting.

EDITED BY SIR JOHN STAINER, M.A., MUS. DOC., OXON.
AND
THE REV. WILLIAM RUSSELL, M.A., MUS. BAC., OXON.

EDITIONS

No. 1. Demy 8vo, 628 pp., large type. With Canticles and Psalter pointed for Chanting:

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Cloth bevelled, red edges ... ... ... | 9 | 0 |
| Red Basil, red edges ... ... ... ... | 12 | 0 |

No. 2. Demy 8vo, 600 pp., large type. With Canticles and Psalter pointed, set to appropriate Chants (Cathedral Psalter Chants):

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Cloth bevelled, red edges ... ... ... | 9 | 0 |
| Red Basil, red edges ... ... ... ... | 12 | 0 |
| Paste grain, limp, gilt edges ... ... ... | 14 | 6 |
| Paste grain, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... | 16 | 0 |
| Turkey Morocco, limp ... ... ... | 17 | 6 |
| Turkey Morocco, boards, gilt roll ... ... | 21 | 0 |
| German Morocco, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... | 21 | 0 |
| INDIA PAPER EDITIONS: | | |
| Rutland Morocco ... ... ... ... | 17 | 6 |
| Turkey Morocco ... ... ... ... | 20 | 0 |

No. 3. Imperial 32mo, 696 pp., Pocket Edition. With Canticles and Psalter pointed for Chanting:

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Cloth bevelled, red edges ... ... ... | 5 | 6 |
| Red Basil, red edges ... ... ... ... | 7 | 6 |
| Paste grain, limp, gilt edges ... ... ... | 8 | 6 |
| Paste grain, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... ... | 10 | 6 |
| Turkey Morocco, limp ... ... ... | 11 | 6 |
| German Morocco, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... | 15 | 0 |
| INDIA PAPER EDITIONS: | | |
| Rutland Morocco ... ... ... ... | 12 | 0 |
| Turkey Morocco ... ... ... ... | 15 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

THE CHORALE PRELUDES

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY ERNEST NEWMAN

Complete in Five Books, to which is added a Sixth Book, containing the Chorales only.

CONTENTS.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| BOOK XV. | Orgelbüchlein (Little Organ Book)... | 7 | 6 |
| BOOK XVI. | The Six "Schübler" Preludes and the "Clavierübung" (Part III.) | 5 | 6 |
| BOOK XVII. | The Eighteen Preludes ... ... | 5 | 6 |
| BOOK XVIII. | Miscellaneous Preludes (Part I.) ... | 5 | 6 |
| BOOK XIX. | Miscellaneous Preludes (Part II.) and Variations ... ... ... | 5 | 6 |
| BOOK XX. | The Chorales only ... ... ... | 5 | 6 |

"'What is needed,' wrote Schweitzer, in concluding a chapter on these magnificent works of the great master, 'is a cheap edition of the Chorale Preludes in the original form, distinguishing the collections planned by Bach himself, from detached chorales that have come down to us.' At length, in the excellent edition before us, we find admirably fulfilled every detail of Schweitzer's ideal.

"We have no hesitation in recommending this edition of the Chorale Preludes."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"This fine series is a triumph of British music publishing, and, with clear editing and informing prefaces and annotations, it should prove of the greatest value to students of the old master."—The Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

NEW EDITION.

POCKET SING-SONG BOOK

FOR SCHOOLS, HOMES

AND

COMMUNITY SINGING

CONTENTS.

A-hunting we will go
All people that on earth do dwell (Old 100th)
All through the night
Arethusa, The
Ash Grove, The
Auld Lang Syne
Bay of Biscay, The
Begone, dull care
Bells of Aberdovey, The
Blow, blow, thou winter wind
Blue Bell of Scotland, The
Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond, The
British Grenadiers, The
Campbells are comin', The
Camptown Races
Charlie is my Darling
Coasts of High Barbary, The
Come, lasses and lads
Come, let's be merry
Dashing away with the smoothing iron
Down among the dead men
David of the White Rock
Drink to me only with thine eyes
Early one morning
Flight of the Earls, The
Girl I left behind me, The
Glory to Thee, my God, this night (Tallis)
God rest you merry, gentlemen
God save the King
Golden Vanity, The
Good-morrow, Gossip Joan
Harp that once through Tara's halls, The Heart of Oak
Heave away, my Johnny
Here's a health unto His Majesty
I saw three ships
John Brown's body
John Peel
Keel row, The
Land of my Fathers
Lass of Richmond Hill, The
Last Rose of Summer, The
Let the hills resound
Londonderry Air
March of the Men of Harlech
Marching thro' Georgia
Marseillaise, The
Meeting of the Waters, The Mermaid, The
Minstrel Boy, The
My Lady Greensleeves
Now thank we all our God
O no, John !
Oak and the Ash, The
Oh, dear ! what can the matter be
Oh ! we can play
Old Folks at Home
Old King Cole
One man went to mow
Onward, Christian Soldiers
Poacher, The
Polly Oliver
Polly-wolly-doodle
Rio Grand
Rounds: Come, follow me
'Tis humdrum
Chairs to mend
Rule, Britannia
So early in the morning
Summer is a-coming in
There was a simple maiden
This great world is a trouble
Tight little Island, The
Twelve days of Christmas
Vicar of Bray, The
Wanderer, The
We be Three Poor Mariners
When I was a Tailor
When Johnny comes marching home
Wi' a Hundred Pipers
Widdicombe Fair
Will ye no come back again
Young May Moon, The

Size 6¼ in. by 5 in., rounded corners, and lined paper cover. The songs are generally set in low keys with simple pianoforte accompaniments. The voice part is printed in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa notations.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, price 4*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

TWICE 44 SOCIABLE SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

PRICE COMPLETE 6d WORDS AND MUSIC

SIR HENRY HADOW writes:

"The collection here offered may be commended without reserve. Mr. Geoffrey Shaw's name is in itself a guarantee of good editorship; the volume contains a wide and varied collection of songs, rounds, hymns, and carols; and it is issued at a price which brings it within everybody's reach. It is, in the true sense of the word, a popular volume, and I cordially hope that its 'appeal to the people' will be successful."

UNISON WITH PIANO

| | Song No. |
|---|---|
| Cavalier Song | 28 |
| Charlie is my darling (descant) | 23 |
| Gossip Joan | 29 |
| Hundred Pipers, The | 17 |
| If music be the food of love | 27 |
| In yon garden | 10 |
| Jolly Waggoner, The | 15 |
| My little pretty one | 14 |
| Nymphs and Shepherds | 25 |
| O mistress mine | 19 |
| Old Towler | 18 |
| One man went to mow | 16 |
| Robin's Last Will, The | 21 |
| To all you ladies (descant) | 24 |
| Twelve Days of Christmas, The | 22 |
| When as the Mavis | 26 |

UNISON AND PARTS WITH PIANO

| | |
|---|---|
| Angler's Song, The | 2 |
| Green Grow the Rashes, O! | 4 |
| O Soldier, Soldier | 3 |

DUETS WITH PIANO

| | |
|---|---|
| Calino Custurame | 8 |
| John come kiss me now | 6 |
| Jolly Ploughboy, The | 5 |
| Lass of Richmond Hill, The | 11 |
| Lass that loves a Sailor, The (descant) | 12 |
| My daddy is dead | 9 |
| Peaceful slumb'ring | 13 |
| When the King enjoys his own again | 7 |

UNISON UNACCOMPANIED

| | |
|---|---|
| Miller of the Dee, The (descant) | 52 |
| Oak and the Ash, The | 53 |

TWO-PART UNACCOMPANIED

| | |
|---|---|
| I love Sixpence | 50 |
| Sweet Kate | 51 |

THREE-PART UNACCOMPANIED WOMEN'S OR MEN'S VOICES

| | Song No. |
|---|---|
| Love me little, love me long | 46 |
| Three Ravens, The | 44 |
| With my flock as I walked | 47 |

MIXED-VOICES

| | |
|---|---|
| John Anderson, my Jo | 49 |

FOUR-PART UNACCOMPANIED

| | |
|---|---|
| Agincourt Song, The | 36 |
| Broom of Cowden knowes, The | 34 |
| Ca' the ewes to the knowes | 41 |
| Down among the dead men | 38 |
| Early one morning | 32 |
| Flowers of the Forest, The | 30 |
| Gather ye rosebuds | 29 |
| I have house and land in Kent | 33 |
| Land o' the Leal, The | 39 |
| Little Bingo | 31 |
| Londonderry Air (Mine Own Countree) | 1 |
| Mine Own Countree (Londonderry Air) | 1 |
| Sir Eglamore | 37 |
| When Johnny comes marching home | 35 |

ROUNDS AND CANONS (THREE-PART)

| | |
|---|---|
| All into service | 81 |
| Come, follow | 88 |
| Fie, nay, prithee, John | 54 |
| Hey, ho! to the greenwood | 40 |
| Non nobis, Domine | 56 |
| Turn again, Whittington | 57 |
| Under this stone | 55 |
| White sand and grey sand | 58 |
| Wilt thou lend me? | 84 |

FOUR-PART

| | Song No. |
|---|---|
| Ah, poor bird | 43 |
| Jack boy, ho! boy, news | 42 |
| London's burning | 45 |
| Now Robin, lend to me thy bow | 59 |
| She weepeth sore | 72 |
| There was an old man | 61 |

FIVE-PART

| | |
|---|---|
| Summer is a-coming in | 60 |

NINE-PART

| | |
|---|---|
| Let 's have a peal | 48 |

HYMNS

| | |
|---|---|
| Christians, awake (descant) | 62 |
| Fight the good fight (descant) | 65 |
| God of Love my Shepherd is, The (descant) | 63 |
| He who would valiant be | 76 |
| Jesu, grant me this, I pray (descant) | 71 |
| Jesus shall reign (descant) | 68 |
| King of Love my Shepherd is, The | 69 |
| Lo! He comes with clouds descending (descant) | 66 |
| O come, O come, Emmanuel! (descant) | 74 |
| O God, our help in ages past (descant) | 73 |
| O worship the King (descant) | 67 |
| Pray that Jerusalem (descant) | 70 |
| Saviour, again to Thy dear Name | 75 |
| When I survey the wondrous Cross (descant) | 64 |

CAROLS

| | |
|---|---|
| A Child this day is born | 82 |
| A Virgin most pure | 85 |
| Corpus Christi Carol | 79 |
| Coventry Carol, The | 77 |
| Furry Day Carol | 86 |
| Here we come a-wassailing | 87 |
| Holly and the Ivy, The | 83 |
| Holly well Carol, The | 83 |
| This endris night | 78 |

Specimen copy, 7d. post free.

HAWKES & SON (LONDON) LTD.

DENMAN STREET LONDON W1

JUST PUBLISHED.

SEVEN PART-SONGS

FOR FEMALE VOICES AND STRINGS.

WORDS BY

ROBERT BRIDGES.

MUSIC BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 44.)

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Say who is this ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| 2. | O love, I complain ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 3. | Angel Spirits of sleep ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 4. | When first we met ... ... ... ... | 4d. |
| 5. | Sorrow and joy ... ... ... ... | 3d. |
| 6. | Love in my heart from Heaven ... ... | 3d. |
| 7. | Assemble all ye maidens ... ... ... | 8d. |

String Parts, Nos. 1-6, complete, 2s. 8d.
Ditto, No. 7, 2s. 8d.

"'Assemble all ye maidens' is very beautiful, with that cold, pure beauty which the composer knows so well how to get from a few simple vocal strains, long sustained drone or pedal notes on the strings, and a basso ostinato in quintuple time enriching the rhythmic movement of the later stanzas."—The Times.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED

PART-SONGS for MALE VOICES

(A.T.B.B.)

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

A Harnet zet in a hollow tree.

A TRADITIONAL BALLAD.

Price 4*d*.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.

WORDS BY

THOMAS GRAY.

Price 3*d*.

The despairing lover.

WORDS BY

WILLIAM WALSH.

Price 3*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY

F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE
STRING PARTS, Price 8s.
An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published.
Price 3s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JOHN GILPIN

POEM BY

WILLIAM COWPER.

SET FOR FEMALE (OR BOYS') VOICES IN UNISON.

(Second Part Optional.)

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

(Two Violins and Percussion Optional)

BY

COLIN TAYLOR.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SEVENTEEN SONGS

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL.

Edited and arranged, with accompaniment for the Pianoforte, by

ARTHUR SOMERVELL.

Price Four Shillings.

CONTENTS.

A PASTORAL ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MR. JOHN PLAYFORD.
AH! CRUEL NYMPH.
AH! HOW PLEASANT.
AH! WHAT PAINS.
AN ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MATTHEW LOCKE
ANACREON'S DEFEAT.
CEASE, O MY SAD SOUL.
HOW DELIGHTFUL 'S THE LIFE.
I FAIN WOULD BE FREE.
IF MUSIC BE THE FOOD OF LOVE (2nd Version).
LET EACH GALLANT HEART.
LOVE ARMS HIMSELF.
OLINDA.
ON THE BROW OF RICHMOND HILL.
SAWNEY IS A BONNY LAD.
THE FATAL HOUR COMES ON.
THE QUEEN'S EPICEDIUM (ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF QUEEN MARY. 1695).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

VOCAL COMPOSITIONS BY EDWARD GERMAN

SONGS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| CAMEL'S HUMP, THE. D, E flat, and F ... ... each | 2 | 0 |
| CHARMING CHLOE. D flat, E flat, and F ... ... each | 2 | 0 |
| FIRST FRIEND. (Boy Soprano) ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| HIS LADY. (Mezzo-Soprano) ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS. G and B flat... each | 2 | 0 |
| JUST SO SONG BOOK, THE ... ... ... cloth, net | 7 | 6 |
| LONDON TOWN. C, E flat, and F ... ... ... each | 2 | 0 |
| LORDING'S DAUGHTER, THE. D minor and F minor ea. | 2 | 0 |
| MERROW DOWN. (Baritone) ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| *ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE. (Soprano or Tenor) ... | 2 | 0 |
| ROLLING DOWN TO RIO. *G minor and A minor each | 2 | 0 |

PART-SONGS (S.A.T.B.).

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| CAMEL'S HUMP, THE ... ... ... ... | Sol-fa, 3d. | 0 | 4 |
| CHASE, THE ... ... ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| IN PRAISE OF NEPTUNE ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| LONDON TOWN ... ... ... ... ... | ,, 4d. | 0 | 6 |
| MY BONNIE LASS SHE SMILETH ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| O LOVELY MAY ... ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| O PEACEFUL NIGHT ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE (4-part) ... ... | ,, 3d. | 0 | 4 |
| Do. do. (8-part) ... ... ... | | 0 | 6 |
| ROLLING DOWN TO RIO ... ... ... ... | Sol-fa, 3d. | 0 | 6 |
| SLEEPING ... ... ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| SWEET DAY SO COOL ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| THREE KNIGHTS, THE ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| WEEP YOU NO MORE (Sleeping)... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| WHO IS SYLVIA? ... ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |

MALE VOICES (T.T.B.B.).

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| LONDON TOWN ... ... ... ... ... | Sol-fa, 3d. | 0 | 6 |
| O PEACEFUL NIGHT (German words, 6d.) ... ... | 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| ROLLING DOWN TO RIO ... ... ... ... | ,, 3d. | 0 | 6 |
| SLEEPING ... ... ... ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| THREE KNIGHTS, THE ... ... ... ... | ,, 3d. | 0 | 4 |
| WEEP YOU NO MORE (Sleeping) ... ... ... | 2d. | 0 | 4 |

FEMALE OR BOYS' VOICES.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| BEAUTEOUS MORN (s.c.c.) ... ... ... | Sol-fa, 3d. | 0 | 4 |
| CAMEL'S HUMP, THE (s. & A.) ... ... ... | ,, 3d. | 0 | 4 |
| IN PRAISE OF NEPTUNE (Unison) ... ... ... ... | | 0 | 4 |
| *IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS (s. & A.) (Folio, 3s.) | | 0 | 4 |
| Do. ... ... ... ... ... | Sol-fa, 3d. | | |
| MY BONNIE LASS SHE SMILETH (3 Voices) ... ... | | 0 | 4 |
| O LOVELY MAY (s.s.c.) ... ... ... ... | Sol-fa, 3d. | 0 | 4 |
| O PEACEFUL NIGHT (3 voices) ... ... ... | ,, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| *ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE (s.s.A.) (Folio, 3s.) | ,, 1½d. | 0 | 4 |
| ROLLING DOWN TO RIO (s. & A.) ... ... | ,, 3d. | 0 | 4 |
| *SHEPHERDS' DANCE (arranged as two-part or Unison Song). From Henry VIII. ... ... | Staff Notation | 0 | 4 |
| Do. Staff and Sol-fa Notations combined | | 0 | 4 |
| Do. Sol-fa only ... ... ... ... | | 0 | 3 |
| String Parts, 3s.; Wind Parts, 4s. 4d.: Full Score, MS. | | | |
| WHO IS SYLVIA (s. & A.) ... ... ... ... | Sol-fa, 3d. | 0 | 4 |

SERVICE, ANTHEM, ETC.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| BREAD OF HEAVEN, ON THEE WE FEED | Sol-fa, 2d. | 0 | 4 |
| GRACE, "NON NOBIS DOMINE" ... ... ... ... | | 0 | 2 |
| Do. do. T.T.B.B. ... ... ... ... | | 0 | 2 |
| INTERCESSORY HYMN. In E flat and D flat (Words only, 2s. per 100.) | Sol-fa, 3d. | 0 | 3 |
| DITTO (Welsh words). In D flat ... ... ... (Words only, 2s. per 100.) | ,, 3d. | 0 | 3 |
| TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, IN F ... ... ... ... ... | | 0 | 8 |

* Orchestral parts may be had.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH DESCANTS.

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

SET I. NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 271.

CONTENTS

THE BAY OF BISCAY (English)
A HUNTING WE WILL GO (English)
JOHN PEEL (English)
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT (Welsh)
SCOTS, WHA HAE (Scottish)
THE OAK AND THE ASH (Scottish)
EARLY ONE MORNING (English)
OH, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? (English)
THE BRITISH GRENADIERS (English)
THE ASH GROVE (Welsh)
GOOD KING WENCESLAS (Traditional)
THE FIRST NOWELL (Traditional)

SET II. NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 275.

CONTENTS:

COME, LASSES AND LADS (English)
WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS (Scottish)
DAVID OF THE WHITE ROCK (Welsh)
THE YOUNG MAY MOON (Irish)
THE GOLDEN VANITY (English)
FLIGHT OF THE EARLS (Irish)

SET III. NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 276.

CONTENTS:

MEETING OF THE WATERS (Irish)
THERE'S NAE LUCK (Scottish)
DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES (English)
LET ERIN REMEMBER (Irish)
THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON (English)
THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY (Welsh)

PRICE EIGHTPENCE EACH SET. Separate Numbers at TWOPENCE or THREEPENCE each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

A SELECTED LIST OF # NOVELLO'S LIGHT PIECES
FOR PIANOFORTE.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| ARENSKY, A. | Romance in A flat | 2 | 0 |
| ARMSTRONG, F. ALFORD | Autumn Leaves | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, ,, | White Heather. Valse | 2 | 0 |
| BREWER, A. HERBERT | Auf Wiedersehen | 2 | 0 |
| CARSE, ADAM | Gavotte in G | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Three Miniatures: 1. Humoresque 2. Love Song 3. Scherzetto } Complete | 2 | 6 |
| COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. | Four Characteristic Waltzes: 1. Valse Bohemienne 2/- 2. Valse Rustique 2/- 3. Valse de la Reine 2/- 4. Valse Mauresque 2/- } Complete | 4 | 0 |
| COWEN, FREDERIC H. | Four English Dances, in the Olden Style: 1. Stately Dance 2. Rustic Dance 3. Graceful Dance 4. Country Dance } Complete | 4 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Minuet d'Amour | 2 | 0 |
| ELGAR, EDWARD | Chanson de Matin | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Chanson de Nuit | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Mazurka | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Serenade Mauresque | 2 | 0 |
| ESIPOFF, STEPÁN | L'Absence | 2 | 0 |
| FLETCHER, PERCY E. | Reflections (after verses from Longfellow): 1. Snowflakes 2. Spring 3. Sunset } Complete | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Toy Soldiers' March | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Two Bagatelles: 1. Valsette 2. Pizzicato } | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Valse Arabesque | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Valse Lyrique ("Smile of Spring") | 2 | 0 |
| GERMAN, EDWARD | Three Dances from "Henry VIII": 1. Morris Dance 2. Shepherds' Dance 3. Torch Dance } Complete | 3 | 0 |
| HOLBROOKE, JOSEF | Souvenir de Printemps | 2 | 0 |
| HOLLINS, ALFRED | Intermezzo | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Spring Song | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Valse Impromptu | 2 | 0 |
| MANNS, OTTO, Junr. | A Northern Cradle Song | 2 | 0 |
| PITT, PERCY | Air de Ballet | 2 | 0 |
| RAWLINSON, HAROLD | Aubade | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Serenade | 2 | 0 |
| SCOTT-BAKER, H. | Mazurka | 2 | 0 |
| ,, ,, | Pantomime | 2 | 0 |
| WEBSTER, ERIC | Vignettes: 1. Valse 2. Reverie 3. Petit Scherzo } Complete | 2 | 0 |
| WENDT, THÉOPHIL | Cantique d'Amour | 2 | 0 |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

SMALL COLLECTIONS OF SONGS

(ROYAL QUARTO)

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| AUSTIN, E.Songs from the Highway (Six Songs) (Baritone) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| BELL, W. H.Six Love Lyrics (Contralto or Baritone) ... ... ... | 4 | 6 |
| BOUGHTON, R.Four Songs in two sets. Each set | 2 | 0 |
| BOYLE, G. F.Six Songs (Soprano) ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| BREWER, A. H.Sprig of Shamrock (Four old Irish Airs) (High or low voice) | 3 | 6 |
| CAPEL, J. M.Just before bed-time (Six little Songs for good children) ... | 4 | 0 |
| CARSE, A.Voyage of Love, The (Five Songs) (Contralto or Baritone) ... | 4 | 0 |
| COBB, G. F.Three Sacred Songs (Contralto) ... ... ... | 6 | 0 |
| COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.Soul's Expression, The (Four Sonnets), Op. 42 (Contralto) ... | 4 | 0 |
| CRIMP, H. E.Wilderness Way (Three Songs of Childhood) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| DAVIES, E. H.Five Songs of Childhood ... | 3 | 0 |
| FLETCHER, P. E.Four Tennyson Lyrics (Soprano) ... ... ... | 3 | 6 |
| HILL, A.Songlets for Children (Six Songs) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Twilight Songs for Little Children (Six Songs) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| HODGKINSON, N.Six little Songs (Contralto) ... | 3 | 0 |
| MACKENZIE, A. C.Four Songs by Tennyson (Soprano) In two Sets, each ... | 2 | 0 |
| MARCHANT, S.Nonsense Songs (Five Songs) (Contralto) ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| MARRIOTT, N.Three Songs (Mezzo-Soprano or Contralto) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| MONTFITCHET, M. de.Three Cradle Songs (Mezzo-Soprano) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| NEWMARCH, R.Six Russian Songs (Selected)... | 3 | 0 |
| PITT, P.Trois Poésies (Three Songs) (Soprano) ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| RESSE, E. P.Four Folk-Songs (Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone) ... | 3 | 0 |
| ROECKEL, J. L.Illusions (Three Songs) (Baritone or Contralto)... ... | 4 | 0 |
| SOMERVILLE, R.Three Songs of Friendship (Three keys, C, D, E) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| STAINER, J. (arr.).Six Italian Songs (Mezzo-Soprano) ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| STEGGALL, R.Four Shakespeare Songs (Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone) ... | 4 | 0 |
| WAGNER, R.Five Songs (Soprano or Tenor) | 3 | 0 |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

SONGS BY FRANZ SCHUBERT

VOL. 1

TWENTY SONGS

FOR A MEZZO-SOPRANO VOICE

SELECTED, EDITED, AND TRANSLATED BY

NATALIA MACFARREN

Price 2s. 6d.

Praise of Tears.
Knowest thou the land? (Mignon's first song in "Wilhelm Meister").
The Message of Flowers.
Nought may'st thou ask me (Mignon's second song in "Wilhelm Meister").
Oh, let me dream till I awaken (Mignon's third song in "Wilhelm Meister").
The greenwood calls.
The full-orbed moon (Romance from "Rosamund").
Hallow'd night, descend.
Huntsman, rest (Ellen's second song in "The Lady of the Lake").
Thro' the pine-wood.
The Summer waves.
Wanderer's night-song
Trust in Spring.
The maiden's lament.
To Mignon.
The passing-bell.
Alinda.
Ave Maria (Ellen's third song in "The Lady of the Lake").
The fisherman.
On the water.

VOL. 2

TWENTY SONGS

FOR A CONTRALTO VOICE

SELECTED, EDITED, AND TRANSLATED BY

NATALIA MACFARREN

Price 2s. 6d.

The wanderer.
Fisher's song.
The angry bard.
The unlucky fisherman.
Old man's song.
The flight of time.
Litany for All Souls' day.
The weary heart.
Minstrel's treasure.
Soldiers' drinking song.
Sadness.
To the lyre.
Calm at sea.
Lay of the imprisoned huntsman.
Passing to Hades.
Comfort in tears.
Death and the maiden.
Crusaders.
Dithyramb.
Prometheus.

VOL. 3

TWENTY SONGS

FOR SOPRANO OR TENOR

SELECTED, EDITED, AND TRANSLATED BY

NATALIA MACFARREN

Price 2s. 6d.

The Erl King.
Omnipotence.
Love's unrest.
Rose among the heather.
Sad heart.
The band of roses.
Thou art repose.
Ganymede.
Mignon.
Secrets.
Hark, hark, the lark.
Thee would I greet.
To the beloved one.
Suleika's second song.
Presence of the loved one.
Laughing and weeping.
Margaret's prayer.
By the doorways I will wander.
To a brooklet.
To Sylvia.

VOL. 4

SWAN SONGS

(SCHWANENGESANG)

GERMAN AND ENGLISH WORDS

THE ENGLISH VERSION BY

J. TROUTBECK

Edited, with marks for phrasing, expression, and breathing

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

Price 2s. 6d.

Love's message—Liebesbotschaft.
The soldier's presentiment—Krieger's Ahnung.
Longings in Spring—Frühlingssehnsucht.
A serenade—Ständchen.
The retreat—Aufenthalt.
In a strange land—In der Fremde.
Departure—Abschied.
Atlas—Der Atlas.
Her portrait—Ihr Bild.
The fishermaiden—Das Fischermädchen.
The town—Die Stadt.
By the sea—Am Meer.
The apparition—Der Doppelgänger.
The pigeon post—Die Taubenpost.

VOL. 5

"THE FAIR MAID OF THE MILL"

(DIE SCHÖNE MÜLLERIN)

GERMAN AND ENGLISH WORDS

THE ENGLISH VERSION BY

J. TROUTBECK

Edited, with marks for phrasing, expression, and breathing,

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

Price 2s. 6d.

Wandering—Das Wandern
Whither—Wohin.
Halt!—Halt.
Gratitude to the brook—Danksagung an den Bach.
Evening rest—Am Feierabend.
The question—Der Neugierige.
Impatience—Ungeduld.
Morning greeting—Morgengruss.
The miller's flowers—Des Müller's Blumen.
A rain of tears—Thränenregen.
Mine—Mein.
A pause—Pause.
With the green ribbon—Mit dem grünen Lautenbande.
The hunter—Der Jäger.
Jealousy and pride—Eifersucht und Stolz.
The pleasing colour—Die liebe Farbe.
The hateful colour—Die böse Farbe.
Faded flowers—Trockne Blumen.
The miller and the brook—Der Müller und der Bach.
The brook's lullaby—Des Baches Wiegenlied.

VOL. 6

"THE WINTER JOURNEY"

(WINTERREISE)

GERMAN AND ENGLISH WORDS

THE ENGLISH VERSION BY

J. TROUTBECK

Price 2s. 6d.

Good-night—Gute Nacht.
The weathercock—Die Wetterfahne.
Frozen tears—Gefrorne Thränen.
Benumbed—Erstarrung.
The linden tree—Der Lindenbaum.
A flood—Wasserfluth.
On the stream—Auf dem Flusse.
Looking back—Rückblick.
Jack-a-Lantern—Irrlicht.
Rest—Rast.
A dream of Spring—Frühlingstraum.
Loneliness—Einsamkeit.
The post—Die Post.
The grey head—Der graue Kopf.
The raven—Die Krähe.
The last hope—Letzte Hoffnung.
In the village—Im Dorfe.
The stormy morning—Der stürmische Morgen.
Delusion—Täuschung.
The sign-post—Der Wegweiser.
The hostelry—Das Wirthshaus.
Courage—Muth.
The mock suns—Die Nebensonnen.
The organ grinder—Der Leiermann.

THIRTY SONGS

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, BOOK 273

IN BOTH NOTATIONS

Price 2s.

Ave Maria.
Courage.
Cradle Song.
Crusaders.
Erlaf-Lake.
Fishermaiden, The.
Fisherman, The.
Fisher's Song.
Full-orbed Moon, The.
Greenwood calls, The.
Hark! hark! the Lark.
Harper's Song, The.
Huntsman, rest.
Know'st thou the land.
Lay of the imprisoned Huntsman.
Litany.
Longing.
Ode to Joy.
Organ-Grinder, The.
Peace.
Rose among the heather.
Secrets.
Thou art repose.
To Music.
Trout, The.
Trust in Spring.
Wanderer's Night-Song.
Wandering Miller, The
Whither.
Who is Sylvia?

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

ORGAN MUSIC

SUITABLE FOR PERFORMANCE AT CINEMAS, ETC.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| J. BENEDICT. | | |
| Variations on Arne's "Where the bee sucks" ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| DUDLEY BUCK. | | |
| At Evening ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| WALFORD DAVIES. | | |
| Solemn Melody ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| EDWARD ELGAR. | | |
| Contrasts (The Gavotte) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| PERCY E. FLETCHER. | | |
| Fountain Reverie ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Matinale ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| R. G. HAILING. | | |
| Chanson de Joie ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| KING HALL. | | |
| Canzone ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| ALFRED HOLLINS. | | |
| Allegretto Grazioso ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Barcarolle ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Berceuse ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Evening Rest ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| In Springtime ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Intermezzo in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Maytime (Gavotte) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Minuet ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Morning Song ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Spring Song ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| EDWARD J. HORSMAN. | | |
| The Curfew ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| BERNARD JOHNSON. | | |
| Pavane in A ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| S. KARG-ELERT. | | |
| Harmonies du Soir ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| EDWIN H. LEMARE. | | |
| Andantino in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Chanson d'Eté ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Elegy in G ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Intermezzo in B flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Madrigal ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Minuet Nuptiale ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Pastorale in E ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Reverie in E flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Romance in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| J. A. MEALE. | | |
| Chanson d'Espoir ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| J. RAFF. | | |
| Cavatina ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| SCHUBERT. | | |
| Ave Maria ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Serenade ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| BERTHOLD TOURS. | | |
| Allegretto Grazioso ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Menuetto ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| TSCHAIKOWSKY. | | |
| Chanson Triste ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Chant sans Paroles ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Andantino (Symphony No. 4) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ERIC WEBSTER. | | |
| Berceuse ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| H. DAVAN WETTON. | | |
| Andantino in D flat ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| H. A. WHEELDON. | | |
| Cantilene ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 6 |
| Canzona ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| W. WOLSTENHOLME. | | |
| Canzona ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 6 |
| Romanza and Allegretto in E flat ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES

FOR THE ORGAN

SET VI.

| No. | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | ADAGIO FROM SEXTETT (OP. 81) ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | BEETHOVEN |
| 2. | ALLEGRO GRANDIOSO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | HUGH BLAIR |
| 3. | LARGO IN E FLAT ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | E. BUNNETT |
| 4. | MODERATO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | GEORGE CALKIN |
| 5. | BERCEUSE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | CÉSAR CUI |
| 6. | ADAGIO IN D ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | OTTO DIENEL |
| 7. | POSTLUDE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN |
| 8. | IMPROMPTU IN A ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | A. M. GOODHART |
| 9. | WEDDING MARCH ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | A. GUILMANT |
| 10. | MARCH FROM "ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY" ... ... ... ... ... | HANDEL |
| 11. | LIEDER OHNE WORTE, No. 9 ... ... .. ... ... ... | F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY |
| 12. | ALLEGRO IN C ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | GUSTAV MERKEL |
| 13. | ANDANTE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | REISSIGER |
| 14. | POSTLUDE IN F ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | J. VARLEY ROBERTS |
| 15. | PRELUDE ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | B. LUARD-SELBY |
| 16. | PRELUDE IN A ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | HENRY SMART |
| 17. | ANDANTE CON MOTO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | CHARLES STEGGALL |
| 18. | ALLEGRETTO GRAZIOSO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | BERTHOLD TOURS |
| 19. | COMMUNION IN B FLAT ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | FERRIS TOZER |
| 20. | CON MOTO ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | JOHN E. WEST |

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

Cloth, Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

By Appointment to HM King of Spain

The Piano Chosen by the Great Masters

LOVERS OF MUSIC are specially invited to visit the Chappell Showrooms or the establishment of their nearest Chappell Dealer in order to appraise for themselves the wonderful Tonal Purity and Lightness of Touch which distinguishes the Chappell.

CHAPPELL

THE CHAPPELL PIANO COMPANY LIMITED
50, New Bond Street, London, W.1

THE FEBRUARY NUMBER

OF

"THE CHESTERIAN"

is devoted to

"INSPIRATION"

Introductory remarks by L. DUNTON GREEN, and opinions of

ARTHUR BLISS
ALFREDO CASELLA
PAUL DUKAS
EUGENE GOOSSENS
GUSTAV HOLST
HANS PFITZNER
ILDEBRANDO PIZZETTI
MAURICE RAVEL
ALBERT ROUSSEL
FRANZ SCHREKER

Price .... .... 9*d.* net, post free
Annual Subscription, 5*s.*

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1, Thursday, March 1, 1928.

BENEDICITE, OMNIA OPERA

SHORTENED FORM

1st double Chant

FULL (har.)

O all ye Works of the Lôrd - - - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :

O ye Angels of the Lord, Ô ye - - | Hea-vens | bless . ye the | Lord :

O ye Waters that be above the Firmament,
O all ye Powers of the Lôrd - - | bless . ye the | Lord :

Prâise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

TREBLES

O ye Sun and Moon, O ye Stars of Hêaven - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :

O ye Showers and Dew, O ye Winds of - | God - | bless . ye the | Lord :

MEN (unis.)

O ye Fire and Heat, O ye Winter and Sûmmer - - | bless . ye the | Lord :

FULL (har.)

Prâise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

MEN (unis.)

O ye Dews and Frosts, O ye Frost and Côld - - | bless . ye the | Lord :

O ye Ice and Snow, O ye Nights and - - | Days - | bless . ye the | Lord :

TREBLES

O ye Light and Darkness, O ye Lightnings and Clouds - | bless . ye the | Lord :

FULL (har.)

Prâise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

2nd double Chant

FULL (har.)

O let the Eârth - - - - - - - - - | bless the | Lord :

yea let it prâise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

O ye Mountains and Hills, - - - - - -
O all ye Green Things upon the Earth, - - -
O ye Wells - - - - - - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :

Prâise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

MEN (unis.)

O ye Seas and Floods, O ye Whales, and all that move in the Wâters - | bless . ye the | Lord :

O all ye Fowls of the Air, O all ye Bêasts and | Cattle | bless . ye the | Lord :

TREBLES

O ye Children of Men, O let Îsrael - - - - | bless the | Lord :

FULL (har.)

Prâise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

MEN (unis.)

O ye Priests of the Lord, O ye Servants of the Lôrd - | bless . ye the | Lord :

TREBLES

p O ye Spirits and Souls of the Righteous, O ye holy and humble Mên of | heart - | bless . ye the | Lord :

MEN (unis.)

f O Ananias, Azarias, and Mîsael - - - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :

FULL (har.)

Prâise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

1st Chant

FULL (har.)

Glory be to the Fâther, - - - - - | and . to the | Son :

ând - - - - - - - - | to the | Ho - ly | Ghost ;

As it was in the beginning, is nôw, and - - | ev - er | shall be :

wôrld without - - - - - | end. | A - - | men.

SET 4

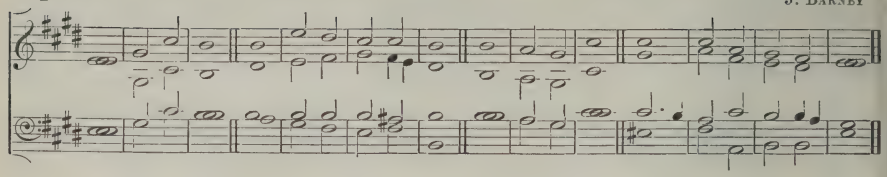
1 J. Barney



2 J. Troutbeck

SET 5

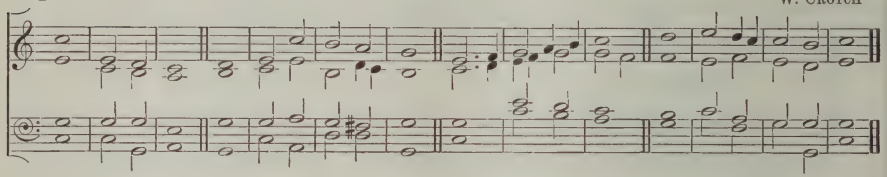
1 W. Crotch



2 T. A. Walmisley

SET 6

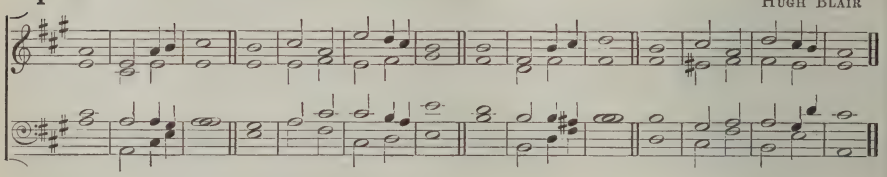
1 Hugh Blair



2 W. H. Havergal

No. 1153 NOVELLO'S OCTAVO ANTHEMS Price (4d.)

The Strife is o'er

COMPOSED BY

ERIC H. THIMAN

917. Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins 4d.
424. Ditto ... ... R. Dunstan 4d.
805. Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann 6d.
947. All go unto one place ... Wesley 4d.
247. All nations whom B. Luard-Selby 6d.
113. All they that trust ...F. Hiller 1s.
1033. All Thy works ... T. Adams 4d.
475. Ditto ... ... J. Barnby 6d.
503. Ditto ... ... G. H. Ely 6d.
30. Ditto ... ... E. H. Thorne 4d.
719. All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
9. All ye who weep ... C. Gounod 4d.
592. Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams 4d.
729. Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris 4d.
548. Almighty Father ... B. Steane 4d.
937. Almighty God, give us ... Wesley 4d.
261. And all the people saw J. Stainer 8d.
699. And God shall wipe away all tears F. R. Greenish 4d.
1055. And in that day F. R. Rickman 4d.
229. And it was the third hour Elvey 6d.
485. And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer 8d.
658. And Jesus entered H. W. Davies 6d.
732. And suddenly there came H. J. Wood 4d.
1089. And the earth was reaped E. S. Craston 6d.
675. And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson 4d.
357. And the wall of the city O. A. King 4d.
778. And there shall be signs Naylor 6d.
1130. And we beheld His Glory G. Rathbone 4d.
684. Angel said, The (S.&B.) A. H. Brown 3d.
861. Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky 3d.
642. Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall 4d.
511. Angels from the realms Cowen 4d.
719. Ditto ... ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
751. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
1017. Arise, shine ... T. Adams 4d.
1093. Ditto ... H. A. Chambers 4d.
1112. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
923. Ditto ... ... G. F. Cobb 6d.
723. Arm of the Lord, The ... Haydn 6d.
228. Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
948 As Christ was raised Wareing 4d.
311. As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp 4d
333. As it began to dawn Ch. Vincent 4d.
498. As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow 4d.
643. As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer 6d.
24. As the hart pants (S.S.T.B.) Gounod 4d.
147. Ascribe unto the Lord Travers 8d.
109. Ditto ... ... S. S. Wesley 6d.
399. At the Lamb's High Feast E. V. Hall 4d.
456. At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing 6d.
957. Author of Life Divine Button 3d.
1091. Ditto H. A. Chambers 4d.
660. Awake, awake ... John E. West 4d.
700. Awake, awake, put on thy strength F. R. Greenish 6d.
56. Ditto ... ... J. Stainer 8d.
759. Ditto ... T. W. Stephenson 6d.
149. Ditto ... ... M. Wise 6d.
955. Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester 4d.
199 Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer 8d.
150. Awake up, my glory M. Wise 4d.

744. Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster 4d.
378. Ditto ... ... B. Steane 4d.
812. Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart 6d.
989. Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins 4d.
143. Be merciful... ... H. Purcell 8d.
857. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
597. Be peace on earth... W. Crotch 4d.
567. Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley 4d.
583. Be ye all of one mind A.E. Godfrey 4d.
971. Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker 4d.
940. Before the heavens H. W. Parker 4d.
551. Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley 6d.
598. Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor 6d.
865. Behold, God is my John E. West 4d.
636. Ditto ... ... F. C. Woods 6d.

1035. Behold, how good J. Battishill 4d.
349. Ditto (Male) ... Caldicott 4d.
349.* Ditto (S.A.T.B.) Caldicott 4d.
419. Ditto ... ... H. Clarke 6d.
89. Behold, I bring you J. Barnby 4d.
348. Ditto ... ... J. M. Crament 6d.
1113. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
296. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
810. Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins 3d.
713. Behold, I have given you C. Harris 4d.
554. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts 6d.
587. Behold My servant J. F. Bridge 4d.
65. Behold now, praise J. B. Calkin 4d.
631. Ditto ... ... F. Iliffe 4d.
912. Ditto ... ... John E. West 4d.
315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird 6d.
524. Behold, the days come Woodward 6d.
1045. Behold the Heaven A. R. Gaul 4d.
652. Behold the Name ... ... P. Pitt 6d.
501. Behold two blind men ... Steiner 4d.
938. Bethlehem ... ... Ch. Gounod 2d.
378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston 6d.
796. Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing 4d.
855. Bless the Lord thy God Roberts 4d.
450. Bless thou the Lord C. Bayley 6d.
374. Ditto ... ... O. A. King 4d.
693. Blessed are the dead B. L. Selby 3d.
667. Blessed are the pure A. D. Arnott 4d.
390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson 4d.
616. Ditto ... ... H. Blair 4d.
77. Ditto ... ... W. H. Monk 4d.
182. Ditto ... ... A. Page 4d.
15. Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley 3d.
756. Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby 4d.
570. Ditto ... ... J. F. Bridge 8d.
895. Ditto ... ... O. Gibbons 3d.
876. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
183. Ditto ... ... C. S. Heap 8d.
770. Ditto ... ... ... M. Lee 4d.
331. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 6d.
1006. Blessed be the Name Macfarren 4d.
1146. Ditto ... ... W. Boyce 4d.
724. Blessed be Thou E. C. Bairstow 6d.
1120. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
838. Ditto ... ... J. Kent 6d.
400. Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher 6d.
284. Blessed is He F. E. Gladstone 3d.
262. Ditto ... ... C. H. Lloyd 1s.
292. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie 6d.
206. Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfeld 4d.
64. Ditto ... ... John Goss 6d.
769. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 4d.
1004. Blessed is the soul (S.B.) Macfarren 4d.
286. Blessed Jesu, Fount of mercy A. Dvorák 8d.
943. Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
5. Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours 6d.
950. Ditto ... ... A. H. Brewer 4d.
472. Blessing of the Lord, The J. F. Bridge 3d.
194. Ditto A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
652. Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe 4d.
97. Blow ye the trumpet H. Leslie 4d.
961. Born to-day... J. P. Sweelinck 4d.
118. Bow Thine ear ... ... W. Bird 4d.
939 Bread of Heaven... E. German 4d.
1082. Bread of the world H. A. Chambers 4d.
1024. Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock 4d.
774. Ditto ... ... H. E. Button 4d.
415. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
798. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews 4d.
92. Ditto ... ... R. Prentice 8d.
491. Ditto ... ... B. Steane 4d.
323. Brightest and best... E. V. Hall 6d.
340. Bring unto the Lord Gladstone 4d.
98. Brother, thou art gone J. Goss 6d.
279. By Babylon's wave C. Gounod 3d.
197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson 6d.
121. By the waters of Babylon Boyce 6d.
644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
511. Ditto ... ... H. Clarke 6d.
853. Ditto ... ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
1074. Ditto ... ... Palestrina 4d.
1076. Ditto ... ... H. Goetz 4d.
742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorák 6d.

116. Call to remembrance J. Battishill 6d
952. Ditto ... ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
680. Calm on the list'ning ear Parker 4d.
841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams 3d.
975. Ditto ... ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
953. Charge to keep I have, A H. J. King 4d.
497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor 4d
454. Christ is risen ... G. B. J. Aitken 4d
368. Ditto ... ... J. M. Crament 4d
666. Ditto ... ... W. Jordan 6d
533. Ditto ... ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
307. Christ our Passover E. V. Hall 4d.
783. Christ the Lord is risen again ,, 6d.
370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day ,, 4d.
488. Christians, awake... ...J. Barnby 4d.
648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 6d.
983. Christmas Day ... ... G. Holst 6d.
445. Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley 4d.
989. Come and let us ... A. Hollins 4d.
52. Come, and let us return J. Goss 4d.
95. Ditto ... ... W. Jackson 4d.
1106. Come, come, help, O God W. Byrd 4d.
805. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann 6d.
283. Come, Holy Ghost G. Elvey 6d.
201. Ditto ... ... J. L. Hatton 6d.
829. Ditto ... ... Palestrina 3d.
1150. Ditto ... ... E. H. Thiman 4d.
717. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 3d.
881. Come, let us join our E. V. Hall 4d
293. Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin 6d
314. Come now, and let us H. W. Wareing 6d
1. Come unto Him ... C. Gounod 3d.
946. Ditto ... ... H. Leslie 4d.
256. Come unto Me H. R. Couldrey 4d.
635. Ditto ... ... G. J. Elvey 4d.
103. Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer 4d.
922. Come with high and holy H. Blair 4d.
1005. Come ye, and let us Macfarren 4d.
748. Come, ye children and J. Booth 4d.
924. Ditto ... ... H. J. King 4d.
334. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall 4d.
921. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain E. V. Hall 4d.
1019. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button 4d.
951. Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer 3d.
931. Come, ye thankful ...B. Steane 4d.
914. Comes at times H. H. Woodward 4d.
1008. Ditto ... ... H. Oakeley 3d.
994. Coronation Offertorium E. Elgar 3d.
622. Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry 4d.
688. Crown Him the B. Luard-Selby 3d.
884. Crown of grace for man, A Brahms 6d.

356. Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King 4d.
449. Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge 4d.
1131. Day draws on with golden light, The ... ...Geoffrey Shaw 4d.
421. Day is past, The ... J. C. Marks 4d.
461. Day of Resurrection, The E.V. Hall 4d.
213. Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart 8d.
682. Day of wrath ... J. Stainer 3d.
552. Day Thou gavest, The Woodward 4d.
252. Death and life ... W. Parratt 4d.
968. Death is swallowed up in victory A. Hollins 4d.
849. Deliver us, O Lord ...Gibbons 4d
90. Distracted with care ... Haydn 6d.
887. Do not I fill heaven ... H. Blair 4d
737. Doth not wisdom cry D. S. Smith 4d
703. Drop down, ye heavens J. Stainer 6d

239. Earth is the Lord's, The T. T. Trimnell 6d.
1100. Ditto ... ... A. Lowe 4d.
687. Ditto ... ... J. Hopkins 6d.
277. Enter not into Judgment Clarke 3d.
996. Eternal God, The John E. West 4d
362. Eternal source ... F. Brandeis 3d.
1008. Evening and Morning Oakeley 3d.
1127. Evening Hymn H. B. Gardiner 4d.
1144. Every good gift ... G. Rathbone 4d.
854. Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot Button 4d
1135. Exaltabo Te, Domine Palestrina 4d

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MADE IN ENGLAND

THE STRIFE IS O'ER

ANTHEM FOR EASTER

WORDS TRANSLATED FROM THE LATIN BY FRANCIS POTT*

(VERSE 1, LINE 2 ALTERED)

MUSIC BY

ERIC H. THIMAN

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A

Copyright, 1928, by Novello and Company, Limited

* By permission

THE STRIFE IS O'ER

ff
song . . . of . . tri - umph has . . . be - gun. Al - - -
song . . . of . . tri - umph has be - gun. . . Al - - -
song . . . of . . tri - umph has . . . be - gun. Al - - -
song . . . of . . tri - umph has be - gun. . . Al - - -
- - - le - lu - ia!
- - - le - lu - ia!
- - - le - lu - ia! The
- - - le - lu - ia! The
f powers of death have done their worst, But powers of death have done their worst, But

f
Let Let
f
Christ . . their le - - gions hath dis - - persed; Let
f
Christ . . their le - - gions hath dis - - persed; . . Let
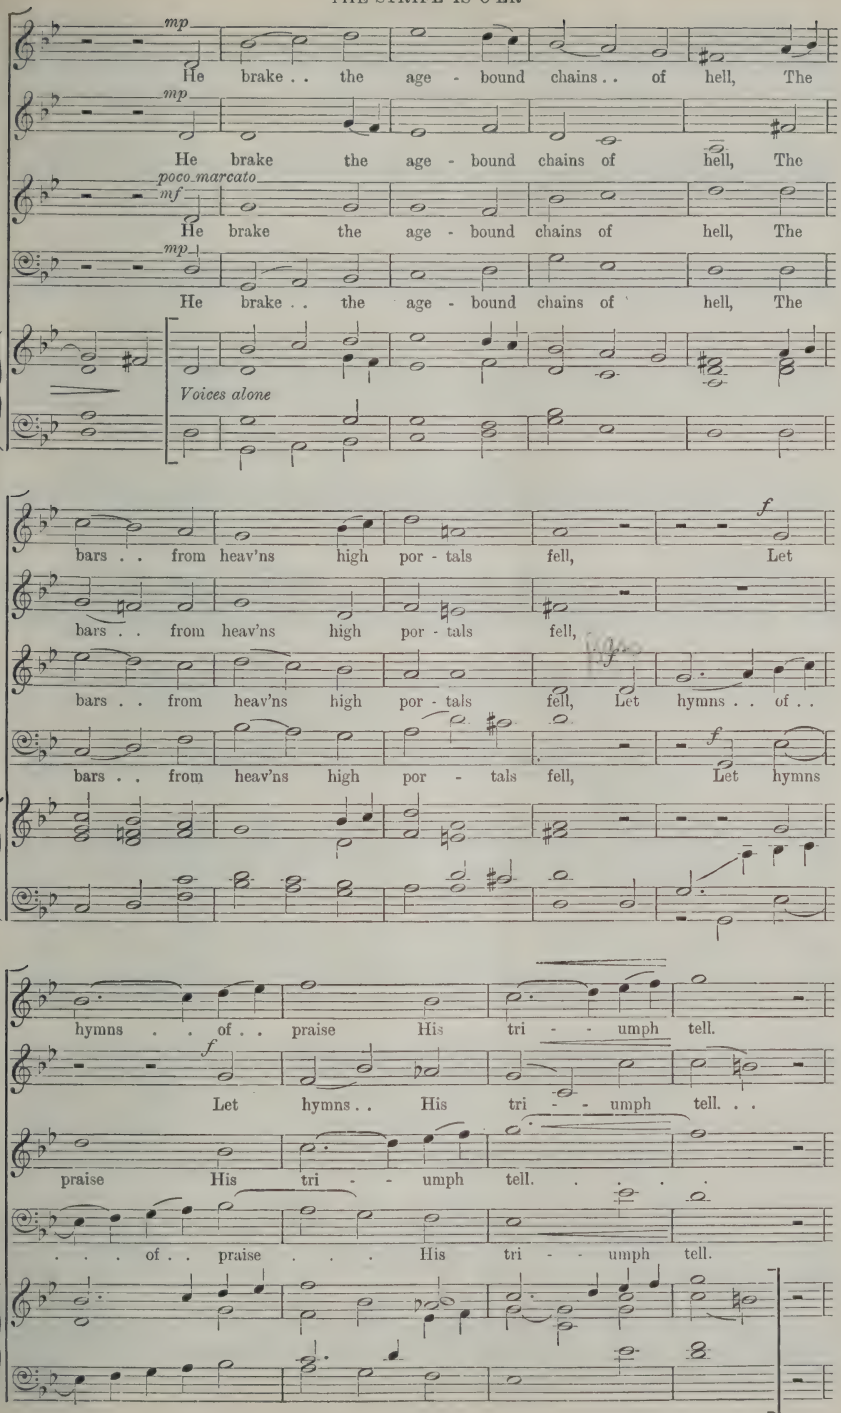
ff shouts . . of . . ho - ly joy . . . out - burst. Al - - -
ff
shouts of ho - ly . . joy . . . out - burst. Al - - -
ff
shouts . . of ho - ly joy out - - burst. Al - - -
ff
shouts of ho - ly joy out - burst. Al - - -
ff
- - - le - lu - ia!
- - - le - lu - ia!
- - - le - lu - ia!
- - - le - lu - ia!
mf
dim.
senza Ped.



mp
He brake . . the age - bound chains . . of hell, The
mp
He brake the age - bound chains of hell, The poco marcato
mf
He brake the age - bound chains of hell, The
mp
He brake . . the age - bound chains of hell, The Voices alone bars . . from heav'ns high por - tals fell, Let
f bars . . from heav'ns high por - tals fell, bars . . from heav'ns high por - tals fell, Let hymns . . of . .
bars . . from heav'ns high por - tals fell, Let hymns
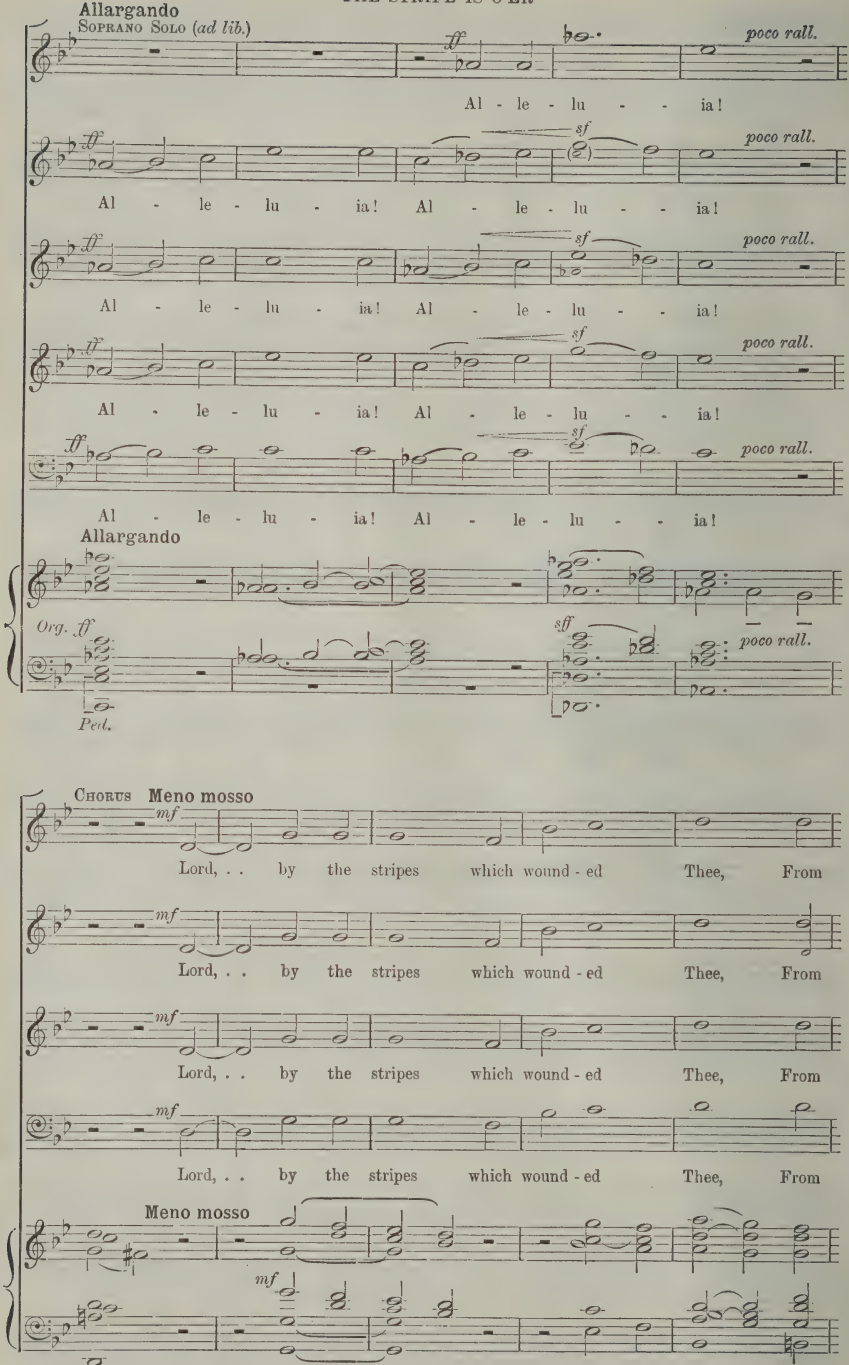
f hymns . . of . . praise His tri - - umph tell.
f
Let hymns . . His tri - - umph tell. . .
praise His tri - - umph tell. . . .
. . . of . . praise . . . His tri - - umph tell.



Allargando
Soprano Solo (ad lib.)
ff
poco rall.
Al - le - lu - - ia!
sf
Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - - ia!
Allargando
Org. ff
Ped.
sff
Chorus
Meno mosso
mf
Lord, . . by the stripes which wound - ed Thee, From death's dread sting . . Thy ser - vants free, That we . . . may death's dread sting . . Thy ser - vants free, That we . . . may death's dread sting . . Thy ser - vants free, That we . . . may death's dread sting . . Thy ser - vants free, That we . . . may live, and sing . . . to . . Thee Al - - - - - le - live, and sing . . . to . . Thee Al - - - - - le - live, and sing . . . to . . Thee Al - - - - - le - live, and sing . . . to . . Thee Al - - - - - le - lu - - - - ia!

lu - - - - ia!
lu - - - - ia!
lu - - - - ia!
Broader to the end
Largo molto
rall.
A - - - - - - men.
Largo

1st double Chant

FULL (har.)

O all ye Works of the Lórd - - - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :
O ye Angels of the Lord, Ó ye - - | Hea-vens | bless . ye the | Lord :
O ye Waters that be above the Firmament,
O all ye Powers of the Lórd - - | bless . ye the | Lord :
Práise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

TREBLES
O ye Sun and Moon, O ye Stars of Héaven - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :
O ye Showers and Dew, O ye Wínds of - | God - | bless . ye the | Lord :
MEN (unis.)
O ye Fire and Heat, O ye Winter and Súmmer - - | bless . ye the | Lord :
FULL (har.)
Práise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

MEN (unis.)
O ye Dews and Frosts, O ye Frost and Cóld - - | bless . ye the | Lord :
O ye Ice and Snow, O ye Nights and - - | Days - | bless . ye the | Lord :
TREBLES
O ye Light and Darkness, O ye Lightnings and Clóuds - | bless . ye the | Lord :
FULL (har.)
Práise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

2nd double Chant

FULL (har.)

O let the Earth - - - - - - - - - | bless the | Lord :
yea let it práise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.
O ye Mountains and Hills, - - - - - -
O all ye Green Things upon the Earth, - - -
O ye Wélls - - - - - - - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :
Práise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

MEN (unis.)
O ye Seas and Floods, O ye Whales, and all that move in the Wáters - | bless . ye the | Lord :
O all ye Fowls of the Air, O all ye Béasts and | Cattle | bless . ye the | Lord :
TREBLES
O ye Children of Men, O let Ísrael - - - - | bless the | Lord :
FULL (har.)
Práise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

MEN (unis.)
O ye Priests of the Lord, O ye Servants of the Lórd - | bless . ye the | Lord :
TREBLES
p O ye Spirits and Souls of the Righteous, O ye holy and humble Mén of | heart - | bless . ye the | Lord :
MEN (unis.)
f O Ananias, Azarias, and Mísael - - - - - | bless . ye the | Lord :
FULL (har.)
Práise Him and | magni-fy | Him for | ever.

1st Chant

FULL (har.)

Glory be to the Fáther, - - - - - | and . to the | Son :
ánd - - - - - - - | to the | Ho - ly | Ghost ;
As it was in the beginning, is nów, and - - | ev - er | shall be :
wórld without - - - - - | end. | A - - | men.

Benedicite, omnia Opera

SHORTENED FORM, FOR USE WITH CHANTS

ARRANGED BY

HUGH BLAIR

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

1 SET 1 JOHN GOSS

2 J. TURLE

1 SET 2 R. WOODWARD

2 R. COOKE

1 SET 3 HUGH BLAIR

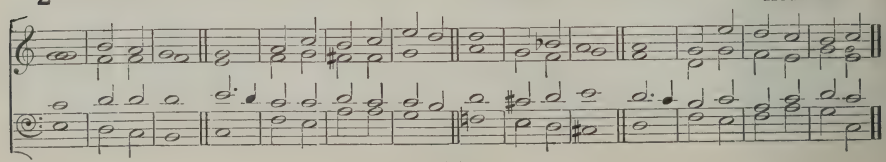
2 HUGH BLAIR



MADE IN ENGLAND

No. 1129. NOVELLO'S OCTAVO ANTHEMS. Price (4*d.*).

for a closer walk with God

COMPOSED BY

H. A. CHAMBERS.

917. Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins 4d.
424. Ditto ... ... R. Dunstan 4d.
805. Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann 6d.
927. All go unto one place ... Wesley 4d.
247. All nations whom B. Luard-Selby 6d.
113. All they that trust ...F. Hiller 1s.
1033. All Thy works ... T. Adams 4d.
475. Ditto ... ... J. Barnby 6d.
503. Ditto ... ... G. H. Ely 6d.
30. Ditto ... ... E. H. Thorne 4d.
719. All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
9. All ye who weep ... C. Gounod 4d.
592. Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams 4d.
729. Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris 4d.
548. Almighty Father ... B. Steane 4d.
937. Almighty God, give us ... Wesley 4d.
261. And all the people saw J. Stainer 8d.
699. And God shall wipe away all tears F. R. Greenish 4d.
1055. And in that day F. R. Rickman 4d.
229. And it was the third hour Elvey 6d.
485. And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer 8d.
658. And Jesus entered H. W. Davies 6d.
732. And suddenly there came H. J. Wood 4d.
1089. And the earth was reaped E. S. Craston 6d.
675. And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson 4d.
357. And the wall of the city O. A. King 4d.
778. And there shall be signs Naylor 6d.
1130. And we beheld His Glory G. Rathbone 4d.
684. Angel said, The (s.&b.) A. H. Brown 3d.
861. Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky 3d.
642. Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall 4d.
611. Angels from the realms Cowen 4d.
749. Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
751. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
1017. Arise, shine ... T. Adams 4d.
1093. Ditto ... H. A. Chambers 4d.
1112. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
923. Ditto ... ... G. F. Cobb 6d.
723. Arm of the Lord, The ... Haydn 6d.
228. Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
948 As Christ was raised Wareing 4d.
311. As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp 4d.
333. As it began to dawn Ch. Vincent 4d.
498. As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow 4d.
643. As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer 6d.
24. As the hart pants (s.s.t.b.) Gounod 4d.
147. Ascribe unto the Lord Travers 8d.
109. Ditto ... ... S. S. Wesley 6d.
399. At the Lamb's High Feast E. V. Hall 4d.
456. At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing 6d.
957. Author of Life Divine Button 3d.
1091. Ditto H. A. Chambers 4d.
660. Awake, awake ... John E. West 4d.
700. Awake, awake, put on thy strength F. R. Greenish 6d.
56. Ditto ... ... J. Stainer 8d.
759. Ditto ... T. W. Stephenson 6d.
149. Ditto ... ... M. Wise 6d.
955. Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester 4d.
199 Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer 8d.
150. Awake up, my glory M. Wise 4d.

744. Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster 4d.
578. Ditto ... ... B. Steane 4d.
212. Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart 6d.
989. Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins 4d.
143. Be merciful... ... H. Purcell 8d.
257. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
597. Be peace on earth... W. Crotch 4d.
567. Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley 4d.
583. Be ye all of one mind A. E. Godfrey 4d.
471. Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker 4d.
440. Before the heavens H. W. Parker 4d.
851. Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley 6d.
598. Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor 6d.
865. Behold. God is my John E. West 4d.
636. Ditto ... ... F. C. Woods 6d.

1035. Behold, how good J. Battishill 4d.
349. Ditto (Male) ... Caldicott 4d.
349.* Ditto (s.a.t.b.) Caldicott 4d.
419. Ditto ... ... H. Clarke 6d.
89. Behold, I bring you J. Barnby 4d.
348. Ditto ... ... J. M. Crament 6d.
1113. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 8d.
296. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
810. Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins 3d.
713. Behold, I have given you C. Harris 4d.
554. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts 6d.
587. Behold My servant J. F. Bridge 4d.
65. Behold now, praise J. B. Calkin 4d.
631. Ditto ... ... ... F. Iliffe 4d.
912. Ditto ... ... John E. West 4d.
315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird 6d.
524. Behold, the days come Woodward 6d.
1045. Behold the Heaven A. R. Gaul 4d.
652. Behold the Name... ... P. Pitt 6d.
501. Behold, two blind men J. Stainer 4d.
938. Bethlehem ... ... Ch. Gounod 2d.
378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston 6d.
796. Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing 4d.
855. Bless the Lord thy God ... Roberts 4d.
450. Bless thou the Lord C. Bayley 6d.
374. Ditto ... O. A. King 4d.
693. Blessed are the dead B. L. Selby 3d.
667. Blessed are the pure A. D. Arnott 4d.
390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson 4d.
616. Ditto ... ... ... H. Blair 4d.
77. Ditto ... ... W. H. Monk 4d.
182. Ditto ... ... ... A. Page 4d.
15. Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley 3d.
756. Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby 4d.
570. Ditto ... ... J. F. Bridge 8d.
895. Ditto ... ... O. Gibbons 3d.
876. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
183. Ditto ... ... C. S. Heap 8d.
770. Ditto ... ... ... M. Lee 4d.
331. Ditto ... ... C. Lee Williams 6d.
1006. Blessed be the Name Macfarren 4d.
1146. Ditto ... ... W. Boyce 4d.
724. Blessed be Thou E. C. Bairstow 6d.
1120. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
838. Ditto ... ... ... J. Kent 6d.
400. Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher 6d.
284. Blessed is He F. E. Gladstone 3d.
262. Ditto ... ... C. H. Lloyd 1s.
292. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie 6d.
206. Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfeld 4d.
64. Ditto ... ... John Goss 4d.
760. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 4d.
1004. Blessed is the soul (s.b.) Macfarren 4d.
286. Blessed Jesu, Fount of mercy A. Dvorák 8d.
943. Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
5. Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours 6d.
950. Ditto ... ... A. H. Brewer 4d.
472. Blessing of the Lord, The J. F. Bridge 3d.
194. Ditto A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
652. Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe 4d.
97. Blow ye the trumpet H. Leslie 4d.
961. Born to-day... J. P. Sweelinck 4d.
118. Bow Thine ear ... ... W. Bird 4d.
939 Bread of Heaven ... E. German 4d.
1082. Bread of the world H. A. Chambers 4d.
1024. Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock 4d.
774. Ditto ... ... H. E. Button 4d.
415. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
798. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews 4d.
92. Ditto ... ... R. Prentice 8d.
491. Ditto ... ... B. Steane 4d.
323. Brightest and best... E. V. Hall 6d.
340. Bring unto the Lord Gladstone 4d.
98. Brother, thou art gone J. Goss 6d.
279. By Babylon's wave C. Gounod 3d.
197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson 6d.
121. By the waters of Babylon Boyce 6d.
644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
511. Ditto ... ... H. Clarke 6d.
853. Ditto ... ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
1074. Ditto ... ... Palestrina 4d.
1076. Ditto ... ... H. Goetz 4d.
742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorák 6d.

116. Call to remembrance J. Battishill 8d
952. Ditto ... ... J. V. Roberts 4d
680. Calm on the list'ning ear Parker 4d
841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams 3d
975. Ditto ... ... S. S. Wesley 4d
953. Charge to keep I have, A H. J. King 4d
497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor 4d
454. Christ is risen ... G. B. J. Aitken 4d
368. Ditto ... ... J. M. Crament 4d.
666. Ditto ... ... W. Jordan 6d.
533. Ditto ... ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
307. Christ our Passover E. V. Hall 4d.
783. Christ the Lord is risen again ,, 6d.
370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day ,, 4d.
488. Christians, awake... ...J. Barnby 4d
648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 6d
983. Christmas Day ... ... G. Holst 6d.
445. Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley 4d
989. Come and let us ... A. Hollins 4d
52. Come, and let us return J. Goss 4d
95. Ditto ... ... W. Jackson 4d.
1106. Come, come, help, O God W. Byrd 4d.
805. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann 6d.
283. Come, Holy Ghost G. Elvey 6d.
201. Ditto ... ... J. L. Hatton 6d.
829. Ditto ... ... Palestrina 3d.
1150. Ditto ... ... E. H. Thiman 4d
717. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 3d.
881. Come, let us join our E. V. Hall 4d.
293. Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin 6d.
314. Come now, and let us H. W. Wareing 6d.
1. Come unto Him ... C. Gounod 3d.
946. Ditto ... ... H. Leslie 4d.
256. Come unto Me H. R. Couldrey 4d.
635. Ditto ... ... G. J. Elvey 4d.
103. Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer 4d.
922. Come with high and holy H. Blair 4d.
1005. Come ye, and let us Macfarren 4d.
748. Come, ye children and J. Booth 4d.
924. Ditto ... ... H. J. King 4d.
334. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall 4d.
921. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain E. V. Hall 4d.
1019. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button 4d.
951. Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer 3d
931. Come, ye thankful ...B. Steane 4d.
914. Comes at times H. H. Woodward 4d.
1008. Ditto ... ... H. Oakeley 3d.
994. Coronation Offertorium E. Elgar 3d.
622. Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry 4d.
688. Crown Him the B. Luard-Selby 3d
884. Crown of grace for man, A Brahms 6d

356. Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King 4d.
449. Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge 4d
1131. Day draws on with golden light, The ... ... Geoffrey Shaw 4d
421. Day is past, The ... J. C. Marks 4d
461. Day of Resurrection, The E. V. Hall 4d.
213. Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart 8d.
682. Day of wrath ... J. Stainer 3d.
552. Day Thou gavest, The Woodward 4d.
252. Death and life ... W. Parratt 4d.
968. Death is swallowed up in victory A. Hollins 4d.
849. Deliver us, O Lord ... Gibbons 4d
90. Distracted with care ... Haydn 6d.
887. Do not I fill heaven ... H. Blair 4d.
737. Doth not wisdom cry D. S. Smith 4d.
703. Drop down, ye heavens J. Stainer 6d.

239. Earth is the Lord's, The T. T. Trimnell 6d.
1100. Ditto ... ... A. Lowe 4d.
687. Ditto ... ... J. Hopkins 6d.
277. Enter not into Judgment Clarke 3d.
906. Eternal God, The John E. West 4d.
362. Eternal source ... F. Brandeis 3d.
1008. Evening and Morning Oakeley 3d.
1127. Evening Hymn H. B. Gardiner 4d.
1144. Every good gift ... G. Rathbone 4d.
854. Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot Button 4d
1135. Exaltabo Te, Domine Palestrina 4d

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED. MADE IN ENGLAND

O FOR A CLOSER WALK WITH GOD

EASY HYMN-ANTHEM FOUNDED ON THE TUNE "CAITHNESS" (PSALMES, EDINBURGH, 1635)

WORDS BY W. COWPER

MUSIC BY

H. A. CHAMBERS

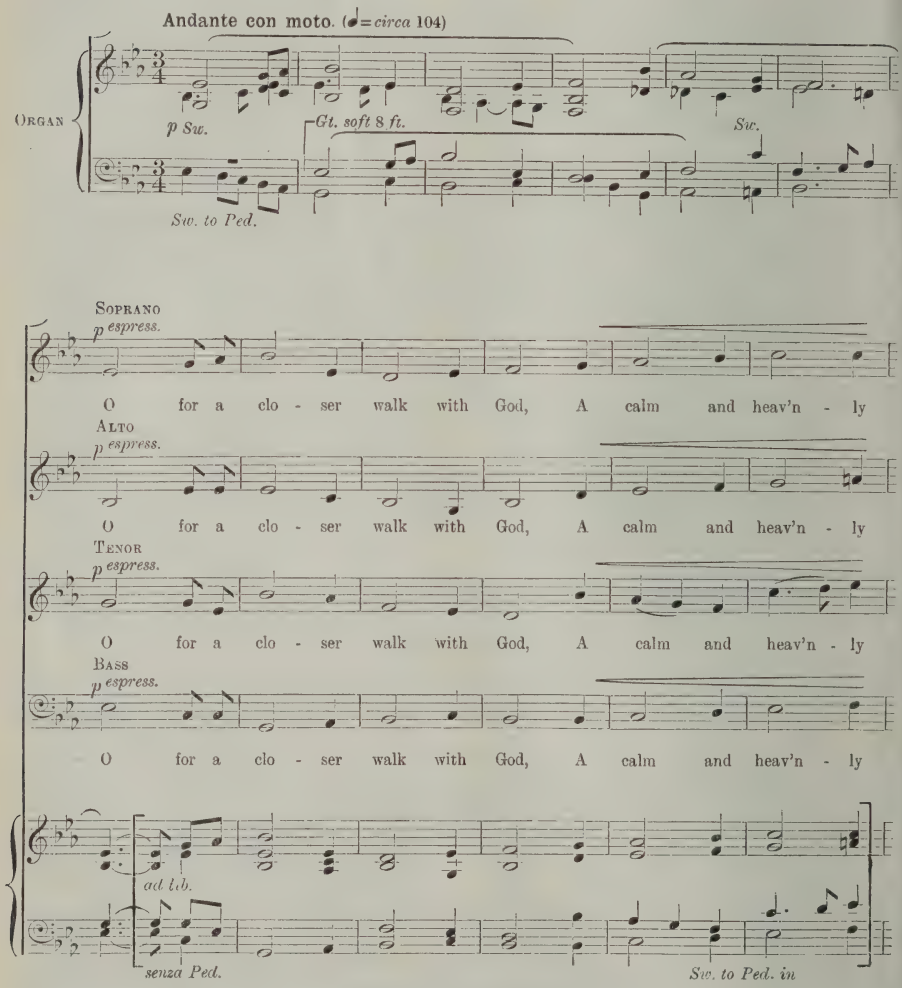
LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Andante con moto. (♩=circa 104)
ORGAN
p Sw.
Gt. soft 8 ft.
Sw.
Sw. to Ped.
SOPRANO
p espress.
O for a clo - ser walk with God, A calm and heav'n - ly
ALTO
p espress.
O for a clo - ser walk with God, A calm and heav'n - ly
TENOR
p espress.
O for a clo - ser walk with God, A calm and heav'n - ly
BASS
p espress.
O for a clo - ser walk with God, A calm and heav'n - ly
ad lib.
senza Ped.
Sw. to Ped. in

Copyright, 1923, by Novello and Company, Limited

O FOR A CLOSER WALK WITH GOD
cres.
frame; . . . A light to shine up - on the road That
cres.
frame; . . . A light to shine up - on . . the road That
cres.
frame; . . . A light to shine up - on the road That
cres.
frame; . . . A light . . to shine up - on the road That
Sw. Oboe
Ch. or Gt.
Dulc.
Ped.
ad lib.
senza Ped.
dim.
leads me to the Lamb!
dim.
leads . . me to the Lamb!
dim.
leads me to the Lamb!
dim.
leads me . . to the Lamb!
mf Gt.
Sw. coupd.
Ped. Gt. coupd.
* Soprano or Tenor Solo
poco rall.
mp
a tempo
What peace - ful hours . . I p Sw.
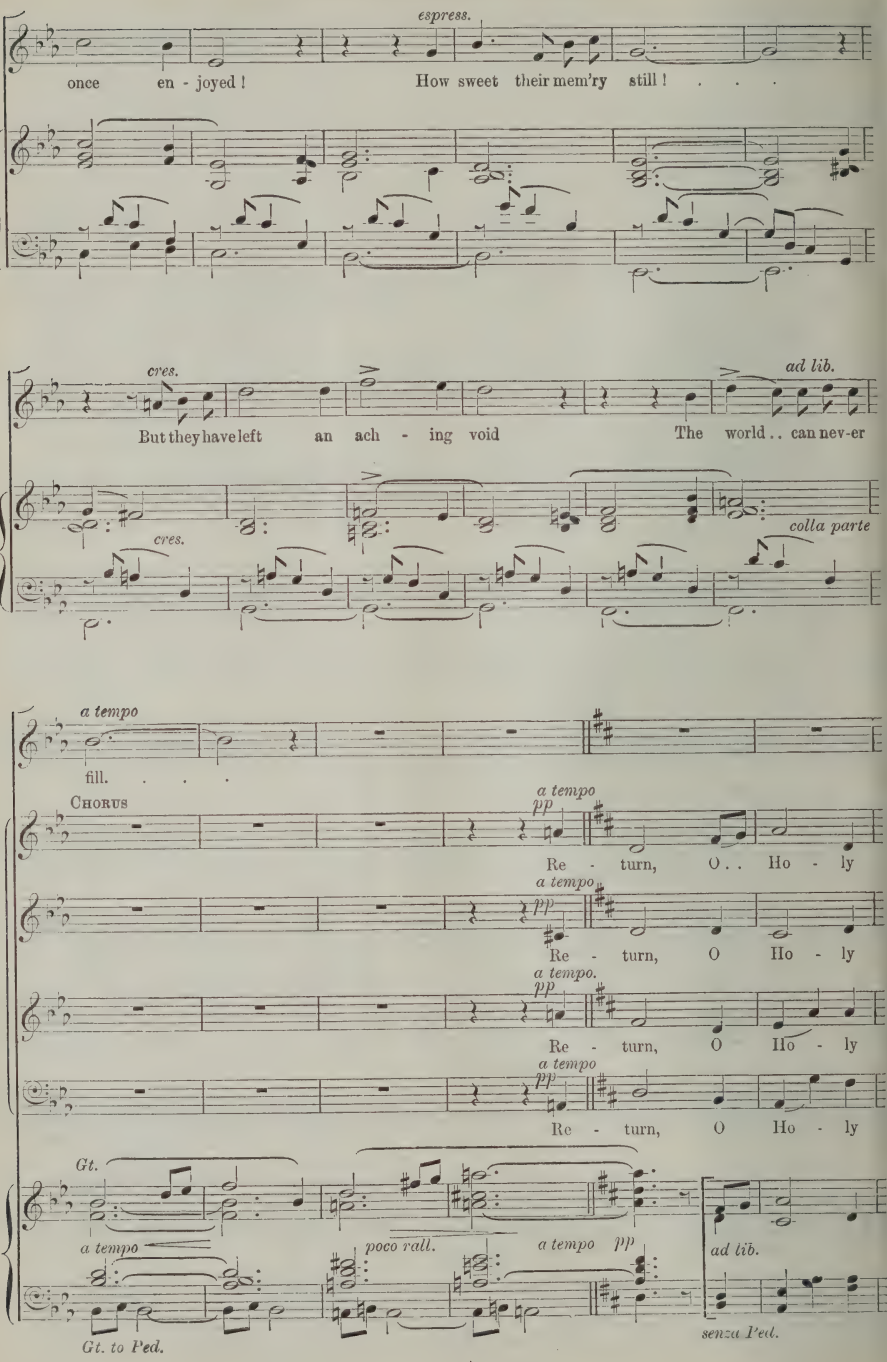
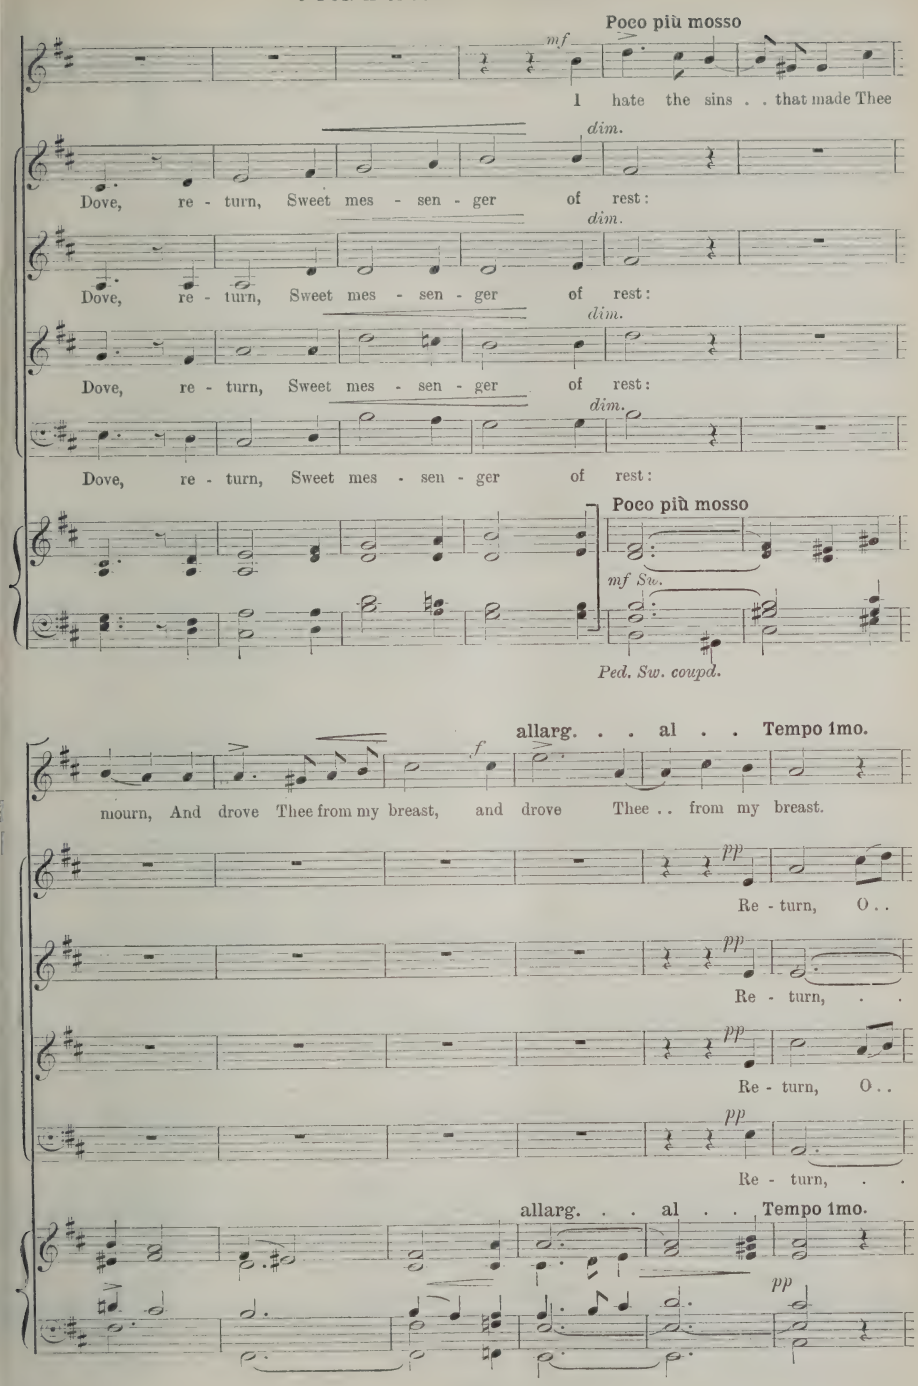
poco rall.
a tempo
Gt. soft
8 ft.
Sw. to Ped.

* If desired the Solo part can be sung by all the Sopranos, the Chorus below being sung as a Quartet.



espress.
once en - joyed! How sweet their mem'ry still! . . .
cres.
ad lib.
But they have left an ach - ing void The world . . can nev-er
cres.
colla parte
a tempo
fill. . . .
Chorus
a tempo
pp
Re - turn, O . . Ho - ly
a tempo
pp
Re - turn, O Ho - ly
a tempo.
pp
Re - turn, O Ho - ly
a tempo
pp
Re - turn, O Ho - ly
Gt.
a tempo
poco rall.
a tempo pp
ad lib.
Gt. to Ped.
senza Ped.



Poco più mosso
mf
I hate the sins . . that made Thee
dim.
Dove, re - turn, Sweet mes - sen - ger of rest:
dim.
Dove, re - turn, Sweet mes - sen - ger of rest:
dim.
Dove, re - turn, Sweet mes - sen - ger of rest:
dim.
Dove, re - turn, Sweet mes - sen - ger of rest:
Poco più mosso
mf Sw.
Ped. Sw. coupd.
allarg. . . al . . Tempo 1mo.
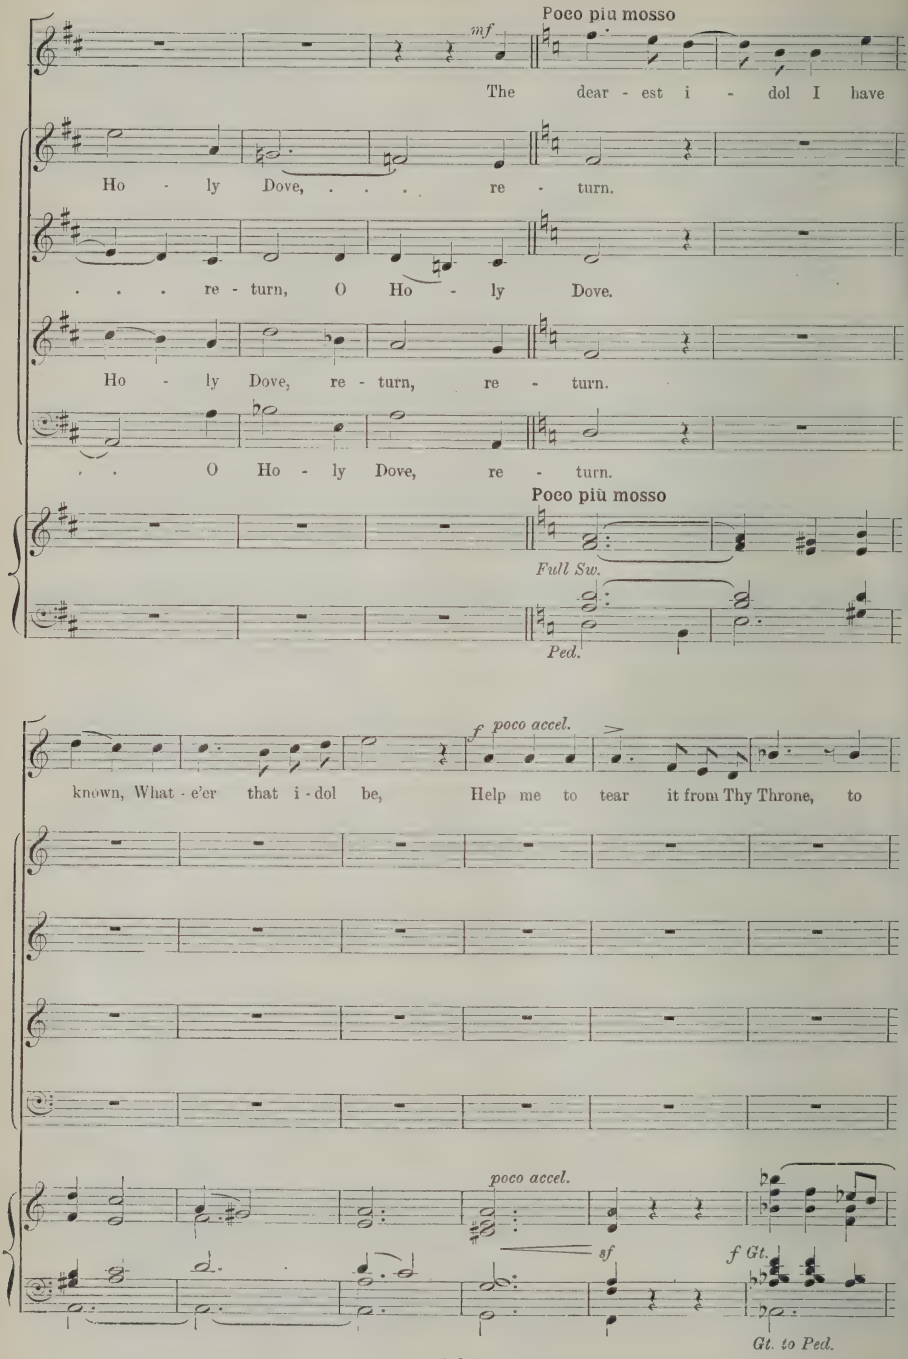
f mourn, And drove Thee from my breast, and drove Thee . . from my breast.
pp
Re - turn, O . .
pp
Re - turn, . .
pp
Re - turn, O . .
pp
Re - turn, . .
allarg. . . al . . Tempo 1mo.
pp



mf
Poco più mosso
The dear - est i - dol I have
Ho - ly Dove, . . . re - turn.
. . . re - turn, O Ho - ly Dove.
Ho - ly Dove, re - turn, re - turn.
. . O Ho - ly Dove, re - turn.
Poco più mosso
Full Sw.
Ped.
f poco accel.
known, What - e'er that i - dol be, Help me to tear it from Thy Throne, to poco accel.
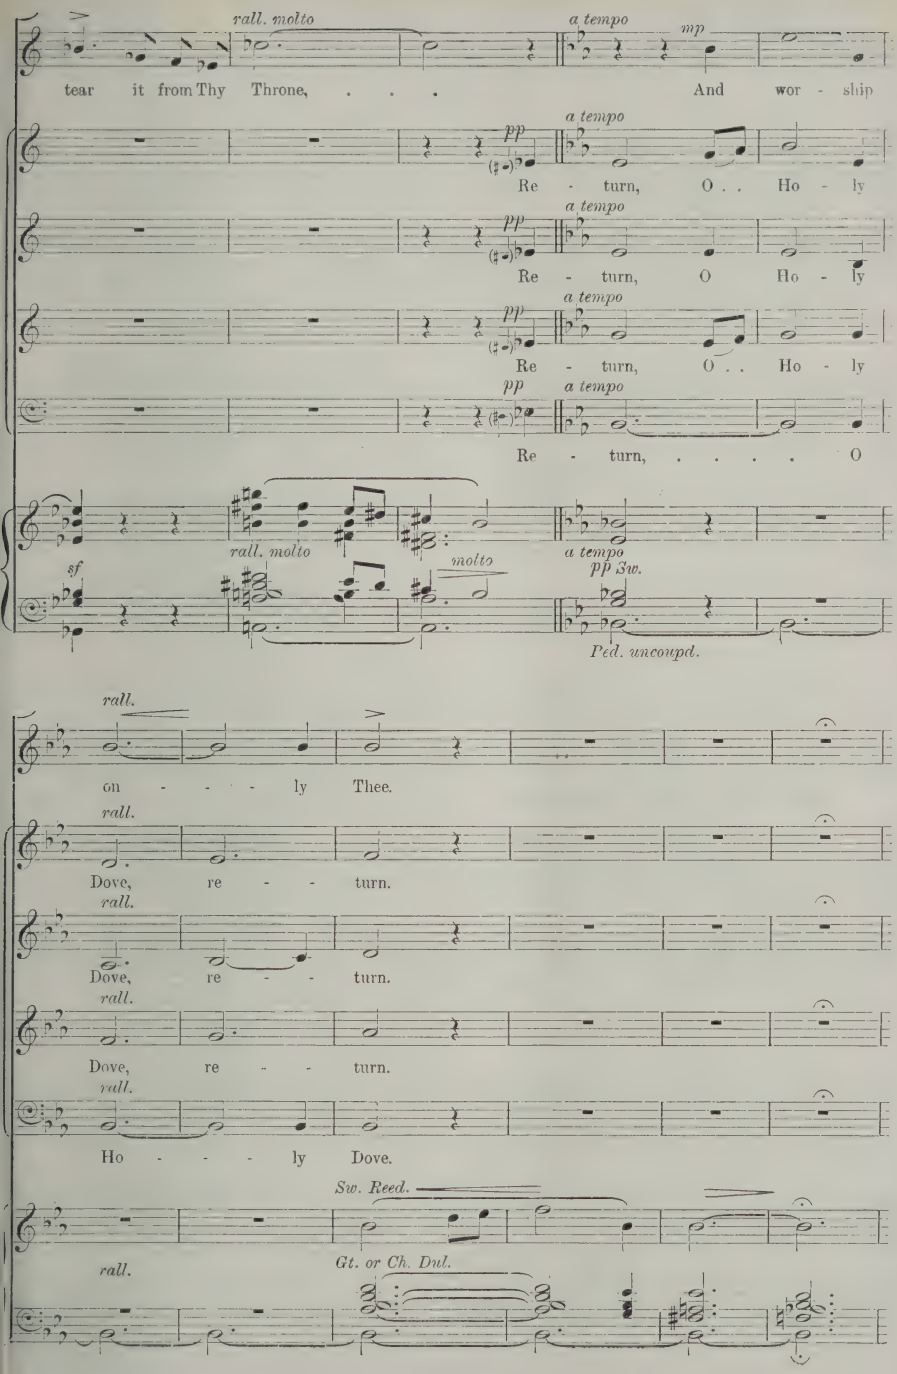
sf
f Gt.
Gt. to Ped.



rall. molto
a tempo
mp
tear it from Thy Throne, . . . And wor - ship
pp
a tempo
Re - turn, O . . Ho - ly
pp
a tempo
Re - turn, O Ho - ly
pp
a tempo
Re - turn, O . . Ho - ly
pp
a tempo
Re - turn, . . . . O
sf rall. molto
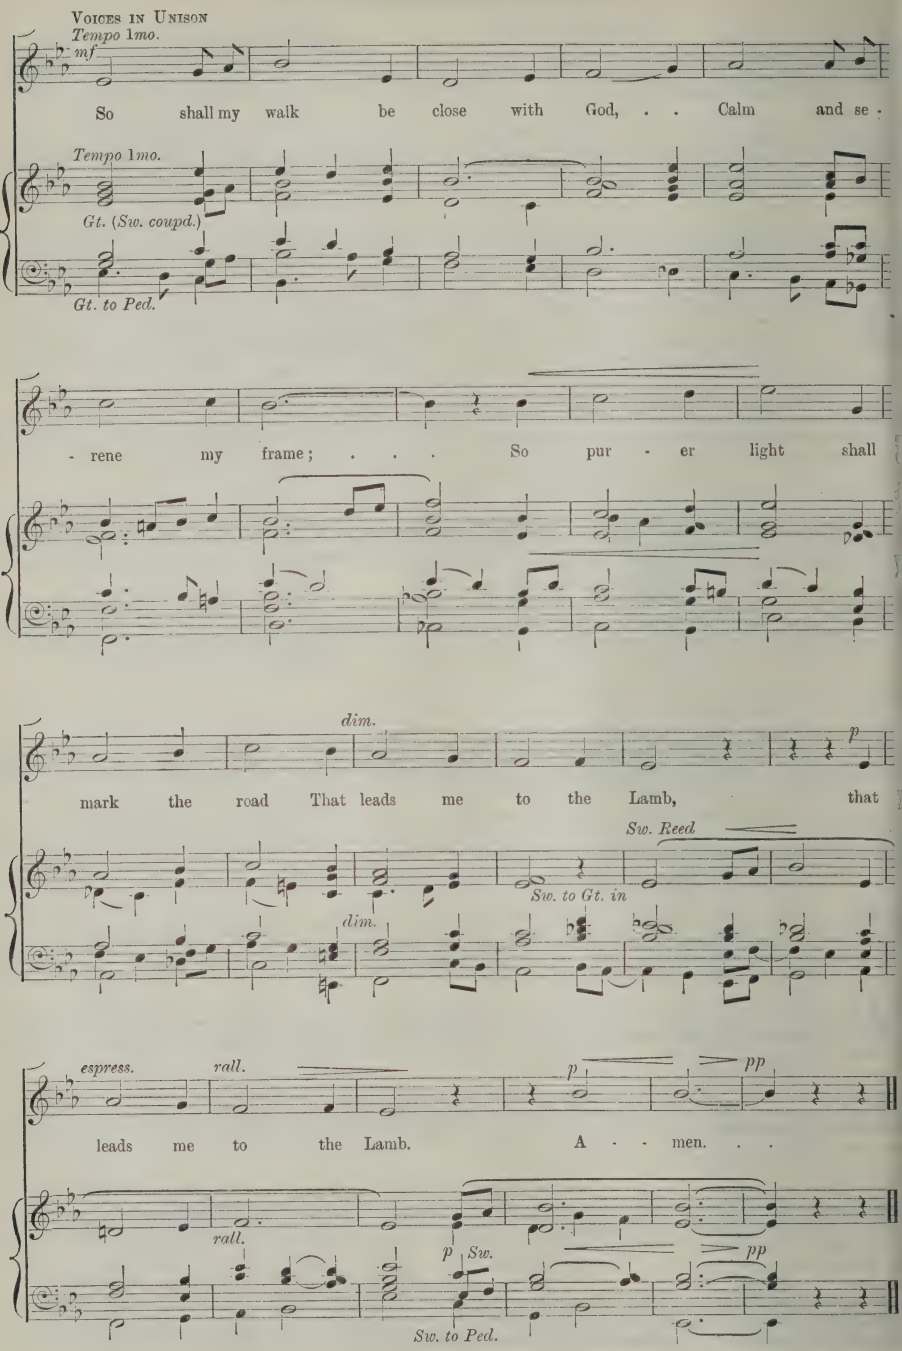
molto
a tempo
pp Sw.
Ped. uncoupd.
rall.
on - - - ly Thee.
rall.
Dove, re - - - turn.
rall.
Dove, re - - - turn.
rall.
Dove, re - - - turn.
rall.
Ho - - - ly Dove.
Sw. Reed.
rall.
Gt. or Ch. Dul.



Voices in Unison
Tempo 1mo.
mf
So shall my walk be close with God, . . Calm and se -
Tempo 1mo.
Gt. (Sw. coupd.)
Gt. to Ped.
- rene my frame; . . . So pur - er light shall dim.
p mark the road That leads me to the Lamb, that
Sw. Reed
Sw. to Gt. in
dim.
espress.
rall.
p
pp leads me to the Lamb. A - - men. . .
rall.
p
Sw.
pp
Sw. to Ped.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1,022—Vol. 69. Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

APRIL 1 1928

Price 6*d.*; Postage, 2*d.*

Annual Subscription, post-free, 7*s.* 6*d.*

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

FIFTY-SEVENTH SEASON, 1927-1928

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 6, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS FLORA WOODMAN
MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL
MR. BEN DAVIES
MR. CHARLES KNOWLES

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, at 2.30 p.m.

MASS IN D - - - - - BEETHOVEN

MISS DOROTHY SILK
MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL
MR. PARRY JONES
MR. ROBERT RADFORD

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

The Royal College of Music

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING / HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D.Litt.

MIDSUMMER TERM

THE MIDSUMMER TERM will commence on Monday, April 30th, 1928. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Wednesday, April 25th.

COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION
is provided by Teachers of the highest eminence.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT
Classes are held for pupils under sixteen, whose time is also occupied by their general education.

SPECIAL CLASSES ARE HELD FOR:
Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet.

OPERATIC CLASSES
Have the use of fully equipped College Opera Theatre, with sunken Orchestra.

SCHOLARSHIPS
Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are provided from a permanent endowment fund.

A.R.C.M.

Examinations for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) are held three times a year in September, December, and April.

Full particulars obtainable from the Registrar.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MIDSUMMER TERM

BEGINS MONDAY, 30th APRIL

SPECIAL COURSES

CONDUCTING
OPERATIC SINGING
TRAINING OF TEACHERS

HAYDN STRING QUARTETS

Serial Performances continued on Thursday, 3rd May, at 3 p.m., and following Thursdays.
Tickets free on application to the Secretary.

THE STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA

every Tuesday and Friday, 2 to 5 p.m.
Conducted by
SIR HENRY J. WOOD, D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

PROSPECTUSES and all information from
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

President. H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A)
Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).
Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 9th (Irish Entries, May 2nd), 1928.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and November-December each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:
THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.2.
FOUR LECTURES by SIR WALFORD DAVIES, at 6 p.m., on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, April 24, 25, 26, 27. Subject: SONATA FORM. The Lectures are free.

The Royal College of Organists

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Toccata in D minor (Dorian), J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 10, p. 196; Augener, p. 360; Peters, Vol. 3, No. 3.)

Prelude (in form of a Chaconne), Op. 88, No. 2, Stanford. (Stainer & Bell.)

Romanza, "La Reine de France," Haydn. (Best's arrangements, Vol. 1, p. 199.)

The selected pieces for the July, 1928, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1928.

An examination for the Sir John Goss Scholarship will be held at the College in May or June. The successful candidate will be entitled to Three years' free tuition at the Royal Academy of Music. Candidates must be either Choristers or ex-Choristers, and under 17 years of age on the date of examination. Particulars, date of entry, &c., may be obtained at the College.

For the convenience of members, past examination papers have been bound in one volume: Fellowship and Associateship Organ Work, January, 1913, to July, 1927; Paper Work, July, 1924, to July, 1927. Price 4*s*., to be obtained by members only.

Four Historical Lecture Organ Recitals will be given by Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull, on Saturday afternoons, April 28th, May 5th, 12th, and 19th, at 3 p.m. Members and those interested are invited to attend. Admission free, no tickets required. A collection will be made in aid of the Organists' Benevolent League.

The Choir-Training Diploma and Certificate Examinations will both be held between Monday, May 14th, and Saturday, May 19th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, April 23rd. Application for Membership (or re-election) must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before April 23rd.

TWO LECTURES ON CHOIR-TRAINING will be delivered at the College on Tuesday, May 15th, at 3.30, by Dr. W. H. Harris, and at 6.30, by Dr. E. Bullock. These lectures will be free to Members, and those interested. No tickets required.

Examination Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d*. each (post free).

The College will be closed for Easter, from April 2nd to April 14th.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

The Royal College of Music

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, LONDON, S.W.7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883)

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING / HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir Hugh P. Allen, C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D.Litt.

COMPETITION FOR FIFTEEN OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| PIANOFORTE | ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 |
| COMPOSITION | ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 |
| SINGING | ... Not less than 2 nor more than | 4 |
| VIOLIN | ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 |
| VIOLA | ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 |
| VIOLONCELLO | ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 |

Not less than 2 between FLUTE, HAUTBOY, and DOUBLE-BASS.

The SCHOLARSHIPS ARE OPEN to all classes of His Majesty's subjects within the prescribed limits of age. All particulars and official Entry Forms may be obtained from the College.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS will be held on Wednesday, May 30th, 1928, in various Local Centres throughout the United Kingdom, and the Final Competition will take place at the College about June 13th, 1928.

The Last Day for receiving Entry Forms, which must be accompanied by an official stamped Registrar's Certificate of Birth, is April 23rd, 1928.

A.R.C.M.

An Examination in all subjects for "Associate of the Royal College of Music" is held three times a year—in December, April, and September.

SYLLABUS may be obtained from the College.

MIDSUMMER TERM

will COMMENCE on MONDAY, APRIL 30th, 1928. Entrance Examination on or about April 25th.

CLAUDE AVELING, M.A., Registrar.

Guildhall School of Music

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4

Principal: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

SUMMER TERM begins April 23rd.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing, French Classical Drama.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9*s*. and £12 12*s*. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Visitor ... Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D

Director ... Granville Bantock, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

Session 1927-1928

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASGOW

ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC

SESSION 1927-28

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 12 to December 3, December 5 to March 10, and March 12 to June 8.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,

Athenæum Buildings, Glasgow.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

FOUNDED 1913

President for 1928: J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B.

ANNUAL DINNER, APRIL 28,

Monico Restaurant, Piccadilly Circus.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, are eligible. Register of vacant appointments. All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,990th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on April 3rd, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

MEMORISE YOUR
MUSIC
BY MEANS OF THE
Mackinnon Course

VACLAV TALICH
the world-famous Conductor, writes:

"Miss Mackinnon, the excellent pianist, has invented a system of memorising music which is applicable to all instrumental work. I have studied the Course carefully, and I consider it a very original and remarkable work, and one to be recommended to all musicians, amateur or professional.
(Signed) Vaclav Talich.—25/2/28.

A pupil writes:

"Both directly and indirectly I am deriving great benefit from your musical guidance, and I am most grateful. My friends would be amused if they knew how I was spending my holidays, but for health and happiness I should advise them to try the same programme."

The Fee for the Complete Course of Six Postal Lessons is £3 : 3 : 0.
Write (mentioning the Musical Times) for free Booklet giving particulars, testimonials and guarantee to:
Miss LILIAS MACKINNON 1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3.

Manchester School of Music
Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892)
Late Principal (1897-1925): Albert J. Cross, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1
TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL
Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

Lecture-Lesson Class by Mr. Matthay on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council)
This One-Year Course may be joined at the beginning of any Term
For further particulars please apply, Mrs. Marion Cole, Secretary.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC
BAMBRIDGE PIANOFORTE SCHOLARSHIP, VALUE £100 A YEAR.

A Competition open to British subjects of either sex for this Scholarship, tenable at the College in London, will be held in July next; last day of entry, July 7th.

Candidates must be not less than seventeen nor over twenty-one years of age.

The Examination consists of:
1. The performance of two or more Pianoforte pieces, names of which must be submitted for approval;
2. Reading at sight;
3. Viva voce questions on Rudiments and Form;
4. Ear-Tests.

Full particulars of this and other Scholarships, with entry forms, may be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College of Music, Mandeville Place, London, W.1.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING
20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1
President: A. NETTLEFOLD
Principal: DAVID GODELL

Instruction in all Vocal and Musical Subjects.

Voice-Curing Courses for loss of tone and all Vocal defects.

OPERATIC CLASS now forming under A. Davies, A.R.C.M.

CHORAL CLASS under F. T. Durrant, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., F.I.S.S.C.

The Daily Telegraph says: "A number of pupils . . . . came through the test with infinite credit to themselves and to those who are responsible for their artistic welfare."

Particulars from Sec., Miss Maimie M. Heath. Mayfair 3819.

MADAME MARIA LEVINSKAYA

owing to the outstanding success of the first two Courses (August and Christmas, 1927) has decided to hold, by request, an

EXTRA EASTER COURSE for MUSIC TEACHERS and PIANISTS

April 9th to 14th.

(Opening Reception by invitation, Sunday, April 8th, 8.15 p.m.)

TWELVE LECTURES on PIANOFORTE PROBLEMS

comparative analysis of all conflicting methods and logical solution of controversial points.

SIX PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATION LESSONS
THREE MASTER CLASSES for ARTIST-STUDENTS

What some Members of the Xmas Course say:

THE HEAD OF MUSICAL DEPARTMENT OF GUILDFORD HIGH SCHOOL.

"Thanks for your vivid and intensely artistic presentation of your philosophy of music, I am able to return to my teaching full of enthusiasm and hope, feeling that my feet are now set in the right path—after having wavered for some time between the old and new schools of technique. I am looking forward to gaining more muscular and mental control from my lessons with you, and am already delighted to feel a perceptible improvement after only two lessons." M. R. LOUGHBOROUGH.
January 16th, 1928. Wynnstay, Guildford

A SCHOOL MUSIC MISTRESS.

"I have talked so much of you, your lectures, your personality, and the hundred and one experiences of that week, that I have enthused all the folk here to such an extent that they all want to pack up and rush for your help. . . . I would like to possess your touches and be put in a position to apply them in such a way as to begin, and carry on any new pupils that come to me, entirely on your system." M. A. McNAUGHTON,
January 13th, 1928. 15, Orrell Lane, Aintree, Liverpool.

Write for Complete Syllabus of whole Lecture Course, Fees, Residential Terms, &c., to Secretary,

LEVINSKAYA PIANOFORTE COLLEGE
(The only residential in London),
2, LEINSTER GARDENS, HYDE PARK, W.2.
Paddington 0370.

NORTHERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal:
ALBERT JOWETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS:
Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Trinity College, &c.
Many notable Successes,
amongst which was the celebrated Composer and Pianist,
WILLIAM BAINES,
who was entirely trained by Mr. JOWETT.

PIANOFORTE PLAYING AND INTERPRETATION.
SINGING, VOICE-PRODUCTION AND INTERPRETATION.
PERSONAL LESSONS IN LEEDS AND NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.
Including all Modern Work: Italian, French, German, Spanish, &c.
COMPLETE COURSE IN COMPOSITION.

A simple and completely successful system of
SIGHT READING.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS:
"Your splendid lessons."
After fifth lesson: "I have received considerable enlightenment."

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, ACCOMPANIMENTS WRITTEN TO SONGS,

State Exam. or Subject.

HEATHFIELD, MOORLAND DRIVE, HARROGATE ROAD, LEEDS

Is memorising your obstacle to progress?

Years ago many Teachers actually prevented and discouraged pupils from memorising. Now one and all recognise its great importance and the development of interpretation which it affords. But how few teachers have a really good and definite system. Not one in a thousand! Many good performers — both amateur and professional—are at a standstill, are in a groove, just because they are unable to play from memory. Probably because memory-playing has not always occupied the important place in music that it now holds, the average player does not realise its possibilities. Is this so in your case? If it is, then the solution is a simple one; but you must take matters in your own hands and at once. THE offers you the most direct way to achievement and is the most practical and efficient Course on memory-playing it is possible to obtain. If you are really ambitious to succeed in music, then write to me to-day. My Free Book (post free) is yours for the asking. It contains much striking information of interest to everyone, and is worth many times over the effort in securing it. Just send me a post-card telling me if you are a moderate or advanced player, and whether you play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ, as there is a separate and distinct Course for each instrument. Every student receives my personal guarantee of success.

MASTER-METHOD OF MEMORY-PLAYING

Send for this Free Booklet

REGINALD FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
134 Beacon House, Hemstal Rd., London, N.W.6.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL:

ARTHUR McALISTR, B.A.

FAILURES

CONVERTED INTO

SUCCESSES

Students who have failed repeatedly (UNDER OTHER TUITION) have passed the following Exams. (UNDER M.C.C. TUITION) at the FIRST ATTEMPT.

MATRIC., 1ST M.B., A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. MUS. T.C.L., A.T.C.L.

Single Subjects: HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, COMPOSITION, ELOCUTION, FORM, ORCHESTRATION, ART OF TEACHING, SINGING, ETC.

Please state Exam. or Subject.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

BOURNEMOUTH
Musical Competitions Festival
SECOND YEAR

MAY 19th to 26th, 1928

CHORAL, SOLO INSTRUMENTAL, AND VOCAL CLASSES. ELOCUTION. FOLK-DANCING
ORCHESTRAL AND BAND CONTESTS
OVER 100 CLASSES

Entries close April 2nd, 1928

Syllabus and Entry Forms from the Hon. Sec.,
MR. HADLEY WATKINS,
CAIRNS MEMORIAL HOUSE, BOURNEMOUTH.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS
(ELGAR)
WEDNESDAY, MAY 9th, at 7.30 p.m.

MURIEL BRUNSKILL STEUART WILSON
HOWARD FRY

CHORUS OF OVER TWO HUNDRED.
Band mainly Hallé Orchestra
At the Organ: MR. H. S. TREVITT

CONDUCTOR: DR. G. J. BENNETT

Admission without ticket. Collection for expenses.

GRAFTON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY
THE PASSION
ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW
(J. S. BACH)
WILL BE GIVEN IN
CLAPHAM CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, OLD TOWN, S.W.4
On MONDAY, 2nd APRIL, 1928, at 8 p.m.
Hon. Musical Director: JOHN ANDREWS.
Silver collection to defray the heavy expenses of the Recital.

EDWIN H. LEMARE

is paying a visit to England, and will be available for

ORGAN RECITALS

during July, August, and September.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply
Edwin H. Lemare, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.,
160, Wardour Street, W.1.

"LITANY OF THE SACRED HEART."
Words by PATRICK McMAHON.
Music by H. A. HARDING, Mus. Doc., Oxon.
Price One Penny.
Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

ESSEX CHURCH
THE MALL, NOTTING HILL GATE, W.8.

AN ORGAN RECITAL WILL BE GIVEN BY
MR. HAROLD W. SPICER,
Organist of Manchester College, Oxford,
on TUESDAY, 3rd APRIL, 1928, at 8 p.m.
Vocalist: MRS. NEWTON TRIER.

ALL SEATS FREE.

JOIN
THE ORGAN CLUB
PRESIDENT: J. MARTIN WHITE, ESQ.
AND VISIT
SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL, APRIL 28.
CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL, MAY 19.
Further attractive visits to follow.

Entrance Fee, 2*s.* 6*d.* Annual Subscription, 10*s.* 6*d.*

For full particulars apply Hon. Sec.,
28, HILLMORE GROVE, SYDENHAM, S.E.26.

Free.—PIANISTS, Amateur and Professional, desiring rapid improvement in TECHNIQUE and TONE-PRODUCTION, are invited to write for FREE BROCHURE, "THE MODERN TEACHING OF APPLIED WEIGHT TOUCH." "The something different" method of practice.
THE BETTER WAY.—Develop your technique by post and secure durable results.
THE CHARLES A. GILLETT Pianoforte School,
11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Can you IMPROVISE at the Keyboard?
Improvisation or composing at the Keyboard (also playing music which you have heard, by ear and without the aid of any written music) can be learnt by ANYONE of average intelligence. By means of a short postal course, I guarantee to teach YOU to do this, to improve your technique, play at sight, and memorise music without any drudgery.
My book, "The Piano and its Possibilities," is sent FREE on receipt of a Post-Card to
MR. H. CRAWFORD, Kingsley Green, Haslemere.

MEMORY TRAINING IN MUSIC
SIGHT-READING, TECHNIQUE,
AND IMPROVISATION AT THE KEYBOARD
My booklets (explaining how I teach these subjects by means of a short postal course, based on an entirely original system of my own) are sent FREE and Post Free.
State whether Beginner, Elementary, Advanced, and the subject which interests you most.
Mr. H. Crawford, Kingsley Green, Haslemere.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glenholme, Hessle High Road, Hull, Yorks.

£250 FREE SCHOLARSHIPS IN SINGING, PIANO, and ELOCUTION, Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition for the trained and untrained, April 28th, May 5th and 12th. Adjudicators: Mr. Charles Webber, Conductor, Carl Rosa Opera Co.; Mr. Fred Critchet, and Miss Phyllis Windsor. Results at Lecture-Recital, King George's Hall, W.C.1, May 21st, at 7.30 p.m. Prospectus, Secretary, 26N, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

GERMAN VIOLIN STRINGS MANUFACTURER requires AGENTS for England. Firms with knowledge of German preferred. Box 25, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

The Pianist's Hands

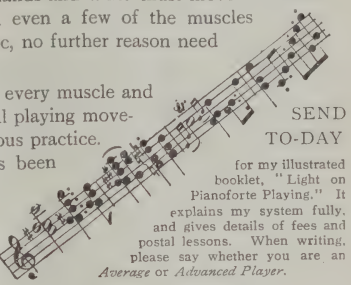
The Times says: "The excellence of Mr. Macdonald Smith's methods has been abundantly proved."

PREVALENT among pianists is the idea that you cannot play well unless you have a special sort of hand; this is a mistake. It is obvious, however, that the hands must be in perfect condition, otherwise the many technical difficulties to be overcome will be found insuperable. For a pianist every single muscle of the hands and arms must move the instant it is required to do so, and if this fails to be the case with even a few of the muscles brought into play in any complicated passage of music, no further reason need be sought to account for failure.

Let the "From Brain to Keyboard" System perfect every muscle and nerve in your hands and give you instant control over all playing movements without any of the usual drudgery and monotonous practice. Why not learn something about the System that has been used by many of our eminent musicians.



SEND TO-DAY for my illustrated booklet, "Light on Pianoforte Playing." It explains my system fully, and gives details of fees and postal lessons. When writing, please say whether you are an Average or Advanced Player.

From Brain to Keyboard

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

M. C. MACDONALD SMITH, 94, GOWER STREET, LONDON, W.C.1

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London Address: 34, Spencer Hill, Wimbledon, S.W.19.
Please mention this paper when writing.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD"

SIGHT-READING LESSONS

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Music: "Goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service."

A PUPIL WRITES: "Dr. —— tells me to practise more, and I feel all the time I am practising on the wrong lines, and not improving at all."

AFTER SECOND LESSON.—"I find I have more confidence, and Dr. —— says my reading is certainly more fluent. Your hints have helped me considerably at both organ and piano."—(F.R.C.O. Exam.)

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON,
and WEEKES'S STUDIOS, 14, HANOVER ST., W.1
('Phone: Croydon 2703)

"SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

A simple and very effective appliance for giving strength and flexibility to the fingers.
Recommended by Editor of the Musical Times

IMPROVED MODEL
Price 2*s.* 6*d.*; postage and packing, 3*d.*

BYEWAYS, CLIFF ROAD, SEABROOK, HYTHE, KENT.

THE TECHNIQUER

A BOON TO ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS
Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.
BUSONI and THE TECHNIQUER

Extract from a letter:
"A pianist is not imaginable without hands. Their physical culture is therefore of importance.
In fact, there are some functions which belong exclusively to the mechanical department.
Mr. Pitcher's apparatus . . . proves helpful against stiffness and inflexibility of the hands. I wish his good results may ever increase."—FERRUCCIO BUSONI.

Send for list of testimonials and full particulars post free
"Hand Development," with 16 Photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*
Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

PIANO REPAIRS. "WIGMORE HALL FINISH"

denotes a standard not obtainable elsewhere.

THE MOST HIGHLY SKILLED WORKMANSHIP.
THE FINEST MATERIALS (regardless of cost).
PERFECT SATISFACTION.

WIGMORE HALL AND PIANO GALLERIES, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

THE REVISION OF MSS. is UNDERTAKEN by musical critic and song composer. Lessons in piano, singing, theory. Herbert H. Nelson, 9, Grange Rd., Canonbury, N.1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM (A.R.C.M.)

SOPRANO.

"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.

"Her extraordinary, bird-like purity and clarity."—Surrey Advertiser.

"Possesses a voice of remarkable purity and strength."—Surrey Advertiser.

41, Avondale Road, South Croydon. 'Phone: Croydon 2703.

BLANCHE ALLEN

SOPRANO.

"A good and charming soprano voice made listening a pleasure."—Birmingham Post.

Future bookings: "THE MESSIAH." Sutton, and People's Palace.
ORATORIO, OPERA, CONCERTS, MASONICS.
36, Albany Road, W.13. Tel.: Ealing 4756.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.

Lecture-Recitals of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.
Pupils prepared for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Scholarships and Festivals.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Lessons given at above address or West-End Studio, Cricklewood Conservatoire of Music, N.W.2; and Highbury Conservatoire, N.5, &c. Primrose 3869.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR.

Soloist, St. Paul's Cathedral.
Shirley, Park Road, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

WILLIAM LOMAS

(Late Royal College of Music, Manchester)
TENOR.
GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.
ORATORIO, OPERA, BALLAD, AND SACRED.
45, St. Mary Street, Gloucester.

RONALD CLIFF, L.R.A.M.

BARITONE.

SUB-PROFESSOR OF SINGING,
AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, LONDON.
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.

Receives Private Pupils.

Address,: 9, Dorset Square, London, N.W.1.

VERNON HARRISS

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medalist. BASS.

Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

ALBERT GARCIA

CARRIES ON THE TRADITIONS OF HIS GRANDFATHER, THE LATE MANUEL GARCIA.

STUDIO: 59, QUEEN'S ROAD, N.W.8.

H. N. HORTON

F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

GIVES LESSONS IN PIANOFORTE AND SINGING

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO VOICE PRODUCTION

Apply for particulars,

Messrs. Weekes's Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.; or 515, London Road, Thornton Heath.

MISS MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
26, Onslow Square, S.W.7. Tel.: Kensington 3627.

E. SIMS-HILDITCH

LECTURER AND ADJUDICATOR.

Address, 37, Victoria Street, Crewe.

TO COMPOSERS

NICHOLAS GATTY

MUS. DOC. CANTAB.

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.

For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, W.1.

MISS PITT SOPER F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing, Royal Academy of Music, London.
Prepares Candidates for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Examinations (Teachers and Performers).
For particulars, apply Wigmore Hall Studios.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1. Langham 3909.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.
RUSSIAN MUSIC.
CONCERTS AND RECITALS.
TALKS AT THE PIANO.

For terms, apply to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

WILLIAM NIELD

ACCOMPANIST.
293, Preston New Road, Blackburn. Tel.: 5669.

ORGAN LESSONS.

GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O.

specializes in the teaching of Organ Playing
at
ST. STEPHEN'S WALBROOK, E.C.4,
and coaches for all practical diplomas.
SINGLE LESSONS.

2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6. Tel: Putney 4208.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON, Mus.B.

SPECIAL POSTAL COURSES (10*s.* 6*d.* FOR TEN LESSONS).
1. Harmony Course on Macpherson's "Melody and Harmony."
2. Counterpoint Course.

Owing to success of above the following have been prepared:
3. Rudiments Course.
4. Course on Harris's "Harmonizing Melodies."
(Supplementary. "Compound Course" of any of above can be taken at same fee.)

DEGREE AND DIPLOMA COURSES from £1 1*s.* FOR TEN LESSONS.
"Balcary," KEGWORTH, near Derby.

YOUNG MUS. DOC.

COACHES BY CORRESPONDENCE.

ALL branches of Music, including Paper Work for Professional and Higher Examinations.

Send stamped, addressed envelope and specimen of work for FREE LESSON.

FEES FROM 2*s.* EACH LESSON.
"H. K." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

SUCCESSES (with those for January, 1928) include 3 F.R.C.O. (1 for Jan., 1928). 3 A.R.C.O. 2 L.R.A.M.

2*s.* 6*d.* per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG, Mus. Bac., A.R.M.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L. Correspondence Lessons in all subjects. Preparation for diplomas. 131, Warbreck Drive, Blackpool, N.S.

L. R.A.M., A.R.C.M., PIANOFORTE.—Special Coaching by Arthur Ellarshaw, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-27... 324 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-27... 88 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work (25 Successes.)
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint. (21 Successes.)

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.; &c. Address as above.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple), 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone: Battersea 0916.

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. inst. Also large four-manual organ. Pieces registered and phrased.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

| | |
|---|---|
| 1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920. | 1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921 |
| 1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1926. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1926. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. | 4 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., July, 1927. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1927. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. |

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1. 2/8 post free.

POSTAL TUITION by F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L. (Registered Teacher). Any Exam One guinea ten lessons. Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, &c. Courses in History, Choir-Training, Aural Tests, Analysis, R.C.O. exams. Recent successes, F.R.C.O., July, 1927; A.R.C.O., January, 1928. Address: BM/JRMB, London, W.C.1.

FREDERICK GREEN, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., &c. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator Prep. for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. 1, Newington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 413 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., and the paper-work requirements for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas in pianoforte playing. For terms, &c., apply to 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

TO COMPOSERS.—Complete and systematic course, by correspondence, in Military Band Instrumentation. Write, Captain Charles Hoby, M.B.E., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Director of Music, Royal Marine Barracks, Chatham.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London.

SUCCESSES IN ORGAN PLAYING SINCE 1910:

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1910 | ... | 8 | 1919 | ... | 11 |
| 1911 | ... | 10 | 1920 | ... | 7 |
| 1912 | ... | 20 | 1921 | ... | 9 |
| 1913 | ... | 18 | 1922 | ... | 15 |
| 1914 | ... | 25 | 1023 | ... | 15 |
| 1915 | ... | 25 | 1924 | ... | 7 |
| 1916 | ... | 18 | 1925 | ... | 14 |
| 1917 | ... | 2 | 1926 | ... | 11 |
| 1918 | ... | 3 | 1927 | ... | 12 |

5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. W. HUNT, Mus. D. Durham (1926), F.R.C.O. Gives Lessons by Correspondence, for degrees and diplomas in music. Thorpe Road, Melton Mowbray.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1927, Mus. Doc., 3 Final Mus. Bac., and three 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Also in 1927—4 Mus. Doc. and 3 Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition. 200 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning" prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Specialist in Pianoforte Playing, Touch, Technique, and Interpretation. Thirty years' experience in preparing for examinations. More than 1,000 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have gained Degrees and Diplomas. Address: Weekes' Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

L. R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A. Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Musical Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
Preparation for all Exams. by Post and Personal Lessons.
Special Courses of Papers: Singing, Piano, Touch, Musical Appreciation, &c.
Nearly 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
Send for Prospectus,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture, Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

DR. A. E. TAYLOR. PUPIL GAINED STILLIE Bursary for Cpt.; Gold Medal for Cpt., Ass. Board; Gold Medal for Har., Ass. Board; C. C. Scholarship; A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., Mus. B. Compositions revised and accompaniments written. Portland Place, Lancaster.

"BY CORRESPONDENCE"

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc., Lond., L.R.A.M.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work
(3.) Touch, and Technique (for Pianoforte Diplomas)
(4.) Trinity College Diplomas
(5.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.
(6.) Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. (London and Durham)
(7.) Separate Subjects

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

Dr. Sprankling also gives Personal Lessons in Bristol and London. Special Coaching for all Pianoforte Diplomas.

Address: Dr. Norman Sprankling, 46, Clarendon Road, Redland, Bristol. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent successes in all these examinations.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

319 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.

189 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

| | |
|---|---|
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918 | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July. 1919 | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921. | 8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. | 9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. | 8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925. |
| 7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. | 12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1927. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1927. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928 | 12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (all music Exams.) by recognised and well-qualified Professor. 1s. 6d. per lesson, and postage. Stamp for specimen. Composers advised and assisted. "W. H. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO SINGERS.—ITALIAN, GERMAN, and FRENCH LESSONS. Purest accent, acquired abroad. Moderate terms. Box 14, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ALTO WANTED.—St. Andrew's, Holborn. £15. Fridays, 6.30; Sundays, 11 and 6.30. Apply, Organist.

TENOR AND ALTO WANTED for Church in Hampstead district. Remuneration, £12 per annum. Apply by writing, to F. E. Baker, 2, Ferme Park Mansions, N.8.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, Oxford. Vacancy for Academical CLERK (Singing Scholarship) next October. Tenor Voice. Competition on May 24th. For particulars write, Rev. Dean of Divinity.

ST. MICHAEL'S, Chester Square, S.W. TENOR SOLOIST WANTED. £30 per annum. Good reader essential. Light duties. Apply by letter to Reginald Goss Custard, at the Church.

URGENT.—TENOR and BASS WANTED for Holy Trinity Church, Grays Inn Road. Offered £5 or expenses. Write, The Rector, 27, John Street, Bedford Row.

BROMPTON ORATORY CHOIR. — Wanted, BASS. Good reader. Apply, Musical Director.

GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER SUNDAY, Etc. EXPERIENCED SOPRANO, TENOR, or BARITONE AVAILABLE. London or Provinces. Phone: Willesden 2085.

SOLO and CHORUS MEN supplied for Church work. Apply, G. Hugh Weedon, 487, Green Lanes, Harringay, N.

ORGANIST WANTED to co-operate with the Choirmaster of Christ Church, Southgate. Must be a regular Communicant, and preferably live in the district. Apply, by letter only, stating age, qualifications, experience, and remuneration expected, to the Vicar, Rev. C. F. Peploe, M.A., The Vicarage, Southgate, N.14.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of large Church in South of Scotland, salary £105, desires, for health reasons, another appointment in the South of England. Some sacrifice might be made. An exchange of duties and teaching connection with organist who requires a more bracing climate would be considered. Anyone possessing good diplomas would be very successful. Box 24, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED at Parish Church, St. Clement, Ilford. Salary, £80 and fees (about £40). Apply, stating qualifications, experience, and references, The Rev. A. W. Ottoway, M.A., The Vicarage, Granville Rd., Ilford.

KEBLE COLLEGE, OXFORD.—ORGAN SCHOLARSHIP, £100 p.a. Election May 16th, 1928. Candidates must be members of the Church of England. Apply Warden.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for the Upperton Congregational Church, Eastbourne. Apply, stating qualifications, to the Secretary, Mr. D. R. Duncan, 59, Enys Road, Eastbourne.

WANTED, ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Belgrave Congregational Church, Torquay. Salary £75 p.a. Applications to be sent to E. H. Sermon, Cranbrook, Torquay.

A.R.C.O. WITH GOOD PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE OF CATHEDRAL CHOIR and ORGAN, also Parish Church Services, desires APPOINTMENT as CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST (not Anglo-Catholic Church), with scope for teaching. London, or North London district. Write, Box 29, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST.—Gentleman would give services in exchange for practice on good organ: also desires lessons from organist for R.C.O., London. Quote fees. Box 22; c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O., thoroughly experienced, desires post in or near London, either as Assistant-Organist, or to work with Choirmaster. Box 31, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

ORGAN CLASS (Saturdays 2 p.m.)

ORGAN LESSONS by well-qualified teacher, on large organ, situated within easy access of City and West-End. Organists desiring individual high-class tuition at very moderate fees, should write to "R. C. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1, for full particulars of the above.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—Finishing lessons given on replica of R.C.O. organ at National Institute for the Blind, London. Apply, Mr. H. V. Spanner, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., 79, Crofton Road, London, S.E.5. Candidates are advised to apply early.

GENT., L.R.A.M., PIANOFORTE TEACHER.—Desires visiting (or resident) post, school, &c., in any district. Owley Farm, Ditcheat, Somerset.

SINGING TEACHER REQUIRES PIANIST to train as accompanist (West-End Studio). Good voices wanted for assisted Training. Box 27, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANISTE, A.R.C.O. (Lady), good sight-reader, could give one morning or afternoon weekly to practise with Instrumentalist or Vocalist. "E. C.," Robinia, Walden Road, Hornchurch, Essex.

ADMINISTRATIVE COUNTY OF LONDON.

The London County Council will require in September next at the L.C.C. Hackney Institute, Dalston Lane, E.8, a Visiting Teacher of Pianoforte for day and evening individual lessons for about 220 hours during session (September to July). Times of attendance to be arranged. Fee, 6s. 6d. an hour.

Apply, Education Officer (T.12a), The County Hall, Westminster Bridge, S.E.1 (stamped, addressed foolscap envelope necessary), 1928, for form, to be returned by 10th April. Canvassing disqualifies.

MONTAGU H. COX,
Clerk of the London County Council.

PIANIST, SOLOIST, PROFESSOR of MUSIC (Swiss), very experienced ensemble pianist for vocalists and instrumentalists, also organist, wishes permanent position in Conservatory of Music or Institute, or as accompanist to Artists. Knowledge of English, French, and German. First-class references. C. Vogt, Pianist, Güttingen, Canton Thurgau, Switzerland.

ABERDEENSHIRE EDUCATION AUTHORITY

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC for Peterhead Academy, Burgh and Landward Schools—qualified under Chap. VI. of the Regulations of the Scottish Education Department. Initial salary not less than £250. Applicants must lodge twelve copies of Form of Application and twelve copies of Testimonials with the Director of Education, 14, Crown Terrace, Aberdeen, from whom forms of application and details as to duties may be obtained, on or before April 9.

APOLLO ORGAN.—Two-Manual, pedals. Perfect condition. Electrical blower. Collingwood, 6, Ashford Road, Maidstone.

FOR SALE.—Two-Manual PIPE ORGAN. 15 Stop keys. Photo, &c., from A. W. Hayter & Son, Organ Builders, Letchworth.

FOR SALE.—TWO-MANUAL REED ORGAN (with pedals) by Karn. 10 Stops; 6 sets of reeds. Excellent case. In good condition. Box 23, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ESTEY Two-Manual ORGAN. Philharmonic large scale Reeds, R.C.O. Pedal Board, Pipe Top. Suit Church. As new. Write, "N. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CHURCH ORGANS.—Restorations, Enlargements, Re-voicing, Repairing, and Tuning Attractive terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London, S.W.19. Established 1896.

GRAND NEW ORGAN of the best description.—Three manuals (61), 40 Stops. Detached pneumatic console. Fine oak case. Electric blowing. £1,850 inc. erection. Worth double. "F.R.C.O.," 4, Wellington Gardens, Hastings.

MAGNIFICENT ESTEY CHANCEL ORGAN, polished oak. New appearance. 14 Stops, Knee-Swells. Music cupboard. Stool. £18, or offer. A. H. Nelson, Beggars' Roost, Little Heath Road, Selsdon, Surrey.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—Two-Manual Chamber, full compass, CC to G, 56 notes; independent Pedal, CCC to F, 30 notes. 15 Stops, Swell and Composition Pedals; hydraulic engine. Built by J. J. Binns, Leeds. Fine hand-carved oak front; revolving seat, also carved oak. Price £600. Box 28, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS.—One, Two, and Three Manuals. Bargains. From £15. Best Makers. Stagg, 45, Grays Inn Road, London, W.C.1.

WEST-END ORGANIST has fine "Dreaper" Piano (Walnut) with Norman & Beard Pedal attachment, and organ Stool—FOR DISPOSAL. Excellent condition. £50. Also Virgil Clavier, first grade. £8. Apply "Organo," c/o Scott Lane, 140, Holland Park Avenue, W.11.

WANTED.—Small PIPE ORGAN for Girls' School. Moderate price. State lowest price and specification. Box No. 30, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

ONE complete Hydraulic BLOWING PLANT, with Feeders and Reservoir. Cheap. Also a number of WATER ENGINES by leading makers; all sizes. Prices from £6 upwards. Kirby, Northumberland Place, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

ORGANIST LIBRARY.—A quantity of Organ Voluntaries, Popular Pieces, TO BE SOLD CHEAP. "G.," 2, Court Lane Gardens, Dulwich.

LARGE QUANTITY OF CHOIR MUSIC FOR SALE at low prices. Anthems, Services, Holy Communion, &c. In good condition. Sets of 25 to 30 copies. Rector, Patching, Worthing.

ERARD GRECIAN DOUBLE-ACTION HARP, No. 4,516, FOR SALE. Write, Scott, 22, College Street, Burnham-on-Sea.

'CELLO.—Beautiful tone. Bow, and Waterproof Canvas Case. £10. 34, Wilmington Avenue, W.4.

ARNOLD'S HANDEL.—Score, 20 Vols. complete; boards, leather backs, perfect condition. £3, or nearest. Room wanted. Seen by appointment, Hardeman, Ightham, Sevenoaks.

MUSICAL TIMES and OPINION, about twenty years. For SALE. What offers? Cave, Avenue, Bakewell.

IMPORTANT TO COMPOSERS.—Send stamp for our latest prospectus on music publishing. The Norman Reed Music Company, 133A, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

BAND PARTS ARRANGED, Songs, Solos, &c. COPYING of any description by retired Conductor. Coulton, 7, Museum Street, Warrington.

MUSIC DUPLICATING.—All kinds, any number; perfect copies. Specimens and prices on application to E. Herrick, at 37, Amherst Road, West Ealing, W.

MUSIC COPYING, Transposition, Arrangements, Band Parts, &c., Smith, 40, Coniston Rd., Muswell Hill, N.10.

SINGING TEACHING CONNECTION, London. WANTED TO PURCHASE. Write, Box 26, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6.
ORGAN LESSONS at ST. STEPHEN'S WALBROOK, E.C.4. GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O. Tel.: Putney 4208.

AURAL TESTS.—MOST IMPORTANT PAPER. All the leading Examinations. Shows how to train up in order to pass the tests. Very successful. Send P.O. 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., July next. Secure now. New Series of 6 Model Essays on the book set for the Exam.: Success assured. Also valuable "hints" on writing the Essay. Enclose 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

Guide to A.R.C.M. and other Exams.
IN PIANOFORTE TEACHING.
2nd Edition, enlarged.
By ARTHUR FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.
96, The Crescent, Roundhay, Leeds.
"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.
"A handy brochure; gives a clear idea of what is expected."—Musical Record.
"Most original and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomas, Esq., L.R.A.M. AND MANY OTHERS. 2*s.* 6*d.*

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD.
2*s.* 6*d.* Post free; Abroad, 3*s.* Pre-eminent Technique.
It will thoroughly prepare you for the position of "Conductor."
M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

"THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS"
NARRATIVE TONE-POEM FOR ORGAN
BY ERNEST AUSTIN

FOR the many celebrations of John Bunyan's Tercentenary, 1928, organists are reminded of ERNEST AUSTIN'S Narrative Poem for Organ, "THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS," in twelve Parts.

No more suitable music could be chosen for such occasions. Each Part can be played as a separate movement. The entire work is frequently performed in four Recitals—three Parts being played at each, with introductory addresses by the presiding Minister.

An explanatory Booklet by Ambrose P. Porter, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., Organist and Master of the Choir of Lichfield Cathedral, will be sent free, on application to the Publisher.

J. H. LARWAY, 2, Percy St., London, W.1

CRAMER

MAGNIFICENT 1928
LATEST MODELS

| | |
|---|---|
| BABY GRAND ... | 120 Gns. |
| UPRIGHT GRAND | 65 Gns. |
| UPRIGHT PLAYER FULL SCALE LATEST DEVICES | 103 Gns. |

Write for our very generous Hire-Purchase Terms.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., Ltd.,
139 New Bond St., W.1.
46 Moorgate, E.C.2.
128/130 Kensington High Street, W.8.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'Phone: Mayfair 6641-5.

PIANOS

BY
Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer,
Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann
and other celebrated makers

The Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:
CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: Museum 0439.

FERD. KUECHLER'S
COURSE of VIOLIN INSTRUCTION
is a
TRIUMPH
of practical teaching

TO KNOW IT IS TO RECOMMEND IT

Send for a specimen copy from the publishers, or ask your music-seller to let you have one on approval.

HUG & Co.
MUSIC PUBLISHERS.
LEIPSIC

MUSIC

"Les Ballets du Concan" (L'Arrivée II., Op. 7) is the title of a new and characteristic dance composition for the pianoforte, by Dr. Carlos Eugenio Ferreira, barrister-at-law in Portuguese India, and distinguished pianist and writer.

The delightfully whimsical and melodious creations of Mr. Ferreira are works of art known all over the musical world, and they are a permanent joy alike to the cultured musician and every lover of melody.

Pianoforte solos by Mr. Ferreira are written on the Indian musical play entitled: "Dolent" (mandó), Goanish dance with variations, Op. 1; "Sobre o Mandovy," waltz, Op. 2; "Canto de Rucuminim," waltz, Op. 3; "Echos da India," melody, Op. 4; "Sous les palmiers," waltz, Op. 5; "Serenata Indiana" (mandó), with variations, Op. 6, printed in London; "Les Charmes de Gôa," waltz, Op. 7; "Les Ballets du Concan," one-step (sur des motifs et chansons Indiennes), Op. 8; and L'Arrivée II., Op. 7 (Mouvement de Tango—Modern dance).

The little song pieces in the volume, "Les Ballets du Concan," have been arranged for the pianoforte with a view to giving delight to quite young players, and others of modest skill who may desire to familiarise themselves with music which is full of the happiest recollections.

While presenting no serious difficulties, it is to be hoped that "Les Ballets du Concan" will be found to preserve faithfully the freshness of the originals, and that they may also possess some definite educational value.

"Les Ballets du Concan" (L'Arrivée II., Op. 7 (Tango) comprises sixteen pages, and may be obtained at the Library, Coelho, Pangim, Gôa, and of all Portuguese music sellers.

Price Rs1½, post free.

To all interested in the improvement of Church Praise

TEN ORDERS OF WORSHIP

From the Book of Congregational Worship, with Music selected and composed

by

SIR H. WALFORD DAVIES

Paper Covers, 2/-. Cloth Boards, 3/-

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.

GLASGOW: 152, Buchanan St. LONDON: 95, Wimpole St.
NEW YORK: 35, West 32nd Street.

To be performed by THE HAROLD BROOKE CHOIR at the Bishopsgate Institute, On Thursday, April 26, at 8 p.m.

AN ABRIDGED EDITION

OF

BELSHAZZAR

AN ORATORIO

FOR SOPRANO, (ALTO), TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

Price Three Shillings

The estimated time of performance is about 1 hour 45 minutes, and the work is scored for Strings, 2 Oboes (2 Bassoons, 2 Trumpets, Drums), and Continuo.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

PUBLISHED AS A NET BOOK

THE CATHEDRAL PRAYER BOOK

Being the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER with the Music necessary for the use of Choirs, together with the CANTICLES and PSALTER (the Cathedral Psalter), Pointed for Chanting.

EDITED BY SIR JOHN STAINER, M.A., MUS. DOC., OXON.
AND
THE REV. WILLIAM RUSSELL, M.A., MUS. BAC., OXON.

EDITIONS

No. 1. Demy 8vo, 628 pp., large type. With Canticles and Psalter pointed for Chanting:

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Cloth bevelled, red edges ... ... ... | 9 | 0 |
| Red Basil, red edges ... ... ... ... | 12 | 0 |

No. 2. Demy 8vo, 600 pp., large type. With Canticles and Psalter pointed, set to appropriate Chants (Cathedral Psalter Chants):

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Cloth bevelled, red edges ... ... ... | 9 | 0 |
| Red Basil, red edges ... ... ... ... | 12 | 0 |
| Paste grain, limp, gilt edges ... ... ... | 14 | 6 |
| Paste grain, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... | 16 | 0 |
| Turkey Morocco, limp ... ... ... | 17 | 6 |
| Turkey Morocco, boards, gilt roll ... ... | 21 | 0 |
| German Morocco, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... | 21 | 0 |
| INDIA PAPER EDITIONS: | | |
| Rutland Morocco ... ... ... ... | 17 | 6 |
| Turkey Morocco ... ... ... ... | 20 | 0 |

No. 3. Imperial 32mo, 696 pp., Pocket Edition. With Canticles and Psalter pointed for Chanting:

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Cloth bevelled, red edges ... ... ... | 5 | 6 |
| Red Basil, red edges ... ... ... ... | 7 | 6 |
| Paste grain, limp, gilt edges ... ... ... | 8 | 6 |
| Paste grain, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... ... | 10 | 6 |
| Turkey Morocco, limp ... ... ... | 11 | 6 |
| German Morocco, limp, round corners, red and gilt edges, gilt roll ... ... ... | 15 | 0 |
| INDIA PAPER EDITIONS: | | |
| Rutland Morocco ... ... ... ... | 12 | 0 |
| Turkey Morocco ... ... ... ... | 15 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

IN THE PRESS

HANDEL'S ORATORIO

SOLOMON

REVISED AND ABRIDGED EDITION

CHORUSES ARRANGED FOR FOUR PARTS

WORDS ENTIRELY REVISED
BIBLE TEXT

PREFACE BY SIR WALFORD DAVIES

SOLOMON

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.

152, Buchanan Street, GLASGOW.
95, Wimpole Street, LONDON.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION
OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Orchestral Parts on hire.

Also published separately.
ACT I.
PRICE 1s. 6d.

The time of performance of the complete concert edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete Score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED

THE

DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK

BOOK II.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

| TUNE. | METRE. | HYMN. |
|---|---|---|
| Abridge | C.M. | Be Thou my Guardian |
| Aberystwyth | 7.7.7.7.D. | Jesu, Lover of my soul |
| Alleluia, dulce Carmen | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Alleluia, song of sweetness |
| Capetown | 7.7.7.5. | Three in One, and One in Three |
| Caswall | 6.5.6.5. | Glory be to Jesus |
| Crüger | 7.6.7.6.D. | Hail to the Lord's Anointed |
| Dix | 7.7.7.7.7.7. | As with gladness men of old |
| Duke Street | L.M. | Fight the good fight with all thy might |
| Dundee | C.M. | The people that in darkness sat |
| Ebenezer | 8.7.8.7.D. | Hail, Thou once despisèd Jesus |
| Farley Castle | 10.10.10.10. | 'Lift up your hearts.' We lift them |
| Franconia | S.M. | Bless'd are the pure in heart |
| Lincoln | C.M. | Lord, in Thy Name Thy servants plead |
| London New | C.M. | God moves in a mysterious way |
| Mannheim | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us |
| Merton | 8.7.8.7. | Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding |
| O Filii et Filiæ (1st Version) | 8.8.8. (with Alleluias) | O sons and daughters, let us sing |
| O Filii et Filiæ (2nd Version) | 8.8.8. (with Alleluias) | |
| Old 124th | 10.10.10.10.10. | Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face |
| Passion Chorale | 7.6.7.6.D. | O Sacred Head, surrounded |
| Praise, my soul | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven |
| St. Albinus | 7.8.7.8. (with Alleluias) | Jesus lives! no longer now |
| St. Cross | L.M. | O come and mourn with me awhile |
| St. Cuthbert | 8.6.8.4. | Our Blest Redeemer, ere He breathed |
| St. James | C.M. | Thou art the Way; by Thee alone |
| St. Michael (Old 134th) | S.M. | Above the starry spheres |
| St. Stephen | C.M. | O God of Hosts, the mighty Lord |
| St. Thomas | 8.7.8.7.8.7. | Lo! He comes, with clouds descending |
| Southwell | S.M. | Thou Judge of quick and dead |
| Stuttgart | 8.7.8.7. | Earth has many a noble city |
| Tallis' Ordinal | C.M. | O God unseen yet ever near |
| University | C.M. | The God of Love my Shepherd is |
| Veni Creator | L.M. | Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire |
| Veni Sancte Spiritus | 7.7.7.7.7.7. | Come, Thou Holy Spirit, come |
| Westminster | C.M. | My God, how wonderful Thou art |

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus.D.

Monday, April 30th.—Summer Term begins.

Wednesday, May 2nd, 3 p.m.—Inaugural Ceremony and Address by Miss VIOLET VANBRUGH.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Organists who like music of reasonable modernism

SHOULD GET

"CATHEDRAL WINDOWS"

SIX PIECES ON GREGORIAN TUNES

BY

KARG-ELERT.

PRICE COMPLETE, FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

Here will be found all the characteristics which organists have learnt to expect from this composer—the rich harmonic idiom, the charming atmospheric effects, the tumultuous brilliance.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

ORGAN EXERCISES

designed for Candidates preparing for the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists and for Students generally

BY

E. W. TAYLOR

FIGURED BASS AND MELODY EXERCISES

Affording suitable exercise in Harmonizing Figured Basses and Melodies at sight.

Edition No. 575. Price 3*s.* net.

PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES, ARPEGGIOS, AND MISCELLANEOUS EXERCISES

with full directions for Study.

Edition No. 586. Price 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

VOCAL SCORE READING EXERCISES

Intended for Students who have made considerable advance in the study of music, affording material for daily practice until proficiency is attained.

Edition No. 558. Price 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

FREE.—New Choral Catalogue sent on request.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

GUSTAV HOLST

EGDON HEATH

(FOR ORCHESTRA)

"It makes no concessions to the ear and no attempts to be attractive, but it grips."
"We may wonder that his vision is so stark, but men have similarly questioned Hardy whether life was so grim as he saw it."
—The Times, Feb. 14, 1928.

"It is all strangely hushed and severe, and, so to speak, awestruck. Masterly to a consummate degree in the effect of spaciousness and bleak majesty made by the composer with the fewest possible notes and orchestral colours."—Daily Mail, Feb. 14, 1928.

"'Egdon Heath' is the nearest approach we have to painting in terms of musical notes. The achievement is notable even for a past-master of orchestral colour like Holst. He conjures up the vision which was Hardy's of something mysterious and gigantic, of a force that is not brutal yet irresistible."—Daily Telegraph, Feb. 14, 1928.

SCORE, 10*s.* 6*d.*; String Parts, 3*s.* 4*d.*; Wind Parts, 7*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

Photo by] [Elliott & Fry.

ALFRED HERBERT BREWER

1865—1928

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

APRIL 1 1928

(For List of Contents see Page 370.)

SCHUBERT'S STYLE

By Richard Capell

There is in Schubert no bad music—which is not to say no inferior music. For he wrote with style. He had, even when he was least vividly himself, an admirable pen.

What are the conditions of bad writing by considerable men? The first is a laboriously-acquired and uncertain grasp of the language employed. Another, a lack of delight in the sheer means of expression; and, again, a mind naturally incommunicative and unsupple. And another, a straining beyond the fair sweep of the writer's experience and imagination.

Let us observe how Schubert was favoured by nature and grace. Music was virtually his mother tongue. The first pieces, 'Hagars Klage' and the rest, at the beginning of the collected edition of the songs, were composed when he was fourteen. They are not absolutely interesting, but the boy who wrote them had unmistakably a grasp of style. They are fluent; they are as correct as Zumsteeg's pieces on which they were modelled, and quite as vivacious; and while on general lines they follow the exemplar, they are not mere imitations.

The music which Schubert so early wrote and thought in as glibly as in the language of speech was a local and contemporary idiom. The musical world was Vienna. Of its three divinities, Mozart had not long been dead (1791), and was a living memory for any number of persons; Haydn lived on for twelve years into Schubert's life; and Zeus himself was present on the scene, in the person of Beethoven, down to 1827.

Music at Vienna was a small Hellenic city-state, extremely busy and in the closest touch with heaven. Its practical history was only a generation old. Such a composer as Handel was rather vaguely thought of as an archaic Titan. As Egypt to Greece, so was Italy to this young state—the immemorial fount of art and learning, now appearing somewhat distant and desiccated. We whose music is a monstrous empire that has embraced Moscow and Madrid and as greedily annexes provinces in time as in space, are farther from Schubert's world than was Hadrian's Rome from the Athens of Erechtheus. Let us imagine, if we can, a young English composer, working between 1911 and 1928, for whom music for all practical purposes was what had been composed in London since about 1870. His lot would at least have been less confusing.

The most beguiling music in the Viennese air was that of the symphony, sonata, and quartet. The opera had Mozart, and, later on, Weber. Then there was the popular music of streets, taverns, and dancing places, which no doubt was not unaffected by the native idioms of the Hapsburgs' non-German subject peoples who have always been numerously represented at Vienna.

All these are among the elements of Schubert's music. They are to be called constituents rather than influences: his words and elements of phraseology, so to speak, and not his matter. If he writes a Ländler or waltz, as in 'Hark! hark, the lark,' it is indisputably his own; but only a Viennese, and perhaps only a Viennese of about that time, would so instinctively have set a song of Shakespeare's to a Ländler tune. Similarly, the suggestion is often conveyed of the Adagio of a string quartet—but a Schubertian Adagio—as, for example, in 'Litanei.' The setting of Schiller's 'Sehnsucht' is made of what looks like the material for a pianoforte sonatina. The operatic scena (Recitative, Andante, Allegro) occurs principally among the earlier songs—e.g., Schmidt's 'Wanderer.' There are hymn-like movements, for instance, 'Der Kreuzzug' and 'Todtengräber-Weise,' which seem to have sprung from the male-voice quartet music of the time; and folk-song is suggested again and again.

Almost the last place in which to find the sources of the Schubertian river is the German song-writing before his time. It has been said how he modelled the long, cantata-like pieces of his youth on Zumsteeg (two or three of whose compositions Mandyczewski conveniently prints in a supplement for comparison). This was clearly a sort of exercise on Schubert's part. It has to be remembered that the vast editions of his works are due not to the composer's choice, but to the post-mortem publication of all the masses of his papers. Even so, only a few of his hundreds of songs show a direct relationship to the work of such men as Zelter, Zumsteeg, and Reichardt. The true Schubertian song had no palpable ancestor. It was the assemblage by some unexampled magnetism, in a fortunate hour, of all the fiery particles of poetry and music that were in the air.

German song had not had a very wonderful history down to Schubert's time. The courtly Italian school had hardly ceased to reign at Vienna. Handel and Mozart, great masters of a vocal style, were half Italianate. The typical achievements of the Germans had been in instrumental music. They had had no school to compare with the English lutenists-singers, and no one like Purcell.

But then came the new German poetry, and, above all, the splendour of Goethe. What Schubert had in common with a few minor composers who a little before his time had gone in for song-writing was—rather than points of musical technics—an attraction to poetry such as Bach and Handel, Haydn, and Mozart had, it is perfectly obvious, hardly dreamt of.

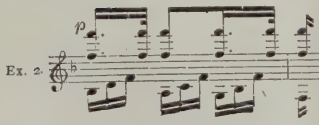
We say Mozart; and at once have to admit the exceptional, the unique 'Veilchen' (Goethe), a piece which, without being exactly Schubertian, deals with German poetry in a new and exquisite way, and which sets us wondering how Mozart, if he had lived, would have responded to the strong new literary currents of the 19th century. He would still have been less than sixty at the time of 'Gretchen am Spinnrade' and 'Erlkönig.' Haydn's best songs, on the other hand, happen to have been the English canzonets he composed in London in 1792.

Beethoven's songs include some precious chips from the workshop. Even he, the unliterary, the almost illiterate, was affected by Goethe's glory. Once, now and then, by sheer musical thought, he made a superb song, like 'Wonne der Wehmuth,' his share of which is noble out of all relation to the tearful text. And still more rarely he was captivated by a poem almost to a Schubertian degree, and set pianoforte and voice collaborating towards a new effect of picturesqueness. Our example must be the 'Flea' song from 'Faust,' a brilliant and astonishing piece.

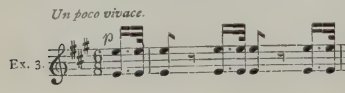
It is too much of an exception to have a real bearing on Schubert's case; but it does show what currents were in the air.

There are one or two curious parallels between Beethoven's songs and Schubert's, apart from their settings of Goethe's poems. It seems strange that Schubert should in his youth (1814) have tried his hand at Matthisson's 'Adelaide,' after Beethoven had set the poem once for all in his noble, classic fashion. Perhaps this falls within the same category as the Zumsteeg exercises. It is more curious that Schubert when he was twenty-five should have set Sauter's 'Wachtelschlag' in a not very dissimilar style from Beethoven's song of more than twenty years before. The quail's jerky call haunts both songs. Beethoven renders it thus:

and again:

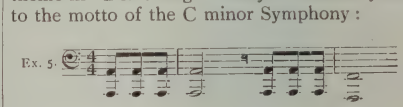


Schubert's quail sings in 6-8 time:



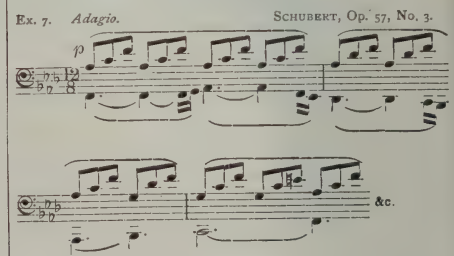
and again:

The tracking of reminiscences is apt to be a petty sort of criticism, and Schubert as a matter of fact affords it singularly little scope. If one or two points are raised here, it is not in any spirit of disparagement. The intention is to suggest that Schubert did not take over the song as a certain and special form, but swept into his association with the poets all the music that was prompted within him. His art was one of extraordinary variety and freshness of shapes and colours, which were demanded of his musical faculty by his keen appreciation of the poetic scene and action that were to be illustrated. The charm of the man lies in the generous response he was perpetually making to the appeal of nature and of the human affections. The glory of the musician is the unfailing alchemy with which he transmuted, Schubertized, what we have called the music in the air. Considering what were Beethoven's powers, innovations, and prestige, the wonder is that Schubert was not more impressed by him. Really he was hardly impressionable at all. His mind refused to be stamped on; instead, it absorbed, and what it absorbed fructified. The theme in 'Der Zwerg' is only in that way related to the motto of the C minor Symphony:



and later:

Another example or two will show how Beethoven pervaded Schubert's air, and at the same time how Schubert had but to breathe to render the air his very self. Thus he takes up, in 1815, a poem 'To the Moon.' It is clear enough that verbal associations set in movement tones and harmonies reminiscent of a certain Sonata in C sharp minor of some fifteen years before:



The process is carried on in a region of the mind that is certainly not conscious. Nothing in Schubertian biography is more familiar than

Spaun's account of the furious composing of the 'Erlkönig.' The poem (and this was far from being his only experience of the sort) took possession of the composer in a positively supernatural way. Before Schubert's incomparable achievement, at which astonishment never fails, we could indeed believe anything about it rather than that it was consciously elaborated from a suggestion culled from Beethoven. At the same time, the evidence would have to be almost supernatural to convince us that Schubert had never heard 'Fidelio'—notably the duet 'Nur hurtig fort' in the dungeon scene:

Ex. 8. Beethoven, 'Fidelio,' Act 2.

But such textual approximations to Beethoven in Schubert amount to hardly anything.* The real bearing of Beethoven's art on Schubert is a more general question. Beethoven's restlessly and profoundly ranging mind opened up new worlds of music. He pointed to dozens of strange ways which those with the strength could explore further for themselves. Many of his indications meant nothing to Schubert, who never, for instance, adopted the Beethoven scowl. Beethoven's general significance lay in his sense of an illimitable universe; depth beyond depth. His nature, more complex and variegated, included among much else a certain Schubertian element of rapturousness and sacred exhilaration. What Schubert first of all gathered from his example was the endlessness of possibility. The next thing was, with his special and delightful faculties, to pursue the suggestions of himself in Beethoven, those moments in the other's music to which he had such a natural affinity that a movement like the Allegretto of the seventh Symphony is felt to be positively Schubertian.

(To be concluded.)

* In the first version of the 'Erlkönig' the quavers are written eight to the bar.

A CONDUCTORLESS ORCHESTRA

By Leonid Sabaneev

Probably few are aware that the political revolution in Russia was accompanied by an original and independent revolt in a more modest and restricted sphere — the sphere of the orchestra. The discerning historian may even attempt, not unsuccessfully, to connect these two phenomena. At the time of the outbreak, when we became very painfully and exasperatingly conscious of many things, the orchestral musician —who had always been to a certain extent a 'king' in the musico-artistic world—was undoubtedly liable to feel that he too was wronged by fate and the conditions of life. On this occasion the protest, contrary to revolutionary usage, proceeded on creative and not on economic lines.

In the eyes of the orchestral musician the conductor has invariably been the object of a superstitious reverence, and at the same time a detested figure. The profound difference between him (the absolute monarch of the musical kingdom) and his people (the musicians of the orchestra) has always made itself felt. From this point of view the conductor has been a sort of usurper, a man who does not play himself but by some means deprives the orchestra of the fame and success which belong to it by right, and takes the whole credit to himself. To many orchestral players, who have generally come from the ranks of those who in some way or other have been unsuccessful in their artistic careers, this usurpation is particularly trying. In their heart of hearts they cherish for the conductor—the splendid aristocrat of the musical family—the feeling of animosity which accompanies failure.

It is possible that the revolutionary atmosphere of Russia from 1918-20 accentuated all these moods and feelings, otherwise the preaching of 'revolt against the conductor,' carried on with so much ardour and conviction, would not have had so rapid and unexpected a success. It was initiated by Zeitlin, the Moscow professor of the violin—an old and worthy artist, a fine orchestral player, and the leader of Kussewitzky's orchestra. His idea was that the conductor is superfluous; that the players are such excellent musicians in themselves that they know as well as any conductor how things ought to be done: that in the end it is they, of course, who perform, and not the conductor, and that it rests with them whether they will or will not carry out his artistic injunctions. Zeitlin saw the prototype of the conductorless orchestra in the chamber ensemble. We know that there are chamber combinations of four, five, eight, even eleven instruments. What, then, is the numerical limit of combinations capable of playing without a conductor? Zeitlin declares that there is none, that an orchestra of a hundred members can wrestle as artistically with the problems as a quartet of four instruments: it is only a question of work and musical culture.

The fact that conductors of skill and eminence have been lacking in post-revolutionary Russia may have been the second contributing cause, in addition to the old and concealed hostility of the orchestral player towards the conductor. When Coates, and Kussewitzky left the country, and Safonov died, there remained no big force capable of rehabilitating the position of the conductor. The second-rate men, with their ordinary technique, could only confirm by their practice the theory of Zeitlin: the orchestra could often have played better without them than with them. They merely prevented good musicians from expressing their artistic individuality.

And so this strange event was accomplished. Its realisation was aided by the fact that Zeitlin happened to have at his disposal the Moscow Symphony Orchestra, an indisputably first-class body which had often aroused the enthusiasm of such foreign conductors as Mengelberg, Nikisch, Weingartner, and Colonne. Accustomed to play under big men, the performers really knew the standard orchestral repertory by heart.

This orchestra could without difficulty imagine that the conductor was not there. In any case, the Moscow musical world was one fine day brought face to face with the accomplished fact of a huge orchestra performing, without a conductor, a programme consisting of Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, his Violin Concerto, and the Overture to 'Egmont.'

This new 'First Symphonic Ensemble' (or, in its abbreviated form, 'Persimfans'*) presented a strange appearance. The players sat in a circle, facing inwards in order the better to see one another and to catch the fleeting, almost imperceptible signals by which chamber music performers usually maintain unity of rhythm in the ensemble. The outlying flanks of the orchestra were cleverly kept together by means of a system of what might be described as subsidiary 'leaders' of the different sections. It is true that some twenty rehearsals were needed in order to secure a harmonious and well-blended performance of this very familiar programme, nevertheless the experiment may be regarded as extremely successful, and the 'Persimfans' became almost at once a favourite with the Moscow public.

As was to be expected, the critics and musical authorities were not unanimous in their opinion of this novel and original organization. A section of the musicians considered that it was a new era in the history of the orchestra, and that while the Persimfans might not have achieved an entirely united and artistic performance it was merely a question of time; the experiment had proved the possibility of a conductorless orchestra which at all events enjoyed equal rights with one presided over by a conductor. Glazounov, Egon Petri, Darius Milhaud, Prokofiev, and other well-known musicians were warmly in favour of the Persimfans. But it had not a few opponents, amongst whom were the majority of the conductors and music critics. They pointed out that the conductorless orchestra was lacking in artistry; that it could not produce elemental feelings of exaltation, that its playing was impersonal, a sort of 'mean arithmetical' affair, the product of the reciprocal action of the psychologies of the individual performers—psychologies not subordinated to a sole reacting centre. It was further indicated that the presentation of a comparatively simple programme with some success demanded a vast expenditure of time and energy—twenty very trying rehearsals—whereas the orchestra would have played it under a conductor almost without any.

In this there was much truth, as it was not clear whether the conductorless orchestra could deal with new compositions which the players had not previously studied with conductors. Practice showed, however, that it was possible, and the Persimfans, which during its existence had given upwards of two hundred concerts, emerged triumphant in this respect. It has produced, not only the most complex works of the old répertoire, such as Beethoven's Ninth, Scriabin's 'Poem of Ecstasy,' the Symphonic Poems of Liszt and Richard Strauss, but has also played—satisfactorily on the whole, but at the expense of numerous rehearsals—new compositions by Stravinsky, Prokofiev, and many moderns.

However, the enemies and opponents went on to assert that the orchestra without a conductor was essentially an orchestra with a conductor (in the person of Zeitlin), the difference being that this conductor took charge of the rehearsals only, and the performance was given without him. The very idea of a conductorless symphonic ensemble was therefore suspect. They pointed out that during the actual concert the players kept a watchful eye on Zeitlin and his bow—the bow of the first violin—which approximated the Persimfans to a simple orchestra, such as a restaurant band, relying on the conductorship of the first fiddle. In actual fact it seems that at rehearsals it was obliged to have recourse to genuine conducting with a baton, and with all the attributes down to beating out the rhythm with the foot; but this belongs essentially to the laboratory, into which criticism of the finished performance has no right to pry.

In objectively estimating the achievements of the Persimfans it must be recognized that its rôle was very honourable and important in the special circumstances of the musical life of revolutionary Russia, when there proved to be no big conductors in the country.

During the period 1920-27 the Persimfans carried on its shoulders nearly the whole of the symphonic culture, which but for it would simply have ceased to exist. But on the other hand we have to admit that from the point of view of economy of artistic means, the preference must undoubtedly be given to a conducted orchestra, since it is able to obtain far more quickly and cheaply the results which, ceteris paribus, must be considered the best. Zeitlin's dream that the individual players would reveal a wonderful quality of performance and a thorough discernment has remained merely a dream. The conductorless orchestra has not attained the heights reached without toil by conductors of even average ability, to say nothing of the summits. The alluring idea of a collective performance comes up against a series of technical obstacles, and we are involuntarily led to the conclusion that there is a limit to the chamber type of performance without a conductor, and that the orchestral ensemble lies beyond it.

* A combination of the first syllables of 'Pervy simfonichesky ansambl' (Trans. Note).

In the light of this, the experiment of the Persimfans is seen to be an interesting feat—as interesting and astonishing as walking the tight-rope when one can get along far more easily and comfortably on the floor. Due tribute must be paid to the heroism of the members of the symphonic ensemble. At a very difficult economic period—in Russia's lean years—captivated by their idea, they worked self-sacrificingly and disinterestedly; for the performances did not pay and the musicians received an insignificant reward for their idealistic impulse. Perhaps these economic conditions explain why it is that the organism of the Persimfans, steadfast and united in the early days, gradually began to break up; individual members left it; its personnel was constantly changing, and this was bound to affect the quality of the performances. Nevertheless the Persimfans has proved to be one of the most solid and durable of the many musical organizations of the new Russia; it has lasted to the present day, sustaining the attacks, the open hostility, the intrigues, and the stubborn fighting of its musical rivals, and often it has not only beaten back these assaults, but has conquered along the whole front, dislodging other forms of symphonic playing. All this undoubtedly shows a certain vitality in the very idea of a conductorless ensemble—an idea which may be vital outside of and apart from its artistic suitability and importance. The orchestral members declare that in playing without a conductor they experience an uplift of the artistic spirit incomparably greater than when they are controlled by the baton, no matter who wields it. And one can believe this: for the first time the musician has felt himself to be an artist enjoying equal rights, a member of a powerful body, an artist utterly and finally responsible for his own performance and not obliged to share the appreciation and divide the laurels with some individual who, though in a position of authority, does not belong to the personnel of the orchestra.

Here, in this purely social factor, lies the most important and essential significance of the original reform achieved by Zeitlin in distant Moscow. Artistically one may have no faith in its living force; but its real vitality can be determined only when the idea has been put into practice in other places, and when it no longer remains, as it now is, an isolated phenomenon.

(Translated by S. W. Pring.)

THE SINGER'S EAR

By W. S. Drew

In a mid-Victorian poem whose main theme is the tiresome self-pity of a jilted youth—'a trampled orphan,' as he calls himself—it is curious to find a remarkable prophecy of aerial warfare, several lines which are known and quoted wherever English is spoken,* and also a concise summary of the history of almost all branches of human endeavour. 'Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers' accurately reviews the history of singing and its teaching. Wisdom is the power to use knowledge aright; from which it follows that a man may know a great deal and yet be very unwise.

It is only within comparatively recent times, since the invention of the laryngoscope by Garcia, that the mechanism of the voice has been clearly understood. The use of the laryngoscope brought to light a number of definite facts about the action of the vocal cords, and the additional use of stroboscopic methods of examining the movements of vibrating bodies made it possible to follow the action of this part of the vocal mechanism in considerable detail.

Unfortunately, at about the same time singers and their teachers discovered the diaphragm. It had, it is true, been known to the anatomists before, but it remained for the vocalists to discover the wonderful things it could do. They decided that it could among other things, 'support the voice' and 'colour the tone' as occasion required, while the rectus abdominis, its near neighbour and colleague in the complicated act of breathing, got no credit for its contractions. Part of these magical powers, I feel sure, were the outcome of its picturesque name: the 'phr' and the 'gm' especially being redolent of mystery.

In the excitement of this discovery complicated systems of 'voice-production' were devised, most of them unnatural and unnecessary, and some of them positively injurious; so it is not to be wondered at that no one seemed really satisfied that the teaching of singing had taken any remarkable stride forward. Those who were convinced that nothing of the kind had taken place sometimes proceeded to try to prove it in the most unfair way possible, by comparing the phenomenal singers of one, or several generations, with the rank and file of modern times.

But it is not necessary to institute historical comparisons in order to show that there are two styles of singing, the good and the bad; and it is not possible to know how much of the second style past audiences had to endure. We do know, however, that we in our day have to listen to a good deal of it. How many modern singers do we hear that sing absolutely in tune, who take their intervals cleanly and accurately, whose voices are beautiful in tone and flexible in use, and whose diction is clear and unaffected? This may seem to be an exacting list of virtues, but not many people would bother to hear a violinist a second time unless he had all of them except the last.

* One, at least, has suffered a painful death at the hands of the Jazz-maker.

So the question arises whether we get anything from the modern singer to make up for deficiencies in one or more of these respects. The answer is that we often get singing that is rich in dramatic suggestion, and singers with a strong sense of rhythm who are very skilful in their presentation of words. Now the intelligent and dramatic presentation of words is not primarily a musical feat at all, nor can rhythm be claimed as an especial prerogative of music as the term music is usually understood; and most people will probably agree with the statement that a good deal of very interesting singing that we listen to nowadays is rather poor on the musical side. For instance, I have lately heard two excellent singers—excellent because of the artistic pleasure they give—neither of whom was able to sing the music of the first song in Schubert's 'Schöner Müllerin' cycle:

Das Wan-dern ist des Mül - lers Lust
Vom Was-ser hab - en wir's ge - lernt
Das sehn wir auch den Rä - dern ab
Die Stei - ne selbst so schwer sie sind

It is very difficult to sing the semiquaver arpeggio passage in the first phrase accurately and smoothly† to the awkward German words in the first four verses, but it certainly should not be beyond the powers of a first-class singer. Failures of this kind are chiefly due to the fact that so very few singers really know what the passage sounds like when it is correctly done. If the singer has a fine natural ear which has only been neglected, it will be a revelation to him to hear the passage played on a fiddle, or, better still, on a clarinet.

The neglect of this kind of ear-training has been responsible for many defects in modern singing. Interest has been concentrated upon the anatomical, mechanical, and acoustical facts about the voice—especially by those whose understanding of these matters was not at all profound—so that as regards both breathing and tone-production there has been a tendency to substitute a sophisticated conscious control based on insufficient knowledge for the more natural control by the ear. It is as true of the voice as it is of any other bodily mechanism, that the most detailed knowledge of it can never be used any further than to ensure that nature does her work under the most favourable conditions. In this connection the following quotation from Darwin's 'Expression of the Emotions in Men and Animals' is very much to the point: 'The conscious wish to perform a reflex action sometimes stops or interrupts its performance, though the proper sensory nerves may be stimulated. For instance, many years ago I laid a small wager with a dozen young men that they would not sneeze if they took snuff, although they all declared that they invariably did so; accordingly they all took a pinch, but from wishing much to succeed, not one sneezed, though their eyes watered, and all, without exception, had to pay me the wager.'* Thus, no amount of knowledge about the action of the complicated muscular mechanism which is used for a sneeze can produce the effect that a slight tickling in the nose or cooling of the skin brings about so successfully; and further, conscious attention to the physical sensations which accompany the sneeze, so far from helping it, actually prevents it happening.

The art of singing is dependent on a whole series of muscular mechanisms similar to those that produce a sneeze, and is controlled to a great extent, but not entirely, in similar ways. It is the business of the singer and his teacher to find the appropriate stimuli to bring these various singing mechanisms into action.

The act of breathing has been a particularly attractive one for the theorist and faddist to interfere with, because although it goes on automatically during, for instance, the unconsciousness produced by concussion, or during sleep, its rate and balance and extent can also be controlled consciously; and at one time or another the most fantastic, uncomfortable, and even injurious interferences with nature have been advocated and practised. It is not easy for a member of this wicked and sophisticated generation to find out exactly how nature does intend one to take a deep breath. The only thing that it seems possible to suggest within the limits of a short article is that one should procure a healthy savage, make him run till he is out of breath, and then watch how he breathes. Meantime if any mute, inglorious Caruso should sigh because he cannot sing Schumann's 'Die Rose, die Lilie . . .' in one breath, that very sighing, if it is watched carefully, may help him to achieve his desire. No one need argue that healthy savages are not common objects of the physiological laboratory, or need point out what is indeed an obvious fact, namely, that nature sometimes, so far as the individual is concerned, does her work badly—'So careful of the type she seems, So careless of the single life'—for it is plain what that fanciful experiment is meant to suggest.

Some one may reasonably ask what all this has to do with the singer's ear. David Hume, writing about a hundred and eighty years ago in quite another connection, will provide us with an answer. 'Here the mind wills a certain event; immediately another event, unknown to ourselves, and totally different from the one intended, is produced: this event produces another equally unknown; till at last, through a long succession, the desired event is produced.' The idea of a long vocal phrase arises in the ear-memory of a singer, followed by a desire to sing it; immediately a complicated series of nervous changes spread out from the auditory centres in the brain; these cause contractions of the muscles which fill the lungs with air, of those that approximate and tense the vocal cords, and an innumerable and orderly succession of movements of the tongue, lips, and soft palate.

* The particular technical difficulties of such passages are discussed in the author's 'Technique of Song-Interpretation,' in the chapter on the singing of intervals (Oxford University Press).

† There is no justification for the aspirated staccato method affected by some singers.

* The remainder of the paragraph is also of interest: 'Sir H. Holland remarks that attention paid to the act of swallowing interferes with the proper movements, from which it probably follows, at least in part, that some people find it so difficult to swallow a pill.'

The more firmly the attention is fixed upon the idea of the sounds which are intended to be produced, the more smoothly and efficiently will all this complicated co-ordination take place.

. . . . . .

The realisation that the voice, as far as flexibility in pitch-changes is concerned, cannot compete with such instruments as the flute and the clarinet has led singers to be content with a low standard in one part of their technique. In vocal training attention has been concentrated upon those powers of the voice with which other instruments cannot compete, namely, variation of quality and the articulation of words. This in itself is reasonable enough; but since composers have had the good sense to give up writing for the voice passages which can be done much better on another instrument, it is a pity that singers have not been trained to sing these simpler melodies as well as the voice can do them. The fault here is by no means only insufficient practice at scales, arpeggios, and intervals in general. It is plain that very exact adjustments of the muscles of the larynx are necessary for the production of notes of definite musical pitch, and it is equally plain that these adjustments are entirely under the control of the auditory centres in the brain. From this it follows that in order to sing an interval correctly the singer must have a very exact idea of the sound of that interval. It has never been recognised that part of a singer's training should consist in listening to the melodies of his songs played on an instrument other than the voice, preferably on a keyed instrument, where precision of interval-taking is guaranteed.*

The voice has to find a practical solution to problems more complex than those set to other instruments, for it has to be at the same time both a musical instrument and also an organ of speech. This dual nature of singing tends to confuse the ear, and is almost certainly the main reason why so many singers do not know what the melodies of their songs sound like when the intervals are cleanly and accurately done. The success which the singer makes of his intervals depends primarily upon what may be called his auditory ideals. The sound of his own singing, during practice and performance, tends to confirm him in his inaccuracies, and the number of other singers it is safe to use as models is very small. Thus it becomes very necessary for him to listen to those instruments which have no natural disabilities in this respect.

If we now pass on to the special powers of the vocal instrument, we find evidences of the same neglect. It is obvious that a child learns to say all the vowel sounds of its mother tongue with no instruction other than that which it gets from auditory impressions. In the same way anyone with a good 'ear'—and those without it are obviously wasting their time at singing—may learn to pronounce foreign vowels with great accuracy when childhood is long past. As the different vowels are due to variations in the positions of the lips, tongue, and soft palate, it is plain that the muscles of these organs are also under the control of the auditory centres; although, like the muscles concerned in the act of breathing, each of them may also be moved in response to visual or muscular 'memories.' From this it follows that the voice of the individual has a considerable power, within the limits of its own constant characteristics, of copying the sound of the voice of another. In fact, what has just been said is no more than calling attention to the details of something which no one denies—the power of mimicry which the human voice possesses.

The student of singing should take every possible opportunity of hearing all those singers who have fine, well-balanced voices,* so that there may be formed in his mind a clear ideal of beautiful vocal tone; for the possession of this auditory ideal is one of the essentials for the steady improvement in the quality of his own voice. Teachers who have not fine voices themselves should at least make certain that their pupils often hear singers that have; even though the artistic merits of the singing be poor, for it should not be beyond the powers of a discriminating pupil to emulate one singer's voice and another's singing—e.g., the tone and power of a Caruso, and the dignity and restraint of a Gerhardt.

The condition of the art of singing at the present time indicates that there is need for a much greater attention to the ear as an organ of control of the vocal mechanism: first a cultivation of its power of distinguishing not only pitch-changes but also varieties of quality, especially vocal quality; and afterwards its associated power of reproducing or embellishing these sounds by giving the right instructions to the muscles of breathing, phonation, and diction.

In an age when the imperative mood stares at us from every advertisement hoarding, telling us to go there, do this, and eat that—or more of it—the singer can hardly be offended if he is advised to put up a text in his room reminding him of his most important duties: 'Listen and Remember!'

* There has been a tendency to look down upon people who learn things 'by ear.' It would take too long to discuss the rights and wrongs of this attitude, but it has had the unfortunate consequence of making good 'readers' think they know things that they do not really know.

* Sir Henry Wood has recently pointed out how few singers thought it worth while to hear Battistini when he was last in England. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that a student with a really first-class ear-memory would need very little instruction in tone-production other than that which he could get from constant listening to a singer such as Battistini.

PHASES OF IMPRESSION AND EXPRESSION

By Mrs. Frank Liebich

Expressions are shaped by the dynamics of impressions. Both are vibrational; one being intrinsic, the other extrinsic. Unsought impressions are, as often as not, more richly laden with suggestions than those that are sought. A sudden glimpse of unsuspected beauty will sometimes awaken a hidden need for just that particular manifestation, bringing to birth a rhythmic current of thought and expression. The creative power of an artist is quickened by the magnetic touch on ear or eye of beauty that comes in contact with his sense of sight or hearing. Imagination will furnish still greater incentives to creative expression. But the finest factors are dulled and hindered if the impelling power is uncontrolled. Thought then becomes clogged, and is finally rendered inert. Any hindrances to expression become magnified when music is the subject of the creative process. The work of a composer who cannot clarify his thought or who is unable to sift and condense his expression has little chance of winning fame. It is the productions in which expression has transcended impression that either await or have achieved immortality. A drastic repudiation of extraneous matter is essential in a composition if the composer's expression of his impressions is to receive answering echoes in the minds of his hearers. Thus only can he impart to each and all some share in his aural experiences condensed and brought within measurable distance of the ideal that had presented itself to his mind.

Trois cris de flûte disent mieux la vie
Que toutes les paroles de Hésiode, said a French poet. And it is just because of this frequent conciseness of beauty of phrase and by reason of the immeasurable power possessed by the art of insinuating itself into the labyrinths of the human personality, that music can cast such diverse impressions on to the minds and hearts of a vast audience. Each listener re-creates in his own image what he has heard; hence the wide divergence of taste, of understanding, of appreciation: each and all varying with the individual knowledge, the sensitiveness, the responsive power of the various personalities upon whom the impression of a creative artist's work is made. Asked to describe his impressions of a first hearing of a great musical work, an ordinary listener or even a cultured amateur might well feel nonplussed.

His impressions of the big, sonorous expanses of sound, severally named either symphony, symphonic poem, overture, or concerto, that played on his auditive faculties for the space of an hour or more, would be, to an inexperienced listener, as difficult to put into words as it would be to describe a wave of the sea—and to attempt to define a wave is to succeed only in immobilising a constantly shifting impression. A professorial analysis of a symphony, sonata, or other musical work in the study or class-room will enable a student to dissect the production and reduce its various fragmentary parts to the rules of musical composition. At a concert he will become aware that the work he had parcelled out and analysed is a living organism of which he can have continually diversified impressions, it being the outcome of its creator's expression of his most sentient impressions and knowledge of the combined power and individuality of the various orchestral instruments and of the ordered beauty of harmonic sound. A symphony, song, or instrumental solo plays on the mind and acts on the intelligence of each listener according to the knowledge and culture he brings to bear upon it. Thus there is some reason for recognising that there must be an élite in art, an aristocracy of creative and instrumental artists and of cognoscenti, as well as a mixed crowd of lay folk of very varying knowledge and unequal receptive power.

Individual expression has not always had its part in music. The melody of the ancient Greeks was choral. That of the liturgy was equally impersonal. It was in the first attempts at opera that personal expression was given full scope, Monteverdi in his operas being the pioneer in the matter of musical presentment of sentiment and passion. His individual use of the dominant seventh was a kind of lever that helped to throw down barriers and thus opened out hitherto unrealised opportunities for the use of sentiment and the consequent expression of feeling and passion.

In the immediate present, human emotion in music is giving way to an abstract sense of the beauty of pure sound. Timbre, which up till now has played a subordinate part, is as important as rhythm, melody, and harmony. Tone has its own intrinsic value as expression. The prismatic web of sound appertaining to each single note like unto the scintillation of a jewel possesses its own far-reaching resonant expression. Its appeal to a listener now no longer appertains to pictorial or emotional impressions but to more intellectual appraisements of the sheer beauty of vibrating tone. Atonality and the fine shading of pure sound being an analysis of the elements of music is simply the older methods carried to their furthest and most logical conclusion. In many of Malipiero's symphonic and pianoforte compositions, in Bartók's last Quartet, the beauty of the iridescent mists of overtones of sound rival any sunset afterglow.

Impression and expression in a modern work are derived from the harmonics of richly-constructed chords and combinations of chords resembling the beauty of suggestion and meaning of well-chosen words and sentences in prose or poem. Modern music, however, needs close intimacy if it is to leave a lasting impression on the mind. Familiarity will breed respect. It was once said by a wise French critic that there are no shooting-stars in music's firmament. And indeed all is related or interrelated. Only a wide extensive knowledge of the past of music can help to an appreciation of the present. Throughout its history genius calls to genius like deep unto deep. Each great musical composer has had his own individual impressions of his predecessors. But in order to earn his own right to succession each one has had to formulate his own individual impressions of the wide domain of sound, and shape them into continuously varying beauty and individuality of expression.

It is a hard taskmaster who would expect the big public to keep in touch with the rapid trend of modern music. The expression of the advance guard of any art can only be for the educated few. Close on fifty years ago Debussy published his 'Belle au Bois Dormant,' and his 'Pelléas' has seen twenty years of life. The French master's subjective tone-painting, his anthropomorphic conception of nature, is now somewhat stale and old-fashioned. Had he lived and kept his health he would doubtless have been the first to realise this, and he might easily have surpassed both his early and his latest works. But there is still a vast untutored public to whom his music must seem the latest expression of modernity. And it is well that there are grades of listeners. In the vast domain of music there is scope and opportunity for them all. Genius will always find its own niche in the Temple of Fame. The minority will recognise it from the first by its distinctive mind, its responsive intellection, its individual expression of the most varied and delicate impressions of the world of unending sound. In music as in every other art impressions are for all and every; expression for the gifted few.

THE FUTURE OF OPERA IN ENGLAND

By Dyneley Hussey

The past of it is odd enough. Our first opera-house was opened during the Commonwealth for the surreptitious presentation of stage-plays under the guise of operas; for by some curious process of muddled reasoning, which still persists in our refusal to permit Delila or Salome on the stage unless they are accompanied with music, the Puritans regarded operas as less noxious to the morals than plays. Perhaps they took the view that singing made the words and actions unintelligible (as it often does), or anticipated the lady who said of 'Der Rosenkavalier': 'Of course, the story's quite dreadfully shocking, but one can ignore that and just enjoy the music.'

It is characteristic, too, that one of our few composers of outstanding genius wrote his only opera for an amateur performance at a girls' school in Chelsea. It is one of the tragedies of English musical history that Henry Purcell died at the age of thirty-six, in the year 1695. Within fifteen years the Italian opera was firmly established in London, and Handel was entering upon his career of short-lived triumph at the Queen's Theatre, Haymarket. Had Purcell survived until that time, it can hardly be doubted that he would have seized eagerly upon the opportunity for the full exploitation of his dramatic genius—an opportunity which was never available during his life.

The next stage in the story is a revulsion from the Italian opera, which again is typical of our attitude towards the form. Englishmen have always been inclined to endorse Dr. Johnson's definition of it as 'an exotic and irrational entertainment.' Italian opera was, it is true, quite literally exotic in England, and it cannot be claimed that the actions of its personages were often based upon reason. But one suspects that what Dr. Johnson found irrational, as so many others have found it since, was the fact that the characters in opera sang their words instead of speaking them. It is odd that the people who produced a Shakespeare and a Congreve, and have always taken a delight in the poetry of the one and in the highly artificial prose of the other—neither of which bears a close relation to the ordinary speech of everyday life—should be unable to accept the convention of a sung drama: for it is only a step from saying, instead of 'I wish I were dead!' 'O! that this too, too solid flesh would melt,' and so on, to singing its equivalent in lyric verse. Yet the refusal to take this step—which to the majority of Italians, Germans, and Frenchmen seems to present no difficulty on the score of unreasonableness—has proved a continual stumbling-block in the way of opera in England.

The revulsion against the Italians at the end of the first quarter of the 18th century produced that gay and irresponsible form of entertainment, the ballad-opera, of which 'The Beggar's Opera' is the familiar prototype. In this burlesque, set to popular tunes, not only were the conventions of Italian opera derided and the social status of its characters deliberately reversed, but the recitatives were supplanted by the more 'rational' spoken dialogue; for while we have been willing to accept the lyric portions of an opera for the sake of the beauty of the music and of the singing, the connecting passages of recitative have always stuck in our throats.

The cause is two-fold. Either the recitatives are sung in a foreign language and are, therefore, unintelligible to most of the audience, who are inevitably bored by long passages devoid of musical interest, the dramatic purport of which escapes them; or they are sung in translations, often illiterate and bald, which only turn the drama into an absurdity, and in any case can rarely fit the music intended for a very different kind of language. Purcell wrote recitative which is the natural musical expression of the inflections of English speech, and which, therefore, sounds perfectly rational; and during the past fifty years Parry, Stanford, Sullivan, and their successors have re-established English as a musical language. But in the interval there was a desert waste. Our composers, such as they were, and in so far as they wrote for the theatre at all, paid little attention to the genius of their native tongue. Instead, they used this or that foreign idiom which happened to be popular at the moment. Isolated and sporadic attempts at English opera crop up out of this desert, but there was no chance for the roots of an English school to flourish in such a soil.

During the latter part of the 19th century, and to some extent until just before the war, opera was regarded in England as, to quote one authority, 'an expensive but not unprofitable way of demonstrating financial prosperity.' The attention of fashionable audiences was engaged by the individual singers rather than by the opera itself, and even now, fifty years after Wagner's death, that interest is by no means dead at Covent Garden. In the meantime companies for the production of opera in English have come into being. Their performances have varied a good deal in merit, but the general standard has consistently improved, until at the present time, despite the financial handicap under which they work, it is possible to hear the operas of Wagner, Verdi, and Mozart as well done, on the whole, as in any average continental opera-house.

But a financial crisis has arisen. Opera cannot be made to 'pay.' Quite apart from the heavy expenses of the singers and orchestra, the repertory system makes it far more costly than the spoken drama. Our opera companies are continually faced with the choice of cutting down expenses, which means poor performances, or of losing still more money. This state of affairs cannot continue, since bad performances lose patrons.

At this juncture, Sir Thomas Beecham, grown wise through his own experiences of opera-production, has come forward with an offer to the British public. 'If you care sufficiently for opera,' he says, 'you can have it really well done, provided that a hundred and fifty thousand of you will subscribe ten shillings a year towards the cost.' The demand of so small a sum from so small a percentage of the population of England should have met with a ready response. Englishmen seem, however, to be incorrigibly slow to put their hands in their pockets when a small amount is asked of them for a plan which will not materialise at once. Yet, of all the schemes for the establishment of opera in England, this most deserves support, because it is entirely practical, and because it spreads the expense of a subsidy over a large number of people who may be presumed to take an interest in music. It lays a burden upon nobody.

Let us suppose that Sir Thomas Beecham will get what he is asking for, and examine the possible effect upon English opera. The establishment of a permanent opera-company giving performances in the native tongue is the first step towards fostering a real School of English Opera. The brief 'grand' seasons are well enough for their particular purpose, and one hopes that they will not be discontinued, since they will provide a standard of comparison, at least for the performance of foreign works. But they do little or nothing to assist the native composer. He has to rely upon the occasional incentive of some chance opportunity, such as a performance at a girls' school, to encourage him to venture upon the composition of an opera. He may now and again produce a work of genius by an accident of this kind, as Purcell did, but it will be, in the biological sense, a 'sport.' How much even a little encouragement can achieve may be seen in the increased, though still dismally small, operatic output of English composers, since the B.N.O.C. came into being. But these operas have all shown that, whatever the musical talent of their composers may be, they are sadly lacking in theatrical craftsmanship.

More than any other form of music, opera requires practical experience, which can only be gained in the theatre. Without such experience it is unthinkable that Wagner, Verdi, Mozart, Gluck, or Handel could have achieved their fame as operatic composers, and it is the lack of it that accounts for the amateurishness on the dramatic side of most of the English operas written during the last fifty years. And unless an opera is a satisfactory blend of the two elements of drama and music, it must fail in the theatre, since opera is something essentially different both from a play and from a piece of music, and something more than a combination of the two. It is as impossible to succeed in this complex form without an intimate knowledge of the theatre, as it would be to write a symphony without a musical education, and until composers realise this fact there is no hope for English opera. But if a permanent opera is established in our midst, composers will have the opportunity to acquire the experience, which has hitherto been denied them, and our undoubted genius for drama may well find a new and profitable outlet in the direction of opera.

It will not be 'grand' opera, at any rate for some time. We must evolve our national style along lines that are characteristically English. We possess in the ballad-opera the germ of such a style, which has already been developed into their own entertaining formulæ by Gilbert and Sullivan. Their comic operas are not to be set beside the greatest. Yet one of these greatest, Mozart's 'The Magic Flute,' was created out of a form no less crude than the ballad-opera, i.e., the German Singspiel, a popular comedy interspersed with songs. There seems no reason why the spasmodic efforts of our composers should not, given the opportunity, be converted into a continuous English tradition comparable with that which has flourished in Germany since Mozart's day. The German form of opera may seem to be exhausted at the moment, but we possess a rich vein, the potentialities of which have barely been surveyed, much less worked out. So it is that I suggest that our composers are most likely to succeed in the higher forms of comic opera, probably—but not necessarily—with spoken dialogue, in view of our impatience of recitative. A beginning has been made with 'Shamus O'Brien,' 'The Immortal Hour,' and 'Hugh the Drover,' which have won popularity by their employment of native ideas in their plots and native melody in their music.

ALFRED HERBERT BREWER
1865—1928

There will always be differing views as to this country's ability to produce a wealth of outstanding composers or interpretative artists; national characteristics are perhaps against us here. But there is one type of musician in which we seem almost to specialise: the all-rounder who is also a practical man of affairs. His evolution is no doubt due to the centralisation of the musical life of a town or district round the parish church or cathedral—a principle which seems to obtain more generally in this country than in any other, probably because the one department of music in which England has had an unbroken tradition for centuries is that of the Church. Those out of sympathy with the product of this system will call him a Jack-of-all-trades (with the usual implication of lack of thoroughness); generally, however, he deserves the title of Admirable Crichton.

Sir Herbert Brewer was a fine example of this invaluable type. An admirable organist and choirmaster, he was no less successful as a conductor and organizer. His work in connection with, e.g., the Gloucester Orchestral Society and the Bristol Choral Society would alone have been sufficient to show his qualities in this way. But they were demonstrated even more strikingly in connection with the Three Choirs Festival. Here he showed a spirit of enterprise that was acknowledged even by those who take the conventional and short-sighted view of the Cathedral organ-loft as a kind of last ditch of the reactionist and pedant. A list of new and unfamiliar works that have been included in the Gloucester Festivals on Brewer's initiative would put to shame the record of many a provincial Festival that prides itself on its enterprise. (In this connection we note with interest the comparison which Dr. Herbert Thompson draws in the Yorkshire Post between the courage and vision of Brewer at Gloucester and the timid policy of the Leeds Festival executive.)

That the daring shown in the drafting of the Festival programmes was justified by results was due largely to the influence of Sir Herbert's personality and to his ability as an organizer. Without these his excursions into the unfamiliar might have proved disastrous, especially as his boldest steps were taken during the post-war period when, if ever, conductors would appear to be justified in playing for safety. Yet the Three Choirs Festival is to-day one of the most flourishing and securely established musical events in the country, and one which moreover in an unusual degree commands the suffrages of musicians who like to label themselves as progressive. For this happy state of affairs Sir Herbert's colleagues at Worcester and Hereford are also to be thanked, but we think they will readily give the major part of the credit to him, both on the score of wide outlook and of experience. (With one exception, he had conducted more Three Choirs Festivals than any other man during their two centuries of existence.)

As a composer Sir Herbert almost inevitably produced choral works for use at the Festivals. His real bent, however, lay rather towards a lighter style. In his songs and instrumental pieces, especially those produced during the past few years, he discovered a vein of tunefulness that we associate especially with Sullivan and German. This side of his activity is of interest, as exemplifying the ease with which he avoided the limited outlook which is always a danger to the occupant of the organ-loft. In a sense it is a corollary of the enterprise that led to his choice for Festival programmes of such works as Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus,' new orchestral compositions by Ireland, Holst, Honegger, and Vaughan Williams's 'The lark ascending,' all of which are included in the scheme for the next Gloucester meeting.

The many warm personal tributes that have been uttered during the past few weeks are a striking testimony to his worth as a man. This is not the place, however, to discuss the personal side of Brewer. Our concern is rather with the public character. Proverbially no man is indispensable, but some are difficult to replace. Such a man was Alfred Herbert Brewer. A fine musician, and a stimulating and directing power in the artistic life of a wide area, his death leaves a gap hard to fill.

---

AN APPRECIATION: BY AN OLD GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL CHORISTER

To those who knew him intimately the unexpected news of Sir Herbert Brewer's death on March 1, came as a grievous shock, bringing with it the feeling of a really personal loss. Those of us who had the privilege of serving under him at the noble Cathedral of Gloucester had the greatest possible affection and regard for him, both as a man and as a musician.

It was on December 15, 1896, that the then Mr. Brewer was appointed organist and master of the choristers at Gloucester Cathedral in succession to Mr. C. Lee Williams, thus returning to the Cathedral in which, as a boy, he had sung from 1877 to 1880. In the matter of his appointment he had a most influential backing, amongst those who supported him being Stainer, Parratt, Parry, Bridge, Lloyd, and Lee Williams. In the light of after events it is interesting to recall some of the things that were said at this time regarding Brewer's qualifications for the position. Lloyd spoke of him as a capable choir-trainer, a successful composer, and a highly accomplished organist, and, inter alia, he said, 'It would, in my judgment, be difficult to find a man more thoroughly fitted for the duties of the important post which he seeks to fill.'

Lee Williams spoke in very similar vein, referring to his one-time deputy as a successful choir-trainer, and a first-rate Cathedral organist. How thoroughly Brewer merited these and other recommendations, and how completely his appointment was justified, are now matters of history.

It was some eighteen months after Brewer's appointment to Gloucester that I first made his acquaintance. I well remember being taken to him by my father, who at that time was organist at one of the most important parish churches in the town, and himself a pupil of Brewer's, to undergo a test prior to joining the choir as a probationer, and I still retain a happy memory not only of his extreme kindness and interest on that occasion, but also of the thoroughness with which he tested my musical abilities. A good voice and a good ear were, of course, essentials for any budding chorister; but a practical knowledge of an instrument—it mattered not what—was a sine qua non of his ultimate approval.

Memories of the seven happy years spent as a chorister at Gloucester come crowding to one's mind at this sorrowful moment; but space does not permit the mention of more than a few.

Brewer had high ideals concerning the type of music worthy of performance in a place of worship, and he also had strong ideas regarding the performance of it. No unworthy music, no unworthy performance, was ever tolerated, and woe betide the person who tried to introduce either element into the worship music of the Cathedral. It was no unusual thing for the organ to stop suddenly during a service, and for a face to appear above the organ screen, gazing down—perhaps as much in sorrow as in anger—upon some delinquent who had done rather less than his best. And the end was certain. After the service one of the many articled pupils would inform us that our presence was required either in the practice-room, or (under more distressing circumstances) at the familiar study at Millers Green. And then the blow would fall. Brewer was a strict—almost severe—disciplinarian, and any departure from his rigid code always met with its deserts; but I never knew him act unjustly or unkindly to those serving under him. In spite of the rigidity of his discipline, which I am inclined now to think was commendable, he was at heart the most kind and genial of men. His interest in one's youthful ambitions, whatever may have been their nature, was almost paternal. Many little efforts in composition, for example, were brought to him from time to time by various choristers (myself for one), and always he displayed the same generous interest and the same ready desire to encourage and help. And so, as the years passed, one's respect for the master gradually merged into an abiding affection for the man.

With those who lifted up their voices unworthily in the Cathedral he had a short, sharp way. I well remember an occasion on which some misguided member of the congregation did this. A little inquiry after the service as to the name and address of the offender, and then the brief decision, 'I will write to her.' Whether the fateful letter was written we never knew, but the nuisance automatically ceased.

Brewer was a man of few words, but every word had significance. He knew exactly what he wanted; in some magnetic way the idea was conveyed to the choir or orchestra under his control; and he himself spared no pains (or feelings, for that matter) in the effort to secure the desired result. He worked as hard as any man I have known, and he expected, and usually got, an equal response from others. I recall a Shire Hall rehearsal for the Three Choirs Festival (probably that of 1901) when the heat was almost unbearable. But it never entered Brewer's head to give up. First of all his coat was discarded, then the waistcoat; the male members of the chorus followed suit, and the rehearsal carried on to its appointed end.

Brewer's kindness to his choristers did not cease when they left the choir; he always showed great interest in their after career. Whenever one returned to Gloucester on rare visits there was always the ready welcome and the kindly interest in one's doings. I still treasure many letters from him indicative of the warm interest and pleasure he felt in the successes of his old boys. Few have greater cause than they to remember with real and affectionate regard the human and manly side of Sir Herbert's character.

Of his brilliance as an organist and conductor, of his merits as a composer, it is not within the scope of this brief memoir to speak. These qualities at any rate are too well-known to need stressing here.

Only one organist of Gloucester Cathedral (William Mutloe) held the position for a longer period than Brewer; none of them, I venture to say, wielded a greater or more far-reaching influence. He had many musical and other interests outside the Cathedral; he served as City High Sheriff with great distinction, 1922-23; and he remained to the end one of Gloucester's most honoured citizens. One other thing should be said: when Brewer took over the conductorship of the Three Choirs Festival the meeting was by no means on a financially sound basis; he has left it as one of the most prosperous and distinguished of provincial festivals, which is a tribute not only to his high musicianship, but also to his remarkable business acumen. Some twenty-four thousand people attended the 1925 Festival, and no less than £3,737 was handed over to charity.

And now his ashes rest at the foot of the steps of the organ-loft which he adorned for so many years, and one's heart is too full to do more than echo the words of Canon Atlay, in his sermon at Gloucester Cathedral on Sunday, March 4: 'I beg you, with me, to commend to the Divine mercy the soul of Herbert Brewer, Knight Bachelor of the Realm: "Eternal rest grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine on him."'

H. D.

---

RECORDING THE ORGAN

By D. Batigan Verne

Gramophone records of the organ are still lacking in that excellence which distinguishes modern reproductions of other music. Those who do not like the organ are quick to point out a 'muzziness' which seems to pervade recorded organ music like a damp fog: organ lovers per contra are no less quick to ascribe any such defect to the recording process, or else they call it the natural and inevitable tone of the instrument itself. However, there is no doubt that the organ presents difficulties which are not met with in recording orchestral or vocal music. At the best of times it is inclined to be a ponderous, intractable subject, having a tone which is confused in compositions of rhythmic complexity. In a sense, therefore, a faithful reproduction is not guaranteed to give the best results, for if the above qualities are noticeable in the real organ, how much more are they likely to spoil a second-hand replica?

There is also another aspect to be considered. Despite the claims of gramophone manufacturers, organ records emphatically do not wear well. Let a big and stormy piece of organ music be played a few times. Soon a roughness develops in the surface of the disc—generally at the spot or spots where the big pedal notes join the full consort; and in a short while an unpleasant 'blasting' renders the record unfit to hear.

Only of recent years, if not months, have the various companies recognised that the organ demands a different mode of treatment from that given to orchestral, operatic, or any other music. The nature of the instrument itself must be taken more into account, and a sympathetic co-operation must obtain between all parties concerned, if that essential nature is to be truly captured.

Not for a moment would I suggest that the fault is all with the recording party: in fact, I would go so far as to say that it ought to be equally divided between organist, organ-builder, and those responsible for the choice of the instrument itself for recording purposes. The few suggestions I am going to make are intended to assist the organist who is about to play into the microphone. If followed, they will materially tend towards the securing of good results, and save the frequent repetition of the music which so often has to be made. Nothing is more fatiguing for the organist than to have to play the selected piece over and over again. Being already in a highly-strung nervous condition perhaps, he is apt to become hypercritical, and is very liable to make mistakes at a second or third attempt. In any case, it is an exasperating waste of time.

Outside of technique the secret of successful organ recording lies in the suitability of stop registration. An attitude of objective alertness must be adopted in gauging the right degree of power and tone-colour which is to be impinged on the microphone. On no account must one play 'to please oneself'; and the mind must always be out and abroad, so to speak.

Now as it is the pedal notes which are the most troublesome, let us first see how the blasting so often brought about by them can be reduced to a minimum. First, it is evident that the ordinary 32-ft. Pedal flue stops (especially the Pedal open wood, which is usually more reminiscent of a set of tubs than of organ pipes) are the chief offenders; consequently they must be excluded at all times—even from the full organ: for not only do they refuse to 'come through,' but what is worse they set up a turbulence of sound-waves which often spells disaster to the whole record. This is accounted for by the facts (a) that the lower octaves of these stops are beyond the range of the gramophone, and (b) that the pipes themselves have scarcely any overtones—witness the booming, indefinite note they give. The Pedal flue stops which 'take' the microphone best are found to be:

(1.) Open Diapason metal ... 16-ft.
(2.) All stops of the Violone species 16-ft.
(3.) Small-scale metal stops, e.g., Dulcianas or Salicionals of 16-ft. pitch.
(4.) Octave or 8-ft. Pedal stops, which should always be freely used.

All such stops are provided with a far richer harmonic development than the ponderous wood tones, though the fundamental ground tone is correspondingly weaker. Under these conditions the ear of the listener is deceived into hearing the fundamental note at full strength, and is satisfied that the full pedal effect is there.

Broadly speaking, a louder pedal should be used in proportion to the manual stops selected at any given moment in the performance; but it is always safe to avoid stops of an indefinite character, especially heavy open Diapasons and Bourdons.

From the foregoing it will be inferred that 16-ft. Pedal reed stops are of the utmost value; and if there should happen to be a quiet 16-ft. reed on the recording organ it will prove of fine effect in mp and mf combinations. The Pedal Trombone, Ophicleide, or Bombarde, with their octave extensions, record admirably. If they are not too pronounced they may be used even with Great organ up to Fifteenth. Much discretion is needed in the use of 32-ft. reeds (i.e., Contra-Trombone, Bombarde, &c.): they should never be employed except at the end of a fortissimo record, and then for the last few bars only. The recording engineer will soon complain if the effect is too heavy. But the general rule to follow is: use the reed class of stops more freely than on everyday occasions, varying it with the above-mentioned flue registers.

A range of power is inherent in the organ which is far beyond the capabilities of the microphone. The Swell Salicional may be a mere whisper scarcely audible; but in these days the full organ is often a tremendous torrent of sound. Such being the case, the organist must see that he draws his two extremes much closer together, and brings his range of expression to within much narrower limits. That is to say, his pianissimos must be louder than usual, his fortissimos correspondingly less strong. True, if these limits are overstepped in either direction the recording engineer will make the necessary adjustment at his control (don't forget he is master of the situation at all times); but to obtain the best interpretation of the music it is far better for the organist to relieve the engineer as far as possible by adopting suitable registration. Sudden changes of power should be avoided, except when a slight pause can be made to give the engineer time to adjust his control accordingly.

As has already been mentioned, the organist should never play too softly. The Swell Diapason 8-ft. will generally be found quite suitable for piano and pianissimo passages; while for the fortissimos a kind of 'fake' full organ effect consisting of Swell reeds and mixtures only plus Great to Fifteenth can hardly be bettered. Still bearing in mind the gramophone's narrowness of dynamic range, it may be said that the chief danger to be avoided is the closing of the swell-box. The balanced swell pedal must be used very sparingly, and the normal position of the shutters should be fully open instead of closed as in ordinary playing. At best, the swell-box is but a mechanical, artificial means of expression: and experience has shown that abuse of the swell pedal has the most ludicrous results when the music is eventually transmitted viâ the sound-box. Playing with the swell-box fully closed is almost equivalent to placing the microphone outside the building and shutting the door. In such circumstances the music is muffled and obscure; it cannot expect to hold the interest of the listener. As a precaution against the risk of a closed swell-box, a useful 'tip' is to have a wedge fixed under the swell pedal so that the natural action of the foot cannot have full play: the swell-box shutters are thus always slightly open. But in my opinion the best organ records have been made without the help of the swell-box at all. It is a severe test of musicianship to confine oneself entirely to hand registration and the combination pistons, but where a dexterous manipulation of the stops is assured, the swell-box may well be left open all the time.

Tone-colour should be applied as in scene painting, broadly—almost crudely. The most should be made of the contrasts between diapasons, flutes, viols, and reeds; but it is of little use contrasting, say, a Lieblich Gedackt and a stopped Diapason, or, for that matter, any other pair of nearly similar timbres. At all cost muddiness is to be avoided, and much can be done to minimise the natural tendency of the organ in this direction by attention to these small points. The intelligent organist will readily make such discoveries for himself—e.g., that the Harmonic or Orchestral Flute has the cleanest speech of the flute variety, that the Double 16-ft. manual stops are often best omitted, and so on. Other shifts in this connection will readily suggest themselves.

As regards the actual playing, there is much to be said; but it is somewhat outside the scope of this article. In fugues, and especially in trio-sonatas or other delicate, polyphonic music, special attention should be given to rhythm. Lack of rhythm is never shown up more clearly than on the gramophone, whatever the class of music: but where the organ is concerned, a gramophonic revelation of bad rhythm is doubly damning. A somewhat exaggerated phrasing is also an advantage, and a crisp semi-staccato touch is advisable in rapid passages.

Nothing has yet been said about the recording organ itself; yet the organist is more at the mercy of his instrument than any other executant, and the choice of organ must sooner or later enter into the question. Unfortunately the choice has nearly always rested with the party that engages the services of the player. So it has sometimes been a matter of mere local or other expediency, and often small regard has been paid to probable artistic consequences. Unfortunately, too, a paradox attends organ recording from the outset. Magnificent organs (such as Liverpool Cathedral) often record badly; whereas the defects of the poor organ (whose name is legion) sometimes vanish in the process. Harsh and exaggerated stops sound very much less so in a record, and as a fact have been postulated as almost desirable for reproduction (César Franck's call for a Swell Trumpet in the middle of the 'Prière' could literally be obeyed without unpleasant consequences). Conversely, stops which are flat and without life or colour—frequent abortions of the voicing-shop—sound more so when used in a solo capacity, even if they are powerful in tone and blown on a heavy wind pressure. My attention was forcibly drawn to the last phenomenon in an earlier record of Marcel Dupré's. The technique displayed was all that we have learnt to associate with this name, but no one seemed to have thought of blackballing the organ-builder for a set of thoroughly bad solo flutes!

Factors such as resonance of the building in which the recording is to be done or the accessory equipment of the organ console are perhaps more the concern of the recording party, though it is a pity that the organist (as the Hamlet of the whole proceedings) is not consulted more seriously in regard to them. For example, where there are no interchangeable combination pistons, or what is worse, no pistons of any kind, the organist is reduced at times either (1) to carrying on defiantly with an unsuitable stop combination—perhaps even with the Great-to-Pedal hanging out if there is no double-acting reversible handy; or else (2) holding up the performance while he fumbles at a change in the registration. This of course is a nuisance not unknown in connection with the ordinary post-Evensong recital; but whereas registration is of secondary importance as a rule, it is a problem which comes right to the forefront in recording the organ. No doubt there have been builders of organs who have made a fetish and perhaps a fortune out of fixed combination mechanisms, and who are now comfortably beyond the pale of the law: but in these days there is no justification for expecting the recording organist to sit down to work at a console which is inadequately equipped. And the words 'adequate equipment' should be taken to include not only the usual manual and pedal pistons, but also three or four general pistons which are capable of controlling every stop and coupler in the instrument, irrespective of manual or department. These general pistons being also interchangeable or adjustable are sometimes the only things which will do the trick of effecting a drastic stop change in a sonata movement or set of variations. It cannot be said that their usefulness has been widely exploited by the average recitalist, simply because he is not yet accustomed to look for them as a matter of course. To the recording performer, however, they will prove an immense boon. If he is wise he will also insist on choosing an organ where the console is detached and the action electro-pneumatic. By these means he can assure himself that his playing has the requisite effect at a short distance from the organ, and not least that his efforts to avoid smeariness in the phrasing are backed up by a prompt and responsive mechanism.

'BORIS GODUNOV' AS MOUSSORGSKY WROTE IT

By M.-D. Calvocoressi

I.—The Facts of the Case

I have referred more than once in these columns to an astounding piece of news that came from Russia in 1924, or thereabouts: that a collation (the first ever attempted) of the original manuscripts of Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godunov' had revealed the fact that Moussorgsky's masterpiece had never been published as he had written it. The first published edition (1874; recently reprinted by several publishers), prepared for the press by Moussorgsky himself, contained the text of 'Boris' not in full, but abridged, in accordance with the plan of the forthcoming performance at the Marinsky Theatre, Petrograd; abridged, therefore, according not to Moussorgsky's own judgment, but to the judgment of the managers, conductor, stage-manager, and so forth of the aforesaid theatre, and probably the judgment of Moussorgsky's friends and advisers as well.

Already in 1869 Moussorgsky, after completing 'Boris Godunov' according to his own conception, had been compelled to recast it because the management of the Imperial Theatres would have nothing to do with it as it then stood—a direct, mercilessly sombre drama, all dialogue and choruses, lacking practically every feature of grand opera, in which there was hardly any 'singing,' and only a couple of very small female parts. So he set to work, altered and considerably enriched 'Boris Godunov,' introducing a part for a prima-donna, and lengthening the part of Grigory so as to render it suitable for display by a first tenor, adding delightful songs to the second Act (in the Tsar's private apartment) and to the scene at the inn, entirely remodelling the scene in the Tsar's apartment, and composing the whole of the revolution scene. But even then 'Boris Godunov' failed to please the management of the Imperial Theatres; and had it not been for the obstinacy of one influential singer, Julia Platonova, probably 'Boris' would never have been performed. Small wonder, then, that the perplexed and angry producers should have cut out as much of Moussorgsky's 'ugly and barbaric' music as they could.

Such are the bare facts. Very fortunately, the manuscripts of both versions were preserved. And to-day, thanks to the patient, well-judged, and admirably carried-out labour of Prof. Paul Lamm, of Moscow, the full and genuine text of 'Boris Godunov' is made available.* The edition, containing all known variants, reveals in their entirety both the initial and the final versions. Foot-notes show exactly what was cut in the 1874 edition, so that it is possible to compare the complete version not only with the 1874 abridgement, but also with the despised and rejected initial version. Both comparisons are instructive. Generally speaking there can be no doubt that by recasting 'Boris Godunov' after 1869, Moussorgsky improved his work in many respects, giving us a great deal of beautiful music that was not in the first version. How very much poorer we should be, for instance, if the revolution scene had not been written, will be obvious to all people who know Moussorgsky. (It was not always obvious: in 1908, when 'Boris Godunov' was performed for the first time outside Russia, the question whether this scene should be cut was very seriously considered, and it was an obstinate minority of one in the committee that ensured its inclusion in the performance.) But Moussorgsky also did away with much that was altogether admirable. We should have remained poorer if the opportunity had not been given us to become acquainted with the first version of the scene in the Tsar's apartment, and with a scene by the Cathedral of St. Basil which was removed in order to make room for the revolution scene.

In short, for the improvement that the final version constitutes, all told, with regard to the initial, a not inconsiderable price had to be paid. All lovers of Moussorgsky may feel grateful that the bread cast upon the waters in 1869 is returned, albeit nine-and-fifty years later.

As for the curtailments, they are purely and simply deplorable. The principal affect a most racy and telling conclusion to the first scene, following upon the chorus of the pilgrims, and a fine narrative by Pimen of the murder of the Tsarevich, which not only is, both dramatically and musically, the very centre of gravity of the scene in the cell, but plays an all-important part in the musical structure of the whole score. Apart from these two big and altogether unaccountable cuts, there are, here and there, cuts of passages varying in length—sometimes quite short, a few unimportant, but most of them playing a definite and necessary part, casting light upon some point, introducing some new element, or contributing to the balance. I shall not attempt to enumerate these. The whole list will be found in a very useful pamphlet by Prof. V. Belaiev, which appears at the same time as the new edition of 'Boris Godunov.'*

Curiously enough, the majority of the cut passages are characterised by reappearances of leitmotives—which naturally leads to the supposition that they were singled out for suppression by Moussorgsky's advisers for that very reason. In those days, Wagner and his methods were in great disfavour among the musical circles of Russia. And after a comparative survey, one cannot help feeling that had the full text been available earlier, there would have been far less talk on the part of competent critics outside Russia about the 'looseness' of the musical structure of 'Boris Godunov.' Practically every bit of the music that was cut out contributed to the compactness of the whole—a compactness which can be felt even in the 1874 version, but is far more apparent, and certainly more easily demonstrable by concrete proof, in the unabridged text.†

The new edition proves that it was from the very time when 'Boris Godunov,' fresh from the pen of its author, was shown to the people around him that originated the tendency to interfere with 'Boris Godunov' which culminated, fifteen years after Moussorgsky's death, in the appalling 'revision' by Rimsky-Korsakov—the distorted version used thenceforth for all revivals in Russia and all productions abroad, the genuine text remaining in manuscript under lock and key in the archives of the Imperial Theatres.

It is really incredible that not one of the investigators who from 1874 to 1924 had access to these manuscripts should have disclosed the true state of things and put in a plea for the publication of 'Boris Godunov' in full. Not one of them seems to have realised the significance, as organic parts of the whole, of the suppressed passages. Nor did any one ever proclaim the ripe and plenary beauty of the initial 'Boris.' On the contrary, the few bits of information vouchsafed by Russian writers up to the moment when Prof. Lamm began his work definitely conveyed the impression that the initial 'Boris' was very crude, and deficient in other respects. I feel sure that this judgment—professed or implied—will soon be reversed by common consent. The initial 'Boris' will no doubt never be performed except under very special circumstances; but this does not mean that it is doomed to remain unknown except to those who will study it in private. In point of fact, there are only two scenes in it which do not reappear in the final version—or rather, there is one scene which disappeared entirely, to be replaced by the scene of the Revolution (after the scene of the Tsar's death), and one that was so thoroughly remodelled as to constitute something altogether different. And both these scenes are eminently suitable for concert performance. They will, indeed, constitute very welcome additions to the concert repertory, for which Moussorgsky's output provides so very little.

* Vocal score, with English and French translations by M.-D. Calvocoressi. Oxford University Press. Orchestral score and parts, ibidem.

* 'Boris Godunov in its New Version' (Oxford University Press).

† With regard to this point, I beg permission to adduce a few lines from my 'Principles and Methods of Musical Criticism,' pointing out that it is very doubtful 'whether anybody could determine the extent and bearings of Rimsky-Korsakov's alterations to "Boris Godunov" except by comparing the genuine text with the altered' (to my intense amusement, one reviewer of the book pounced upon the passage in which these lines occur, constructed it as a declaration in favour of Rimsky-Korsakov's alterations, and rebuked me accordingly). The revelation of the full text brings a case in point. Could any of us have guessed that the 1874 text was incomplete? I think not. And yet we can see now—and see very clearly—how far it fell short of what Moussorgsky had actually achieved. Never again can it fully satisfy anyone who knows the full text.

Apart from these two scenes, practically every remark applying to the musical texture and structure of the initial version applies to the complete version—a point which I hope to make clear in the second instalment of this essay.

P.S.—At the moment of going to press, the news comes from Russia that issue is joined on the matter of the complete 'Boris.' Glazounov, I understand, is antagonistic to it. The point will be dealt with as soon as possible in 'Music in the Foreign Press.'

(To be continued.)

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XXXIII.—Thomas Mudd

Although Thomas Mudd was in high repute as a musician in the second half of the 16th century, very few details of his life have come down, and even the brief notice of him that is given in Davey's 'History of English Music' (new ed., 1926), and in the new 'Grove' (vol. iii., 1927), is not satisfactory, as he is apparently confounded with John Mudd who was organist of Peterborough Cathedral from 1583 to 1639. There was also a Thomas Mudd who was organist of Lincoln, but who can by no means be identified with the subject of the present article, for he flourished in the mid-17th century.

The fame of Thomas Mudd in Elizabethan days may be gauged from the fact that he is included by Meres in his 'Palladis Thamia' (published in September, 1598) as one of the 'excellent Musitians' of England. In his section on 'Musicke' he mentions the following Masters: 'Master Cooper, Master Fairfax, Master Tallis, Master Taverner, Master Blitheman, Master Bird, Doctor Tye, Doctor Dallis, Doctor Bull, Master Thomas Mudd, sometime Fellow of Pembroke Hall, in Cambridge, Master Edward Johnson, Master Blankes, Master Randall, Master Philips, Master Dowland, and Master Morley.'

From Venn's admirable work on Cambridge graduates we learn that Thomas Mudd was the son of John Mudd, of London, and was admitted a pensioner of Caius College, winning a sizarship for the sons of London mercers, on March 15, 157⅞, age seventeen. We are thus safe in assuming that he must have been born in 1560, and we know from other sources that he was a chorister of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, under Sebastian Westcote, from 1571 to 1574.* He obtained B.A. from Peterhouse, in 1581, at which date he had written several musical compositions. Three years later, in 1584, he was admitted M.D. from Pembroke, of which College he was made a Fellow.

Mudd was probably Master of the Choristers at Ely in the last decade of the 16th century, and at Ely are still preserved a Service and four anthems by him. There is a fine 'In Nomine' by Mudd among the British Museum MSS. Add. 31,330, while there are two anthems by him at Peterhouse. The date of the British Museum MS. is given as 'about 1578.' Mudd also cultivated instrumental music, as we find no fewer than nine of his Fancies for three viols, in parts, with an additional basso continuo part for harpsichord, in the British Museum, Add. MSS. 18940-44, Nos. 7 to 15. No doubt his output was more considerable, judging from his mention by Meres, but such as have survived bear testimony to his powers as a composer.

Mudd retained his Fellowship of Pembroke Hall till 1591, but some time previously, in 1589, he was given the Rectory of Cowling, Kent, a post which he held from 1589 to 1592. Possibly he may have returned to Ely in 1593, but the next reference I can find concerning him is his appointment as Vicar of Cobham, in 1603. This post he retained till his death in 1619.

Numerous MSS. of the 17th century include compositions by 'Mudd,' and it is often hard to determine which of the composers of that name is intended, but the above-mentioned Services, Anthems, and Fancies for viols, are almost certainly by Thomas Mudd; and the anthem, 'Lord, hear my voice when I cry' (Harl. 6347-78), is marked 'Tho. Mudde.' According to Mr. John E. West, in the new edition of 'Cathedral Organists' (1923), John Mudd, of Peterborough, composed some services as well as an anthem, 'O God, Who hast prepared,' but his period of activity was some years later than that of Thomas Mudd, whose fame must have been considerable, even in 1580. As we have seen, he was judged to be worthy of being bracketed by Meres with the greatest musical geniuses of the late Tudor period.

* He was doubtless a nephew of Henry Mudd, who was Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral at the Visitation of Bishop Sandys, of London, in 1574. (Visitation Book of Bishop Edwin Sandys.)

FRENCH TUNES IN 'THE BEGGAR'S OPERA' AND 'POLLY'

By J. A. Westrup

The late Frank Kidson, in his little book 'The Beggar's Opera' (Cambridge, 1922), has the following paragraph (p. 66):

> As there are several French tunes interspersed, Gay had no doubt access to a French collection, which I have not yet been able to identify, or else they have been noted down from songs sung by some of his friends.

He omits to point out two interesting facts: (1) that French tunes in ballad operas of the period are uncommon; (2) that all the French tunes in 'The Beggar's Opera' were accessible from English sources. It is indeed worth noticing that in the long list of tunes from ballad operas printed by W. Barclay Squire,* apart from vague indications such as 'French tune' and 'French minuet,' very few are French. None of the French tunes in 'The Beggar's Opera' appear to be used elsewhere, and of the eight French tunes in 'Polly' only two occur in other operas. Apart from these there are two French tunes used in other ballad operas neither of which is used in 'The Beggar's Opera' or 'Polly.' These are 'Plus inconstant que l'onde et le nuage,' in 'The Fashionable Lady,' and 'Si vous vous moquez de moi,' in 'Achilles,' which is by Gay, and so hardly counts.

The French tunes in 'The Beggar's Opera' are:

No.
13. 'Le printemps rappelle aux armes,' set to 'The turtle thus with plaintive crying.'
19. 'Fill every glass,' set to 'Fill every glass, for wine inspires us.'
22. 'Cotillon,' set to 'Youth's the season made for joys.'
63. 'Joy to great Cæsar,' set to 'If thus—a man can die much bolder with brandy.'

The song, 'Le printemps rappelle aux armes,' words and music, is printed in Ballard's 'La clef des

* The Musical Antiquary, October, 1910.

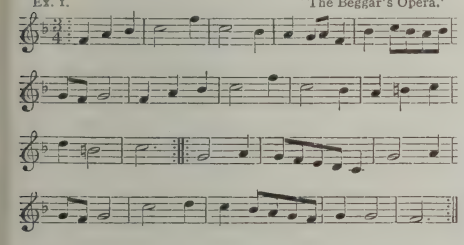
chansonniers' (Paris, 1717), vol. ii., p. 282. A copy of the tune is in Bibliothèque Mazarine, MS. 3975, airs, p. 170. There are two verses in 'La clef des chansonniers,' of which the first runs as follows:

Le Printemps rappelle aux armes,
Coulez mes larmes,
Le Printemps rappelle aux armes,
Ah! quel tourment:
Grands Dieux! parmy tant d'allarmes,
Epargnez mon cher Amant.

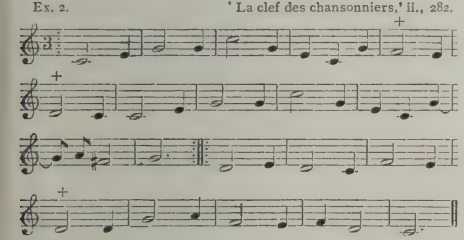
If the song has any special reference at all, it probably belongs to the War of the Spanish Succession, just as the once popular 'Il faut pour d'Andermonde' may be dated from the War of Devolution which followed the death of Philip IV. of Spain. The tune of 'Le printemps rappelle aux armes' seems to have had a wide popularity, as it is found so far afield as Avignon* and London. In 1719 the words were printed in the fourth edition of 'Pills to Purge Melancholy' (vol. i, p. 189), with an English translation.

The tune as printed in 'La clef des chansonniers' is less elaborate than the version printed in 'The Beggar's Opera.' A comparison of the two may be interesting:

Ex. 1. 'The Beggar's Opera.'



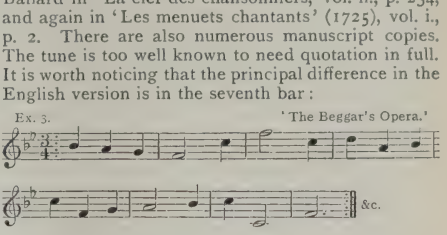
Ex. 2. 'La clef des chansonniers,' ii., 282.



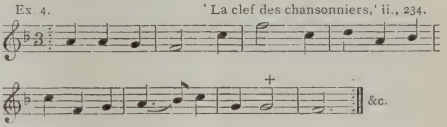
The second of these versions is probably the more correct of the two. The first exhibits the usual 'improvements' which creep in when the tune is known only through having been heard. The embellishments added by vocalists are accepted as authentic, and a new version of the tune comes into being.

The tune 'Fill every glass' seems to have appealed to public taste in the 18th century as well as at the present day. Gay doubtless took it from 'Pills to Purge Melancholy' (fourth edition, 1719), vol. i., p. 180, or from a single sheet, of which there is a copy in the British Museum collection of English Songs (G307, No. 210). In 'Pills' it is entitled 'A drinking song, in praise of our Three fam'd Generals.' The French words, 'Que chacun remplisse son verre,' are given, with an English version, 'Fill every glass and recommend 'em.' On the single sheet the song is printed with a bass and the title, 'A Drinking Song in Praise of our three Fam'd Generalls translated from the French by Mr. Durfey.' In France the tune was known as 'N'oubliez pas votre houlette, Lisette,'* printed by Ballard in 'La clef des chansonniers,' vol. ii., p. 234, and again in 'Les menuets chantants' (1725), vol. i., p. 2. There are also numerous manuscript copies. The tune is too well known to need quotation in full. It is worth noticing that the principal difference in the English version is in the seventh bar:

Ex. 3. 'The Beggar's Opera.'



Ex. 4. 'La clef des chansonniers,' ii., 234.



There is no reason for supposing that this difference has any special significance, or that it is necessary to assign one version to 'The Beggar's Opera' song and another to any of the numerous French carols which were written to be sung to this air. Any version fits any text, and one will do as well as another. The elaborate distinction drawn in the 'Week-End Book' is superfluous.

Of the 'Cotillon' it is only necessary to say that it is found in the third volume of 'The Dancing Master' (c. 1726), under the title 'Zoney's Rant.' Only four bars of 'Joy to great Cæsar' are used in 'The Beggar's Opera,' so that it is hardly worth while discussing the tune at length. The song is by d'Urfey, and appears to have been printed for the first time in Playford's 'Apollo's Banquet.' It is there headed 'The Tune of Farrinel's Ground, to the Song of "All Joy to Great Cæsar."' The song was republished several times on single sheets and in collections with the additional title 'The King's Health.' In 1702 the words were changed in celebration of the Coronation of Queen Anne, but later on 'Joy to great Cæsar' was re-issued. It appears in the fourth edition of 'Pills to Purge Melancholy' (1719), vol. ii., p. 152, and again in 1725. The tune 'Farinell's Ground' was printed in Playford's 'Division Violin' in 1685, with the title 'Faronell's (sic) Division on a Ground.' The index to that work calls it 'A Division on Mr. Farinell's Ground.' On the Continent the air was known as 'Folies d'Espagne.'

Though it has been shown† that Michel Farinel was not the composer of the 'Folies d'Espagne,' it seems fairly certain that he is responsible for that version of it known as 'Farinell's Ground,' which

* Set to a French carol in 'Noël nouveaux et choisis sur les plus beaux airs du tems' (Avignon, 1719).

* Distinguish 'N'oubliez pas votre houlette, Nanette,' an entirely different tune in four time. It is printed in Ballard's 'Brunettes ou petits airs tendres,' vol. iii. (1711), p. 230, and is probably older than the other.

† See articles by Niecks (Musical Times, 1888, p. 717), A. Moser (Archiv. für Musikwissenschaft, 1, pp. 358-371), and J. Pulver (Monthly Musical Record, February and May, 1920). The second of these is the most comprehensive, and includes several musical examples. Dr. W. E. Schultz, in "'The Beggar's Opera": its content, history, and influence' (Yale Univ. Press, 1923), says of this air (p. 338): 'Gay's use of this Italian air is interesting, in view of his satire.' The tune was certainly used by several Italian composers before Farinel produced his 'Folies d'Espagne' or 'Farinel's Ground,' but in the form in which Gay used it it is a French tune, if, indeed, it is to be given any nationality at all.

served as a model for so many subsequent composers. Farinel's 'Folies d'Espagne' became in effect the standard version. It seems likely that he wrote them for the celebrated violinist, Dumanoir II., who succeeded his father as 'Roi des violons' at Paris in 1668. He doubtless introduced the tune in England* himself when he was in the service of Charles II. But it is obvious that its popularity in England was due very largely to its having been used by d'Urfey for his song 'Joy to great Cæsar,' and that it was through this song that Gay was acquainted with it.

Enough has been said to show that there is no reason for supposing that Gay had access to a French collection. 'Le printemps rappelle aux armes' must have been sung in England if the words were printed in an English song-book, and the other three had become to all intents and purposes English tunes. Even if the four tunes had been chosen from French sources by Gay, they would form a very small proportion of the total number of tunes used in 'The Beggar's Opera'—sixty-nine.

Of the eight French tunes in 'Polly,' the sequel to 'The Beggar's Opera,' viz. :

No.
6. 'Sortez des vox retraites' (sic).
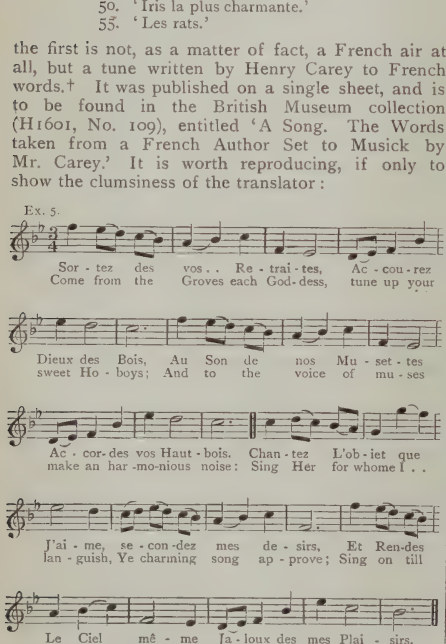
25. Rigadoon.
26. 'Ton humeur est Catharine.'
29. 'Mirleton.'
38. 'Bacchus m'a dit.'
40. 'Cappe de bonne Espérance.'
50. 'Iris la plus charmante.'
55. 'Les rats.'

the first is not, as a matter of fact, a French air at all, but a tune written by Henry Carey to French words.† It was published on a single sheet, and is to be found in the British Museum collection (H1601, No. 109), entitled 'A Song. The Words taken from a French Author Set to Musick by Mr. Carey.' It is worth reproducing, if only to show the clumsiness of the translator :

Ex. 5.



Sor - tez des vos . . Re - trai - tes, Ac - cou - rez
Come from the Groves each God-dess, tune up your Dieux des Bois, Au Son de nos Mu - set - tes sweet Ho - boys; And to the voice of mu - ses Ac - cor-des vos Haut - bois. Chan - tez L'ob - iet que make an har -mo-nious noise: Sing Her for whome I . .
J'ai - me, se - con-dez mes de - sirs, Et Ren-des lan - guish, Ye charming song ap - prove; Sing on till Le Ciel mê - me Ja - loux des mes Plai - sirs.
Jove is . . Je - lous, and en - vy me my Love.

* In his autobiography, Farinel is said to have written: 'Mes préludes, mes sonates, mes follies d'Espagne et d'Angleterre ont paru avant les pièces de Mr. Corelli . . . . et, en effet, mon mss. contient la Basse continue des Follies traditionelles' (Ecorcheville, quoted by Fischer in 'Musik in Hannover,' p. 26). What are the 'follies d'Angleterre'?

† A genuine French air, 'Sortez de vos retraites,' does exist, but Carey's tune is the one used by Gay.

The tune printed in 'Polly' is, as usual, a 'variant' of this :

Ex. 6.

Not too fast.

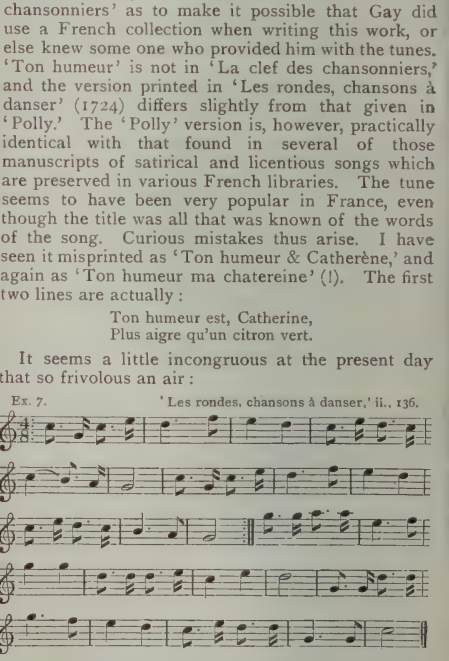
'Mirleton' was also used in 'The Decoy' (1733) and 'The Fashionable Lady' (1730). 'Cap de bonne espérance' occurs in 'The Merry Cobbler' (1735), the sequel to 'The devil to pay.' In France it was very popular as a tune for the political couplets which went the round of Paris society at this period. A printed version is in 'La clef des chansonniers,' vol. i., p. 62, set to 'En deuil & fort affligée.' It succeeded in supplanting in popular favour the original tune of the old Provençal noël, 'La Fe coumando de crèire,' for which its slightly melancholy character makes it eminently suitable.* The version given in 'Polly' is so like that in 'La clef des chansonniers' as to make it possible that Gay did use a French collection when writing this work, or else knew some one who provided him with the tunes. 'Ton humeur' is not in 'La clef des chansonniers,' and the version printed in 'Les rondes, chansons à danser' (1724) differs slightly from that given in 'Polly.' The 'Polly' version is, however, practically identical with that found in several of those manuscripts of satirical and licentious songs which are preserved in various French libraries. The tune seems to have been very popular in France, even though the title was all that was known of the words of the song. Curious mistakes thus arise. I have seen it misprinted as 'Ton humeur & Catherène,' and again as 'Ton humeur ma chatereine' (!). The first two lines are actually :

Ton humeur est, Catherine,
Plus aigre qu'un citron vert.

It seems a little incongruous at the present day that so frivolous an air :

Ex. 7. 'Les rondes, chansons à danser,' ii., 136.



should have been used alike for sacred and secular songs. French taste, however, has never objected to these incongruities, and English objections to such transferences are largely a legacy of the Victorian

* The Noël is attributed to Nicolas Saboly, and published as No. 32 of his Noëls, but without foundation. An English edition with a four-part arrangement of the tune, 'Cap de bonne espérance,' by J. H. Mee, is published by Novello—Novello's Christmas Carols, No. 272 (1897).

era. There are few innovations which use cannot change into habits. It would be difficult to say which of the two following couplets fits the tune better, the characteristic cynicism of Gay :

Woman's like the flatt'ring ocean,
Who her pathless ways can find?
Every blast directs her motion,
Now she's angry, now she's kind.
What a fool 's the vent'rous lover,
Whirl'd and toss'd by every wind!
Can the bark the port recover
When the silly Pilot's blind?

or the cheerful banality of one of many French carols written for it :

Bannissons toute tristesse,
Livrons nous à nos transports,
Poussons des cris d'allégresse,
Formons les plus doux accords.
Un enfant vient de nous naître,
C'est le Fils du Roy des Cieux ;
La foy nous le fait connoître,
Lorsqu'il se cache à nos yeux.*

Gay, according to Malone, 'could play on the flute, and was, therefore, enabled to adapt so happily some of the airs in "The Beggar's Opera."'† I have never heard that the ability to perform on the flute carried with it any such facility. What Malone probably meant was that Gay thus became acquainted with a large number of tunes which he might not otherwise have known. We know that many of the popular airs of the period were published (at any rate in this country) in two forms, for voice and for flute. We need not assume that Gay could not sing, but it seems likely enough that it was through his flute that he became familiar with some of the delightful airs which he adopted. 'I hope I may be forgiven,' says the Beggar in the Introduction, 'that I have not made my Opera throughout unnatural, like those in vogue ; for I have no Recitative.' Happy simplicity! The method may not have commended itself to those who possessed what the Spectator calls 'Chromatick Ears,' but the people who, like Jeremy in 'Love for Love,' 'have a reasonable good ear as to jigs and country dances, and the like,' have always approved.

Condemnation both of the music and the play has not been wanting. Dr. Burney's superior remarks about the 'wild, rude, and often vulgar melodies' are well known. Hawkins went further, and attributed all the evils of his time to its popularity :

> The effects of the Beggar's Opera on the minds of the people have fulfilled the prognostications of many that it would prove injurious to society. Rapine and violence have been gradually increasing ever since its first representation : the rights of property, and the obligation of the laws that guard it, are disputed upon principle. . . . Young men, apprentices, clerks in public offices, and others, disdaining the arts of honest industry, and captivated with the charms of idleness and criminal pleasure, now betake themselves to the road, affect politeness in the very act of robbery, and in the end become victims to the justice of their country.

Poor Sir John! I am afraid he would have disapproved of Mr. Playfair's revivals, which many an innocent schoolboy must have enjoyed. And what would he have said to the cinema? Fortunate are we, for whom the vices of a bygone age have no attraction. We find sufficient amusement in the spectacle and the music, resist temptation, and neglect the moral.

* 'Noëls nouveaux et choisis sur les plus beaux airs pour l'année 1716' (Montpellier, 1716), No. 7.
† Thackeray, 'English Humorists.'

New Music

ORGAN

It is a laudable custom of the Three Choirs Festival executive to invite prominent organists to write and play new works at the annual meetings. The organ composer of to-day needs such encouragement, and the stimulation of public interest is also valuable. At the Hereford Festival a very large proportion of the throng that attended Evensong daily remained to hear the specially-written organ solos. Among these works was a Fantaisie-Impromptu by W. G. Alcock, which has just been issued by Novello. Its attractive qualities were apparent at a first hearing, and the printed page confirms the good impression. It opens quietly with an engaging theme, which after development leads into a second subject of bold, trumpet-like flavour. The working of this culminates in a fine climax, and a brief Coda based on the opening theme ends the piece quietly. The degree of difficulty is moderate, mainly because of the grateful character of the writing. This is a capital piece, free from fussiness, untidiness, sloppiness, and eccentricity. (One of these four qualities is present in too large a proportion of modern organ music.)

From Novello may be obtained also the January issue of the American Organ Quarterly (published by Gray, of New York). This is called an 'International Transcription Number,' and contains seven pieces. Notably good examples of transcription are Grieg's Notturno in C (W. A. Goldsworthy) and Mendelssohn's Duetto from the 'Songs without Words' (Richard Kountz ; this piece lends itself well to the organ ; the arrangement is effective, and will be no less good—perhaps better—if the stop changes are reduced in number). Herbert F. Ellingford's version of William Russell's Introduction and Fugue in E flat is hardly a transcription, but it is a very sound piece of work, with sensible footing marks. Russell is in good form here, but he didn't know when to stop. The work will gain if a full close is made at the end of p. 10—one can easily be 'faked.'

E. d'Arba is a composer new to me. His 'Variations on a Russian Theme' (Chester) contain some striking music, but are unnecessarily difficult. Much of the writing is genuinely novel, and makes one wish to see further work from the same source, but in a less forbidding style. As the Variations are dedicated to a well-known English recitalist—Mr. Reginald Goss-Custard—we may look for a chance of hearing them, and so being able to decide as to how far some of the complexities are worth while.

The third and fourth books of Louis Vierne's 'Pièces de Fantaisie' have now been published (Lemoine ; Books 1 and 2 were reviewed in the June and August, 1927, Musical Times). This set of twenty-four pieces is not likely to rival the early 'Pieces in Free Style,' mainly because of the far greater demands on player and instrument. A further reason is a growing tendency to over-chromaticism of a rather sour type. Add to this some examples of development at greater length than the thematic material can easily bear, and the absence of the feeling of spontaneity that distinguished the early pieces is easily explained. Yet Vierne is so gifted a writer that he could hardly write a couple of dozen pieces without giving us some really striking things ; there are several here that show him at his best, and could have come from no other pen. Book 3, for example, contains a delightful Impromptu, in which everything 'comes off,' given the right fleet-fingered performance. It is quite slight in texture and the manual writing is of the type that not long ago would have been condemned as too pianistic. To-day, organ and pianoforte draw closer together technically, with gain to the former—even to the latter, in polyphonic playing. 'Etoile du soir' has some beautiful moments, but is rather overclouded, and some modulations in the canonic section do not convince. 'Dédicace' is overwrought and tortuous. 'Fantômes' is a queer compound, with a warning note 'For concerts [recitals] only.' Its seven thematic constituents represent a questioner as to the future, and various answerers. 'Who prepares the future?' inquires the 'Evoker.' 'I,' says the young æsthete; 'I am free!' 'I,' replies the old pedant; 'I maintain the tradition!' 'The future belongs to the dancer,' holds the negro; the monkey maintains that it is 'in the hands of fancy.' Says the beggar, grinding out 'Sole mio' from a street organ, 'It belongs to misery.' Fate applies the closure with the enigmatic pronouncement that 'It is nowhere and everywhere.' This programme would make a good basis for an orchestral work of considerable scope, but for an organ piece of six pages it seems overmuch. Even so, the characterisation would need to be more definite than it is here. Without a knowledge of the scheme, it is impossible (or at all events difficult) to follow the argument. This is partly because the entry of the characters is irregular, and the music is too consistently chromatic, and therefore alike. From a structural point of view the piece suffers from the scrappiness inevitable when so many themes have to be dealt with in so short a space. 'Sur le Rhin' contains some fine diatonic passages, and much of it would make an effect on a big organ, but it seems to drag somewhat. The last piece in this book, 'Carillon de Westminster,' is an extended treatment of the familiar chimes. Naturally it contains some brilliant and striking work, but I feel it is too long, not through over-development, but over-repetition. The last book opens with one of the best quiet pieces Vierne has written—'Aubade.' It is reasonable in length, has a charming theme, and contains some refreshing diatonic discords. 'Resignation' crawls semitonally too much for my taste; though it has a striking middle section. 'Cathédrales' has the right spaciousness, with some fine bits for foundation stops, and a well-developed climax. 'Naiades' is too long; one tires of the ceaseless semiquaver runs. 'Gargouilles et chimères' is appropriately bizarre, but the vein is not one that suits the organ for more than an occasional taste.

The last piece of the set is, I think, about the best of the lot—'Les Cloches de Hinckley.' It opens with jangling fourths, which gradually settle down into a rhythmic pattern, and form an accompaniment to a capital tune played by the pedals. Is there a carillon at Hinckley? If so, does it play this tune, or something like it? The piece is long, and a touch of bleakness creeps in midway, but it ends brilliantly, with the opening tune tightened up rhythmically, under festive manual pealings. This piece may perhaps rival the composer's 'Carillon' in popularity—certainly in the Hinckley district, which ought to consider itself highly favoured. It will be seen that these pieces of Vierne's are not everybody's meat. As a whole they confirm the impression made by his fifth Symphony, namely, that the composer is becoming mannered, and too ready to fall into the snare set by his facility in handling strings of dissonances, mostly of the acrid sort. Let us hope he may yet return to the simpler and more healthy style of the earlier works.

A new edition of Handel's Organ Concertos has been started by the Oxford University Press. Four numbers have been received for review — three movements from No. 4 in D minor, in the Second Set; and the opening movement of No. 4 in F, of the First Set. The descriptions are quoted from the title-page, but I doubt whether they will help the reader much, as a good deal of confusion exists concerning the different sets. All these movements are well known, however. Stanley Roper is the editor, and he has wisely refrained from 'fattening' the text. The effect of this music lies so much in its tunefulness and rhythm that weight matters far less than clarity and life on the part of the player. Fingering and footing marks are given, and sensible registration indicated. The movements are issued separately—a step one questions at first. On second thoughts, however, it has to be admitted that organists rarely play a complete Concerto. Moreover, the movements are so unequal in quality that economical organists will be glad to buy the best and leave the rest.

Two sets of Three Short Postludes by Arthur G. Colborn are well-written, easy, and effective for ears that do not demand originality. Of the two books, Set A is a good deal the better (Weekes). The composer has also issued, through Novello, a similar set of 'Six Short Postludes,' in three pairs.

Two essays in the luscious vein that still has its adherents are Edwin H. Lemare's 'Woodland Reverie' (sub-titled 'Andantino in C,' and so challenging its predecessor in D flat) and Reginald Goss-Custard's 'Romance.' The Reverie is rather difficult, partly because of the untidy lay-out which spoils so much of Lemare's recent music, and also because of the awkward stretches for the left hand. The 'Romance' is easy and rather old-fashioned, despite its 5-4 section. There seems to have been an oversight on the second page, where the theme and accompaniment change hands with no indication of change in manual or stops. Played as written the balance and effect generally would be very bad.

Excellent additions to the scanty répertoire of music written especially for the harmonium are J. Stuart Archer's 'Variations on well-known Hymn-tunes'—'Adeste] Fideles,' 'Heinlein,' the Easter hymn 'Veni Creator,' 'Nun danket,' and 'St. Anne.' The pieces belong to the chorale prelude order, and are of the well-written and effective type that we expect from this composer. They lend themselves easily to organ use, and would in fact serve well as moderately difficult manual studies for that instrument (Paxton).

Not so many years ago nobody would have thought of making organ transcriptions of German's Three Dances from 'Henry VIII.' But the cinema has now opened up a field of organ music hitherto undreamt of, and these Dances, as arranged by Edwin H. Lemare, are unusually suitable material, not only on their merits as attractive music, but also because of the air of the theatre that still clings to them. Mr. Lemare's versions are easy to play—far more so than the pianoforte arrangements, as the pedal does away with the left-hand difficulties. The Dances are issued separately (Novello).

H. G.

SONGS

Thomas Hardy's poetry has been set to music perhaps less than might have been expected, and with the exception of Hubert Foss's recent cycle of songs, the newly-published 'Five Poems by Thomas Hardy, set to music by John Ireland,' is the only big Hardy venture that I know. Hardy is difficult to set, as those who have tried their hand at him know very well. The rhythm of his lines, which is often complicated and subtle in spite of a deceptively simple sound, is not easily preserved in a musical treatment, and the poem is irreparably damaged if this effect be lost. Very hard to maintain, too, is the peculiar note of intimacy which was one of Hardy's most powerful effects. Many of his strange, gnarled words, introduced into lyrics when some particular force or colour seemed necessary, are also difficult for the musician, who cannot rely upon the degree of closeness between singer and audience that is possible between poet and reader, even if he can find for the idea a musical expression which seems satisfactory to himself.

John Ireland has chosen his poems very wisely: they are all short love poems, seizing and perpetuating, as Hardy so wonderfully could, the fleeting and scarcely conscious though deeply-felt emotion of a particular moment; and the composer groups them so as to attain unity for the cycle as a whole by the rise and fall of emotion: the climax he reaches with the last song is a finely judged effect.

But the poems chosen, although typical of Hardy, do not show his style at its most markedly individual, where it is most difficult to treat. And it is noticeable, even so, that where the poetical manner is particularly individual and striking, Ireland's music finds no corresponding intensity. 'But were they bysm, or bluff, or snarling sea' in the first song is a case in point. The composer wisely leaves the line to speak for itself, emphasising its high lights by his manipulation of the vocal line. Where, on the other hand, as in the third poem, the poet's individuality shows itself primarily in the emotion rather than in the manner, John Ireland gets very closely into touch with Hardy. Ireland's complex and sophisticated style seems naturally to suit Hardy's far from simple reactions, and his beauty (felt very clearly indeed in some of these songs) is not far removed from the curious but penetrating kind of beauty that Hardy made out of words. Technically the songs are masterly: the effects are attained without the feeling of effort that has sometimes been noticeable in Ireland's work, and although the songs call for good musicians to perform them, their technical requirements, according to modern standards, are very reasonable (Oxford University Press).

Two songs by Victor Hely-Hutchinson, 'Trees' and 'The bees' song,' show a real distinction of touch in a style that is eminently straightforward and unpretentious. There is distinction of melody, of treatment, and of outlook, and the songs appeal as readily, though in a different way, to the musician and the non-musician. 'The bees' song' makes charming use of an accompanimental figure which might easily have become conventional, yet never does so; and the whole thing 'goes off' with a neat and tidy effectiveness that is positively disarming. Similar qualities—the musicianship, the sensitiveness, the sense of humour—go to the making of 'Three Songs,' of which 'The little old Cupid' is specially attractive. All the poems are by Walter de la Mare, and the songs are published by Elkin.

Curwens send two traditional songs arranged by Kenneth Sterling Mackinlay. 'I had a little nut-tree' and 'The frog and the crow' are both of them extremely good songs, and the present arrangements have point and humour. The atmosphere is a little affected, however, and so is the wording (in the Percy Grainger pseudo-Saxon manner) that heads the settings.

Peter Warlock's 'Walking the woods' is in the composer's lighter style, but one does not look in vain for the distinction of touch and outlook that generally mark the composer's work. A simple tune, a piquant rhythmic scheme, above all perhaps a kind of surprised and ecstatic pleasure in the handling of an attractive little poem—these are the qualities that give the song its effect. 'The Garden,' by Thomas Symons, has similar care for its words; though here, as the poem is different in atmosphere, the pleasure is less sprightly. The lines are set with skilful accentuation and a good deal of atmosphere. The question is whether, with its freedom of rhythm and design, the song will have enough unity to sound satisfying. Richard Hageman, too, is obviously sincere, but not sufficiently austere. A 'self-denying ordinance' about diminished sevenths would make the atmosphere of his work more convincing, particularly in the case of a poem of this character. 'Christ went up into the hills' is the title of the song (Winthrop Rogers).

'The Garden,' by Josef Holbrooke, has a certain power and sweep, and from the singer's point of view is extremely effective. The opening triplet phrase, however, is very much overdone before the end, and the use of it seems to become mechanical. Over-facility, again, spoils Eric Fogg's 'Spindrift' which is a well planned and well written song, but lacks the vividness of a personal realisation. There is reticence and consequently more power in Edgar L. Bainton's virile setting of 'The Little Waves of Breffny,' which does not sentimentalize the words as some settings have done. This is a very strong piece of work. Another good song is Cyril Scott's 'Sea-song of Gafran,' which has real sweep of sound and phrase: the atmosphere is that of a Hebridean song, and the composer has well caught the spirit of the fine poem—Mrs. Hemans in very manly mood (Elkin).

Three songs by Poldowski are sent by Chesters. 'Narcisse' is for voice and string quartet, 'To Love' and 'A Clymène' are for voice and pianoforte. Poldowski often achieves beauty of texture and atmosphere, but with these French songs one cannot get rid of the feeling that the thing would have been much more cleanly done, in the same style, by Debussy. The setting of English words seems to have a steadying effect: 'To Love' is a much less atmospheric poem, and Poldowski's music is stronger and more individual when its colours are more restrained. And this reticence makes the undoubted beauty of the song all the more telling. T. A.

---

CHURCH MUSIC

A short unison setting of the Te Deum by C. Hylton Stewart (S.P.C.K.), intended for congregational singing, may be recommended. It is tuneful and straightforward, and should be easily picked up by the people. On p. 4, bottom line, the semibreve A in the melody should, of course, be G. Another unison setting of the same canticle is that by Martin Shaw, in the key of C (Curwen).

It is in chant form, and is admirably adapted to secure an intelligent interpretation of the short verses. H. Davan Wetton's setting of the Communion Service is also intended to meet the needs of those places where simple music is essential. It is devotionally written, and although it may be sung in unison throughout, either by sopranos or by men's voices, opportunity is given in places to sing in harmony if preferred. Both forms of the Kyrie, and also the Benedictus and Agnus Dei, are included (Curwen).

Martin Shaw's anthem, 'This joyous Day,' is a worthy setting of words by Edmund Spenser (S.P.C.K.). It is an impressive little work, quite easy to sing, which should prove useful for general purposes and also for use at weddings. Charles Wood's 'Jesu, the very thought is sweet' is an arrangement for S.A.T.B. of a melody from 'Piæ Cantiones' (Faith Press). It calls for expressive singing—preferably unaccompanied—but is otherwise not difficult. Gustav Holst has written for the Bath and Wells Diocesan Choral Festival, 1928, a striking setting for S.A.T.B. and organ of Robert Bridges's poem, 'Man born to toil' (Curwen). The work opens in rugged, bare fashion, with all the voices singing in unison for nearly twenty bars, accompanied only by a sustained tonic pedal. Some strenuous singing, mainly in four-part harmony, is called for on the second page, toning down for the final section (moderato maestoso). This last section, commencing 'Gird on thy sword,' is a varied treatment of the tune 'Chilswell.' It is sung first by trebles, next by tenors and basses with added parts by trebles and altos, then in four-part harmony unaccompanied, and finally in unison (ff) with a chiming accompanying figure alternately in bass and treble, and bells ad lib. It should be noted that this last section, 'Gird on thy sword,' is also issued separately. The anthem is not difficult.

New numbers of the Oxford Choral Songs from the Old Masters, edited by C. Hylton Stewart, include William Croft's 'Whither shall I go then from Thy Spirit' (arranged from the anthem 'O Lord, Thou hast searched me out'), 'The sun shall be no more thy light by day' (from Maurice Green's anthem 'Arise, shine, O Zion'), and T. A. Walmisley's 'Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness.' A capital addition to the Oxford Series of Modern Anthems is an anthem for a saint's day—'Love, unto Thine own Who camest,' by Harold Rhodes, words from 'The Yattendon Hymnal.' It is an expressive little work which any ordinary church choir could easily make effective (Oxford University Press).

Two new works by T. Frederick H. Candlyn—a setting of the Communion Service in D flat and a sacred cantata, 'The Four Horsemen'—are well worthy the attention of choirmasters (H. W. Gray Co.; Novello). The composer writes effectively for both voices and organ, and his treatment, harmonically, is frequently fresh and distinctive. The cantata, which is in three parts—Before the Throne, The Horsemen, and The New Jerusalem—provides a fair amount of solo work, particularly for baritone. Neither work would present any serious difficulty to an average well-trained choir.

From the S.P.C.K. comes 'A Liturgical Service for Good Friday,' edited by A. S. Duncan-Jones and J. H. Arnold. The book, we are told, 'is an attempt to show how the Prayer Book services with additions and adornments may be so presented as to form the central feature of the worship of Good Friday. It is suggested that they might be used during the hours of 12 to 3. . . . We suggest that in many places where people are accustomed to ceremonial . . . more good will be done by reviving, in a form suited to modern thought, a symbolic action that gives room for self-expression, to learned and simple alike, than by filling up the period with addresses which tend to become monotonous, in spite of the endlessness of the theme.' A possible time-table is given: 12, Preliminary address; 12.5, Litany; 12.20-12.30, Silence; 12.30, Ante-Communion, The Passion, Sermon; 1.30, The Reproaches and the Veneration of the Cross; 2.20-2.40, Silent Devotion; 2.40, Evensong. The book provides Merbecke's Kyries and Creed, and also a simple three-part arrangement for the Kyrie by Byrd. Music by Byrd is also given for optional use by the chorus in the Passion, which is set out in full. The music for the Reproaches is Palestrina's, edited by G. A. Barnabei (1659-1732). Geoffrey Shaw's faux-bourdon to 'Pange Lingua' is included.

The Passion responses for Palm Sunday and Good Friday, issued separately on a card, have also been received (Chester). The plain-chant is from the Vatican edition, and the text is in Latin. With the Good Friday arrangement appears also the Antiphons 'Asperges me' and 'Vidi aquam.' G. G.

---

VIOLIN

Vaughan Williams's 'Concerto Accademico' (Oxford University Press) represents a successful attempt to combine something that is quite new and something that is quite old. In the first movement the rhythmic impulse at first is as solid and weighty as in the A minor Concerto of Bach. The rhythmic design of the opening of the next movement again might have been derived from the same source. But there is not the slightest suggestion of borrowing or plagiarism anywhere. The atmosphere may be that of the St. Thomas Kirche but the music is decidedly Vaughan Williams. A glance at the texture of the solo part is enough to prove it. Unlike the moderns Vaughan Williams makes little use here of the higher ranges of the instrument, but he has added a good fifth to the Bach range. The use of the melodic intervals of fourth and fifth in the cadenza or quasi-cadenza of the first movement find no parallel in Bach, just as the harmonic fifths of Vaughan Williams would have been anathema to John Sebastian. Yet the spirit the concerto breathes is that of 18th-century scholasticism. The orchestra used in the accompaniment consists merely of strings, and the scoring is straightforward. But students will do well to follow carefully the composer's devices for obtaining an adequate balance by curtailing the number of players.

A 'Kammermusikdichtung,' by Friedrich Karl Grimm (Kistner & Siegel, Leipsic), deserves comment chiefly on account of the composer's desperate effort to express emotions evoked by a reading of Dante's 'Divine Comedy.' He is so full of this question that even a mere 'Kammermusikdichtung' for violin does not satisfy him, though such a title ought to satisfy most of us. He must add to it an introduction and an epilogue in which the human voice enters with words that are not Dante's. It is all so very earnest and sincere that it would be cruelty to call it inadequate. And yet a sceptic unmoved by this honest offering might say after hearing it played: 'I still think the "Divine Comedy" a very fine poem.'

Sooner or later the popularity of Bach's Chorales was bound to stir violinists to action, and now the first, 'Herzlich thut mich verlangen' (from the end of the last part of the 'Christmas Oratorio'), has been 'freely' transcribed by Albert Spalding (Schirmer, New York). Of course, the violin is at a disadvantage in such a composition. But half a loaf is better than none, and if organists and pianists can beat the violinist at this game there is some consolation in the thought that their victory is not to be won without as stout an opposition as a frail and essentially melodic instrument will allow the fiddler to put up.

B. V.

ORCHESTRA

The very enterprising Society for the Publication of American Music has just issued two new scores—a symphonic poem entitled 'Lux Æterna,' for full orchestra and viola obbligato, by Howard Hanson, and 'From the Northland,' a Suite bearing the sub-title 'Impressions of Lake Superior Country,' by Leo Sowerby. The composer of the first happens to have a weakness for the intervals of fourth and fifth. Now it is true that he shares this partiality with a good many other moderns. But surely a surfeit of fourths and fifths in Mr. Hanson is not more delectable than a surfeit of thirds in Donizetti? He divides and subdivides the strings in the approved Scriabin manner, but I have grave doubts as to whether the result will justify his expectations. At any rate I feel pretty confident that a solo viola playing mp (p. 7) will never be heard against the divided strings reinforced by wood and horns. Mr. Sowerby's score seems even more Scriabinesque. There are twenty-two alterations of time-signature in twenty-four bars. On the whole, however, it inspires greater confidence, for there is often evidence of a desire to economise his forces and to use them with discretion. Obviously this is the only way in which progress can be made. The days when the public delighted in the intoxication of tremendous sonority are counted.

B. V.

'CELLO

Collections of short pieces have their uses. They are specially handy for soloists who are enabled to hand to their accompanist one volume instead of half a dozen. Book 1 in the 'Violoncellist's Répertoire' (Paxton) does not contain anything that is likely to appeal to soloists. It consists of five little pieces not one of which has any special claim to our interest. The 'Sonata for Violoncello Solo,' by Patrick Hughes (Curwen), stands at the opposite pole. This is modern stuff written by a young musician of lively imagination, but unversed as yet in the ways of experience. His work will be more interesting to the musician and much more likely to be appreciated by the general public when he has learnt the value of restraint and measure. Be it said to his credit, his Sonata is much shorter than the majority of unaccompanied suites and sonatas.

B. V.

GUITAR

The publication of the first 'Great Sonata' of Paganini for guitar and violin accompaniment (J. H. Zimmermann, Leipsic) comes to remind us that we do not yet know all there is to be known of this extra ordinary man. His violin music has been preserved to some extent (only the Capricci are said to be authentic), but we know that he was as eminent a performer on the guitar as on the violin. The first Sonata for guitar may herald a good many others, and it is just possible that the Liszts and Brahms's of the future will find in them materials for new transcriptions and variations. The German editor, Herr Erwin Schwarz-Reiflingen, appears to have done his share with thoroughness and care. He also contributes an interesting introduction, in which he laments the fact that Paganini's biographers were violinists and consequently apt to belittle or neglect his importance as a composer for and performer on the guitar. We are rather inclined to think that Herr Schwarz-Reiflingen—clearly an ardent guitarero—does Paganini's biographers an injustice. His contributions to the violin are more important because the violin is the more important instrument. There are dozens of first-class violinists, while on the other hand Senor Segovia alone holds the field—and even he was unknown outside Spain a short while ago.

B. V.

CLARINET

It is good to see composers take some notice of the clarinet. Poldowsky has just published a 'Pastorale' for clarinet (Chester)—a short and effective piece revealing a delicate fancy and imagination. The composer has written for a clarinet in C. Before the advent of modernity we were taught that a composition in which almost every F, C, and G are sharpened would fit better the clarinet in A. Mr. Edward Burlingame Hill contributes a full-dress Sonata (Society for the Publication of American Music) for clarinet and pianoforte. It is a gentle—almost mild—piece of music, well-written in a scholastic way, which, however, does not exploit all the possibilities of the instrument. A violin part is also provided as a substitute for the clarinet.

B. V

CHAMBER MUSIC

Miss Rebecca Clarke's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello (Winthrop Rogers) stands well above the average 'novelty'—for although we seem to see evidence of a talent which has not reached maturity, the existence of a rich and vigorous imagination is undeniable. With such gifts Miss Clarke should go far, and we feel certain she will go far if she devotes herself to the study and development of qualities she seems at present to neglect. One cannot but pay tribute to her boldness, her determination to do new things, her keen sense of colour. All this makes for brilliancy rather than for warmth, and one cannot read this Trio without feeling convinced that it is in her to be both interesting and convincing, to write music which is both brilliant and warm.

Mr. Norman Fraser must have written some time ago a 'Cueca' which he now publishes (Chester), rewritten specially for Adila Fachiri and Jelly d'Aranyi—for two violins and pianoforte. It is not a work of distinction, but melodious and not very difficult. Even the 7-8 time-signature is the most innocent 7-8 we know, and it does not last long. The composer perhaps realised the futility of the extra quaver and dropped it for a while. Certainly the addition or the omission of the quaver does not alter in any way the character of the tune, which tends rather to the commonplace.

B. V.

MIXED-VOICE

Peter Warlock's lute-song series proceeds, with two pieces by Jones ('What if I seek' and 'Cherry Ripe'), one by Dowland ('Oh, what hath overwrought'), and one by Danyel ('What delight can they enjoy'). The first three are for S.A.T.B., the last for S.S.A.T. All are to be sung unaccompanied. In small limits there is pretty resource here—winsome music, very easy to sing, with just enough counterpoint to make things flow, and a balance and sense of capacity in it all. Dr. Markham Lee writes a well-built, straightforward, tuneful piece in 'Tender sleep enfold thee' (S.A.T.B.), that growing-up choirs will not find too taxing (Curwen).

From the same publishers comes 'Kamaldar'; a Romance of Old Egypt, in three Acts. Book and lyrics by Stanley C. West; music by Chastey Hector. The soloists needed are a soprano, two mezzo-sopranos, a tenor, two baritones, and two basses. There are three Acts and twenty-eight musical numbers. The music is of that bright, naïve type that amateur operatic societies readily learn and take to—the kind that sounds as if it were made up as they go along: that most of the singers, if they are old hands, could almost make up for themselves.

Percy Judd's setting of a Grecian picture, 'Forest Music' (translated by A. C. Benson), is for soprano solo and chorus of S.S.A.T.B. (or S.S.A.A.T.B. chorus only). Part of the time the choir provides a closed-lips background of tone, very soft and lambent. The music is not perfectly knit, though it shows a feeling for the mood (Oxford University Press). These publishers print F. H. Shera's musicianly arrangement of extracts from Act 1 of 'Lohengrin,' in which the solo parts (for soprano, tenor, baritone, and two basses) can, if necessary, be sung by sections of the choir. The writing for chorus has been simplified. In the orchestra one oboe and one bassoon are specified, with two each of the brass, the usual percussion, and strings. The string parts are cued so that any or all of the wind instruments may be dispensed with. The selection, which makes a satisfactory story, lasts about half-an-hour. It seems very reasonable that small societies should try their wings in such flights, which will almost certainly make them want to go on and fit themselves to tackle some day the more complex choralism of the original.

Ernest Bullock's 'There's none to soothe my soul to rest' (S.A.T.B.) moves with grace in all its parts. An easy, effective, pleasantly-musicianly setting, this (Cramer).

Eric Fogg, the young Manchester man who has written a very large amount of music—some in this fashion and some in that—has, it is happily apparent, a feeling for a fashion of his own. That is not yet stable, and his choral writing contains some ineffective angularities; but there is sufficient interest in 'The Hillside,' a Ballade for S. and B. soloists, with chorus and orchestra, to make it worth the while of conductors to look at it. (The work was in the Manchester broadcast programme on March 18.) The words are from Tagore's 'The Gardener.' It is a pity, surely, to set this passage, 'It was a summer night; the breeze blew from the south,' with the rest after 'breeze,' and to repeat 'from the south.' There is a little eight-part work. The pianoforte score is published by Elkin.

Bach's fiftieth Church cantata, 'Now hath the grace,' is the latest of Dr. Whittaker's editions. It should be taken up by all choral societies able to tackle its magnificent double-choir writing. There is only the one chorus—a grand, athletic fling of defiance at the conquered Accuser. The orchestral writing is for three trumpets (two of them of the high, Bach type), three oboes, strings, drums, and continuo. The organ continuo is to be hired, as are the orchestral parts (Oxford University Press). The same firm issues the choruses only of Holst's choral ballet, 'The Golden Goose,' which was noticed in January.

The tunes of 'Daffodillies and other Simple Dances for the Little Ones' are extremely like most other such tunes; one of them (No. 6.) begins just like a once popular music-hall song whose words I cannot recall — something about the Zuyder Zee, I faintly remember. There is no harm in this, for the tunes, words, and movements of the ten dance-songs seem to fit happily together. The pictures of the children in action are attractive. The Misses Sidnell and Gibbon are schoolmistresses, and know what infants like (Macdougall).

An easy arrangement of 'Drink to me only' is made for M-S., T., or B., with two bass parts, one of which can be omitted if necessary. This will serve the need of senior school classes or small choirs (Novello).

W. R. A.

MALE-VOICE

J. W. G. Hathaway's setting of Meredith's 'Dirge in Woods' will be enjoyed. It has the points that male choirs like, and it does not attempt to say too much (T.T.B.B.) (Oxford University Press).

W. R. A.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

Some more of Peter Warlock's transcriptions of anonymous early 17th-century pieces (for S.S.A.) provide easy work leading on to the singing of those full-dress madrigals, many of which can now be had arranged for women's voices. These three are 'All creatures now with hearts rejoice' (fast and bright), 'Winter comes' (for good, sustained style), and 'A sea nymph sat upon the shore,' very expressive, mellow writing. The first wants the low contralto G, the second only goes down to A, and the last needs a sound F. Van Dieren's two-part 'Wherefore shall I hang up my bow' is unaccompanied—a lively twelve-eight. Why keep the time-signature unchanged, and have the 'up-' and the '-on' of 'upon,' and the '-to' of 'unto,' on the first of the bar? It is not necessary, of course, to stress them strongly, but the best vocal writers avoid such placings. There is a hint of clumsiness in this song, that dims its brightness. Harry Brook's 'Sleep, sleep, beauty bright' (Blake's words) moves in graceful, peaceful fashion. Its extreme compass (for the two voices) is D to F. Havergal Brian's 'Fair pledges of a fruitful tree' (Herrick) moves largely in thirds. It is marked 'To be sung sotto voce'—a nice bit of quiet music. The pianist should be a person of taste. Norman Demuth's 'May Morning' (Milton's 'Now the bright morning star, day's harbinger') begins and ends in unison. There are only eight bars for the second treble. The spirit is brisk and warm. Healey Willan has set Dr. Bridges's 'Angel spirits of sleep' for S.S.A. sensitively. Very soft humming is employed. Long phrasing is called for. A good test for control and command of resources in shading and colour. Patrick Hadley's 'Faery Song' (S.M.-S.A.) is for voices and orchestra (score and parts on hire; this copy gives a pianoforte accompaniment). The middle part is divided for a dozen bars. This is pretty difficult, and seems, to the eye, as if it could be brought off with a good deal of effect, provided the orchestra were truly balanced with the singers (Oxford University Press).

Ivor R. Davies's 'Summer Rain' (S.A.) is a pleasantly contrived piece in which light, floating tone, rising to a good crescendo here and there, is wanted (Elkin).

Here is Peter Warlock again, with three songs by Robert Jones, dated 1608 (S.S.). They are 'Disdain that so doth fill me,' 'Since just disdain began to rise,' and 'Now let her change and spare not.' All move at a sprightly pace. The stresses, in the second, must be watched, so that, for instance, 'began,' with 'be,' on the first of the bar, gets its right value. These are good for older singers. Felix White turns to Dr. Bridges for 'Gay Robin is seen no more' (S.A.). This has effective chromatics, and a neat poise. Cuthbert Osmond sets words by the same poet, 'The idle life I lead' (S.S.A.). The part-writing is well turned, and not difficult. A new number in Dr. Whittaker's arrangements of northern songs is the debonair 'Bonny Pit Laddie,' a jolly rattle for dexterous speed-merchants (S.M.-S.A.) (Curwen).

John Pointer has arranged for S.A. (lowest note A) German's setting of 'Who is Sylvia?' This spirited piece suits older singers well. W. McNaught's 'In Derry Vale' is now to be had for S.M.-S.A., as well as in the unison setting already issued. The accompanying parts begin singing on 'Ah' and later join in the verse. (W. G. Rothery's words). The setting brings out extremely well the richness of the harmony—a healthy richness, of course. A capable choir will greatly enjoy balancing melody and accompaniment, and getting the full measure of beauty out of this glorious air. George Rathbone's 'Song of the Waters' is a fluent waltz, needing light, easy tone, and long phrasing. It is for S.S. Eric Thiman's 'To Daffodils' (Herrick) is for S.S. in canon—an easy, fluent piece (Novello).

Cyril Jenkins's 'The Lamb,' a setting of Blake's poem for S.S., moves largely in thirds and sixths. It could be made prettily effective by singers with a sense of delicacy and a velvety tone (Paxton).

'Come, let us all a-maying go' is an arrangement from 'Semele.' Its runs, at a quick pace, give the singers something to bite on. It is for S.A. (lowest note A) (Paterson).

Vincent Thomas writes straightforward, flowing parts for S.S.A.A. in 'Falero, lero, loo!' (Wither's 'I loved a lass'). The tune is ordinary enough. The trimmings will please. W. R. A.

---

UNISON

Apt for the Schubert Centenary year comes a group of fourteen of the master's songs, very well selected. The translations are taken from the Fox-Strangways and Steuart Wilson edition, and the editor is Dr. Whittaker. The whole set should be looked through, for there is something here to suit every class—not to mention the soloist, who for a few pence can get some splendid additions to his repertory. The slow, sustained songs are 'Hope,' 'Love's Presence,' 'At Sunset,' 'The Gods of Greece,' 'Traveller's Hymn,' 'The Moon,' 'Gillyflowers,' and 'The Quiet Night.' A little brisker in movement are 'Schubert to his Piano,' 'The Lute-Player,' 'Forget-me-nots,' and 'Aubade'; and 'Certainty' and 'A Son of the Muses' are lively. A few (e.g., the three immediately preceding the last, from the cycle 'The Fair Maid of the Mill') have what the cinema people call a 'heart interest,' so they suit older singers best. Under Dr. Whittaker's editorship the list, all may be sure, includes nothing that cannot be attempted by singers of average capacity. There is no reason why any teacher should be scared of Schubert, and every reason why he or she should use these healthy, happy songs. Other unison songs are Felix White's inspiriting 'The Praises of the Flow'ry Spring,' that leaps lithely; Gordon Slater's 'And shall Trelawny die?'—Hawker's rough rhyme doughtily set; Percy Judd's 'Canadian Boat Song' (Moore's poem), a pleasing barcarolle, and 'The Terrible Robber Men,' a tripping six-eight tune with some longish sustained notes; Robin Milford's 'In Youth is Pleasure,' an unsophisticated ditty with a key change or two to give variety; Roy Thompson's 'The shepherd boy sings in the valley of humiliation' (Bunyan), a rather ordinary tune with a graceful sweep; and Barbara Thornley's 'Dustman's Song' to Drinkwater's words—an easily-swaying tune with an accompaniment that should have a sensitive player (Oxford University Press).

'Dulce Domum' is arranged 'for senior forms in schools or small male-voice choirs.' It may be sung in unison throughout, or the verse by a mezzo-soprano, tenor, or baritone soloist, and the chorus either in unison or three parts (two bass parts being added). One of the cheap little packets of songs contains Cecil Sharman's 'Very lovely,' a cheery thing, Rowley's brief, brisk 'Buttons for Sale,' and Dr. Sweeting's round, 'The Four Sweet Months.' These are in one cover (Novello).

Two of Ernest Austin's agreeable but not strikingly fresh pieces are 'Dainty lady' and 'Little White Horses.' Both are in six-eight, allegretto (Larway).

Owen Mase's setting of 'England' is not to be confused with Parry's, which has different words. These are by de la Mare, and are intimate and introspective, ending 'Thine be the grave whereto I come, and thine my darkness be.' The music begins monotonously, and has a much-needed contrast in the middle (Curwen).

H. E. Watts's 'The Open Road' is devised 'for massed voices.' Its pietistic ending is rather unexpected. Those who approve the sentiment may like to try this (Elkin).

Lively youngsters could make J. Speaight's 'John Cook and his Mare' a neatly-pointed bit of singing, and so a piquant song. It is easy (Rogers; Hawkes).

Hawkes brings out one of the best sixpennyworths of recent times—'Twice Forty-four Sociable Songs,' collected and arranged by Geoffrey Shaw. Some are in unison, some in two, three, or four parts. Simple pianoforte parts are added, but a good many of the songs should be sung unaccompanied. There are hymns, carols, rounds, and all manner of good fare. The sixpences ought to bang in their tens of thousands.

Two more of Eleanor Farjeon's 'Singing Games' are 'Old Goodman Time' and 'The Wonder Star.' The first, a particularly happy little bit of imagination, needs nine youngsters, with a chorus of Twelve Hours. The other is for three Kings, a little Angel, Gnomes, Shepherds, and Children. Simple settings can be used to make these games into concert items, if desired. Another Schubert song in Dr. Whittaker's edition of 'The Old Masters' is 'To the nightingale,' a lovely little quiet piece (Oxford University Press).

'Seven Classical Canons' contain varied matter, from Beethoven, Mozart, and the two Haydns, Joseph and Michael. (By the way, Maria Anna, referred to in the note to the last canon, was Joseph's wife, not Michael's.) These would suit growing-up choirs. The music is mostly easy, though Beethoven's 'Maelzel' canon (the tune is used in the eighth Symphony) and his 'I prithee,' are excellent practice in rapid tongue-lips-teeth work, and in scales, respectively (Rogers).

'When the moon is up' is a dainty item asking plenty of tonal variety. Alec Rowley and Patience Ropes are composer and author (Paxton).

Bright, smoothly-phrased singing is wanted in Eric Thiman's 'What way does the wind come?' There is some good interval practice in it, and room for free tonal expansion (Novello).

Martin Shaw's 'Up tails, all!' is described as 'The duck's ditty.' It is vivacious in spirit, and has a good deal of dotted quaver-semiquaver rhythm. The words are from one of the Kenneth Grahame classics, 'The wind in the willows' (Cramer). W. R. A.

MORE SONGS FOR THE SCHUBERT CENTENARY

Besides the songs by Schubert noted above, an edition of a number of his works is to hand from Stainer & Bell, who have had the happy idea of getting Dr. Bairstow to arrange and edit nearly a score of Schubert's songs, for various choral combinations. There is something for everybody here—four unison songs, two in two parts, two in three parts, and one in four parts (women's voices), besides half-a-dozen for mixed voices and four for men. There need be no dismay in collaborating with Schubert thus—if the collaborator is a real musician. Here that is assured. The gentle art of arranging may be studied in these songs with advantage. Sometimes Dr. Bairstow makes the additional parts out of the accompanimental matter, and at others he uses canonic imitation very neatly. Of the unison songs, 'In the Pine Wood,' 'Lullaby,' 'The Miller's Song,' and 'Trust in the Springtime,' the first needs graceful treatment of light, short notes in the curving phrases; the third (the 'Wandering' song) has arpeggios to negotiate with a smooth, buoyant tone; and the other two are more sustained. None offers difficulty, and all offer something worth working at. The two-part songs for equal voices are 'Spring's Return' and 'What the birds think' (Op. 172, Nos. 5 and 6). The first is happy in a gently effervescent way. In the other the children are the birds, giving us a bit of their wise little minds, scherzando.

For S.S.A. there is 'Laughter and Tears,' moving chordally in shapely, gracious liveliness, and 'The Mother's Song,' a richly tender lullaby—a particularly admirable arrangement, this. 'Waterlily' is for S.S.A.A. This needs very soft singing (some of it on vowels, in the accompaniment of the tune), good expansion, and refined and subtle finish in the phrasing.

